[11862] ● Allegation that accused persons planning to rob petrol pump.—To prove why the five accused had assembled at the Dharamshala of Sarup Nagar, the prosecution had mainly relied upon the evidence of PW 2 who was only eyewitness who had gone near the Dharamshala and heard conversation amongst the accused. He was accompound at that time by ASI, Bhagat Ram but the prosecution did not examine ASI, Bhagat Ram as a witness, PW 2 Head Constable Chand Singh in his examination-in-Chief did not depose anything about the conversation. He was declared hostile. In his cross-examination he stated that the conversation which he had heard and reported to ASI, was about looting a petrol pump. According to this witness he remained near the Dharamshala for about 15 minutes. His further cross-examination discloses that when he had gone near the Dharamshala, it was dark as there was no light either inside or nearby. The Dharamshala consisted of only one room and it had only one door and no window. He had stood outside that room and a little away form the door. He had not told anything more than that five persons inside the Dharamshala were planning to rob a petrol pump that night. He had not narrated what they had spoken or discussed. It is also doubtful that they were speaking so loudly that their conversation could be heard outside. It is also surprising as to how he could have reported to SI. 9 Om Prakash that two of them had pistols and the remaining three had knives. As the evidence discloses, the weapons were kept concealed on their persons and there was complete darkness inside the room. PW-2 had not even gone near the door. This would clearly indicate that PW-2 was not telling the truth when he stated that he had heard the accused talking about looting a petrol pump. It is, therefore, not possible to sustain the conviction of the appellants under Ss. 399 and 402, IPC. Their conviction under Sections 399 and 402, IPC will have to be set aside. Suleman v. State of Delhi through Secretary, AIR 1999 SC 1707 : (1999) 4 SCC 146 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 515 (516, 517) : 1999 CrLJ 2525 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 295 : (1999) 2 Crimes 334.

[11863] ● Veracity of the prosecution case highly doubtful.—In the facts and circumstances of the case, veracity of the prosecution case was highly doubtful as in view of the evidence of prosecution witnesses, namely, PWs 1, 2 and 6, the possibility of dacoity in the house of Ram Singh and receiving injuries by the members of the prosecution party during the course of dacoity could not be ruled out more so when there was no evidence whatsoever to show that any of the accused persons much less the appellant assaulted the three deceased persons in view of the fact that none of the injured witnesses, namely, PWs 4, 5 and 6 stated that the accused persons assaulted any of the three deceased persons. For the foregoing reasons, the Supreme Court took view that the prosecution had failed to prove its case beyond reasonable doubt and the High Court was not justified in reversing the order of acquittal recorded by the trial Court as the same was not perverse in any manner. Salan Singh v. State of Uttaranchal, AIR 2006 SC 520 : (2005) 12 SCC 607 : 2005 (4) Crimes 265 (SC) : 2006 CrLJ 316 (318).

[11864] ● Doubtful evidence.—The High Court found that the dacoity was committed during the night intervening 25th and 26th November, 1987. Admittedly, it was dark night. The evidence was not consistent as to electricity at the house of PW-1 Ramji Lal. So far as Ramsukh is concerned, temporary electric bulb was there in the chowk. But the evidence also showed that the bulb was not working. There was also inconsistency as to whether there was electricity in the village. The Court also considered the statement of PW-23 Ramswaroop Yadav, SHO. He did not mention as to at which place the electric bulb at the house of Ramsukh was on, nor was the existence of the bulb was shown in the site plan-Ex.P2. He orally mentioned that there was electric light in the village. The Court noted that there was no reason for the SHO not to mention the presence of electric bulb in the site plan if it was there as it was a very important aspect and it was the case of prosecution that the witnesses had identified the dacoits in the light of electric bulb. The Court also observed that it was not possible that the dacoits would come in such a way that they could be easily identified by village people. They would try to hide their identities. According to the High Court, the statement of all the witnesses who had stated that they had identified the dacoits in the light was 'false and unbelievable' and in the dark night, the witnesses could not have identified the miscreants.

With regard to identification of accused, at the identification parade, the High Court considered the evidence of PW-1 Ramjit Lal, PW-6 Sukkho and PW-7 Rekha who stated that they came to know about the arrest of dacoits after few days. "All this shows" observed the High Court, "that the accused persons were arrested just after 7-8 days of the incident" but their arrest was shown on December 21/22, 1987. For a number of days, the accused persons were detained at the police station. Immediately their arrest was not shown. The Court proceeded to state according to the prosecution, just after their arrest, the accused persons gave information under Section 27 of the Evidence Act and on the basis of that information, certain articles were recovered. But, according to the prosecution witnesses, they had come to know 7-8 days after the incident that the accused persons had been arrested and that stolen articles were recovered. The Court observed that it meant the arrest of the accused persons, their giving information as well as the recovery were "all false ones and they all have been manipulated later on".

The Court also found the recovery of the articles as doubtful because prior to the arrest of the accused persons and before their giving information under Section 27 of the Evidence Act, the articles were recovered by the police. Hence, the Court observed that the alleged recovery as well as the identification of the ornaments were all farce. The High Court also observed that identification parade was not conducted in a fair and proper manner and no precautionary steps had been taken by the Magistrate. The High Court, therefore, held that the trial Court was wrong in convincing the accused and the prosecution "failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that the appellants (accused) were the persons who had committed the dacoity as alleged by it".

Held, "We have been taken by the learned advocates for the parties to the evidence as also to the findings recorded by the trial Court as well as by the High Court. In the facts and circumstances of the case, in our opinion, it cannot be successfully contended that the High Court was wrong in granting benefit of doubt to the accused and in passing an order of acquittal. Held, the case was not proved beyond reasonable doubt. The acquittal of the accused persons was proper. State of Rajasthan v. Netrapal, (2007) 4 SCC 45 : 2007 (2) SCC (Cri) 187 : 2007 CrLJ 1783 (1783, 1784, 1785, 1786) : 2007 (2) Crimes 325 (SC).

[11865] ● Bank docoity sufficient material for conviction.—The main stay of the Defence was that the investigation was not fair in this case inasmuch as the police had shown the accused persons to the identifying witnesses. We have already given our reasons as to why we would be prepared to accept the evidence of Ashok Kumar Dubey (PW-1). It is true that in his substantive evidence he did not speak about his identifying the accused appellant in the identification parade but we cannot forget the fact that there is a clear cut evidence of the Magistrate who conducted the Parade confirming such identification. There is practically no cross-examination of this witness. We are particularly impressed by the recovery of Rs. 40,000/- from the possession of the accused-appellant which recovery has been accepted by the Trial and the Appellate Courts. The recovery of the slips as also of the gun which was brandished against the witness is also no less significant. There is no explanation given by the accused as to how a huge sum of Rs. 40,000/- and the Dena Bank slips and the other bank documents could be recovered from him. It was feebly argued that there was delay in holding the identification parade. In the peculiar facts and circumstances of this case. The delay was of no significance, because the other accused persons are still at large and, therefore, test identification parade could not have been conducted in respect of only some of the accused. Again the question of delay was never raised by way of cross-examination and no explanation was called for from the investigating officer. The stolen property was recovered from the possession of the appellant. There is also supporting and corroborating evidence of the recovery of the other materials like the bag of S.M. Dholey (PW-6) which was recovered during the investigation. This discovery of the bag is also extremely significant because there was no reason for this bag which contained the private documents of Shri Dholey to be recovered from the accused. That also lends credence to the fairness of the investigation by the police. If will not be possible, in our jurisdiction under Article 136 of the Constitution, to re-appreciate the evidence and we will have to only see as to whether Trial Court and the Appellate Court were correct in reaching the conclusions that they have recorded. We again reiterate that the identification in the peculiar facts of this case by Ashok Kumar Dubey and other witnesses would be acceptable inspite of the so-called defects shown by the Defence in holding the identification. Considering the overall circumstances in the peculiar facts and circumstances of this case was hold the appellant guilty of commiting the offence of dacoity. There is also no explanation about the gun as well as the bullets which were examined by Irfan (PW-53). The gun was obviously an unlicenced pistol and, in our opinion, it was obviously used in contravention of Section 5 of the Arms Act. The conviction of the accused-appellant, under Sections 25 and 27 of the Arms Act was also correctly recorded by the Courts below.

In the above circumstances there is no merits in appeal and the same is accordingly dismissed. Pravin v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2008 SC 1846 : 2008 CrLJ 2980 : 2008 (5) SCR 367 : JT 2008 (4) 354 : 2008 (4) Scale 431.

[11866] ● Non-consideration of aspect of enmity between parties by trial Court.—In the instant case, the trial Court. Stand of the appellant before the High Court was that accused persons were admittedly on inimical terms with Har Prasad (PW-2) and it was a specific case that accused Babu Singh had absconded and did not face trial. He was on inimical terms with the deceased and PW-2 Respondent Awadhesh happened to be brother in law of Babu Singh. The trial Court held that the accusations have been established. In appeal before the High Court it was noted that the enmity aspect was lost sight of by the Trial Court. In any event, for a long time no witness supposedly spoke about accused Awdhesh. Though the village Chowkidar. Ram Ratan (PW-3) reported the matter to the police station on the basis of which Crime case No. 30 was registered, no one was named as accused and the case was registered against unknown persons. Only when a written report was submitted by Har Prasad (PW-2) to the investigating officer, name of respondent was indicated alongwith Babu Singh and Jhallar Singh. It was pointed out that though PW-2 was shouting that three named persons were committing dacoity, in the report submitted by PW-3 the names were not given. Reference was also made to the evidence of Ram Lakhan (PW-4) who admitted that he never mentioned the names of the three persons whose names appeared in the report given by PW-2. With reference to the evidence of Smt. Sheo Sakhi, the High Court noticed that she did not know Awdesh, yet stated as if she was acquainted with him. Her statement in the cross examination was highlighted by the High Court. Similar was the position regarding Smt. Ram Rati (PW-12). The investigating officer stated that when he was going to the place of occurrence, he had met the deceased and two other persons who received injuries in the occurrence. They were Mahesh Chandra and Smt. Mahabiria. He had a talk with them and he sent them for medical examination. But till that time also the names of Awdhesh, Babu Singh and Jhallar Singh were not disclosed. Primarily, on these premises the High Court directed acquittal. The High Court also referred to the fact that while some of the alleged dacoits covered their faces to conceal the identity, the three named accused persons who were known did not try to cover their faces. In the present case, though the judgment is not happily worded and some of the reasonings are not legally supportable but the ultimate conclusion is a possible view. That being so no interference in appeal is warranted, to interfere is dismissed. The bail bond executed in the present case by the respondent shall stand discharged. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Awdhesh, (2008) 16 SCC 238 : JT 2008 (9) 591 : 2008 (12) Scale 288 : 2008 (6) Supreme 505 : 2008 (4) Crimes 30.

[11867] ● Long-standing enmity—Accused persons including minor and old person.—At the time of occurrence the age of accused Vijay Jha was about 13 years, 3 months and age of Binod Jha was about 16 years, two months. They both were brothers and accused Bindishwar Jha was their another brother. It looks very unnatural that the accused would go to commit dacoity in their neighbourhood taking with them such minor and young boys as Vijay Jha and Binod Jha when they were sufficient in number and accompanied by some other persons also. Besides this, age of accused Bhai Lal Jha was estimated by Court on 31.3.1987 when he was examined under Section 313, Code of Criminal Procedure as eighty years. The defence has brought on record a voter's list showing that in this voter's list which was received in the year 1983 age of co-accused Dahaur Jha (Since dead) is recorded as seventy two year, since Dahaur Jha dead now so this document does not help the case of any now but then accused Bhai Lal Jha, admittedly at the time of the occurrence was aged about seventy-four years. So we find that the accused include an old man aged about seventy-four years as well as a boy aged about thirteen years, and as stated alone, the accused are neighbours of informant, with whom the family of informant had long-standing dispute. Shrishi Narain Jha v. Bindeshwar Jha, AIR 2010 SC 465 : (2009) 6 SCC 457 : 2010 CrLJ 467 : 2009 (7) SCR 442 : JT 2009 (13) SC 674.

[11868] ● Dacoity with murder—Sufficient evidence for conviction.—On careful consideration of entire evidence on record, it was found by the Supreme Court that the following conclusions were in escapable:

1. The impugned judgment of the High Court is based on total misreading of the evidence of the injured eye-witnesses PW-3 Chandan Giri and PW-5 Smt. Longshree.
2. The High Court failed to appreciate that in this case, the test identification parade was not required since the accused were otherwise known to the witnesses. The conducting of test identification parade depends on the facts and circumstances of each case.
3. In the impugned judgment, the High Court ought to have considered the entire case in correct perspective of the small rural village background where most of the people know each other. They live in the vicinity. The test which may be relevant for metros or big cities cannot always be applied to small rural village settings.
4. The High Court in the impugned judgment has gravely erred in totally ignoring the dying declarations of Hiralal and Aidal Singh, particularly when the dying declarations were recorded by the Magistrate.
5. The High Court erred in discarding the evidence of the injured eye-witnesses whose statement is consistent and corroborated by other evidence on record.

The impugned judgment of the High Court is contrary to the well settled legal principles which have been crystallized by a series of decisions of this Court.

Ordinarily this Court would have been very reluctant to interfere with the judgment of acquittal but in this case for very substantially and compelling reasons we are constraint to set aside the impugned judgment of the High Court because the High Court totally misread the entire evidence on record. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Sukhpal Singh, AIR 2009 SC 1729 : (2009) 4 SCC 385 : 2009 CrLJ 1556 : 2009 (2) SCR 24 : 2009 (2) Scale 406.

The Court pointed out in the concluding part of judgment that the Supreme Court would have been very reluctant to interfere with the judgment of acquittal but in the instant case for very substantial and compelling reasons, the judgment of the High Court acquitting the accused had to be set aside. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Sukhpal Singh, AIR 2009 SC 1729 (1733, 1734) : (2009) 4 SCC 385 : 2009 CrLJ 1556.

[11869] ● Infirmities in prosecution case—Manner of dacoity and participation of accused doubtful.—In the instant case there were infirmities in prosecution version. The medical evidence showed that the death of the deceased was homicidal and the evidence of investigating officer who found blood-stains at the place of occurrence and some marks of violence on a wooden box kept at the place of occurrence may suggest the factum of dacoity in the house of informant but as far manner of dacoity and participation of accused in that dacoity is concerned, that appears quite doubtful. Shrishi Narain Jha v. Bindeshwar Jha, AIR 2010 SC 465 : (2009) 6 SCC 457 : 2010 CrlJ 467 : 2009 (7) SCR 442 : JT 2009 (13) SC 674.

[11870] ● Section 395, IPC—Three accused on same evidence.—In this case the counsel for the appellants contended that the evidence against the appellants A-3, A-6 and A-7 was identical and based on that evidence A-3 and A-6 were acquitted and A-7 was discharged and on the same evidence, appellants could not have been legally convicted. Insofar as A-3 is concerned, the trial Court gave him benefit of doubt as the prosecution failed to furnish any explanation as to why he could not be confined in jail or presented before a Magistrate on the day of arrest itself, i.e. April 30, 1980. The trial Court found that, although A-3 was arrested on April 30, 1980 at about 6.15 a.m. but he was produced before the Court on the next day despite the fact that Magistrate was available hardly 8 kilometers away. As regards A-6, the trial Court was not convinced about the date, time and place of his arrest. The trial Court held that from the evidence on record, possibility of his arrest at earlier point of time and at some other place cannot be excluded. We are afraid the grounds on which A-3 and A-6 were given benefit of doubt do not, in any manner, affect the credibility of the evidence of PW-2, PW-3 and PW-9 in the Court or the test identification parade insofar as A-2, A-4 and A-5 are concerned. These witnesses have identified the appellants not only in test identification parade but also in the Court. The identification of the appellants. Ram Babu v. State of U.P., AIR 2010 SC 2143 : (2010) 5 SCC 63 : 2010 CrLJ 2856 (2859) (SC) : (2010) 2 Crimes 389.

[11871] ● Section 396, IPC—Dacoity—Appreciation of evidence.—"The prosecution witnesses have claimed that they identified the appellants in the light of lantern but the investigating officer, during investigation, did not find any lantern or sign of lighting the lantern which usually appear in the surrounding areas. Accused-Bharat Lal Jha was not identified by PWs-1 and 2, accused Binod Jha by PW-2 and accused Umesh Jha by PW-6. Besides this, PWs 4 and 6 have added names of Ashok Jha, Somendra Jha and Ram Ballabh Jha who are not among the accused persons. The medical evidence showing that the death of deceased was homicidal and the evidence of Investigating Officer who found blood-stains at the place of occurrence and some marks of violence on a wooden box kept at the place of occurrence may suggest the factum of dacoity in the house of informant but so far manner of dacoity and participation of accused in that dacoity is concerned, that appears quite doubtful. The evidence of prosecution witnesses is that besides accused, there were some other dacoits also with them who could not be identified. The possibility of false implication of appellants in this case on account of long standing enmity utilizing the incident of dacoity cannot be ruled out.

At the time of occurrence the age of accused Vijay Jha was about thirteen years, three months and age of appellant Binod Jha was about sixteen years, two months. They both are brothers and accused Bindeshwar Jha is their another brother. It looks very unnatural that the accused would go to commit dacoity in their neighbourhood taking with them such minor and young boys as Vijay Jha and Binod Jha when they were sufficient in number and accompanied by some other persons also. Besides this, age of accused Bhai Lal Jha was estimated by Court on 31.3.1987 when he was examined under Section 313, Code of Criminal Procedure as eighty years. The defence has brought on record a Voters' List (Exhibit-A) showing that in this Voters' List which was received in the year, 1983, age of co-accused Dahaur Jha (since dead) is recorded as seventy two years, since Dahaur Jha dead now so this document does not help the case of any now but then accused Bhai Lal Jha, admittedly at the time of occurrence was aged about seventy four years. So, we find that the accused include an old man aged about seventy four years as well as a boy aged about thirteen years and, as stated above, the accused are neighbours of informant with whom the family of informant had long standing dispute. The judgment of the High Court does not suffer from any infirmity. The appeals fail and are dismissed. Sherishti Narain Jha v. Bindeshwar Jha, AIR 2010 SC 465 : (2009) 6 SCC 457 : 2010 CrLJ 467 (SC).

8. FIRST INFORMATION REPORT

[11872] ● First information report.—Where the fact relating to looting of property was mentioned in the FIR but was not mentioned in the charge, and the substantial evidence refined to extorting of Rs. 300/- the accused could be convicted under Section 384 and not under Sections 395/149. Vishun Shiv Ram Bhovi v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1979 SC 1943 : (1979) 3 SCC 365 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 642 : 1979 CrLJ 1305 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 723 : 1979 UJ (SC) 869.

9. IDENTIFICATION

[11873] ● Identification.—Sworn testimony of witnesses in Court as to the identity of the accused who are stranger to the witnesses, generally speaking, requires corroboration which should be in the form of an earlier identification proceeding. There may be exception of this rule where the Court is satisfied that the evidence of a particular witness in such that it can safely rely on it without the precaution of an earlier identification proceeding. Vaikuntam Chandrappa v. State of A.P., AIR 1960 SC 1340 : 1960 CrLJ 1681 : ILR (1962) AP 96.

[11876] ● Application of accused for TI Parade if turned down.—If the application of the accused for TI Parade is turned down and if it transpires in the evidence at the time of the trial that the witness did not know the accused persons previously, the prosecution may fail. Jadunath Singh v. State of U.P., AIR 1971 SC 363 : (1970) 3 SCC 518 : 1971 CrLJ 305 : (1971) 2 SCJ 285 : 1971 All WR 692 : 1971 Mad LJ (Cri) 692.

[11877] ● Identification of TI Parade not substantive evidence.—As to the value of TI Parade, the identification of TI Parade is never a substantive evidence. The substantive evidence is the witnesses deposition in the Court. But when the accused person is not previously known to the witness concerned then identification of the accused by the witness soon after the former arrest is of vital importance because he furnishes to the Investigating Agency that investigation is proceeding on right lines. Rameshwar Singh v. State of J&K, AIR 1972 SC 102 (104) : (1971) 2 SCC 715 : 1972 CrLJ 15.

[11878] ● Identification evidence—Value of.—The witnesses in the present case also had not previously given any description of the appellant and had also not attributed any particular part to the appellant except to say generally that all the seven or eight dacoits were taking out the goods from the house and bringing them out. But Mewa Ram in the first information report had clearly stated that he and the witnesses named by him therein had properly seen the miscreants and would be able to identify them if shown to them. Also, there was the evidence that the witnesses had taken up their positions around the house and there was adequate light especially when one of the witnesses set fire to the heap of dry sugarcane leaves nearby. The opportunity to mark the faces and the features of the miscreants was adequate also because those miscreants were at the scene of the offence for more than half an hour. Their number was seven or eight only and there was no crowd between them and the house of the victim which could stultify that opportunity. Further, barring the allegation that the witnesses could have known the appellant because he had a contract at Pipariaghat, for which there was no evidence whatsoever, there was hardly any worthwhile challenge to the validity or reliability of the identification evidence. The result is that there is no substantial reason, as there was in Komal Gope's case, for us to reappraise the evidence a third time contrary to the practice of this Court not to do so except on exceptional grounds. Chander Singh v. State of U.P., AIR 1973 SC 1200 : (1973) 3 SCC 55 : 1973 CrLJ 926.

[11879] ● Evidence of TI not substantive piece of evidence.—The evidence of TI Parade being not a substantive piece of evidence, it can be used only to confirm the identification made in the Court. The identity of the culprit may be fixed by circumstantial evidence also. Sampat Shindey v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1974 SC 791 : (1974) 4 SCC 213 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 382 : 1974 CrLJ 674.

[11880] ● Failure to hold TI Parade despite being asked by accused important factor.—Reiterating the same view another Supreme Court case held that failure to hold TI Parade despite being asked by accused may be an important factor in favour of the accused. Shri Ram v. Sate of U.P., AIR 1975 SC 175 : (1975) 3 SCC 495 : 1975 SCC (Cri) 87 : 1975 CrLJ 240.

[11881] ● Witness was saying he could see face of dacoit.—When the witness says he could see the face of the dacoit it postulates there was light that enabled the witness to the face of the dacoit. Then, it is for the defence to show through cross-examination or otherwise that there was no light or insufficient light, if defence fails, identification can hardly be disputed. Jugal Gope v. State of Bihar, AIR 1981 SC 612 : (1979) 3 SCC 272 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 499 : 1981 CrLJ 4 (SC) : 1979 CrLR (SC) 571.

[11882] ● Dacoits identified by torchlight.—Prosecution case was that the dacoits were identified by torchlights. But the witness omitted to tell about torchlight. However no question was put to witness about torchlight. It was held that the omission to tell about torchlight was inconsequential and may not affect the prosecution case. Jugal Gope v. State of Bihar, AIR 1981 SC 612 : (1979) 3 SCC 272 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 499 : 1981 CrLJ (SC) 4 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 571.

[11883] ● Sessions Judge acquitting accused that dacoits moving about identification not possible.—Sessions Judge acquitted the accused on the ground that as the dacoits were moving about, identification was not possible. It was held that the Sessions Judge was wrong. Jugal Gopel v. State of Bihar, AIR 1981 SC 612 : (1979) 3 SCC 272 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 499 : 1981 CrLJ 4 (SC) : 1979 CrLR (SC) 571.

[11885] ● Accused found in possession of torch and currency notes.—The accused was found in possession of a torch and currency notes and the same were not satisfactorily proved as forming part of corpus delicti. The victim failed to identify the accused at either of the two identification parades. His identification in Court will not help the prosecution. Torch is a very common article and no particular mark appeared thereon. Cash was not claimed by the accused. Yet the accused was not liable under Section 397 or 395, IPC. Bhure Khan v. State of M.P., AIR 1982 SC 948 : (1982) 2 SCC 445 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 469 : 1982 CrLJ 818 : 1982 UPCrR 184.

[11886] ● Victim witness when gives no description of culprit in FIR.—Victim witness when gives no description of the culprit in FIR nor identified the accused in TI Parade, his Court identification cannot sustain conviction. *Md. [11887] ● Light shed by lantern enough to identify witness—Where.—Light shed by a lantern would be enough to enable a witness to identify the culprits where (i) the witness was accustomed to such light due to non electrification;

(ii) accused were not using mask or like to cover their faces; (iii) the accused were known to the witness. Macchi Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1983 SC 957 : (1983) 3 SCC 470 : 1983 CrLJ 1457.

Their power of seeing is not diminished by the circumstances that the incident was witnessed not by electric light but by lantern light. Macchi Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1983 SC 957 : (1983) 3 SCC 470 : 1983 CrLJ 1457 : 1983 (2) Crimes 268.

[11891] ● Testimony in Court identifying accused corroborated by his testimony at identification parade : conviction.—Where, though some of the PWs. were not able to identify each one of the dacoits, one of them had identified all the accused, and his testimony in Court was corroborated by his identification at the parade, the conviction of the appellant under Sections 395 & 396 was justified. Shiv Charan v. State of Haryana, AIR 1987 SC 1 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 1 : 1987 CrLJ 695 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 547 : JT (1986) SC 813 : (1987) 1 SCJ 79 : 1986 ACrC 560 : 1987 ACrR 140 : 1987 Cur CrJ (SC) 6 : 1986 CaL CrLR (SC) 196.

[11896] ● Identification most time unworthy.—The one area of criminal evidence susceptible of miscarriage of criminal justice is the error in the identification of the criminal. Indeed, PROF. BORCHARD'S "Convicting the Innocent" records several criminal convictions in which the accused was subsequently proved innocent. The major source of the error is to be found in the identification of the accused by the victim of the crime. Indeed, the learned author refers to the source of mistaken identification thus: "The emotional balance of the victim or eye-witness is so disturbed by his extra-ordinary experience that his powers of perception become distorted and his identification is frequently most untrustworthy. Into the identification enter other motives not necessarily stimulated originally by the accused personally the desire to requite a crime, to exact vengeance upon the person believed guilty, to find a scapegoat, to support, consciously or unconsciously, an identification already made by another. Thus, doubts are resolved against the accused". See "Identification Parades II" Criminal Law Review, 1963, p. 546. GLANVILLE WILLIAMS in "The Proof of Guilt" (Hamlyn Lectures) refers to the errors of recognition breeding an invincible assurance in the witnesses, highly deceptive for those, who are not forewarned of such possibilities, and excerpts Gorphe's results of a continental investigation, thus : "There is no difference from the subjective point of view, between true and false recognition, so far as their intrinsic qualities are concerned, and there are no objective signs to distinguish one from the other. The witnesses's certainty may not be immediate, without this delay being necessarily a sign of error. Nevertheless, error is more frequent when recognition comes some time after seeing. The act of recognition is very open to suggestion in all its forms. Resemblance is a matter of relativity. For a white person, all negroes are like each other, and conversely. A person can much better distinguish those of his own age and condition than those of different ages and condition. Uniform is a cause of fallacious resemblance, above all for those who do not wear it" (emphasis). Harinath v. State of U.P., AIR 1988 SC 345 : (1988) 1 SCC 14 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 14 : 1988 CrLJ 422 : 1987 (3) Crimes 667.

[11898] ● Identification of culprits—With help of light from straw fire—Appreciation of evidence.—Admittedly, the occurrence was during the dark midnight. The witnesses claimed to have identified the culprits standing at distance of 150 feet with the help of light emanating from the straw-fire in the khandar of Rajendra which was at a distance of 40 steps (80 feet) towards the north-west of the door of the scene house. The High Court on appreciation of the evidence was not inclined to accept the evidence of the witnesses claiming to have identified the culprits with the help of that light and also the torches carried by the assailants. In our opinion, the High Court was right in rejecting that evidence. State of U.P. v. Hardeo, AIR 1992 SC 1854 : 1992 CrLJ 3160 : 1993 Supp (1) SCC 473.

[11899] ● Dacoity participation of appellant doubtful in.—The dacoits were strangers to the eye-witnesses. Then the question arose whether there was sufficient opportunity for these witnesses to recognise the accused. It is noted that none of their features even suggestively mentioned in the FIR not even in the case diary as noted by the High Court. It is also to be noted that none of the eye-witnesses said that they recognised the dacoits while they were inside the house and on other hand it becomes highly doubtful whether they could not have identified the stranger in the moonlight. Taking all these aspects into consideration the trial Court was not prepared to accept the evidence regarding the identification parade of the persons. We think this is a reasonable view in the matter. Therefore, the participation of the appellants in the actual dacoity becomes doubtful. Man Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, 1993 CrLJ 3669.

[11900] ● Identification of accused—Occurrence taking place at 11 p.m..—The very fact that all the witnesses given without any margin of error had identified the suspects as culprits, creates a lurking suspicion in the mind of the Court as to whether the identifying witnesses took a clue in identifying the suspects put up in the parade with the fetters on their legs. We are not convinced about the test identification parade which was the foundation for bringing all the accused as the culprits involved in the dacoity that took place on 26th May, 1973. At any rate a great doubt is entertained with regard to fixing the identity of all the accused. We hold that the second accused is liable to be punished under Section 412 of the Indian Penal Code as the evidence relating to the recovery of the articles is acceptable. The prosecution has not satisfactorily discharged its burden in proving that it was the fifth accused who caused the death of the deceased. Therefore this charge has to fail. In the result, we set aside the convictions of all the accused and the sentences imposed therefor and acquit them of the offences of dacoity and murder, charged under Sections 396, 395 and 395 read with Section 397 and under Section 27 of the Arms Act. We on the basis of the recovery of the looted articles convict the second accused under Section 412 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced him to the period already undergone Tahir Mohammad, Kamad Girendra Singh, Badri Singh v. State, AIR 1993 SC 931 : 1993 Supp (3) SCC 197 : 1993 CrLJ 193 (SC).

[11901] ● All witnesses even without any margin of error identified suspects as culprits creating suspicion in mind of Court.—Fact that all witnesses even without any margin of error had identified accused persons, it creates suspicion and hence their conviction or the basis of such identification is liable to be set aside. Tahir Mohammad, Kamad Ginendra Singh v. State of M.P., AIR 1993 SC 931 : 1993 CrLJ 193 (SC) : 1993 Supp (3) SCC 697.

[11902] ● Dacoity with murder—Evidence of identification credibility.—In the instant case the learned counsel for the appellant has relied upon a decision of the Supreme Court in Budh Sen v. State of U.P. AIR 1970 SC 1321 to contend that the evidence of identification parade does not constitute by itself substantive evidence which is governed essentially by the provisions of Section 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. In that case, the Supreme Court took the view that on the facts established, the Test Identification Parade could not be considered to provide safe and trustworthy evidence on which conviction could be sustained. That case was distinguished by the Courts below and rightly, by taking into account the substantive evidence of the Magistrate, P.W. 7 supported by the remarks of the trial Court regarding demeanour of P.W. 6. There can be no dispute to the proposition that oral evidence led at the trial may by itself be substantive evidence whereas evidence of Test Identification Parade may per se be not. In that situation the Court would certainly be entitled to rely upon such evidence as that would be relevant under Section 9 of the Evidence Act. Here the evidence of the Magistrate, P.W. 7 too supported the prosecution evidence to say that he conducted the identification parade and before him P.W. 6 had correctly identified Ram Nath to be one of the dacoits. And the word of P.W. 7 in the context has been believed by the Courts below. Ram Nath Matho v. State of Bihar, AIR 1996 SC 2511 (2512) : (1996) 8 SCC 630 : 1996 CrLJ 3585.

[11903] ● Dacoity—Identification parade held much after arrest of appellant—No force—Conviction and sentence proper.—Incident of dacoity took place in the house of complainant. The appellant was identified in test identification parade as well by witnesses in the Court. Contention that identification parade was held much after the arrest of appellant and therefore not believable has no force but which could be said to have been hold with unusual delay. Conviction & sentence proper & merit no interference. Ramanand Ramnath v. State of M.P., (1996) 8 SCC 514 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 684 : 1996 (2) Crimes 57.

[11904] ● Dacoity—Appreciation of evidence.—In the instant case, the witnesses claimed to have identified accused who were 30 paces away. The High Court has accepted the version of the witnesses that there were two poles near the house of Om Prakash and or both of them lights were burning at the time of incident. It was nobody's case that the light was so insufficient that from a distance of 30 paces a person standing near the electric pole could not be identified. The reason given by the High Court that because dacoits were wearing Khaki Uniform and wearing hats they could not have been identified appears to be more in the nature of a surmise, as it was not even suggested to any witness that because of the hats worn by the respondents there was shadow on their faces and, therefore, it was not possible to recognise them. It is difficult to appreciate the reasoning of the High Court. If the witnesses were able to recognise the colour of the clothes worn by the dacoits surely they could have recognised their faces also of those who were known to them. As noticed from the site plan and also from the evidence of the witnesses. One electric pole was to the north-east of the house of Om Prakash and one was towards north-west. The accused had come from the north-western direction and even if it is assumed that their caps could have cast a shadow over their faces while they were passing to the north-western electric pole then light from the other pole would have fallen on their faces. The evidence of Om Prakash and others that they stood up and noticed that there were about 20-25 persons about 30-35 steps away from the house deserves to be believed. State of U.P. v. Bhoora, AIR 1998 SC 254 : 1998 CrLJ 478 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 1 : (1997) 4 Crimes 208.

[11905] ● Sufficient light to identify dacoits.—There was overwhelming evidence of witnesses to the effect that there was supply of electricity at the time when the occurrence took place. PW-5 stated that he was watching television when the dacoits entered his house. The High Court has rightly held on the basis of the evidence or record that there was supply of electricity at the time when the dacoity was committed and the witness, therefore, had sufficient light and opportunity to identify the dacoits. Pramod Mandal v. State of Bihar, (2004) 13 SCC 150 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 75 (80).

[11906] ● Dacoits having masks on their face.— In the instant case, it was seen from the evidence of PW-5 that the dacoits had covered their face with cloth, at the time of incident. PW-1 also stated that the dacoits were covering their faces except eyes and nose, with black cloth, PW-4 did not specifically say whether or not the dacoits were having masks on their face.

Held, "Assuming that eyes and nose could be seen to some extent despite the mask, the question is whether any of the crucial witnesses could have identified the unknown masked dacoit. PW-1, the neighbour who was living in the adjacent house, came forward with the version that after hearing the noise, he put on his torch and, in that light, he saw the dacoits killing Rajendra Thakur at the courtyard of his house. PW-1 further stated that thereafter he went towards the doorway of the house of Rajendra Thakur and when one of the dacoits flashed the torch on him, he noticed Rajendra Thakur lying in an injured condition while one person was attacking him with knife. The witness then claimed in the cross-examination that he had flashed the torch 5 to 7 times at the dacoits from a distance of 20-30 feet. Therefore, his version is that he was able to identify the accused by flashing the torchlight now and then. He claimed to have remained at the place of occurrence for 2-3 minutes. It seems to us that the evidence of PW-1 is not credible. Leaving apart the probabilities and the natural course of conduct, the version of PW-1 is belied by his own version in the cross-examination. While at one point of time he said that he did not get scared, at para 24 of the deposition, he clearly stated as follows : "When I went to the place of occurrence for the first time, then I saw the assault. Accused had also run to assault me. I ran towards my house in order to save my life. I was having an Eveready torch in my hand." In the next para, he stated that after the dacoits left the place of occurrence, he and his family members when to the spot and stayed for about 10-15 minutes. It is unbelievable that he would go and remain at the place of occurrence even for a short while when the attack and dacoity by armed persons was going on and that he dared to flash the torchlight on them more than once in order to get an idea of the miscreants. On his own showing, he was concerned about his own safety. Moreover, this witness stated that there was no electricity or lantern light at the house of the deceased. On the face of it, we need not say anything more to discredit this witness on the aspect of identification of the appellant which was done after a lapse of about seven weeks. As the dacoits covered their faces, we do not think that it was reasonably possible for the witness (PW-1) to identify each of the criminals, some of whom including the appellant were unknown to him with the help of the light flashed by him intermittently, even if that version is accepted. The High Court described PW-1 as an "independent" and natural witness and believed him without testing the veracity of evidence in the light of various circumstances." Umesh Kamat v. State of Bihar, AIR 2005 SC 726 : (2005) 9 SCC 200 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 1218.

[11907] ● Identification of accused who covered their faces during dacoity.—Amongst the eye-witnesses, it is the evidence of PW-4 which assumes more importance because he was the injured and he would have had the opportunity to notice the offenders from close range and there was a reasonable possibility of PW-4 having in his mind the imprint of the image of criminals who attacked him and his brother. PW-4 identified the accused in the course of evidence. However, even his evidence does not inspire confidence in ultimate analysis, contrary to what PW-1 stated, he took the stand that there was a lantern at the place (baithak) where he was sleeping. Of course, that lantern which was described as 'old' was not even seized by the police. Assuming there was a lantern, in all probability, it would have been quite dim as it is common knowledge that while going to sleep normally the lamp is kept at the minimum level in rural areas. PW-4 further stated in the chief examination that he could identify the four dacoits in the light emanating from the torch (flashed by the dacoits) and the moon-light. The High Court observed that it was not a moon-light day as per the admission of some of the witnesses. According to PW-4, the appellant herein is not the person who aimed the gun at his brother. The question is whether at that juncture when he was being subjected the blows soon after he woke up and his brother was being simultaneously attacked by the armed miscreants, he would have really observed each one of the four persons with covered faces so keenly and minutely as to identify them by the uncovered portion of the nose and eyes. The answer could only be in the negative. It is pertinent to note that PW-4 did not spell out the distinctive features of the appellant (who was admittedly a stranger to him) on the basis of which he could identify him despite the mask. Umesh Kamat v. State of Bihar, AIR 2005 SC 726 : (2005) 9 SCC 200 : 2005 CrLJ 908 (912) : (2005) 1 Crimes 215.

[11908] ● Dacoity with murder—Identification.—There is any amount of doubt on the point whether PW4. In the situation in which he was placed could closely observe the identifiable features of the appellant in mask that too in the glow of dim lantern and in the light emitted by the torches flashed at him or other inmates of the house. This doubt has to be viewed in the context of two things, firstly—there was no recovery of property, nor any other corroborating evidence linking the appellant to the crime. The second aspect is that the trial Court was not inclined to believe the evidence of the identification of three other accused at the same identification parade held on 19.7.1994 and commented that they were falsely implicated. If so, the evidence of PW-4 should have been scrutinized with greater caution instead of proceeding on a premise that he was a truthful witness. One more aspect which deserves notice is that PW-4 did not have the occasion to observe the dacoits operations inside the house. He would have noticed them only initially for a short while before they entered the house. It is his case that he became unconscious a little later as a result of injury inflicted on him. These are all the various doubts which loom large over the prosecution story of identification of the appellant. Unfortunately, the High Court did not analyze the evidence of prosecution witnesses so as to test the credibility of their evidence in the light of admitted or undeniable facts apparent from the record.

The only reason given by the High Court in believing the evidence of PW-4 is that the incident must have left a deep impression in his mind, especially in view of the injuries which he and his wife received at the hands of the dacoits and such impression would not be easily fade out within a few weeks or months. This observation of the High Court was based on the hypothesis that PW-4 was in a position to clearly notice the physical features and appearance of the appellant. There was no warrant for such ready assumption. The trial Court as well as the High Court should not have taken the version of the PW-4 on its face value without testing its credibility. The relevant aspects adverted to above which give room for reasonable doubt, were not at all noticed by the trial Court or the High Court. Under these circumstances, the interference with the finding recorded by the both the Courts, is called for. Umesh Kamat v. State of Bihar, AIR 2005 SC 726 : (2009) 9 SCC 200 : 2005 CrLJ 908 (912) : (2005) 1 Crimes 215.

[11909] ● Delay in holding T.I. parade and in recovering /identification of stolen property.—In cases of dacoity at midnight it takes a little more time for the prosecution to collect evidence as they have to interrogate many people during the cause of investigation to nab the real culprit. It is also not unlikely that the witnesses fear dacoits, they shirk to come out and support the prosecution case. Some delay in the identification parade or identification of property is likely in cases of dacoity at midnight and recovery of the ornaments. The delay is natural in such cases and it is not fatal so as to throw out the prosecution case outright. Narayan Prasad v. State of M.P., AIR 2006 SC 204 : (2006) 2 SCC(Cri) 161 (164) : 2006 CrLJ 123 : JT 2005 (9) SC 433 : 2005 (4) Crimes 226.

[11910] ● Doubtful evidence—Animosity between parties.—The High Court has noted as of a telephonic message was given by a stranger regarding dacoity. However, in evidence it has given that the information was given not by a stranger but by PW 1. In the information given it was stated that some stranger had committed dacoity. The accused were not strangers and were practically neighbours of the informant and his family. The High Court noted that there was no intention to falsely implicate accused persons because of enmity and there was no reason as to why dignity of two young girls would be put at stake by alleging rape. It is to be noted that in fact rape was alleged but the trial Court found that there was no material to substantiate the place of rape. The evidence is, totally in consistent and lacks evidence. The High Courts' observations were clearly based on surmises and contrary to the factual scenario the appellants are liable to be acquitted. Abdul Gafur v. State of Assam, AIR 2008 SC 607 : 2008 (3) SCC (Cri) 316 : 2008 CrLJ 800 (SC) : 2008 (4) Crimes 323 (SC).

[11911] ● Test Identification Parade—Validity.—In the instant case, the case was registered against the accused and after completion of investigation, the investigating agency submitted charge-sheet against them for offence under Section 395, IPC. The basic challenge before the High Court was to the possibility of identification. The T.I. parade or 3.4.1998, the accused was arrested on 27.3.1998 and on 28.3.1998 the accused was produced by the SHO at the residence of CJM. The T.I. parade was held on 3.4.1998 and the accused was correctly identified by PW-3. PW-3 also specifically stated in his evidence that it was not correct to say that the "accused might have told to him that the accused was shown to the witness earlier". In view of the evidence which the trial Court and the High Court have analysed and the identification by PW-3 in the T.I. parade, there is no infirmity in the conclusion of guilt of the accused. The does not warrant interference. Md. Kalam v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 2008 SC 1813 : (2008) 11 SCC 352 : 2008 CrLJ 2602 (2603, 2604, 2607) : JT 2009 (4) SC 344.

[11912] ● Identification of accused by lantern.—It was claimed by the prosecution witnesses that they had seen the dacoits fourteen fifteen in members, who came to informants house, at about 12 pm, were identified by lantern. But the investigation officer did not find any lantern or sign of lighting the lantern at the scene of occurrence. It was held that the order of acquittal of accused by the High Court was liable to be sustained. Shrishi Narain Jha v. Bindeshwar Jha, AIR 2010 SC 465 : (2009) 6 SCC 457 : 2010 CrLJ 467 : JT 2009 (5) SC 674.

10. MAKING PREPARATION TO COMMIT DACOITY (SECTION 399, IPC)

[11913] ● Making preparation to commit dacoity.—"Preparation" in Section 399 implies discussing or arranging means essential for the purpose of the commission of the offence of dacoity in respect of which the determination to commit the offence exists. Any stage antecedent to such determination would ordinarily not amount to preparation. Malkiat Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1970 SC 713 : (1969) 1 SCC 157 : 1970 CrLJ 750.

[11914] ● Accused cousin—Mere presence not sufficient to establish charge under Section 399, IPC.—In the instant case the contention that the accused R was a cousin of and if he was staying with C, the mere fact of his presence, could not be sufficient to establish the charge under Section 399, IPC cannot be accepted. There might have been some force in the argument if the party of the dacoits had not left the baithak of C; that it was only after the dacoits started coming out of the house that they were arrested: that it might be assumed, although there was some dispute; that he was a cousin of C, but even assuming that the fact that he was arrested outside the house destroyed the version of R that he was at the baithak of C for innocent purposes; that a phrasa was recovered from his possession and that it was not possible to agree with the contention that in these facts the charge under Section 399 was not made out. State of U.P. v. Raju, AIR 1971 SC 708 : (1971) 3 SCC 174 : 1971 SCC (Cri) 263 : 1971 CrLJ 642.

[11915] ● Assembly of persons for committing offence—Conviction under Section 399 or 402, IPC.—When there was an assembly of eight persons at 1 a.m. in a school compound near a market place and a gun and cartridges were recovered from them though they may have assembled for committing an offence, their conviction under Section 399 or Section 402, IPC cannot stand. Chaturi Yadav v. State of Bihar, AIR 1979 SC 1412 : (1979) 3 SCC 430 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 502 : 1979 CrLJ 1090.

11. "OFFENDER"

[11916] ● "Offender".—The term 'offender' in Section 397 is confined to the offender who uses any deadly weapon. The use of a deadly weapon by one offender at the time of committing robbery cannot attract Section 397 for the imposition of a minimum punishment, on another offender who had not used any deadly weapon. Phool Kumar v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1975 SC 905 : (1975) 1 SCC 797 : 1975 SCC (Cri) 336 : 1975 CrLJ 778.

[11917] ● Expression "armed with any deadly weapons".—Section 398 uses the expression "armed with any deadly weapon" to attract the minimum punishment provided therein. When the offence of robbery is committed by an offender being armed with a deadly weapon which was within the vision of the victim so as to be capable of creating a terror in his mind, the offender must be deemed to have used that deadly weapon in the commission of the robbery. On the other hand, if an offender was armed with a deadly weapon at the time of attempting to commit a robbery, then the weapon was not put to any fruitful use because it would have been of use only when the offender succeeded in committing the robbery. Phool Kumar v. Delhi Admn., AIR 1975 SC 905 : (1975) 1 SCC 797 : 1975 SCC (Cri) 336 : 1975 CrLJ 778.

12. PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE

[11918] ● Practice and procedure.—When there is no mention of the fact that the accused persons had looted away the articles or movables of the victims, they cannot be convicted u/s. 395/149. However, the appellants surrounded the victims and extorted a sum of Rs. 300/- as price for sparing them and this amount was paid to the appellants offence under Section 384/149 is made out. Vishnu Shiv Ram v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1979 SC 1943 : (1979) 3 SCC 365 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 642 : 1979 CrLJ 1305 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 723 : 1979 UJ (SC) 869.

[11919] ● Substantive evidence if not referring to allegation that accused person looted away movables of victim.—If the substantive evidence does not refer to the allegations that the accused person looted away movables of the victims, they cannot be convicted under Section 395/149. If his evidence and FIR show extortion of money as price for sharing them, their conviction may be altered to one under Section 384/149, IPC. Pohalya Mathavalvi v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1979 SC 1949 : (1980) 1 SCC 530 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 261 : 1979 CrLJ 1310 : 1980 CrLR (SC) 185.

13. PUNISHMENT

[11920] ● Punishment.—Where only one injury has been caused, the sentence of three years' rigorous imprisonment is proper. Shivappa v. State of Mysore, AIR 1971 SC 196 : (1970) 1 SCC 487 : 1970 SCC (Cri) 415 : 1971 CrLJ 260 : 1970 SCD 384.

[11921] ● Accused not previous convicts—Fit case for release on probation.—Where the accused, young men and students were not previous convicts, it is a fit case for release on probation of good conduct. Moti Lal v. State of U.P., AIR 1979 SC 1690 : (1979) 4 SCC 343 : 1979 CrLJ 800 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 94 : 1979 UJ (SC) 202.

[11922] ● Accused while carrying away stolen property exploding cracker to frighten persons.—While carrying away the stolen property the accused exploded cracker to frighten the inmates of the house who wanted to pursue them.

All the accused were young and they had already served a sentence of about one and half years. There was no attempt to cause any injury to any of the inmates of the house or other persons at the time of the commission of the offence or even thereafter. Taking into consideration all the circumstances the ends of justice would be served if the sentence was, reduced to imprisonment already undergone. Kushomahton v. State of Bihar, AIR 1980 SC 788 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 279 : 1980 CrLJ 313 : 1980 Supp SCC 344.

[11923] ● Appellant "used deadly weapon" in committing robbery.—Technically the offence committed by the appellant was one under Section 397, IPC as he had "used a deadly weapon" in committing the robbery and the Courts had no option but to impose on him the minimum sentence of seven years' imprisonment. But there were several mitigating circumstances in the case. There was nothing on the record to show that the appellant was a person of bad antecedents. He was a primary school teacher. The amount alleged to have been robbed was a trivial amount of Rs. 385. He did not cause physical hurt to anybody. He did not make any attempt to rob the cash in the booking office where he quietly remained standing for a sufficient time. He did not resist his arrest. According to the Station Master, (PW-6), Constable Shaikh Karim had informed him that the appellant had given his name as Shankar on of Nand Lal of Damoh. Thus, the appellant made no attempt to conceal his real identity. We, therefore think that this is an appropriate case where the Executive Government may, in exercise of its power of clemency under Section 432 of the CrPC, 1973, remit or reduce the sentence of the appellant. Ram Shankar v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1981 SC 644 : 1980 Supp SCC 470 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 378 (378-379) : 1981 CrLJ 162 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 574.

[11924] ● Pre-planned dacoity—Murdering two persons in cruel manner.—In this case there was a pre-planned dacoity in which a motor lorry carrying 180 chest of tea was hijacked at about midnight, taken to another place and the driver of the lorry, and a "Khalasi" and two others who were in the lorry were murdered in cold blood in a cruel manner and their bodies were buried with a view to cause evidence of the crime committed by the appellant and other co-accused to disappear. The conviction of appellant under Section 396 read with Section 34 is proper. Plea for reduction of sentence awarded by the Courts to the period already undergone is rejected. Lalli alias Chiranjib Bhowmick v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1986 SC 990 : (1986) 2 SCC 409 : 1986 SCC (CrI) 174 (176) : 1986 CrLJ 1083 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 183.

[11925] ● Sentence offence under Section 397, IPC simplicitor not made out.—Coming to the question of sentence we find that ultimately neither of the two witnesses were injured nor the appellant succeeded in taking any money from them. No doubt that demand made by them is an offence in the eye of law and attract the provisions of law with which they are charged. An offence under Section 397, IPC simpliciter is not made out. It would be only one punishable under Section 397 read with Section 511, IPC. Sukhwinder Singh alias Jaggi v. State of Punjab, AIR 1994 SC 764 (765) : 1994 Supp (3) SCC 727 : 1994 CrLJ 1117.

[11926] ● Accused not to be convicted under Section 397, IPC if not used weapon for robbery.—An accused can not be convicted under Section 397, IPC if he has not used the weapon for robbery. If weapon is used for self defence when a victim threw some object (herd a milk can) in course of robbery, accused cannot be convicted under Section 394, IPC. He can be convicted, however, under Section 392, IPC. Ajit Singh v. State of Haryana, (1996) 3 SCC 335 : (1996) 1 Crimes 146 (SC).

[11927] ● Weapon attributed to appellants not answered description of deadly weapon.—Learned counsel contends that the weapon attributed to the appellants cannot answer the description of deadly weapons. We are persuaded to accept the contention particularly in view of the absence of other descriptions given to the weapons. Merely, the description of bamboo sticks or lathis is not enough to make the weapons lethal or deadly. There is no case that the accused inflicted grievous hurt or attempted to inflict grievous hurt to the inmates. Therefore, the limitation presented in Section 397, IPC cannot be applied. Considering all aspects, we think that a sentence of imprisonment for a period of 4 years will be sufficient to meet the ends of justice. Dhavai Mahto v. State of Bihar, AIR 2000 SC 3602 (3602) : 2000 AIR SCW 3966.

[11928] ● Serious case of dacoity with murder—Leniency in sentence not proper.—In the instant case, the evidence of the injured witness PW-4 is of vital importance. Similar is the case of PW-2 even though PWs-1 & 3 have not been fully believed yet the credibility of the evidence of PWs-2 & 4 cannot be doubted on that score. So far as the acquittal of Dr. Shamim Ahmad Khan is concerned, the trial Court and the High Court doubted prosecution version so far as he is concerned because he was not named in the FIR. It is a serious case of dacoity, and leniency in sentence would not only be undesirable but also would be improper. The passage of time cannot wash away gravity of offence. Therefore, judged from any angle these appeals have no substance and are dismissed. Arjun Mahto v. State of Bihar, AIR 2008 SC 3270 : (2008) 15 SCC 604 : 2008 CrLJ 4313 (4315, 4316) : 2008 (9) JT 140 : 2008 (11) Scale 341 : 2008 (6) Supreme 81 : 2008 (3) Crimes 338.

[11929] ● Sentence—Lenient view.—In view of the facts that the accused appellants had not caused any injury to any witness, lost in the dacoity in significant as it was only Rs. 2860/- and 28 years had already elapsed since the occurrence, the sentence of five years awarded by the High Court was reduced to 3 years. Ram Sunder Mahto v. State of Bihar, 2009 (4) Crimes 223 (SC) : JT 2009 (3) SC 337.

[11930] ● Section 395, IPC—Dacoity—Sentence.—Looking to the nature of crime and the manner in which the accused looted temple properties, graver punishment was warranted. In any case, sentence of 5 years' rigorous imprisonment awarded by the trial Court and confirmed by the High Court for the offence under section 395, IPC calls for no interference. Ram Babu v. State of U.P., AIR 2010 SC 2143 : (2010) 5 SCC 63 : 2010 CrLJ 2856 (2859, 2860) : (2010) 2 Crimes 384.

14. USING DEADLY WEAPONS OR CAUSING GRIEVOUS HURT DURING DACOITY (S. 397, IPC)

[11931] ● Using deadly weapons or causing grievous hurt during dacoity.—Having interpreted the word "uses" in the context of Section 397, IPC Supreme Court held that it is not necessary that deadly weapon must be actually used by the culprit in the robbery or dacoity by way of causing hurt or brandishing the same and that it is 'used' within the meaning of Section 397, if the deadly weapon is merely held out for terrorising frightening a victim to obtain property. Phool Kumar v. State (Delhi Administration), AIR 1975 SC 905 : (1975) 1 SCC 797 : 1975 SCC (Cri) 396 : 1975 CrLJ 778.

[11933] ● Word "uses" for purpose of Section 397, IPC.—What is essential to satisfy the word "uses" for the purposes of Section 397, IPC is the robbery being committed by the offender who was armed with a deadly weapon which was within the vision of the victim so as to be capable of creating a tenor in the victim and not that it should be further shown to have been actually used for cutting, stabbing, shorting as the case may be. Ashfaq v. State, 2004 SCC (Cri) 687 (691).

[11934] ● Each accused wielding deadly weapon of their own—Ingredients of Section 317, IPC fulfilled.—The provisions of Section 397, IPC do not create any new substantive offence as such but merely serve as being complementary to Sections 392 and 395 by regulating the punishment already provided for dacoity by fixing a minimum term of imprisonment when the dacoity committed was found attendant upon certain aggravating circumstances viz. use of a deadly weapon or causing of grievous hurt or attempting to cause death or grievous hurt. For that reason, no doubt the provision postulates only the individual act of the accused to be relevant to attract Section 397, IPC and thereby inevitably negates the use of the principle of constructive or vicarious liability engrafted in Section 34, IPC. Consequently, the challenge made to the conviction under Section 397 even after excluding the applicability of Section 34, IPC does not merit countenance, for the reason that each one of the accused in this case were said to have been wielding a deadly weapon of their own, and thereby squarely fulfilled the ingredients of Section 397, IPC, dehors any reference to Section 34, IPC. Ashfaq v. State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi), AIR 2004 SC 1253 : (2004) 3 SCC 116 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 687 (691) : 2004 CrLJ 936.

[11935] ● Ingredients of offence under Section 397, IPC.—The ingredients of the offence are as under:—

(1) The commission of robbery or dacoity as described in Sections 392 and 395 respectively;

(2) the accused:

  (a) used a deadly weapon, or

  (b) caused grievous hurt, or

  (c) attempted to cause death or grievous hurt.

(3) He did so at the time of committing robbery or dacoity. Niranjan Singh v.

State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2007 SC 2434 : 2007 CrLJ 3523 : 2007 (3) Crimes 97 (SC) : JT 2007 (9) SC 33.

[11936] ● Actual causing of grievous hurt not essential for attracting of grievous hurt.—The fact of the instant case show that Section 397, IPC was rightly applied. Any hurt which endangers life is a grievous hurt. It would be seen that one of the injuries was caused just below the nipple. The term "endangerous to life". Apart from that in the provision "attempt" to cause grievous hurt attracts its application. The question whether the accused attempted to cause death or grievous hurt would depend upon the factual scenario. In the instant case knife blow was given on the chest just below the nipple. Considering the place where injury was inflicted i.e. on the chest the High Court was right in its view about the applicability of Section 397, IPC. Niranjan Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2007 SC 2434 : 2007 CrLJ 3523 (SC) (3524) : 2007 (3) Crimes 97 (SC).

[11937] ● "Offender" under Section 397, IPC.—The term "offender" under Section 397, IPC is confined to the offender who uses any deadly weapon, use of deadly weapon by one offender at the time of committing robbery cannot attract Section 397, IPC for the imposition of minimum punishment an another offender who had not used any deadly weapon. There is a distinction between "uses" as used in Section 397, IPC and 398, IPC. Section 398, IPC, connotes something armed with deadly weapon. Dilawar Singh v. State of Delhi, AIR 2007 SC 3234 : 2007 CrLJ 4709 : 2007 (3) Crimes 388 (SC).

15. RECOVERY OF PROPERTY STOLEN IN DACOITY—PRESUMPTION

[11938] ● Recovery of property stolen in dacoity—Presumption.—Recent and unexplained possession of the property stolen after robbery and murder would be presumptive evidence about robbery would similarly be evidence against him in a charge of murder. Wasim Khan v. State of U.P., AIR 1956 SC 400 : 1956 SCR 191.

[11939] ● Goods stolen in dacoity when received from accused—Presumption.—When goods stolen in dacoity were recovered from the accused three days after the occurrence, there occurs only the presumption that the accused knew the article to be stolen not that these were stolen in dacoity. Sheo Nath v. State of U.P., AIR 1970 SC 535 : (1969) 3 SCC 116 : 1970 SCC (Cri) 15 : 1970 CrLJ 601 : (1971) 2 SCJ 369 : 1971 Mad LJ (Cri) 578 : (1970) 2 SCR 96 : 1970 AllWR 336 : 1970 LW (Cri) 144 : 1970 UJ 111.

[11940] ● Recovery of goods stolen in dacoity presumption drawing of.—From the recovery of the stolen goods from the appellant, 3 days after the occurrence of the dacoity, three presumptions are possible : (1) that the appellant took part in the dacoity; (2) that he received stolen goods knowing them to be stolen in the commission of a dacoity; and (3) that the appellant received those goods knowing them to have been stolen. While clothes, ornaments, cash, etc., were stolen, the only articles recovered from the appellants who was a cloth merchant were a length of muslin and a length of charkhana doriya and he might well have acquired them as a receiver. It was not in evidence, that in the village in which the appellant lived it was known that a dacoity had taken place and goods had been stolen therein. Hence the only legitimate presumption to be drawn was, that the appellant knew that the goods were stolen, but he did not know that they were stolen in a dacoity and so he could only be convicted under Section 411, IPC. Sheo Nath v. State of U.P., AIR 1970 SC 535 : (1969) 3 SCC 116 : 1970 CrLJ 601 : 1970 AWR (HC) 336 : 1970 ACrR 208 : 1970 MLW (Cri) 144.

[11941] ● Accused convicted on evidence of having in possession of stolen goods.—Where the accused were convicted on the sole evidence of having in their possession stolen goods which were later identified to belong to the traders whose goods were looted in a dacoity, the presumption that they were dacoits themselves was rightly drawn. Shivappa v. State of Mysore, AIR 1971 SC 196 : (1970) 1 SCC 487 : 1970 SCC (Cri) 215 : 1971 CrLJ 260 : (1970) 2 SCJ 681.

[11942] ● Presumption whether accused received of stolen property or dacoity.—If there is other evidence to connect an accused with the crime itself, however small, the finding of the stolen property with him is a piece of evidence which connects him further with the crime. There is then no question of presumption. The evidence strengthen the other evidence already against him. It is only when the accused cannot be connected with the crime except by reason of possession of the fruits of crime that the presumption may be drawn. In what circumstances the one presumption or the other may be drawn, it is not necessary to state categorically in this case. It all depends upon the circumstances under which the discovery of the fruits of crime are made with a particular accused. It has been stated on more than one occasion that if the gap of time is too large, the presumption that the accused was concerned with the time itself gets weakened. The presumption is stronger when the discovery of the fruits of crime if made immediately after the crime is committed. Shivappa v. State of Mysore, AIR 1971 SC 196 : (1970) 1 SCC 487 : 1970 SCC (Cri) 215 : 1971 CrLJ 260 : (1970) 2 SCJ 681. TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) Lchhman Ram v. State of Orissa, AIR 1985 SC 486 : 1985 (2) SCC 533 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 263 : 1985 CrLJ 753 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 186 : 1985 (1) Crimes 611.

[11943] ● Dacoity—Appreciation of evidence.—Contradictions in the evidence of the PWs. as to the weapons, possessed by the accused, cannot make the testimony unreliable. It is common experience that in the confusion of the moment, witnesses are prone to make such error especially if seized by sudden fear. Besides, those who are determined to be lawless do not always stick to their weapons. Presence of an identifying witness who claims to have been looted cannot be doubted merely because his name does not find a place in the FIR where though about 20 persons traveling by a bus including that witness, were alleged to have been looted, names of some of them only were mentioned in the FIR. Bharat Singh v. State of U.P., AIR 1972 SC 2478 : (1973) 3 SCC 896 : 1972 CrLJ 1704 : 1972 SCD 1119.

[11944] ● Article subject matter of dacoity recovered—At instance of appellant.—Where articles which were subject matter of dacoity, were recovered at the instance of the accused, is liable under Section 412, IPC by virtue of the presumption. Where none of the witnesses was able to identify the appellant at the TI parade and therefore, there was no legal evidence to connect the appellant with the actual participation in the dacoity, his conviction under Section 397, IPC, cannot be maintained. Though empty cartridges were found near the place of occurrence which were said to have been fired from the licensed gun of the appellant, that by itself was not conclusive because there had been a delay of as many as six days after the occurrence in the recovery of the cartridges. Moreover, the possibility of their having been used by someone else by borrowing the gun of the appellant could not be reasonably excluded. However, there could be no escape from the position that the articles, which were recovered at the instance of the appellant, were the subject-matter of the dacoity and had been properly identified by the owner of the articles. In these circumstances, there would be a presumption that the appellant was a receiver of the property transferred to him in the course of a dacoity. The conviction of the appellant was altered from one under Section 397 to that under Section 412, IPC. Chhote Lal v. State of M.P., AIR 1978 SC 1390 : 1978 CrLJ 1411 : 1978 CrLR (SC) 147 (2) : 1978 SCCrR 240 : (1978) 2 SCWR 263 : 1978 CrAppR (SC) 196 : 1978 ACrR 346 : 1978 SimLC 410.

[11945] ● When theft property in course of dacoity proved and recovered.—Where theft property in the course of dacoity is proved and the property is recovered soon after the dacoity taken place, the accused cannot be convicted under Section 395, IPC on the basis of presumption under Section 114, Evidence Act and conviction is altered to that under Section 412, IPC. Amar Singh v. State of M.P., AIR 1982 SC 129 : (1982) 3 SCC 214 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 700 : 1982 CrLJ 610 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 573.

[11946] ● Recovery of articles stolen—Conviction.—Recovery of articles at the instance of the accused is sufficient to bring the case not under Section 412, IPC, but under Section 395, IPC, with the aid of Section 114 of the Evidence Act because the recoveries were made very soon after the occurrence. The articles recovered were kept concealed either under a stone or under a bridge or at other places which could not be said to be accessible to any ordinary person without prior knowledge. Lachhman Ram v. State of Orissa, AIR 1985 SC 486 : (1985) 2 SCC 533 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 263 : 1985 CrLJ 753 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 186 : 1985 (1) Crimes 611 : 1985 AllCrR 165 : 1985 CurCrJ (SC) 105 : (1985) 59 CutLT 471 : 1985 East CrC 148 : 1985 CrAppR (SC) 134.

[11947] ● Pre-planned dacoity.—This was a pre-planned dacoity in which a motor-lorry carrying 180 chests of tea was hijacked at about midnight, taken to another place and the driver of the lorry, and a 'Khalishi' and two others who were in the lorry were murdered in cold blood in a cruel manner and their bodies were buried with a view to cause evidence of the crime committed by the Appellant and the other co-accused to disappear. Lalli alias Chiranjib Bhowmick v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1986 SC 990 : (1986) 2 SCC 409 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 174 : 1986 CrLJ 1083 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 183.

[11948] ● Accused arrested after lapse of 3/4 months—Conviction.—The recoveries are duly effected and the Sub-inspector as well as the witnesses spoke about the same. Merely because certain stolen articles were recovered from the accused they cannot be held to be dacoits by invoking the presumption unless there is a recent possession. In this case admittedly, there is a lapse of nearly three or four months. In these circumstances, we think it would be safe particularly when they were acquitted by the trial Court to convict them only for the offence of being in possession of the stolen property. Man Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, 1993 CrLJ 3669.

[11949] ● Recovery of stolen property—Nothing unnatural or improbable on part of accused in keeping their share.—The trial Court as well as the High Court have examined the different aspects relating to the recovery of articles and have come to the conclusion that the articles removed during the dacoity had been concealed in the different parts of the residence of the appellant Barchia and were recovered pursuant to the information given by the three appellants to the Investigating Officer. The only objection taken on behalf of the appellants before this is that it looked unnatural that stolen articles would have been kept at different places by the three appellants but within the same compound, i.e., the residence of the appellant Barchia. It is very difficult for Court to say as to how a set of culprits would have behaved after commission of the dacoity, in respect of disposal or concealment of the booty. According to us there is nothing unnatural or improbable on the part of the appellants in keeping their share of the stolen articles concealed in the residence of one of the appellants. Brij Mohan v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1994 SC 739 (743-744) : (1994) 1 SCC 413 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 527 : 1994 CrLJ 922 : 1994 (1) Crimes 288.

[11950] ● Recovery of stolen property—Presumption.—Where the stolen property was recovered from the possession of the accused, the Court would be justified in using the presumption, raised by Section 114 of the Evidence Act. Pravin v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2008 SC 1846 : (2008) 16 SCC 166 : 2008 CrLJ 2980 (2987) : JT 2008 (4) 354.

DAMAGES

[11951] ● Damages.—The essentials are (a) detriment to one by the wrong doing of another; (b) reparation awarded to the injured through legal remedies; and (c) its quantum being determined by dual components of pecuniary compensation for the loss suffered and often, not always, a punitive addition as a deterrent-cum-denunciation by the law. For instance, exemplary damages are damages on an increased scale, awarded to the plaintiff over and above what will barely compensate him for his property loss, where the wrong done to him was aggravated by circumstances of violence, oppression, malice, fraud or wanton and wicked conduct on the part of the defendant, and are intended to solace the plaintiff for mental anguish, laceration of his feelings, shame, degradation or other aggravations of the original wrong, or else to punish the defendant for his evil behaviours or to make a example of him, for which reason they are also called "punitive" or "punitory" damages or "vindictive" damages, and (vulgarly) "smart money". Organo Chemical Industries v. Union of India, AIR 1979 SC 1803 : (1979) 4 SCC 573 : (1980) 1 SCR 61 at 74.

[11953] ● Word "damaged" in collection of words.—The word "damaged" in the collocation of the words "lost or damaged" appearing in the proviso to sub-section (2C) of Section 13 in relation to the part of the sample sent by the Court to the Director of the Central Food Laboratory must, in the context, mean "damaged due to any cause, including decomposition". The part of the sample sent by the Court to the Director of the Central Food Laboratory under the proviso to sub-section (2-C) of Section 13 may be either damaged due to the container not being properly sealed or fastened, or due to various other causes including breakage of the container, or because decomposition has occurred, or it may be lost in transit. The word "damaged" in the collocation of the words "lost or damaged" occurring in sub-section (2) of Section 11 and in the proviso to sub-section (2-C) of Section 13 must be construed in furtherance of the object and purpose of inserting these provisions. The whole purpose of depositing two parts of the sample with the Local (Health) Authority is that if one of the parts of the sample is lost or damaged for any reason whatever, the remaining part may still be available for analysis.

In STROUD'S Judicial Dictionary of Words and Phrases, 3rd Edn., p. 710, para 9, it is stated : "You 'damage' a thing if you render it imperfect or inoperative" Decomposition would render a sample useless and of no value for analysis. The word "damaged" used in sub-section (2-C) has to be given a wider meaning, it is not possible for us to subscribe to the view that the loss or damage must occur after the sample is dispatched for analysis to the Central Food Laboratory. We are inclined to think that the word "damaged" is wide enough to mean "damaged due to any cause whatever, including decomposition". To restrict the meaning of the phrase 'lost or damaged' would be to defeat the object for which the new Section 13 was inserted by Parliament by Act 34 of 1976. It is not necessary that loss should take place only after the actual dispatch of the part of the sample to the Central Food Laboratory has commenced. From the nature of things, the loss contemplated by the proviso to sub-section (2-C) of Section 13 must take place after the Court has directed one part of the sample to be dispatched to the Central Food Laboratory, but the course of such dispatch is not required to be confined to the period of actual transit. Even if that part of the sample is lost after the Court has directed it to be sent to the Director of the Central Food Laboratory and before the actual transit has commenced, that part of the sample would be "lost" within the meaning of the proviso to sub-section (2-C) of Section 13. So far as the damage to that part of the sample is concerned, if damage in the sense of decomposition were to be interpreted to mean decomposition taking place during the course of transit, it would frustrate the very object of Parliament in enacting the proviso to sub-section (2-C) of Section 13. Charanji Lal v. State of Punjab, AIR 1984 SC 80 : (1984) 1 SCC 329 : 1984 SCC (Cri) 77 : 1984 CrLJ 15.

[11954] ● Action for damages—Liability of state.—An action for damages lies for bodily harm which includes battery, assault, false imprisonment, physical injuries and death. In case of assault, battery and false imprisonment he damages are at large and represent a solatium for the mental pain, distress, indignity, loss of liberty and death. It is well settled now that the State is responsible for the tortuous acts of its employees. The respondent 2, Delhi Administration is liable for payment of compensation to Smt. Kamlesh Kumari for the death of her son due to beating by the SHO of Anand Parbat police station. It is deemed just and proper to direct the Delhi Administration, respondent 2 to pay compensation to Kamlesh Kumari mother of the deceased, a sum of Rs. 75, 000 within a period of four weeks from the date of this judgment. *Saheli, a Women's Resources Centre through M.S. DANGEROUS PERSON

[11955] ● Expressions like "habitual", desperate, dangerous etc. cannot be flung in the face of a man with laxity of semantics.—Unless the preventive powers under Section 110, Cr.P.Code were prevented from pervasive misuse by zealous judicial vigilance and interpretative strictness, many a poor man, may be cast into prison by sticking the label of "habitual" or by using such frightening expressions as "desperate", "dangerous" and "hazardous" to the community. Law is that what the law does, even as freedom is what freedom does. Going by that test Section 110 cannot be permitted in our free Republic to pick up the homeless and the have-nots as it did when under British subjection because today to be poor is not a crime in this country. That expressions like "by habit", "habitual", "desperate", "dangerous", "hazardous" cannot be flung in the face of a man with laxity of semantics. The Court must insist on specificity of facts and be satisfied that one swallow does not make a summer and a consistent course of conduct convincing enough to draw the rigorous inference that by confirmed habit, which is second nature, the counter-petitioner is sure to commit the offence mentioned if he is not kept captive.

To call a man dangerous is itself dangerous; to call a man desperate is to affix a desperative adjective to stigmatise a person as hazardous to the community, is itself a judicial hazard unless compulsive testimony carrying credence is abundantly available. In the instant case the Hon'ble Supreme Court expected that Government which has any regard for human rights not to use Section 110 of the Cr.P.Code, in a torture some fashion, against the weak and the poor merely because they belong to the "have-not" class and can be easily apprehended as "habitual" this or that or dangerous or desperate. Gopalanachari v. State of Kerala, AIR 1981 SC 674 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 546 : 1981 CrLJ 337.

[11956] ● Dangerous person.—Under the Explanation under S. 2(a)(iv) of the Maharashtra Prevention and Dangerous Activities of Slumlords, Bootleggers, Drug Offenders and Dangerous Persons Act, 1981, it is provided that public order shall be deemed to have been affected adversely or shall be deemed likely to be affected adversely, if any of the activities of any of the persons referred to in the clause directly or indirectly, is causing or calculated to cause any harm, danger or alarm or a feeling of insecurity, among the general public or any section thereof, or grave or widespread danger to life or public health. The deeming clause in the Explanation widens the scope of the provision in S. 2(a)(iv). It follows that if a person found to be repeatedly engaged in such activities as mentioned in S. 2 (b-1) which affect adversely or are likely to affect adversely the maintenance of public order he can be detained as a dangerous person in exercise of the power under S. 3 of the Act. Phulwari Jagadambaprasad Pathak v. R.H. Mendonca, AIR 2000 SC 2527 (2531) : (2000) 6 SCC 751 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 12630 : 2000 CrLJ 3944 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 557.

DEADLY WEAPON

[11957] ● Deadly weapon.—When the offence of robbery is committed by an offender being armed with a deadly weapon which was within the vision of the victim so as to be capable of creating a terror in his mind, the offender must be deemed to have used that deadly weapon in the commission of robbery on the other hand, if an offender was armed with a deadly weapon at the time of attempting to commit a robbery, then the weapon was not put to any fruitful use because it would have been of use only when the offender succeeded in committing the robbery. Phool Kumar v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1975 SC 905 : (1975) 1 SCC 797 : 1975 SCC (Cri) 336 : 1975 CrLJ 778 : 1975 CrLR (SC) 272.

[11958] ● Knife—Dangerous weapon.—Knife is indisputably a dangerous weapon. State of Himachal Pradesh v. Wazir Chand, AIR 1978 SC 315 : (1978) 1 SCC 130 : 1978 CrLJ 347.

[11959] ● "Rukhani" weapon for committing murder.—It cannot be accepted that the "rukhani" used in the process of inflicting injuries on the victim cannot be called a "weapon" and that if the accused wanted to commit the murder, he could have used a regular weapon which is capable of causing more serious injuries. There is no such thing as a regular or earmarked weapon for committing murder. However, the weapon used by the accused, a carpenter by profession himself, being nothing but an implement used in carpentary, is not really such a "deadly weapon" so as to cause per se any serious wound or a grievous hurt or injury to the victim. State of U.P. v. Indrajeet, AIR 2000 SC 3158 : (2000) 7 SCC 249 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1338 : 2000 CrLJ 4663 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 736.

[11960] ● Bamboo sticks or lathis not deadly weapon.—Merely, the description of bamboo sticks of lathis is not enough to make the weapons lethal or deadly. There is no case that the accused inflicted grievous hurt or attempted to inflict grievous hurt on the inmates. Therefore, the limitation prescribed in S. 397 of the IPC cannot be applied. Dhanai Mahto v. State of Bihar, AIR 2000 SC 3602 (1) : (2001) 10 SCC 657 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 1040.

[11961] ● Teeth of human being not considered deadly weapon.—The appellant stands convicted under Section 326 read with Section 34, IPC. Injuries, no doubt, are grievous, as the phalanx of the index finger has been snipped off. But the allegation is that the assailant had bitten the index finger and caused the said injury. Teeth of a human being cannot be considered as deadly weapon as per the description of deadly weapon enumerated under Section 326, IPC. Hence, the offence cannot escalate to Section 326. It can best remain only at Section 325, IPC. Therefore, the conviction is altered to Section 325, IPC read with Section 34, IPC. Shakeel Ahmed v. State, Delhi, (2004) 10 SCC 103 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 1759 (1760).

[11962] ● Stone whether dangerous weapon.—It is not in every case a stone would constitute a dangerous weapon. It would depend upon the facts of the case. In some provisions e.g. Sections 324 and 326 expression "dangerous weapon" is used. In some other more serious offences the expression used is "deadly weapon" (e.g. Sections 397 and 398). The facts involved in a particular case, depending upon various factors like size, sharpness, would throw light on the question whether the weapon was a dangerous or deadly weapon or not. Mathai v. State of Kerala, AIR 2005 SC 710 : (2005) 3 SCC 260 : 2005 CrLJ 898 (900) : (2005) 1 Crimes 181.

DEALER

[11963] ● Dealer.—A person, who sells goods which are unserviceable or unsuitable for his business, does not, on that account, become a dealer in those goods unless he has an intention to carry on the business of selling those goods. State of Gujarat v. Raipur Mfg. Co. Ltd., AIR 1967 SC 1066.

[11964] ● Declaration as to possession or custody of ornaments in excess of exemption limit.—Section 16(7), Gold (Control) Act, 1968.—On the aspect of casting unreasonable burden on the dealer or refiner it must in the first place to be observed that the burden on the dealer or refiner is the same as that which has been caste on a non-dealer (individual or family) whenever the latter comes to own, possess, hold or have under his control articles or ornaments of gold in excess of the exempted limit. Visits of guests and relations (including married daughters and sisters) on festive occasion and request proceeding from them to the house-keeper to keep their ornaments in safe custody during their stays with him, which are ordinary incidents in life, are common to licensed dealers or refiners and non-dealers and there is no reason to suppose that the requirement of making a declaration under Section 16(7) of the Gold (Control) Act, 1968 casts any additional burden on him than on a non-dealer when he has in his possession or custody articles and ornaments in excess of the exemption limit. Manik Chand Paul v. Union of India, AIR 1984 SC 1249 : (1984) 3 SCC 65 : 1984 SCC (Cri) 389 (396-397) : 1984 CrLR (SC) 475 : (1984) 3 SCR 461 : 1984 UJ (SC) 1072.

DEALING IN SMUGGLED GOODS

[11965] ● Dealing in smuggled goods.—Section 167(81), See Customs Act, 1978.—The words "in any way concerned in any manner dealing with prohibited goods" are of very wide import. It is neither desirable nor necessary to define all manner of connection with the prohibited goods which might come within the meaning of the words "in any way concerned in any manner dealing with such goods". It will depend on the facts found in each case whether it can be said that any person was concerned in dealing with such goods. Where a person does any overt act in relation to prohibited goods which he knows to be such and the act is done in consequence of a previous arrangement or agreement, it would in our opinion be a case where the person doing the act is concerned in dealing with the prohibited goods. In other words any transaction relating to prohibited goods which is done or attempted to be done after some kind of prior arrangement or agreement would in our opinion clearly amount to the person being concerned in dealing with the prohibited goods. Both the words "concerned" and "deal" have a wide connotation. The words "concerned in" mean "interested in, involved in, mixed up with" while the words "deal" with mean "to have something to do with, to concern oneself", to treat, to make arrangement, to negotiate with respect to something". Therefore, when a person enters into some kind of transaction or attempts to enter into some kind of transaction with respect to prohibited goods and it is clear that the act is done with some kind of prior arrangement or agreement, it must be held that such a person is concerned in dealing with prohibited goods. The fact that the act stopped at an attempt to purchase as to the present case when the Police intervened does not in any way mean that Sita Ram was not concerned in dealing with the smuggled goods. The evidence shows that there must have been a previous arrangement with the Chinese accused to purchase the smuggled goods. Sachidananda Banerjee v. Sitaram Agarwala, AIR 1966 SC 955 : 1966 CrLJ 712 : (1966) 2 SCR 1.

DEATH
§ (See "CAUSE OF DEATH" also)

[11966] ● Death.—As is evidence and as must be presumed, that to the healthy, death does not visit and take its toll unless something untowards happens. It is common that should it happen, the ailments of the deceased are mentioned about to the well-wishers and sympathisers who come to condole the death and often talked and repeated about. When the appellants had taken upon themselves to assert that death had occurred on account of brief illness of the deceased, their word in that regard could not be accepted unless it was supported by production of some evidence either of a Doctor or a quack who could supposedly have attended on her, or by evidence of co-villagers who would have supported the defence that the deceased was known to have died a natural death. Not only is the defence locking in this regard but the non-information of the death of the deceased to her parental family leads to the conclusion that the defence suggested was palpably false. All the circumstances could well be explained away or correspondingly established had the dead body of the deceased been not cremated surreptitiously in the absence of her family members. The totality of circumstances thus persuades us to conclude that the dead body of the deceased could have revealed commission of offence punishable at least under S. 304, Part II, IPC and for destruction of that evidence by cremation of the dead body, the appellants had attracted to themselves the third part of S. 201, IPC. Dhura v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1995 SC 1963 : 1995 Supp (3) SCC 713 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 1154 (1155, 1156) : 1995 CrLJ 3619.

[11967] ● Deceased dying homicidal death in house of her in-laws.—According to Dr. Agrawal the person may die due to suffocation as a result of inhalation of fumes and a smoke in the respiratory passages produced by burning of clothes. He further opined that the line of redness in burns caused during life may take sometime to appear and, therefore, it is possible that the line of redness may be absent if the death is immediate. There is medical evidence of third Doctor, PW-7, Dr. Radha Mohan, he was Chief Medical Officer, Lucknow and Chief Medico-Legal Expert to the State of U.P. He was Professor of Forensic Medicine in Medical Colleges at Lucknow and Meerut. He had seen the post-mortem examination report of the dead body of Smt. Krishna Kumari. The witness clearly stated that in his opinion Krishna Kumari died before and was burnt later and the death was due to asphyxia which was a result of suffocation. His further opinion was that the burns found on the dead body were post-mortem. They did not show any signs of body reaction which invariably occurs if death was due to burns. In this case the characteristic attitude of the body known as the pugilistic attitude was not present. In deaths due to burns this sort of attitude is found. This confirmed that the body was brunt after death had occurred. There were no red lines and no blisters. There was no sign of congestion in the skin. The lungs showed deep congestion but the wind pipe did not show the presence of any soot or carbon particles. In cases of death resulting from burns soot particles are found in the wind pipe because they go in with breathing. Bleeding from nostrils showed that the death had occurred from asphyxia which was of forceful nature, i.e., the patient must have tried hard to breath. The protruding of the tongue showed that the deceased tried to breath hard or if something was introduced into the mouth or the mouth was closed and the patient might have tried to breath hard to overcome the obstruction and the tongue may have come out. Or if something was introduced into the mouth and if that thing was taken out after death, the tongue will come out. If an alive person is burnt there is bound to be blister formation. But there will be no blister at all if the dead body is burnt, because blister formation is sign of life. Nothing substantial could be brought out in his cross-examination. In view of this evidence, if becomes clear that deceased Krishna Kumari had died a homicidal death and the burn injuries found on her dead body were post-mortem and not ante-mortem. Mulak Raj v. State of Haryana, AIR 1996 SC 2868 : (1996) 7 SCC 308 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 398 (405, 406) : 1996 CrLJ 1358.

[11968] ● "Death" in Section 27, Evidence Act.—The death referred to in Section 27, Evidence Act includes suicidal death besides homicidal death. Kans Raj v. State of Haryana, AIR 2000 SC 2324 : (2000) 5 SCC 207 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 935 : 2000 CrLJ 2993.

[11969] ● Murder by strangulation and burning.—The High Court noticed the fact that in the post mortem report the cause of death was mentioned to be asphyxia due to throttling. While deposing in Court PW-6 supported his post mortem report. He asserted that the cause of death was asphyxia due to throttling, and the burns seen were post mortem burns. He further deposed that the throttling of the neck could have been done by using a rope or by any forceful action on the neck, like pressing. He further deposed that he found the burn injuries to be post mortem since (1) burnt blebs were present filled with air (ii) in the lumen of the trachea and bronchus carbon particles were not present and the lumen was pale. He also asserted that on account of fracture of the cornua of hyoid bone and absence of carbon particles and fumes in the trachea and bronchus, he was of the opinion that death of the deceased Veena was due to throttling.

If the evidence of the doctor (PW-6) is fairly read, it will appear that in his opinion the death was on account of asphyxia caused by throttling. This conclusion was supported by the fact that there was fracture of the cornua of the hyoid bone. It is well accepted in medical jurisprudence that hyoid bone can be fractured only if it is pressed with great force or hit by hard substance with great force. Otherwise the hyoid bone is not a bone which can be easily fractured. Moreover, the absence of carbon particles and fumes in the trachea and bronchus lead to the irresistible conclusion that the deceased must have died before she was set on fire. Some amount of carbon particles and fumes would have certainly been found in the trachea and bronchus if she were alive when set on fire. The High Court, in our view, has completely misread the evidence of the doctor. Rather than considering the reasons given by the doctor for reaching the conclusion that the deceased had died of asphyxia caused by throttling, the High Court over-emphasised that one part of a statement made by the doctor that the throttling of the neck could have been done by using a rope, or by any forceful action on the neck like pressing. State of Karnataka v. K. Gopala Krishna, AIR 2005 SC 1014 : (2005) 9 SCC 291 : 2005 CrLJ 1436 (1439, 1440) : (2005) 1 Crimes 271.

[11970] ● Presumption of death.—Under the law, there is a presumption that if the dead body is not found or the person concerned is not found for a period of seven years, only then the person can be presumed to be dead. Rubabuddin Sheikh v. State of Gujarat, AIR 2007 SC 1914 : (2007) 4 SCC 318 : (2007) 2 SCC (Cri) 290 : 2007 CrLJ 3206 (3209).

DEATH BY POLICE BEATING

[11971] ● Death by police beating—Compensation.—An action for damages lies for bodily harm which includes battery, assault, false imprisonment, physical injuries and death. In case of assault, battery and false imprisonment the damages are at large and represent a solatium for the mental pain, distress, indignity, loss of liberty and death. It is well settled now that the State is responsible for the tortuous acts of its employees. The respondent No. 2, Delhi Administration is liable for payment of compensation to Smt. Kamlesh Kumari for the death of her son due to beating by the S.H.O. of Anand Prabat Police Station, Shri Lal Singh. It is just and proper to direct the Delhi Administration, respondent No. 2 to pay compensation to Kamlesh Kumari mother of the deceased, Naresh a sum of Rs. 75,000/- within a period of four weeks from the date of this judgment. Saheli, a Women's Resources Centre v. Commissioner of Police, Delhi, AIR 1990 SC 513 : (1990) 1 SCC 422 : 1990 SCC (Cri) 145 : JT (1989) 4 SCC 553.

DEATH BY NEGLIGENCE (S. 304A, IPC)

§ (See also "CRIMINAL NEGLIGENCE")

[11972] ● Death by negligence.—Section 304-A postulate a rash and negligent act entailing death of another. A man, as stated, in Kenny, may bring about an event without having adverted to it at all; he may not have foreseen that his actions would have this consequence and it will come to him as a surprise. The event may be harmless or harmful; if harmful the question arises whether there is legal liability of it. In tort (at common law) this is decided by considering whether or not a reasonable man in the same circumstances would have realized the prospect of harm and would have stopped or changed his course so as to avoid it. If a reasonable man would not, then there is no liability and the harm must lie where it falls. But if the reasonable man would have avoided the harm then there is liability and the perpetrator of the harm is said to be guilty of negligence. The word 'negligence' denotes, and should be used only to denote, such blameworthy inadvertence; and the man who through his negligence has brought harm upon another is under a legal obligation to make reparation for it to the victim of the injury who may sue him in tort for damages. But it should now be recognized that at common law, there is no criminal liability for harm thus caused by inadvertence. This has been laid down authoritatively for manslaughter again and again. There are only two states of mind which constitute mens rea, and they are intention and recklessness. The difference between recklessness and negligence is the difference between advertence and inadvertence; they are opposed and it is a logical fallacy to suggest that recklessness is a degree of negligence. The common habit of lawyers to qualify the word 'negligence' with some moral epithet such as 'wicked', 'gross', or 'culpable' has been most unfortunate since it has inevitably led to great confusion of thought and of principal. It is equally misleading to speak of criminal negligence since this is merely to use an expression in order to explain. KENNY on Out Lines of Criminal Laws 19th Edition, Para 25 pp 38-39.

Whether negligence involves a mental element, or whether it is conduct assessed by reference to an impersonal standard is arguable. What is or is not negligent involves a consideration of that which a reasonable man would or would not have done in the circumstances; this does not invariably rule out of consideration subjective factors such as a person's knowledge, physical condition or age. A statutory provision may be so phrased as to require consideration of the defendant's intelligence or maturity in order to determine whether it was negligent for him to have acted as he did. Halsburys Laws of England 4rth edition. Vol. II, Para 17, LC. p. 20.

[11973] ● Rash and negligent act resulting in death of person.—A Mahant went to the house of the accused who was having a drinking party. The accused was respectful to him and was over anxious to show all hospitality to him. The accused was anxious taking meals and spending the night with him. Seeing that he was going away the accused let go his gun without aiming at the Mahant in order to prevent him from leaving his place by terrifying him to some extent. The shot hit the Mahant in his chest and he died of the wound later on. It was held that this act was rash and negligent and the accused was guilty of an offence under this section. Sadhu Singh Harnam Singh v. State of Pepsu, AIR 1954 SC 271 : 1954 CrLJ 727.

[11974] ● Laying of trap.—The owner fixed live naked electric wire of high voltage across passage to his latrine to dissuade trespassers. No warning that wire was live one. Trespasser getting shock and died some time thereafter. The occupier held guilty under Section 304-A, IPC. Cherubin Gregory v. State of Bihar, AIR 1964 SC 95.

[11975] ● Trespasser not an outlaw.—A trespasser is not an outlaw, a caput lupinem. The mere fact that the person entering a land is a trespasser does not entitle the owner or occupier to inflict on him personal injury by direct violence and the same principle would govern the infliction of injury by indirectly doing something on the land the effect of which he must know was likely to cause serious injury to the trespasser.

It is, so doubt, true that the trespasser enters the property at his own risk and the occupier owes no duty to take any reasonable care for his protection, but at the same time the occupier is not entitled to do wilfully acts such as set a trap or set a naked live wire with the deliberate intention of causing harm to trespassers or in reckless disregard of the presence of the trespassers. The voltage of the current fed into the wire precludes any contention that it was merely a reasonable precaution for the protection of private property. Cherubin Gregory v. State of Bihar, AIR 1964 SC 205 : 1964 (1) CrLJ 138 : 1964 (4) SCR 199.

[11976] ● Homoeopath administering poisonous medicines to patient without studying effect.—Where the accused who was registered as a Homoeopath, administered to the patient suffering from guinea worm, 24, drops of attamonium and a leaf of dhatura without studying its effect and the patient died of the poisoning, the accused was guilty under Section 304-A and not under Section 302, Penal Code. Juggan Khan v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1965 SC 831 : (1965) 1 CrLJ 763 : (1965) 1 SCR 14.

[11977] ● Death direct result of rash and negligent act.—What Section 304-A requires is causing of death by doing any rash or negligent act, and this means that death must be the direct or proximate result of the rash or negligent act. The expert stated that if turpentine is not slowly added to bitumen and rosin before it is cooled down to a certain temperature, such fire is likely to break out. It seems, therefore, that as turpentine was being added at about closing time, Hatim was not as careful as he should have been and probably did not wait sufficiently for bitumen or rosin to cool down and added turpentine too quickly. The expert has stated that bitumen or rosinments at 300 degree F and if turpentine is added at that temperature, it will catch fire. The flash point of turpentine varies from 76 to 110 degree F. Therefore, the cooling must be brought down, according to the expert, to below 76 degree F to avoid fire. In any case even if that is not done, turpentine has to be added slowly so that there may not be too much frothing. Clearly therefore, the fire broke out because bitumen or rosin was not allowed to cool down sufficiently and turpentine was added too quickly in view of the fact that the process was performed at closing time. It is clearly the negligence of Hatim which was the direct or proximate cause of the fire breaking out, though the fact that burners were kept in the same room in which turpentine and varnish were stored was indirectly responsible for the fire breaking out and spreading so quickly. Even so in order that a person may be guilty under Section 304-A, the rash or negligent act should be the direct or proximate cause of the death. In the present case it was Hatim's act which was the direct and proximate cause of the fire breaking out with the consequence that seven persons were burnt to death; the act of the appellant in allowing turpentine and varnish being stored at a short distance was only an indirect factor in the breaking out of fire. Kurban Hussein Mohamedalli Bangawal v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1965 SC 1616 : 1965 (2) CrLJ 550 : 1965 (2) SCR 622 : 1965 MPLJ 561 : 67 Bom LR 447 : 1965 All WR (SC) 527.

[11978] ● Homoeopath administering—Poisonous medicines to patient without studying its effect.—On these facts, it appears to us that Section 299, IPC, does not apply. It cannot be held that the appellant administered the stramonium drops and the dhatura leaf with the knowledge that he was likely by such an act to cause the death of the deceased. Accordingly, we hold that the appellant must be acquitted of the charge under Section 302.

According to the evidence on the record, in no system of medicine, except perhaps in the Ayurvedic System, the dhatura leaf is given as cure for guinea worms. It seems that the appellant prescribed the medicine without thoroughly studying what would be the effect of giving 24 drops of stramonium and a leaf of dhatura. It is a rash and negligent act to prescribe poisonous medicines without studying their probable effect. It is true that care should be taken before imputing criminal negligence to a professional man acting in the course of his profession, but even taking this care we have no doubt that the appellant was guilty of a rash and negligent act. Accordingly, we hold that he is guilty under Section 304-A, IPC. Juggan Khan v. State of M.P., AIR 1965 SC 831 : 1965 (1) CrLJ 763 : (1965) 1 SCRM.

[11979] ● Section 304-A—IPC-Applicability.—The requirements of this section are that the death of any person must have been caused by the accused by doing any rash or negligent etc. In other words, there must be proof that the rash or negligent act of accused was the proximate cause of the death. There must be direct nexus between the death of a person and the rash or negligent act of the accused. There is no evidence to show that it was rash or the negligent act of the accused that caused the death of the deceased.

There is no presumption in law that a person who possesses only a learner's licence or possesses no licence at all does not know driving. For various reasons, not excluding sheer indifference, he might not have taken a regular licence. The prosecution evidence that appellant No. 1 had driven the jeep to various places on the day previous to the occurrence is a proof of the fact that he knew driving. There was no basis for the conclusion that it was sheer stroke of good fortune that he did not meet with any accident on that day.

To impose criminal liability under Section 304 A, Indian Penal Code, it is necessary that the death should have been the direct result of a rash and negligent act of the accused, and that act must be the proximate and efficient cause without the intervention of anther's negligence. It must be the causa causans, it is not enough that it may have been the causa sine qua non. Suleman Rahiman Mulani v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1968 SC 829 : 1968 CrLJ 1013 : 1968 (2) SCR 515 : 1968 MPLJ 361 : 70 Bom LR 536 : 1968 (2) Andh LT 60.

[11980] ● Explosion in factory manufacturing fire works.—Although there was no direct evidence of the immediate cause of the explosion but indisputably the explosives the possession of which was prohibited under the notifications issued under the Act were found in the shops or the premises where the appellants carried on their business and the substances which were of a highly hazardous and dangerous nature were apparently being used in the manufacture of the fire works since they were found at the scene of the explosion.

Where the explosion took place the persons who were employed were mostly women who brought their small children with them and young children below the age of 18 had been employed in the manufacture of the fire works etc. The factory was situate in close proximity to residential quarters. It became therefore all the more incumbent on the appellants to have completely avoided the use of highly sensitive compositions of the nature mentioned above. Criminal negligence is the gross and culpable neglect or failure to exercise that reasonable and proper care and precaution to guard against injury either to the public generally or to an individual in particular, which having regard to all the circumstances out of which the charge has arisen, it was the imperative duty of the accused person to have adopted. The appellants had, undoubtedly displayed a high degree of negligent by allowing or causing to be used dangerous and prohibited compositions and substances which must be held to have been the efficient cause of the explosion. Bhalchandra v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1968 SC 1319 : 1968 CrLJ 1501 : 1968 (3) SCR 766 : 1969 Mad LJ (Cri) 36.

[11981] ● Mark distinction between rash act and negligent act.—An offence under Section 304-A as committed either by committing a rash act or a negligent act. There is a marked distinction between rash act and negligent act. In the case of a rash act the criminality lies in running the risk of doing such an act with recklessness or indifference as to the consequences. A culpable rashness is acting with the consciousness that the mischievous and illegal consequences may follow but with the hope that they will not and sometimes with the optimism that they will not, and often with the belief that the author has taken sufficient precaution, to prevent their happening. Criminal negligence is the gross and culpable neglect or failure to exercise a reasonable and proper care and precaution to guard against injury either to the public generally or to an individual in particular which having regard to all the circumstances out of which the charge has arisen, it was the imperative duty of the accused to have adopted. Negligence implies a omission to do something which a reasonable man guided upon those considerations which ordinarily regulate the conduct of human affairs, would do, or doing something which a prudent and a reasonable man would not do. Thus culpable negligence is acting without the consciousness that the illegal or mischievous act will follow but in circumstances which saw that the actor or the author has not exercised the caution incumbent upon him and if he had he would have had the consciousness. The imputability arises from the neglect of civil duty and circumspection. Bala Chandra Waman Pathe v. State of Maharashtra, 1968 SCD 198. TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) S.N. Hussain v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1972 SC 685 : 1972 (3) SCC 18 : 1972 SCC (Cri) 254 : 1972 CrLJ 496 : (1972) 1 SCWR 306 : 1972 ACJ 140 : 1972 SCD 433 : 1972 UJ (SC) 487.

[11982] ● Negligent act of accused in selecting pipes of less diameter.—The accused, a bakery owner entrusted certain work of altering the chimney to an experienced mason but who was not a qualified designer. Some asbestos pipes of lesser diameter were used and the ovens were allowed to burn while the alterations were being made. There was bursting of the pipe and collapse of the chimney resulting in many deaths. It was held that the accused committed an offence under the section. Even if the mason was negligent in fixing the pipe on the brick masonry the proximate and efficient cause of the accident was the negligent acts of the accused in selecting the pipe of less diameter and allowing the oven to burn while the work was in progress. Rustom Sheriorfrani v. State of Maharashtra, 1969 ACJ 70 (SC).

[11983] ● Section 304A, IPC—Applicability act causing death must be causa causans.—In a prosecution for an offence under Section 304 A, the mere fact that an accused contravenes certain rules or regulations in the doing of an act which causes death of another, does not establish that the death was the result of a rash or negligent act or that any such act was the proximate and efficient cause of the death. We have to determine whether the appellant's act in giving only one batch number to all the four lots manufactured on 12-11-62 in preparing batch no. 211105 was the cause of deaths and whether those deaths were a direct consequence of the appellants' act, that is, whether the appellant's act is the direct result of a rash and negligent act and that act was the proximate and efficient cause without the intervention of another's negligence. The act causing the deaths "must be the causa causans, it is not enough that it may have been the causa sine qua non".

In all cases under Section 304 A there is a casual chain which consists of many links, it is only that which contributes to the cause of all causes, namely, the causa causans and not causa sine qua non which fixes the culpability. In other words, it is submitted that it is not enough for the prosecution to show that the appellant's action was one of the causes of death. It must show that it is the direct consequence, which in this case has not been established. If the materials used in the preparation and the prepared solution had been properly tested, lead nitrate would have been detected at any rate even before the solution was prepared by the appellant. In this view, we cannot hold that the negligence of the appellant in giving one batch number to several lots was the direct cause of the deaths nor can his act be declared to be grossly rash and negligent. Ambalal D. Bhatt v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1972 SC 1150 : (1972) 3 SCC 525 : 1972 SCC (Cri) 618 : 1972 CrLJ 727.

[11984] ● Carrying of corrugated iron sheets on bus roof by driver of bus.—Where the driver of a bus was prosecuted under Section 304-A and Section 279, IPC for carrying on bus-roof certain corrugated iron sheets which fell down due to jolting while bus was being driven on a Kucha road as a result of which some persons were injured and one of them died and the Investigating Officer made no mention of any attempt on his part to find the said sheets or discover them nor did the prosecution care to find out who the owner of the bus was and who had loaded them, the driver would not be liable for conviction under the above sections. Baij Nath Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 1972 SC 1485 : (1972) 2 SCC 264 : (1486, 1487) : 1972 CrLJ 919.

[11985] ● Collision of bus and goods—Train at level crossing.—In the instant case there was a collision of bus and goods train at level crossing. The gateman was negligent and so there occurred the collision resulting in death of so many innocent passengers. As the negligence of gateman intervened the driver of the bus was acquitted. S.N. Hussain v. State of A.P., AIR 1972 SC 685 : (1972) 3 SCC 18 : 1972 SCC (Cri) 254 : 1972 SCD 433 : 1972 UJ (SC) 487.

[11986] ● Driver not guilty of criminal negligence because he did not stop bus when road signal situate at some distance away.—Where a level crossing is unmanned, it may be right to insist that the driver of the vehicle should stop the vehicle, look both ways, to see if a train is approaching and thereafter only drive his vehicle after satisfying himself that there was no danger in crossing the railway track. But where a level crossing is protected by a gateman and the gateman opens out the gate inviting the vehicles to pass, it will be too much to expect of any reasonable and prudent driver to stop his vehicle and look out for any approaching train. Culpable negligence lies in the failure to exercise reasonable and proper care and the extent of its reasonableness will always depend upon the circumstances of each case. Where the gate is open and there is no train scheduled to pass at the time, the driver would be justified in driving his vehicle through the level crossing. Passenger trains have a time schedule and if a train is expected to come at about the time the appellant reached the level crossing, a regular driver of motor vehicles on that route may, perhaps, be found negligent in crossing the railway track, if by mischance, the gate was open. But the train in the present case was not a passenger train but a Goods train and it is not shown that the Goods train was scheduled to pass the level crossing just at about the time the bus reached the spot. The appellant may not even know that a Goods train would be coming at that moment. We do not, therefore, think that the appellant was guilty of criminal negligence merely because he did not stop when the road signal wanted him to stop. This was a clear case of unavoidable accident because of the negligence of the gateman in keeping the gate open and inviting the vehicles to pass. S.N. Hussain v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1972 SC 685 : (1972) 3 SCC 18 : 1972 CrLJ 496.

[11987] ● Driver taking bus to footpath and striking against electric pole—Faulty and inefficient investigation.—No doubt when an accident like the present takes place one naturally expects the driver concerned to explain the circumstances in which he was obliged to take the bus on to the footpath and to strike against the electric pole with such force, thereby killing one human being and injuring several others. The satisfactory nature of the explanation to absolve him of his criminal liability for the accident has, in such circumstances, to be appraised in the light of the entire evidence on the record. The onus of course remains on the prosecution and does not shift to the accused. The evidence of the bus, however, having mounted on to the footpath, which, in the normal course, does not happen, is admissible and has to be duly taken into account in understanding and evaluating the entire evidence led in the case and in appraising the value of the explanation given by the accused for his compulsion which resulted in the accident. The appellant's explanation, even though not conclusive, does, in the absence of the testimony of the bhaiya and of at least some out of the passengers, said to have been travelling in the bus, who might have been able to throw some helpful light on the relevant circumstances, seem to leave fair scope for reasonable doubt about his guilt. Whether the failure on the part of the investigating agency to contact persons who would have given useful material evidence relevant for finding the truth was due to inefficiency or was deliberate having been inspired by some other motive, is not for us to speculate on the existing record. Suffice it to say that, if it appears, as it does in this case, that material evidence has not been collected by the investigating agency for reasons which are wholly unconvincing and the evidence actually produced, leaves a serious lacuna in bringing his guilt home to the appellant, then, merely because the nature of the accident prima facie requires an explanation from the driver, would not be sufficient to sustain his conviction, if the truth of his explanation, which is not liable to rejection outright, could have been appropriately judged if the evidence left out by the prosecution had been produced. Parties could not control the Court's discretion to have before it further evidence if it was considered necessary for finding the truth for promoting the cause of justice. Justice would fail not only by unjust conviction of the innocent but also by acquittal of the guilty for unjustified failure to produce available evidence. On the existing record we find the evidence to be inadequate and unsafe for convicting the appellant. This, however, is entirely due to the faulty and inefficient investigation, for which no justification is forthcoming. Nageshwar Sh. Krishan Ghobe v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1973 SC 165 : (1973) 4 SCC 23 : 1973 CrLJ 235 : 1973 CrLR (SC) 92 : 1973 (2) SCR 377.

[11988] ● Concurrent finding as to rash and negligent driving of accused being proximate cause of death.—After the impact between the heavy vehicle like a truck and a very much lighter autorickshaw, the latter must in all probability, have been so pushed as to make its driver lose all control of the rickshaw. In such circumstances it could, no doubt, have been contended with a certain amount of reason that the death of the child was a remote and indirect result of the rash and negligent driving on the part of the appellant and not an immediate, direct, natural and proximate consequence. But the three Court having so held, we do not think this Court will be justified in appraising the evidence for itself on this part of the case on the peculiar facts and circumstances disclosed on the printed record. This appellant's conviction must, therefore, be upheld in agreement with the conclusions of the three Courts below. Jagdish Chander v. State of Delhi, AIR 1973 SC 2127 : (1973) 2 SCC 203 : 1973 CrLJ 1393 : 1973 CrLR (SC) 526 : 1974 (1) SCR 204.

[11989] ● Sentence—Mitigating circumstance.—Penalties designed to deter crime should be gauged to so far as possible to degree of social danger that is represented by the crime and its repetition. To send the appellant back to jail to serve the sentence of six months after 8 years seems to be highly unjust for the kind of offence which has been upheld against him by the three Courts below. It is unlikely to have any reformatory effect on him. Harassment of a criminal trial for more that 8 years and the expense which he must have incurred can legitimately be taken into account when considering the question of sentence to be imposed. The appellant is stated to have served only three weeks of imprisonment but on a consideration of all The relevant circumstances it would be just and proper to reduce the sentence of imprisonment to that already undergone but to increase the sentence of fine. It is right and necessary to express of grave concern over the inordinate delay in the disposal of criminal justice is to achieve its real purpose and if it is to inspire the confidence of the people generally causes for such delay should be eliminated as early as practicable. Laws delay tend to turn justice sour. Sentence reduced and appeal allowed in part in the circumstances. Jagdish Chander v. State of Delhi, AIR 1973 SC 2127 : (1973) 2 SCC

[11990] ● Death due to rash and negligent driving of bus.—A speed of 20 miles per hour on a road like Rohtak Road which is 42 feet wide, cannot be said to be fast or excessive. But there can be no doubt that the appellant was grossly negligent in that he did not look at his right even though he was approaching a cross-road and failed to notice the deceased who was coming from his right and crossing the road. The statement of the appellant under Section 342 clearly shows that he did not see the deceased crossing the road and it was only when he heard an alarm to the effect: "stop, stop" that he stopped the bus. That is also substantially the evidence of the three defence witnesses. It is indeed difficult to imagine how the appellant could have possibly failed to notice the deceased coming from his right. It was main road 42 feet wide and if the appellant was reasonably alert and careful, he would have seen the deceased coming from his right and trying to cross the road and in that event, he could have immediately applied the brake and brought the bus to a grinding halt. But it was the case of the defence that the appellant did not notice the deceased at all and it was only when the bus struck against the cycle of the deceased and knocked him down and an alarm was raised, that the appellant applied the brake and brought the bus to a stop. This was culpable negligence on the part of the appellant. We are therefore, satisfied beyond doubt that the death of the deceased was caused on account of negligent driving of the bus. Duli Chand v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1975 SC 1960 : (1975) 4 SCC 649 : 1975 SCC (Cri) 663 : 1975 CrLJ 1732 : 1975 CrLR (SC) 499.

[11991] ● Rash and negligent driving—Proof.—The main criterion for deciding whether the driving which led to the accident was rash and negligent is not only the speed but the width of the road, the density of the traffic and the attempt, as in this case, to overtake the other vehicles resulting in going to the wrong side of the road and being responsible for the accident. Even if the accident took place in the twinkling of an eye it is not difficult for an eye witness to notice a car overtaking other vehicles and going to the wrong side of the road and hitting a vehicle travelling on that side of the road. The criterion adopted by the learned Judge for adopted by the learned Judge for assessing the evidence of P.Ws. 3 and 4 and rejecting it is thoroughly unjustifiable. There may be cases where it is difficult to be clear or specific in giving details as to the cause of the accident but this is not only such case. The reference by the learned Judge about the slight damage to the electric post and the conclusion drawn therefrom that the car could not have been going at a high speed is not correct as we shall show later. His further observation that the fact that the car travelled another 45 feet and hit against the parapet wall and turned turtle showed that the car must have been travelling at an extremely high speed but there is a little blue paint on the pole and a faint gray stain on the parapet wall is self contradictory unless we are to infer that the learned Judge implied that the one or the other is not true. He does not so hold. There can be no doubt about the car having hit the electric post and the parapet wall. That and the fact of its overturning would establish the rash and negligent driving. A car driven normally and travelling behind a bus does not go to the opposite side of the road and hit an electric post an parapet wall and turn turtle. The car apparently stopped only because it turned turtle. It did not hit the electric post or the parapet wall full tilt; if it did it would have stopped at one of those points. We should remember that the collision with the scooter and pushing it back would have considerably reduced the speed of the car. Even so it travelled farther. The slight damage to the electric post and the parapet wall is because the car hit them sideways. Nobody has suggested that they were brought into existence for the purpose of this case. The car would probably not have stopped but for turning turtle and it should have been travelling quite fast before it could overturn as the learned Judge himself realises. There is only one conclusion possible on the facts of this case and that is that the accused came over to the wrong side of the road and was responsible for the accident and that is clearly a rash and negligent act in the condition of the road and the condition of the traffic. Shakila Khader v. Nausher Gama, AIR 1975 SC 1324 : (1975) 4 SCC 122 : 1975 CrLJ 1105.

The tangential track of the speeding truck coming in contract with the corner of the steel cot throwing it over the wooden cot and thereby throwing the deceased out of it resulting in fatal injuries, would not reveal the accused's intention or any deliberate act with the requisite knowledge for an offence of culpable homicide. The facts and circumstances disclosed in this case fit in more reasonably with the theory of loss of control by the accused of the vehicle in high speed trying to take a turn for the kutcha road.

There is, therefore, no error committed by the High Court in holding that the case falls under Section 304-A, IPC and not under Section 304, Pat II, IPC. State of Gujarat v. Haiderai Kalubhali, AIR 1976 SC 1012 : (1976) 1 SCC 889 : 1976 SCC (Cri) 211 : 1976 CrLJ 732 : 1976 CrLR (SC) 114.

[11994] ● Driver running over deceased—When deceased trying to crossroad.—A driver of a vehicle van over the deceased without attempting to save the deceased by swerving to other side when there was sufficient space, the driver was held guilty under Section 304-A, IPC. Baldevji v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1979 SC 1327 : (1980) 1 SCC 320 : 1979 CrLJ 1136.

[11995] ● Accident not proved—Death of girl caused due to rash and negligent driving.— The fact that the impact occurred in spite of the fact that persons who were making use of carriage was ahead of him could be easily seen by the accused while coming from north to south, clearly indicates that the accused had not maintained a proper look out while he was driving his lorry. Furthermore there were no tyre-marks on the road which means that the accused never made any attempt to apply brakes and the further fact that the lorry stopped 73 ft. ahead after collision is indication of speed at which he was driving the lorry. Having regard to the above aspects it was held that the incident could not be regarded as pure accident and that the accused had caused the death of girl by his rash and negligent driving. Usman Gani Mohammad v. State of Maharashtra, 1979 (3) SCC 362 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 675 : 1978 CrLR (SC) 642 : 1979 UJ (SC) 131.

[11996] ● Rash and negligent driving.—Where rash and negligent driving caused death the fact that the accused driver was supporting a large family and the proprietor of the vehicle failed to compensate the family and no compensation was shown no interference from the sentence awarded by the Trial Court was called for. Rattan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1980 SC 84 : 1979 (4) SCC 719 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 17 : 1980 CrLJ 11 : 1980 CrLR (SC) 44 : 1980 UJ 58.

[11997] ● Awarding of punishment in rash and negligent cases.—In the case of awarding punishment in rash and negligent cases, sentence must have a policy of correction and victimisation of the family of the convict may be a reality, and welfare State must give though to this aspect. Rattan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1980 SC 84 : 1979 (4) SCC 719 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 17 : 1980 CrLJ 11 : 1980 CrLR (SC) 44 : 1980 UJ 58.

[11998] ● Sentence—No compassion to be shown.—Where it was contended that a sentence of 2 year's R.I. is excessive especially having regard to the fact that the petitioner has a large family to maintain and the proprietor of the truck has left his family in the cold, it was held that when a life has been lost and the circumstances of driving are harsh, no compassion can be shown. No interference can be made with the sentence, although the owner is often not morally innocent. Nevertheless, sentencing must have a policy of correction. This driver, if he had to be come a good driver, must have a better training in traffic law, and moral responsibility with special reference to the potential injury to human life and limb. Punishment in this area, must, therefore, be accompanied by these components. The State it is hoped, will attach a course for better driving together with a livelier sense of responsibility, when the punishment is for driving offences. May be the State may consider, in cases of men with poor families occasional parole and reformatory courses on appropriate application, without the rigour of the old rules which are subject to the Government discretion. The victimisation of family of the convict may well be a reality and is regrettable. Hopefully, the welfare state will bestow better thought and action to traffic justice. Rattan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1980 SC 84 : 1979 (4) SCC 719 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 17 : 1980 CrLJ 11 : 1980 CrLR (SC) 44 : 1980 UJ 58.

[11999] ● Driver convicted for killing one person and injuring another.—Where the driver had not only driven his bus in a reckless manner and caused the death of one person and injuries to another but he had also attempted to escape prosecution by failing to report the accident to the police authorities and the driver was guilty of offence under Section 304 A and other offences, the accused deserves a strict sentence. The Supreme Court raised the sentence to six months' R. 9 and fine of Rs. 1000/- in default to undergo R 1 for two months. State of Karnatka v. Krishna alias Raju, AIR 1987 SC 861 : (1987) 1 SCC 538 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 198 : 1987 CrLJ 776 : 1987 (1) Crimes 397.

[12000] ● Enhancement of sentence—Refusal by High Court—Not proper.—Here was a case where the respondent had not only driven his bus in a reckless manner and caused the death of one person and injuries to another but he had also attempted to escape prosecution by failing to report the accident to the police authorities. Considerations of undue sympathy in such cases will not only lead to miscarriage of justice but will also undermine the confidence of the public in the efficacy of the criminal judicial system. It need be hardly pointed out that the imposition of a sentence of fine of Rs. 250/- on the driver of a Motor Vehicle for an offence under Section 304-A IPC and that too without any extenuating or mitigating circumstance is bound to shock the conscience of any one and will unmistakably leave the impression that the trial was a mockery of justice. We are, therefore, constrained to do what the High Court should have done but failed to do viz. enhance the sentence in the interests of justice. We, however, feel that the ends of justice would be met by enhancing the sentence for the most serious of the charges for which the respondent has been convicted viz. the charge under Section 304-A, IPC. Accordingly we enhance the sentence for the conviction under Section 304-A, IPC to six months RI and fine of 1000/- in default to undergo RI for two months. We leave undisturbed the other convictions and sentences. State of Karnataka v. Krishna alias Raju, AIR 1987 SC 861 : (1987) 1 SCC 538 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 198 : 1987 CrLJ 776 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 206 : 1987 CAR 129.

[12001] ● Indiscriminate firing—Killing two innocent bystanders.—The section applies only to such acts which are rash or negligent and are directly the cause of death of another person. In other words, a rash act is primarily an overhasty act as opposed to a deliberate act but done without due care and caution. The accused a police constable fired two shots killing two persons an third shot went off. There was actual quarrel and fight between accused and two more constables on the one side and prosecution witness and his brother on the other side. The accused started indiscriminate firing. The occurrence took place at 9 p.m. and so due to darkness the accused could not have noticed any bystanders. The firing was not aimed at two deceased. He had fired only to scare away people. It was held that the accused acted in haste, rashly and without circumspection and due case and therefore provisions of Section 304-A were attracted. Balwant Singh v. State of Punjab, 1994 Supp (2) SCC 67 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 844 : 1994 (1) Crimes 745 (SC).

[12002] ● Rash and negligent driving—Causing death of boy.—In a case of rash and negligent driving causing death of a boy having regard to the fact that the occurrence took place 15 years ago, the appellant was released on probation of good conduct. A.P. Raju v. State of Orissa, 1995 SCC (Cri) 675 : 1995 Supp (2) SCC 385.

[12003] ● Death of boy due to injuries caused by accident.—Accident caused on Kutcha portion of right side of road in which a boy standing there was dashed and died due to injuries caused by this accident. Place of incident is itself indicative of negligent manner in which vehicle was being driven. Conviction by High Court is justified. A.P. Raju v. State of Orissa, 1995 SCC (Cri) 675 : 1995 Supp (2) SCC 385.

[12004] ● Bhopal gas tragedy—Defect in plant not only structural but operational.—The employees of Union carbide running a plant with not only structural defects but also operational defects resulting in grim Bhopal tragedy were held to be negligent under Section 304-A IPC. Keshub Mahindra v. State of M.P., (1996) 6 SCC 129 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 1124 : 1996 (3) Crimes 288 (SC).

[12005] ● Death caused by running over by motor vehicle.—The appellant had gone running towards the spot where the boring work was going on. The appellant sat in the jeep which was standing there and took in it reversed up to the intersection which meets the National Highway The appellant then came in great speed with the result the deceased got frightened and ran for cover. The appellant then knocked down the deceased. The evidence of PWs 2 and 3 also support this version. Once it is believed that the appellant behaved in that manner and it is also believed that there was no other reason for the appellant to go on the wrong side of the road, it has to be held that whatever the appellant had done was done intentionally and the incident did not happen accidentally. Vasant v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1998 SC 699 (700) : 1998 CrLJ 844 : 1998 (1) CCR 181 : 1998 (1) Crimes 120.

[12006] ● Delay on part of doctor to attend to patient.—In a case, it was alleged by the second respondent that when her husband was in a serious condition, he was taken to the hospital wherein the accused doctor was working as a medical practitioner and that the accused did not attend to the patient immediately on being insisted by her, the accused became angry and there was exchange of words between them. The gravamen of the case was that the accused administered an injection to the patient and patient was taken to another hospital where he was pronounced dead. "Allegations do not disclose, prima facie, a case of rash or negligent act on the part of the appellant so as to attract the penal provision under Section 304-A, IPC. If there was delay on the part of the doctor to attend on the patient that may at the worst be a case of civil liability and not of culpable negligence falling under the above section. That apart, the cause of death has now been disclosed, from the report of the chemical examiner, as one of consuming poison .... Therefore, by no stretch of imagination can it be said that the death of the deceased was caused by any act done by the appellant." Rakesh Ranjan Gupta v. State of U.P., AIR 1999 SC 2115 : (1999) 1 SCC 188 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 76 : 1999 CrLJ 3484.

[12007] ● Driving bus carelessly and negligently.—The accused was alleged to have driven the vehicle carelessly and negligently with the result certain passenger had fallen down from the vehicle. The driver had really started the vehicle suddenly even before the passenger could get into the vehicle and that he moved the vehicle even before getting any signal from the rear side. The evidence in this case however was scanty to fasten the driver with criminal negligence. It was, therefore, held that conviction of driver was not sustainable and he was entitled to the acquittal. Mohammed Ajruddin v. State of A.P., AIR 2000 SC 2511 : (2000) 7 SCC 72 : 2000 CrLJ 3508 (SC).

[12008] ● Accused convicted under Section 304A, IPC not given benefit of probation of good conduct.—In the instant case the accused convicted under Section 304-A cannot be given the benefit of probation of good conduct. The accused must always keep in his mind the fear psyche that if he is convicted of the offence for causing death of a human being due to his callous driving of vehicle he cannot escape from jail sentence. Dalbir Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 2000 SC 1677 : (2000) 5 SCC 82 : 2000 CrLJ 2283.

[12009] ● Intention to cause death.—Section 304-A is applicable to cases where there is no intention to cause death and no knowledge that the act in all probabilities will cause death. In this case where the accused picked-up gun unlocked it, loaded it with cartridges and shot gun from very close range of about 4/5 feet aiming at chest of deceased. Section 304-A is not applicable. Shankar Narayan Bhadolkar v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2004 SC 1966 : 2004 CrLJ 1778 : JT 2004 (3) SC 211.

[12010] ● Death caused by negligence.—Section 80 protects an act done by accident or misfortune and without any criminal intention or knowledge in the doing of a lawful act in a lawful manner by lawful means and with proper care and caution. The primordial requirement of Section 80 is that the act which killed the other person must have been done "with proper care and caution". Where the accused shot his own colleague at close range without knowing the identity of his target, the act smacked of utter dearth of any care and caution. The amount of care and circumspection taken by an accused must be one taken by a prudent and reasonable man in the circumstances of a particular case. Where the act of the accused is itself criminal in nature the protection under Section 80 is not available. If the accused pleads exception within the meaning of Section 80 there is a presumption against him and the burden to rebut the presumption lies on him.

Here the evidence on record as substantiated by the testimony of PWs-2 and 3 shows that the accused picked up the gun, unlocked it, loaded it with cartridges and shot the gun from a close range of about 4/5 ft aimed at his chest. Certainly, in view of unimpeachable evidence of PWs-2 and 3, Section 80 has no application.

Coming to the plea of the applicability of Section 304-A, it is to be noted that the said provision relates to death caused by negligence. Shankar Narayan Bhadalkar v. State of Maharashtra, 2005 SCC (Cri) 22 (28-29).

[12011] ● Section 304-A, IPC—Applicability.—Section 304-A, IPC applies to cases where there is no intention to cause death and no knowledge that the act done in all probability will cause death. It applies to such acts that are rest and negligent and are directly the cause of death of another person. Prabhakaran v. State of Kerala, AIR 2007 SC 2376 : 2007 (3) Crimes 146 (SC) : JT 2007 (9) (SC) 346. TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) Naresh Giri v. State of Madhya Pradesh, JT 2007 (12) SC 433. (2) Rathnashalvan v. State of Karnataka, AIR 2007 SC 1064 : (2007) 3 SCC 474 : 2007 (2) SCC (Cri) 84 : 2007 CrLJ 1451 : 2007 (2) Crimes 51 (SC). (3) State of Rajasthan v. Chittarmal, (2007) 10 SCC 792 : 2007 (3) SCC (Cri) 696 : 2007 (3) Crimes 153 (SC) : JT 2007 (9) SC 261.

[12012] ● Rash and negligent driving.—Coming to the question whether there was any rash and negligence involved, evidence of the RTO (PW-10) is relevant. He has clearly stated that the accident did not occur on account on mechanical defects. The evidence of PWs 1, 2 and 6 who were eye-witnesses shows that the vehicle was being driven at a very high speed. Significantly some of the PWs. were travelling in a lorry. PW-6 had stated that the vehicle was coming at a very high speed and that the road was quite wide and there was no traffic at the time of accident. It is to be noticed that the evidence of the witnesses clearly shows that the vehicle dashed against a tree and the branches of the tree fell on it. From the evidence of PW-6 it appears that though it was rainy season but there was no rain at the relevant point of time. In view of the evidence of eye-witnesses and the factual scenario the inevitable conclusion is that the Courts below have rightly found the accused guilty. The sentence of six months' simple imprisonment and the fine imposed does not in any way appear to be irrational. Rathnashalvan v. State of Karnataka, AIR 2007 SC 1064 : (2007) 3 SCC 474 : 2007 (2) SCC (Cri) 84 : 2007 CrLJ 1451 : 2007 (2) Crimes 51 (SC).

[12014] ● Culpable rashness or negligence—Determination.—In criminal cases, the amount and degree of negligence are determining factors. A question whether the accuseds' conduct amounted to culpable rashness or negligence depends directly on the question as to what is the amount of care and circumspection which a provident and reasonable man would consider to be sufficient considering all the circumstances of the case. Prabhakaran v. State of Kerala, AIR 2007 SC 2376 (2377) : (2007) 14 SCC 269 : 2007 (3) Crimes 146 (SC) : 2007 (7) SCR 1141. TO THE SAME EFFECT : Rathnashalvan v. State of Karnataka, AIR 2007 SC 1064 : (2007) 3 SCC 474 : 2007 (2) SCC (Cri) 84 : 2007 (2) Crimes 51 (SC).

[12015] ● Criminal rashness and criminal negligence—Distinction.—"Rashness" consists in hazarding a dangerous or wanton act with the knowledge that it is so, and that it may cause injury. Criminality lies in such a case in running the risk of doing such an act with recklessness or indifference as to the consequences. Criminal negligence on the other hand, is the gross and culpable neglect or failure to exercise that reasonable and proper care and precaution to guard against injury either to the public generally or to an individual in particular, which, having regard to all the circumstances out of which the charge has arisen it was the imperative duty of the accused person to have adopted. Prabhakaran v. State of Kerala, AIR 2007 SC 2376 : (2007) 14 SCC 269 : 2007 (7) SCR 1141 : 2007 (8) Scale 191 : 2007 (3) Crimes 146.

[12016] ● Rash and negligent act.—Section 304-A discloses that criminality may be that apart from any mens rea, there may be no motive or intention still a person may venture or practice such rashness or negligence which may cause the death of other. The death so caused is not the determining factor. Naresh Giri v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (2008) 1 SCC 791 : JT 2007 (12) SC 433 : 2007 (13) Scale 7.

[12017] ● Medical negligence.—In every mishap or death during medical treatment, a medical man cannot be proceeded against in a criminal Court. Criminal prosecutions of doctors without adequate medical opinion pointing to their guilt would be doing disservice to the community at large. If the Courts were to impose criminal liability on hospitals and doctors for everything that goes wrong, the doctors would be more worried about their own safety than giving all best treatment to their patients. It would also lead to shaking the mutual confidence between the doctor and patient. Every failure or misfortune in the hospital or in a clinic of a doctor cannot be termed as act of negligence so as to try him of an offence punishable under Section 304-A of the Code.

A physician would not assure the patient of full recovery in each and every case. He cannot and does not guarantee that the result of his treatment would invariably be beneficial much less to the extent of 100% for the person treated by him. The only guarantee which a professional can give or can be understood to have given by necessary implication is that he is possessed of requisite skill in that branch or profession which he is practicing and while undertaking performance of the task entrusted to him, he would be exercising his skill with reasonable competence. Mahadev Prasad Kaushik v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 2009 SC 125 : (2008) 14 SCC 479 : JT 2008 (11) 218 : 2008 (13) Scale 356 : 2008 (7) Supreme 292 : 2008 (4) Crimes 218.

[12019] ● Section 304-A—Scope.—Section 304-A carves out a specific offence where death is caused by doing a rash or negligent act and that act does not amount to culpable homicide under Section 299 or murder under Section 300. If a person willfully drives a motor vehicle into the midst of a crowd and thereby causes death to some person, it will not be a case of mere rash and negligent driving and the act will amount to culpable homicide. Doing an act with the intent to kill a person or knowledge that doing an act was likely to cause a person's death is culpable homicide. When the intent or knowledge is the direct motivating force of the act. Section 304-A has to make room for the graver and more serious charge of culpable homicide. The provision of this section is not limited to rash or negligent driving. Any rash or negligent act whereby death of any person is caused becomes punishable. Two elements either of which or both of which may be proved to establish the guilt of an accused are rashness/negligence, a person may cause death by a rash or negligent act which may have nothing to do with driving at all. Negligence and rashness to be punishable in terms of Section 304-A must be attributable to a state of mind wherein the criminality arises because of no error in judgment but of a deliberation in the mind risking the crime as well as the life of the person who may lose his life as a result of the crime. Section 304-A discloses that criminality may be that apart from any mens rea, there may be no motive or intention still a person may venture or practice such rashness or negligence which may cause the death of the other, the death sentence so caused is not the determining factor. Kuldeep Singh v. State of Himachal Pradesh, AIR 2008 SC 3062 : 2008 CrLJ 3932 (3933, 3934) : JT 2008 (8) SC 219.

[12021] ● Tools required to control Road fatalities.—"We have the tools needed to combat epidemic. In the developed nations, proven methods such as enforcement of laws regarding driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs, reducing speed limits, and requiring seat belts and restraints have shown significant reduction in traffic fatalities. Road design and road environment, vehicle design, and road safety standards are also strategies that successfully address traffic safety. For maximum impact of RTI's, a systems approach with multiple, scientifically proven prevention techniques must be employed. Education alone has been shown to be less effective, and often ineffective.

"Proven interventions for developed countries require research, modification, and testing for developing countries. For example, developing countries face poorly designed and maintained roadways, unsafe vehicles, drivers under the influence of drugs or alcohol, lack of national policies, and inadequate enforcement. Success will require significant new resources supported by sustained political commitment. State of Karnataka v. Muralidhar, AIR 2009 SC 1621 : (2009) 4 SCC 463 : 2009 (4) SCR 400.

[12022] ● Road accidents have a bearing on economy.—In addition to the devastating human toll, the economic impact of road crashes is also enormous. Many of these injured or killed are wage earners, leaving families destitute and without means of support loss of wages, property damage and other factors' affected by road traffic crashes represented 4.6% of the gross national product of the United States in 1994. In developing countries, road traffic crashes represented 3.5% of the G.N.P. The estimated annual cost of road traffic crashes in developing countries exceeds $ 100 billion (U.S.). This amounts to nearly double the total combined development assistance these countries receive every year from bilateral and multilateral Government organizations. Globally the estimated annual costs of road crashes are 500 billion (U.S.). State of Karnataka v. Muralidhar, AIR 2009 SC 1621 : (2009) 4 SCC 643 : 2009 (4) SCR 400.

DEATH CERTIFICATE

[12023] ● Two death certificates—Reasonable doubt about cause of death. [Please refer to Balai Chandra Biswas v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1994 SC 914 : (1994) 1 SCC 423 : 1994 CrLJ 1035 under Topic "Disappearance of Evidence"]

DEATH IN POLICE CUSTODY
§ (See "CUSTODIAL DEATH")

[12024] ● Death in police custody.—On the question of sentence, a fervent appeal was made by the counsel of accused that having regard to the passage of time and the changed circumstances the accused should not be sent to Jail and the sentence of fine should suffice. We are unable to accede to this request. This offence is of a serious nature aggravated by the fact that it was committed by a person who is supposed to protect the citizens and not misuse his uniform and authority to brutally assault them while in his custody. Death in Police custody must be seriously viewed for otherwise we will help take a stride in the direction of Police raj. It must be curbed with a heavy hand. The punishment should be such as would deter others from indulging in such behaviour. There can be no room for leniency. Gauri Shanker Sharma v. State of U.P., AIR 1990 SC 709 (716) : 1990 Supp SCC 656 : 1990 CrLR (SC) 166 : JT 1990 (1) SC 6 : (1990) 1 SCR 29.

DEATH OF COMPLAINANT

[12025] ● Recalling of order.—From the material on record, it appears that both the complainant and his mother committed suicide on 5.3.2001 and his father also committed suicide two days later on 7.3.2001. The present appellant is the brother of the complainant and claims to be the legal heir-legatee of the deceased. It is true, as noticed in the impugned judgment and order, that on two earlier occasions also i.e. on 10.1. 2002 and 4.4.2002, none was present for the complainant. Insofar as the absence of the advocate is concerned , it is evident that on the death of his client, he had no authority to appear. The order-sheet further shows that on the aforesaid two dates, even the accused was not present. Having regard to the facts and circumstances of the cases, we are of the view that interests of justice require that the order of the Magistrate dated 7.9.2002 acquitting the accused, as affirmed by the High Court by the impugned judgment and order, deserves to be recalled so that the complaints can be tried on merits in accordance with law. We may only note that there is no hard-and-fast rule regarding recalling of such orders. Aseem Shaliandi Merchant v. Brij Mehra, (2005) 11 SCC 412 : (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 776 (777).

DEATH SENTENCE
§ (See also "SENTENCE")

[12026] ● Death sentence.—Upon conviction for murder under Section 302, Penal Code, sentence of death should ordinarily be imposed, unless there are extenuating circumstances on record by reason of which the Judge considers it proper to award the lesser penalty, in which case, the reasons for which the lesser penalty is awarded should be recorded in the judgment. Dalip Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1953 SC 364 : 1953 CrLJ 1465 : 1953 SCJ 532 : 1953 SCA 709 : 1953 MWN 642 : 1954 SCR 145.

[12027] ● Imposition of death sentence not improper.—In the present case the accused was convicted under Section 302/34, and not under Section 302. The trial Court found that though the accused did not himself inflict any blow on the deceased, he had shared the common intention to kill him and had intentionally participated in the attack by being present on the spot armed with a lathi so as to keep guard and give support to his brother who attacked the deceased with a gandasa. The trial Judge convicted the accused under Section 302 read with Section 34 and sentenced him to death. In the eye of the law, the accused is as much guilty of the offence of murder as that co-accused who actually dealt the fatal blows, and on the facts of the case the sentence of death imposed on him cannot be held to be improper and has to be maintained. Rishi Deo Pande v.

State of U.P., AIR 1953 SC 331 : 1955 CrLJ 873.

[12028] ● Death sentence—Imposition of.— Note: Under the CrPC, 1973, the position is quite the opposite. As per Section 354(3) of the Code, the Court should give 'special reasons' for imposing the death sentence. Otherwise, the sentence of imprisonment for life alone should be awarded.

When the two Judges hearing a criminal appeal are divided in their opinion as to the guilt of the accused, and the conviction for murder is confirmed by relying upon the opinion of a third Judge to whom reference is made, it is a convention, though not a rule of law, that death sentence should not be imposed. In such a case it is not necessary to see whether there are any extenuating circumstances justifying the imposition of the lesser penalty. Aftab Ahmed Khan v. State of Hyderabad, AIR 1954 SC 436 : 1954 CrLJ 1155 : 1954 SCA 672 : 1954 SCJ 655 : 1955 SCR 588 : 1954 (2) MLJ 338 : 1954 MWN 743 : 1954 AWR (Sup) 69.

[12029] ● Death sentence—No interference with.—In the present case the accused was convicted under Section 302, Penal Code. It was established that the fatal blow on the head of the deceased, which was given with a sharp cutting instrument, has been intentionally given on his head with much severity after he had fallen on the ground and was helpless. The accused was sentenced to death and on appeal the sentence was confirmed. Under these circumstances there is no cause for interference with the sentence of death, even though the deceased had been attacked in the heat of the moment and without any premeditation. Kripal v. State of U.P., AIR 1954 SC 706 : 1954 CrLJ 1757.

[12030] ● Appellants sentenced to death on opinion of third Judge.—The question of sentence is always a matter of discretion, but when in a confirmation proceeding there is a difference of opinion between the Judges of the High Court constituting the Bench, and the conviction of the accused has been confirmed after the matter is referred to a third Judge, the death penalty should not be imposed unless when there are compelling reasons to do so. Pandurang, Tukia and Bhillia v. State of Hyderabad, AIR 1955 SC 216 : 1955 CrLJ 572 : 1955 SCR 1083 : 1955 SCJ 106 : 1955 SCA 228 : 1955 MWN 161.

[12031] ● Death sentence reduced to life imprisonment.—In the present case the accused was convicted of murder for causing the death of the deceased by giving him a blow with a pen-knife in the chest. It was established that the accused who was a hot-blooded young man lost control over himself after he had been given a slap by the companion of the deceased, and had whipped out the knife thereafter in sudden anger, and had given the fatal stab without any premeditation. Under these circumstances the sentence of death is not called for, and it is reduced to one of imprisonment for life. Narayanan Nair v. State of Trav.-Cochin, AIR 1956 SC 99 : 1956 CrLJ 278 : 1956 Ker LT 92 : 1956 AWR (Sup) 28.

[12032] ● Nature of proof nothing to do with character of punishment.—The question of sentence has to be determined, not with reference to the volume or character of the evidence adduced by the prosecution in support of the prosecution case, but with reference to the fact whether there are any extenuating circumstances which can be said to mitigate the enormity of the crime. If the Court is satisfied that there are such mitigating circumstances, only then, it would be justified in imposing the lesser of the two sentences provided by law. In other words, the nature of the proof has nothing to do with the character of the punishment. Vadivelu Thevar v. State of Madras, AIR 1957 SC 614 : 1957 CrLJ 1000 : 1957 SCJ 527.

[12034] ● Triple murder—Death sentence imposition of.—If having regard to the enormity of the crime (a triple murder in the present case, which was cold-blooded and premeditated), the Court comes to the conclusion that it would not be justified in imposing the lesser sentence, it has the power to impose a sentence of death even in a case in which the conviction is not under Section

302 substantive, but is only under Section 302 read with Section 34, and there has been no finding that the accused so sentenced himself caused the fatal injuries. Bharwad Mepa Dana v. State of Bombay, AIR 1960 SC 289 : 1960 CrLJ 424 : (1960) 2 SCR 172 : 1960 MLJ (Cri) 398 : 1960 AWR (HC) 258 : 1960 ACrR 178 : 62 Bom LR 269 : 1960 SCJ 478.

[12035] ● Death sentence—No reason for reduction of.—In this case, the accused is convicted on the charge of murder and is sentenced to death. It has been proved that the accused who was carrying a pistol had fired the fatal shot from a platform in which he was sitting with his father at a person who was going to his field. The accused is a young man of 25 years. It has been urged that the accused had fired the fatal shot at the instigation of his father and that the fact he was under the influence of his father be considered and the sentence of death be reduced to one of imprisonment for life. There is no doubt that the accused fired the fatal shot at the instigation of his father, but he was a mature man of 25 years, and obviously the murder must have been planned between father and son as they were apparently expecting that the deceased would pass that way as he did every day. The accused cannot be considered to be a young boy in his teens who would be completely under the influence of his father. In the circumstances, there is no reason to reduce the sentence of death. Tori Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1962 SC 399 : 1962 (1) CrLJ 469 : (1962) 1 SCJ 367 : (1962) 3 SCR 580 : (1962) 1 ALT 511 : 1962 MLJ (Cri) 259 : 1962 ACrR 159 : 1962 AWR (HC) 257 : ILR (1962) 1 All 397.

[12036] ● Sentence of imprisonment for life appropriate.—When considering the question whether the accused who are convicted under Section 302 on the charge of murder should be given the sentence of death, the Court has to take into account all the relevant circumstances of the case, such as, the background of the incident in which the fight between rival parties took place, the nature and extent of the threats held out by the party of the deceased, and the excitement which must have prevailed at the time of the incident. If it is shown that at the time when the fatal shots were fired there must have been considerable excitement in the minds of the accused, then, even though it be held that they had fired the fatal shots after the threat had ceased to exist and there was no apprehension of danger, and that they were guilty of murder because they had fired those shots after their right of private defence had come to an end, the continuing excitement in their minds following upon an attack upon them by the members of the opposite party, may be regarded as an extenuating circumstance. In such a case, the sentence of death would not be appropriate, and the ends of justice would be met if the sentence imposed is of imprisonment for life. Jai Dev v. State of Punjab, AIR 1963 SC 612 : 1963 (1) CrLJ 495 : 1963 SCD 66 : 1963 ACrR 170 : 1963 AWR (HC) 338.

[12038] ● Offence brutal—Death sentence proper.—In the instant case, it is contended that as a long time had passed the sentence of death should be substituted by imprisonment for life and reliance was placed upon Kalawati v. State of H.P., AIR 1953 SC 131, where such action was taken. In our judgment, each case must be decided on its own facts and a sentence of imprisonment for life can only be substituted if the facts justify that the extreme penalty of the law should not be imposed. We do not consider this to be such a case.

It is then contended on the authority of Pandurang v. State of Hyderabad, AIR 1955 SC 216, that as the two learned Judges have differed, the extreme penalty of the law should not be imposed. In the cited case, the Judges had differed on the question of sentence itself and the third Judge before whom the matter was placed was in favour of the death penalty. Bose, J.; in reducing the sentence to imprisonment for life, observed : "But when appellate Judges, who agree on the question of the guilt differ on that of sentence, it is usual not to impose the death penalty unless there are compelling reasons." This cannot be raised to the pedestal of a rule for that would leave the sentence to the determination of one Judge to the exclusion of the other. In the instant case, both the Judges appear to have been in favour of the death sentence because although Gyanendra Kumar, J., was in favour of acquittal he did not object to the confirmation of the death sentence when Tarku, J., had given his opinion. The offence here was brutal and normally the death penalty should follow. We, therefore, decline to reduce the sentence passed. Babu v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1965 SC 1467 : 1965 (2) CrLJ 539.

[12039] ● Intention to murder lacking— Sentence of imprisonment for life proper.— Where intention to murder is lacking, lesser sentence of imprisonment for life is proper. Hazara Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1969 SC 951 : (1969) 2 SCC 40 : 1969 CrLJ 1428.

[12040] ● Accused 22 years—Imprisonment for life proper.—Where it was found that the offence of murder was committed by a person who was easily excited and therefore likely to be moved by irresistible impulses and the age of the accused was 22 years, lesser sentence of imprisonment for life will meet the ends of justice. Brijkishore Pandye v. State of Uttar Pradesh, (1971) 3 SCC 931 (2) : 1970 SC CrR 489 : 1970 UJ (SC) 323.

[12041] ● Accused given exhortation by uncle and father-latter given benefit of doubt—Sentence of imprisonment for life proper.—Where the accused was given exhortation by his uncle and father and latter were given benefit of doubt, lesser sentence of imprisonment for life is proper. Zila Singh v. State, 1971 SCC (Cri) 534 : 1971 UJ (SC) 598.

[12042] ● Inordinate delay in disposal of case—Sentence for imprisonment for life justified.—Inordinate delay in disposal of case justifies the lesser sentence of imprisonment for life. Vivian Rodrick v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1971 SC 1584 : 1971 SCC (Cri) 192 : 1971 UJ (SC) 224.

[12043] ● Accused not directly responsible for causing death sentence reduced to imprisonment for life.—Where the Sessions Judge sentenced the accused who were vicariously liable but who did not give the fatal blow, to imprisonment for life, while sentencing the appellant who was believed to have given the fatal blow to death penalty and the High Court confirmed the same, this Court is of the view that as it cannot be said definitely that the appellant is directly responsible for causing the death of the deceased, applying the test applied by the Sessions Judge, the appellant also should have the benefit of that test and reduced the sentence to imprisonment for life. Mohan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1971 SC 2519 : (1970) 3 SCC 496 : 1971 CrLJ 1746 : (1971) 2 SCCrR 180 : 1971 UJ (SC) 98.

[12044] ● No justification for enhancement of sentence.—It is only when the sentence appears on the facts and circumstances of the case to be so manifestly inadequate as to have resulted in failure of justice that enhancement of the sentence may be justified by the appellate Court. If the reasons for awarding the lesser penalty by the trial Court in case of murder are such on which a judicial mind may appropriately do so, then the appellate Court is not expected to enhance the sentence and impose the extreme penalty of death. Merely because the appellate Court feels that left to itself it would have preferred to impose the sentence of death is by itself and without more not a sufficient ground to justify enhancement. Ram Narain v. State of Uttar Pradesh., AIR 1971 SC 757 : (1970) 3 SCC 493 : 1971 CrLJ 649 : (1971) 2 SCCrR 273 : 1971 UJ (SC) 117 : 1971 CrAppR (SC) 1 : 1971 ACrR 319 : 1971 AWR (HC) 371.

[12046] ● Prosecution not disclosing all true facts—Sentence of imprisonment for life proper.—Where the prosecution did not disclose all true facts lesser sentence of imprisonment for life is proper. Devendra Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1971 SC 1759 : (1972) 4 SCC 146 : 1971 CrLJ 1283 : 1971 UJ (SC) 685.

[12047] ● When—Shot of pistol—Not sufficient to cause death.—Where shot of the pistol hitting clavicle was not sufficient to cause death, lesser sentence was held proper. Sultan v. State of Haryana, AIR 1972 SC 811 : (1972) 3 SCC 211 : (1972) 2 SCJ 248 : 1972 UJ (SC) 496.

[12048] ● Sentence—Mitigating circumstances.—Where two accused fired shots from their guns against the deceased and where each of the shots fired by one was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, the person whose shot hit the clavicle was not sufficient to cause death though he intended to kill and so a lesser penalty under Section 302, IPC, would meet the ends of justice even though the other person was sentenced to death. Sultan v. State of Haryana, AIR 1972 SC 811 : 1972 CrLJ 527 : (1972) 2 SCJ 248 : 1972 MLJ (Cri) 749.

[12050] ● Sentence—Imposition of life imprisonment.—Where the accused suspecting the fidelity of the deceased and believing that the baby had been born to her as a result of her adulterous conduct, enquired from the deceased shortly before the occurrence regarding father of the boy and the deceased thereupon abused him lesser sentence of imprisonment for life is proper. Nika Ram v. State of Himachal Pradesh, AIR 1972 SC 2077 : (1972) 2 SCC 80 : 1972 SCC (Cri) 635 : 1972 CrLJ 1317 : 1972 UJ (SC) 932.

[12051] ● Death sentence or life imprisonment—Discretion of Court.—It is a matter of judicial discretion for the Court to decide on a consideration of all the relevant circumstances of the case, which of the two permissible sentences under Section 302, IPC, should be imposed. It is no longer necessary to give reasons for imposing the lesser penalty. The determination of sentence in a given case depends on a variety of considerations, the more important being the nature of the crime, the manner of its commission, the motive which impelled it and the character and antecedents of the accused. No general rule with regard to sentence applicable to all cases of political murders can be laid down. Murder inspired by differences of political opinions and ideologies is wholly inconsistent with our system of Government where the Constitution has guaranteed freedom of thought and expression to all citizens and parties, so long as they act within the Constitution and the law. Apren Joseph v. State of Kerala, AIR 1973 SC 1 : 1973 CrLJ 185 : (1972) 2 SCWR 734 : 1972 SCD 1143.

[12052] ● Judicial discretion—In what cases Judge should pass death sentence.—Any exhaustive enumeration of aggravating or mitigating circumstances is impossible. The impossibility of laying down standards is at the very core of the criminal law as administered in India which invests the Judges with a very wide discretion in the matter of fixing the degree of punishment. That discretion in the matter of sentence is liable to be corrected by superior Courts. The exercise of judicial discretion on well-recognised principles is, in the final analysis, the safest possible safeguards for the accused. Jagmohan Singh v. State of U.P., AIR 1973 SC 947 : (1973) 1 SCC 20 : 1973 SCC (Cri) 169 : 1973 CrLJ 370.

[12053] ● Pre-meditated brutal murder—Death sentence.—Where the accused had inflicted 16 injuries on an unarmed and defenceless person injuring on his palms and hands indicating that he must have been desperately trying to save his life by attempting to ward off the blows with his hands, the circumstances clearly showed that the act of the accused is a cold-blooded one and the murder was brutal in nature. Sentence of death is proper. Mohinder Singh v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1973 SC 697 : (1973) 1 SCC 498 : 1973 CrLJ 610.

[12054] ● Murder—Reduction of death sentence to life imprisonment.—Where the accused had some sort of mental trouble prior to the date of the occurrence which may not amount to insanity but which would affect a person's mind in a way quite different from that of a normal person and as such he was in all likelihood not in a position to weigh and analyse in a rational manner and where it was not clear from the prosecution evidence about the origin of the incident, it is not a case in which the penalty of death should have been inflicted. Gopalan Nair v. State of Kerala, AIR 1973 SC 806 : (1973) 1 SCC 469 : 1973 CrLJ 583 : 1972 SCD 181 : (1973) 1 SCWR 106 : 1973 KLT 64.

[12055] ● Sentence—Quantum.—Where the altercation between the accused and the deceased would show that the accused were smarting under the feeling that their community itself was humiliated by one of his members being beaten with broom stick and that the attack was prompted by that feeling and the insolent attitude of the deceased towards their community, the extreme penalty of death was not called for. Subbiah Thevar v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1973 SC 785 : (1973) 1 SCC 284 : 1973 CrLJ 563.

[12056] ● Murder sentence of death reduced to life-imprisonment.—Where the evidence does not indicate that the appellant played any greater part in the act of committing the murder of the deceased than the other three accused who have been sentenced only to life imprisonment, the appellant also should be awarded the same sentence and not the death sentence. Jose v. State of Kerala, AIR 1973 SC 944 : (1973) 3 SCC 472 : 1973 CrLJ 687.

[12057] ● Death sentence—Intra vires.—Note—Death Sentence : Vires.—The question of vires of capital punishment was first raised in a Supreme Court case. Under Article 21, Constitution of India no person shall be deprived of his life except according to procedure established by law. It was the contention that before the sentence of death is passed there is, in fact, no procedure established by law. It is admitted that the Criminal Procedure Code lays down a detailed procedure but that procedure, according to appellant was limited to the finding of guilt. After the accused is found guilty of the offence, there is no other procedure laid down by the law for determination whether the sentence of death or something less is appropriate in the case. Therefore, appellant contended death sentence is unconstitutional. The contention was repelled by the Supreme Court and death sentence has been held intra vires. Jagmohan Singh v. State of U.P., AIR 1973 SC 947 : (1973) 1 SCC 20 : 1973 CrLJ 370.

[12058] ● One found guilty be punished either with death or with imprisonment for life.—It further held that for offence under Section 302 one found guilty may be punished either with death or with imprisonment for life. True, there is no guideline in which case death is to be ordered or in which case life imprisonment is to be awarded. But this does not constitute excessive delegation by the legislature—such provision is valid constitutionally. Jagmohan Singh v. State of U.P., AIR 1973 SC 947 : (1973) 1 SCC 20 : 1973 CrLJ 370.

[12060] ● Provocation though not sudden grave under mental distress—Imprisonment for life proper.—Where the provocation, though not sudden, was grave under mental distress the lesser sentence of imprisonment for life is proper. Vasant Laxman More v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1974 SC 1697 : (1974) 4 SCC 778 : 1974 CrLJ 1166 : 1974 CrLR (SC) 509.

[12061] ● Award of death sentence or imprisonment for life—Considerations.—The guilt having been established, the choice between death penalty and life imprisonment has to be made in the present case under the new CrPC, the shift in the Legislative emphasis was that life-imprisonment for murder was the rule and capital sentence the exception to be resorted to for reasons to be stated : Section 354(3). The positive indicators against death sentence under the current Indian Law might be crystallized as follows :

Where the murderer was too young or too old, the clemency of penal justice helped him. Where the offender suffered from socio-economic, psychic or penal compulsion insufficient to attract a legal exception or to down grade the crime into a lesser one, judicial commutation was permissible. Other general social pressures, warranting judicial notice, with an extenuating impact might, in special cases, induce the lesser penalty. Extraordinary features in the judicial process, such as that the death sentence had hung over the head of the culprit excruciatingly long, might persuade the Court to be compassionate. Likewise, if others involved in the crime and similarly situated had received the benefit of life-imprisonment or if the offence was only constructive, being under Section 302 read with Section 149, or again the accused had acted suddenly under another's instigation, without pre-meditation, the Court might humanly opt for life, even like where a just cause or real suspicion of wifely infidelity pushed the criminal into the crime. On the other hand, the weapons used and the manner of their use, the horrendous features of the crime and hapless, helpless state of the victim, and the like, steel the heart of the law for a sterner sentence.

In the present case, the criminal's social and personal factors were less harsh, her femininity and youth, her unbalanced sex and expulsion from the conjugal home and being the mother of a young boy—these individually inconclusive and cumulatively marginal facts and circumstances tended towards award of life imprisonment. E. Anamma v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1974 SC 799 : (1974) 4 SCC 443 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 479 : 1974 CrLJ 683.

[12062] ● Murder—Sentence—Principles.—In deciding whether the case merits the less severe of the two penalties prescribed for murder, a history of relations between the parties concerned, the background, the context, or the factual setting of the crime, and the strength and nature of the motives operating on the mind of the offender, are relevant considerations. The state of feelings and mind produced by these, while insufficient to bring in an exception, may suffice to make the less severe sentence more appropriate. Francis v. State of Kerala, AIR 1974 SC 2281 : (1975) 3 SCC 825 : 1974 CrLJ 1310.

[12063] ● Murder trial—Sentence.—Where in a murder case, there were circumstances which were though insufficient to make out a plea of private defence or to palliate the offence, could legitimately be taken into account in choosing between the sentence of life or of death and there was dread of impending execution had been brooding over the head of the condemned prisoners for an excruciatingly long period of over three years, death sentences were altered to imprisonment for life. Bhoor Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1974 SC 1256 : (1974) 4 SCC 754 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 664 : 1974 CrLJ 929.

[12064] ● Murder Possibility of some amount of provocation from deceased not ruled out—Death sentence reduced to imprisonment for life.—Where the evidence disclosed that the deceased was a quarrelsome person and there had been a quarrel on the previous day of the occurrence as well as on the day of the occurrence between the deceased and the appellant and though the actual origin of the quarrel at the time of the assault was not known, some amount of provocation from the deceased might not be ruled out completely, the Supreme Court reduced the sentence of death to imprisonment for life while maintaining the conviction under Section 302, IPC. K.B. Panicker v. State of Kerala, AIR 1974 SC 1918 : (1974) 3 SCC 295 : 1974 CrLJ 1305.

[12065] ● Murder—No reason to interfere with death sentence.—Where the accused was carrying a pistol and he fired from that pistol without any provocation from either of the deceased persons, neither of whom was armed not even with a walking stick, and all that one of them did was to ask the processionists to desist from shouting vulgar shoutings, the sentence of death on the accused cannot be interfered with. Politics may or may not be a clean game but no Court can suffer with equanimity such flagrant defiance of law by members of political parties, whatever their colour or creed. They must know that it will not pay to carry pistols in processions for being used as weapons of offence against political rivals. Balak Ram v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1974 SC 2165 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 837 : 1974 CrLJ 1486.

[12066] ● Common motive to murder—Sentence commuted to life imprisonment.—Where the accused were convicted on the testimony of the approver corroborated by other evidence, mostly circumstantial, in respect of each of the accused and there was also general corroboration of the approver in regard to the motive and the occasion for committing the crime, their conviction for murder was correct. But the Court cannot be oblivious to the tendency to minimize one's own part and to shift and assign the dominant role in the commission of the offence to the accused, that is inherent in the evidence of all accomplices, the approver's testimony cannot be said to be absolutely free from such tendency in the present case. Although the corroboration of such testimony is reliable and adequate enough to make it safe for sustaining the convictions, there being a common motive for the approver and A-1 to murder the deceased, the sentence was commuted to one of life imprisonment. Subramanian v. State of T.N., AIR 1975 SC 139 : (1975) 3 SCC 414 : 1975 SCC (Cri) 40 : 1975 CrLJ 226.

[12067] ● No motive to ghastly crime—Death sentence commuted to imprisonment for life.—The accused in the instant case had no particular motive to commit the ghastly crime and the trifle murder was committed by him as a result of some mental imbalance and not a pre-planned one, death sentence is commuted to one for imprisonment for life. Namu Ram Bora v. State of Assam & Nagaland, AIR 1975 SC 762 : (1975) 1 SCC 318 : 1975 SCC (Cri) 98 : 1975 CrLJ 646.

[12068] ● Accused throwing hand-grenade into house of victims—Death of person.—Where the accused threw a handgrenade into the house of the victims resulting in the death of two persons besides serious injuries to another, the crime being cruel and inhuman and the consequential deaths dastardly and pathetic, interference with the sentence of death imposed on him is not warranted. Bishan Dass v. State of Punjab, AIR 1975 SC 573 : (1975) 3 SCC 700 : 1975 SCC (Cri) 145 : 1975 CrLJ 461.

[12069] ● Pre-planned cold blooded murder death sentence proper.—For pre-planned cold-blooded murder death sentence is proper. The fact that accused was sentenced one year ago is not an extenuating circumstance. Maghar Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1975 SC 1320 : (1975) 4 SCC 234 : 1975 SCC (Cri) 479 : 1975 CrLJ 1102.

[12070] ● Pre-planned cold-blooded murder death sentence proper.—Accused murdering the victim taking advantage of the absence of the husband of the deceased with whom the accused at the relevant time was alone in the house, death being caused by several fatal blows by a gandasa, death sentence is proper. Maghar Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1975 SC 1320 : (1975) 4 SCC 234 : 1975 SCC (Cri) 479 : 1975 CrLJ 1102.

[12071] ● Murder of helpless woman—Death sentence proper.—Murder of helpless woman by knife, accused chasing her and stabbing when she was running away—death sentence is proper. Suresh v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1975 SC

[12072] ● Accused murdering victim by stabbing death sentence proper.—Accused murdering the victim by stabbing him in the back, abdomen and in clavicle as also on both hands, the attack being premeditated one—death sentence is proper. Perumal v. State of Kerala, AIR 1975 SC 95 : 1975 CrLJ 51.

[12073] ● One sword injury—Death sentence commuted to life imprisonment.—Where the appellant inflicted only one sword injury out of seven on the deceased and he did so at the instigation of one of his companions, who were either acquitted or sentenced to life imprisonment though they were ascribed other serious injuries, sentence awarding of lesser penalty prescribed for murder would be commensurate with the ends of justice. Nattan v. State of T.N., AIR 1976 SC 2197 : (1976) 4 SCC 290 : 1976 CrLJ 1717 : 1976 CrLR (SC) 98 : 1976 SCCrR 159 : 1976 UJ (SC) 214.

[12074] ● Accused 18 years of age—Not appropriate to impose sentence of death.—In view of the current sociological and juristic thinking on the subject, it would be legitimate for the Court to refuse to impose death sentence on the accused convicted of murder, if it finds that at the time of commission of offence, he was under 18 years of age. Harnam v. State of U.P., AIR 1976 SC 2071 : (1976) 1 SCC 163 : 1975 SCC (Cri) 794 : 1976 CrLJ 1642 : 1976 CrLR (SC) 1 : (1976) 2 SCR 274 : 1976 UJ (SC) 115 : 1976 CrAppR (SC) 63.

[12076] ● Death sentence—Propriety.—Where the deceased had done no harm to the accused who was apparently a desperate character who would not stop at killing rather than be caught in an attempt to steal after breaking into a house, nothing less than death sentence was deserved by him. Ramesh Ramdas v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1976 SC 345 : (1976) 2 SCC 201 : 1976 SCC (Cri) 256 : 1976 CrLJ 310.

[12077] ● Murder—Death sentence—Delay in hearing appeal not mitigating factor.—Where the accused committed the murder in a dastardly fashion in a pre-meditated and pre-planned manner and the conduct of the accused in attempting to disrupt the matrimonial home of the deceased was highly immoral and cannot be looked upon with commiseration, particularly when after her marriage the deceased had returned to the path of rectitude and was firmly faithful to her husband, and no less than four unarmed persons were indiscriminately stabbed when most of them were lying asleep, unaware and helpless and the injury caused to the husband of the deceased was dangerous to life and, but for timely medical aid, the injury would have proved fatal, the sentence of death imposed on the appellant was confirmed by the Supreme Court. Delay in hearing the appeal is not a mitigating factor in this case. Lajar Masih v. State of U.P., AIR 1976 SC 653 : (1976) 1 SCC 806 : 1976 SCC (Cri) 195 : 1976 CrLJ 580.

[12078] ● Death sentence awarded only under special reasons.—Section 354(3) CrPC, 1973 provides that sentence other than death is the general rule only for special reasons which are required to be stated, death sentence is permissible. It is not possible to catalogue the special reasons which may justify the passing of death sentence, but just a few may be indicated, such as, the crime has been committed by a professional or hardened criminal or it has been committed in a brutal manner or on a helpless child or woman or the like. To rely on absence of extenuating circumstances to justify a sentence other than death sentence since 1st April, 1974 is not justified. Balwant Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1976 SC 230 : (1976) 1 SCC 425 : 1976 CrLJ 291.

[12079] ● Accused below 18 years of age—Death sentence—Imposition of.—It is not in every case where the accused is below 18 years of age that the Court would necessarily and always decline to impose sentence of death in a case of Section 302, IPC, but the fact that an accused was below 18 years of age at the time of the commission of the offence is certainly an important factor which would guide the Court in determining whether or not to inflict the penalty of death. Bachchey Lal v. State of U.P., AIR 1977 SC 2094 : (1976) 4 SCC 305 : 1976 SCC (Cri) 599 : 1977 CrLJ 1743 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 41.

[12080] ● Murder—Sentence—Death sentence—Legality.—Where the appellant, more than the other accused who was sentenced to imprisonment for life, who had a strong and direct motive for committing murder of the deceased and it was he that had given the threat to kill him and it was he that almost pumped a shot into the deceased's face and head from a very close range causing extensive damage to the brain and the face resulting in his death, the sentence of death imposed on the appellant is confirmed. Ragho Mani v. State of U.P., AIR 1977 SC 703 : (1976) 4 SCC 297 : 1976 SCC (Cri) 616 : 1977 CrLJ 345.

[12081] ● Accused below 18 years of age when committed offence—Sentence of death committed to life imprisonment.—Where the accused was below 18 years of age when he committed the offence, sentence of death should not be imposed on him. The Sessions Judge and the High Court rejected the age given by the accused when examined under Section 342, CrPC (Section 313 of the new Code) as 18 years and felt that he would be not less than 24 years by his appearance and sentenced him to death. They were not right in substituting their own estimate in regard to the age of the accused rejecting his statement as to his age. The sentence of death is commuted to one of life imprisonment. Raisul v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1977 SC 1822 : (1976) 4 SCC 301 : 1976 SCC (Cri) 613 : 1977 CrLJ 1555.

[12082] ● Accused mature person of 60 years at time of commission of murders.—Where the conviction of the accused under Section 302, IPC, for murdering his daughter & his son-in-law is fully justified, as the murders were not only preplanned and cold-blooded but were acts of treachery of the worst kind and the accused was a mature person of 60 years at the time of the commission of the murders, they were special reasons for imposing the extreme penalty of death. Rau Chima v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1977 SC 2407 : (1977) 4 SCC 518 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 444 : 1977 UJ (SC) 677 : 1977 CrAppR (SC) 354.

[12083] ● Offence perpetrated with attendant aggravating circumstance—Death sentence proper.—Under the new Code life sentence for murder and not death sentence is ordinary rule. For death sentence an additional ground should be assigned. If the offence has been perpetrated with attendant aggravating circumstances, if the perpetrator discloses an extremely depraved state of mind and diabolical trickery accompanied by brutal dealing with the cadaver, death sentence is proper. Joseph v. State of Goa, AIR 1977 SC 1812 : (1977) 3 SCC 280 : 1977 CrLJ 1449.

[12084] ● Cruel and diabolical murder—Death sentence justified.—Where the accused committed nine murders and that too of small children by inflicting more than one injury which is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death and thus exterminated his trusted friend's whole family including his aged parents, his wife and five children for achieving his vicious object of relieving him of his cash and valuables the special reasons mandated under the law are duly recorded by both the High Court and trial Court to justify the imposition of the sentence of death for those cruel and diabolical murders. S.P. Sharma v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1977 SC 2423 : (1977) 4 SCC 322 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 596 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 440 : 1977 UJ (SC) 657 : 1977 CrAppR (SC) 334.

[12085] ● Aggravating circumstance—Death sentence proper.—Where there are aggravating circumstances, death sentence must be awarded. Tarlok Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1977 SC 1747 : (1977) 3 SCC 218 : 1977 (Cri) 490 : 1977 CrLJ 1139 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 335 : 1977 UJ (SC) 517 : 1977 CrAppR (SC) 220 : 1977 A WC 474.

[12086] ● Punishment—Accused beating his wife to death.—Where, the accused, labouring under a hallucination, however unfounded it may be, and beat his wife to death and the corpus delicti was not available so that the Courts might be in a position to know the nature and character of the injuries and to assess that the murder was of such a brutal or dastardly character that only a death sentence could be imposed on him and in the absence of there being anything to show the exact circumstances in which the murder took place, the Supreme Court commuted the sentence of death to imprisonment for life. Ashok Laxman v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1977 SC 1319 : (1977) 2 SCC 103 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 243 : 1977 CrLJ 829 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 158 : 1977 UJ (SC) 442.

[12087] ● Murder—Not pre-meditated sentence of imprisonment for life sufficient.—Where the murder was not pre-meditated, it is sufficient to sentence the accused to imprisonment for life. State of Punjab v. Ramji Das, AIR 1977 SC 1084 : (1977) 1 SCC 197 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 368 : 1977 CrLJ 705 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 198 : 1977 SCCrR 306 : (1977) 2 SCWR 373.

[12088] ● Absence of extenuating circumstances—Not enough for awarding penalty of death.—Mere absence of extenuating circumstances in favour of the accused, is not enough for awarding the extreme penalty of death for an offence under Section 302 after the amendment of 1955 to the CrPC and under the new Code. Asgar v. State of U.P., AIR 1977 SC 2000 : (1977) 3 SCC 283 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 489 : 1977 CrLJ

1604 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 312 : 1977 CrAppR (SC) 279 : 1977 UJ (SC) 484 : 1977 PunLJ (Cri) 274 : 79 Pun LR 716.

[12089] ● No evidence that assault on accused preceded by any quarrel or sudden flare up death sentence justified.—Where the accused put an end to the life of an adversary in a pending case under Section 107, CrPC and there was no evidence that the incident was preceded with any quarrel, sudden flare-up, death sentence is justified. Ramkishan v. State of Punjab, AIR 1977 SC 820 : (1976) 4 SCC 337 : 1977 CrLJ 603 (SC).

[12090] ● Murder committed under grave stress of abject poverty—Sentence of death reduced to imprisonment for life.—Where the accused committed murder of his wife under grave stress of abject poverty for which he was taunted from time to time by his wife and other relatives after having led a happy married life with the deceased for ten years and they had three small children, the sentence of death was reduced to imprisonment for life. Thangiah v. State of T.N., AIR 1977 SC 1777 : 1977 CrLJ 1156 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 435 : 1977 UJ (SC) 604 : 1977 CrAppR (SC) 109.

[12091] ● Murder committed after pre-meditation—Death sentence proper.—Where the accused were absconding and were apprehended after proceedings were taken against them under Section 82, CrPC (Section 87, of the old Code), and one of them was finally arrested on 1-8-1971, the trial Judge convicted them on 12-12-73 and the High Court confirmed the death sentence on 2-9-1974, it cannot be said that there had been any such delay as to justify the lesser sentence. On the other hand, the evidence on record established that the accused had on several occasions tried to take the law into their own hands and that led up to the murders in question which were committed after pre-meditation, with lethal weapons and in broad day light when there was really no occasion for any provocation. Nathu v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1977 SC 2096 : (1977) 4 SCC 293 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 571 : 1977 CrLJ 1578.

[12092] ● Death sentence commuted to life imprisonment validity.—In the instant case the High Court did not differ from the Sessions Judge that it was a planned and cold-blooded murder which led the trial Court to impose the extreme penalty on the accused but commuted the sentence of death to imprisonment for life on the ground that though they killed an innocent person who had done no harm to them and that they did not act out of any personal motive but out of what they conceived to be a public motive, that was not a valid ground in law. The case is therefore, sent back to the High Court to consider whether there was any proper ground for interfering with the sentence awarded by the trial Court. State of Andhra Pradesh v. Intha Ramana Reddy, AIR 1977 SC 708 : (1977) 1 SCC 496 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 130 : 1977 CrLJ 349 : 1976 CrLR (SC) 522 : (1977) 1 SCWR 126 : 1976 UJ (SC) 973 : (1977) 9 Lawyer 39.

[12093] ● Accused committing unprovoked dastardly double murder—Not fit case for reducing sentence of death.—Where the accused committed an unprovoked dastardly double murder not only of his wife but also his father-in-law who was his benefactor and had given a shelter to him in this house, causing as many as 22 injuries on her and 13 on her father, of whom some of them proved fatal, it was not a fit case for reducing the sentence of death. Ramiah Asari v. State of T.N., AIR 1977 SC 2102 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 593 : 1977 CrLJ 1744 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 409 : 1977 UJ (SC) 535 : 1977 CrAppR (SC) 336.

[12095] ● Murder committed with lethal weapons—Death sentence justified.—Where murder was committed with lethal weapons and the accused had tried to take law in their hands several times before death sentence is proper. Nathu Singh v. State of U.P., AIR 1977 SC 2096 : (1977) 4 SCC 293 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 571 : 1977 CrLJ (SC) 1578 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 378.

[12096] ● Double murder—Award of extreme penalty of death proper.—Accused committing double murder on a most brutal and dastardly fashion—betraying depravity of character—He should be awarded extreme penalty of death. Shankaria v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1978 SC 1248 : (1978) 3 SCC 435 : 1978 CrLJ 1251. TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) Ramiah v. State of T.N., AIR 1977 SC 2102 : (1977) 4 SCC 605 (2) : 1977 CrLJ 1744; (2) Ram Chima Chougule v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1977 SC 2407 : (1977) 4 SCC 518 : 1978 CrLJ 14.

[12097] ● Accused exceeding right of private defence.—Where the circumstances showed that the accused exceeded their right of private defence, that could be taken into consideration in extenuation of the extreme penalty. Sabal Singh v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1978 SC 1538 : (1978) 4 SCC 448 : 1978 CrLJ 1610.

[12098] ● Sentence—Extenuating circumstances.—Where the accused was under spectre of sentence of death for over 3 years and 7 months and the evidence also gave indication in that he was probably instigated directly or indirectly by his father. Sadhu Singh v. State of U.P., AIR 1978 SC 1506 : (1978) 4 SCC 428 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 49.

[12099] ● Death sentence proper injury where serious.—Where the injury was serious and given with full force piercing lung and puncturing 2 ventricles death sentence was held proper. AIR 1978 SC 1420 : (1979) 1 SCC 135 : 1978 CrLJ 1413 : 1978 CrLR (SC) 150.

[12100] ● Brutal murder of two persons—Interference with sentence of death.—The only ground taken by the accused on the question of sentence is that he is a poor agriculturist and a wife and five children to support, having regard to the fact that he having had caused brutal murder of two persons, it is not possible to interfere with the death sentence imposed on him. Kuruvi Muthu v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1978 SC 1397 (1398) : (1979) 1 SCC 136 : 1978 SCC (Cri) 578 : 1978 CrLJ 1421 : 1978 CrLR (SC) 148.

[12101] ● Right to life and personal liberty—Reasonableness in procedure.—It is apposite to recollect that meanwhile a seven-member-bench decision of Supreme Court held that procedure by which life and personal liberty can be taken away must not only be by a procedure established by law but also must be reasonable. It held that the concept of reasonableness must be projected in the procedure contemplated by Article 21 having regard to the impact of Article 14 on Article 21. The principle of reasonableness which legally as well as philosophically is an essential element of equality or nonarbitrariness, pervades Article 14 like a brooding omnipresence and the procedure contemplated by Article 21 must answer the test of reasonableness in order to be in conformity with Article 14. It must be right, just and fair and not arbitrary, fanciful or oppressive; otherwise it would be no procedure at all and the requirement of Article 21 would not be satisfied. Maneka Gandhi v. Union of India, AIR 1978 SC 597 : (1978) 1 SCC 248 : (1978) 2 SCR 621.

[12103] ● Counting casualties not main criterion for death sentence.—Counting the casualties is not the main criterion for death sentence. Additional relevant factors for not imposing death sentence indicated. Dalbir Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1979 SC 1384 : (1979) 3 SCC 745 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 848 : 1979 CrLJ 1058.

[12104] ● Imposition of death penalty—Special reasons.—The latest position now is that imposition of death penalty must be for special reasons contemplated by Section 354(3), CrPC (2 of 1974) and that the mere use of adjectives like brutal and cruel does not supply the special reasons contemplated by the above said section for imposition of death penalty. Bishno Deo Shaw v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1979 SC 964 : (1979) 3 SCC 714 : 1979 CrLJ 841.

[12105] ● Hired assassin committing murder for no motivation—Dogmatism in awarding sentence property exercised.—The appellant was a hired assassin. He committed the murder for no motive except to earn a reward. No outweighing circumstance is available to interfere with the discretion concurrently exercised by the Sessions Judge and the High Court in awarding death sentence. Ramesh v. State of U.P., AIR 1979 SC 871 : (1979) 3 SCC 394 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 686 : 1979 CrLJ 902.

[12106] ● Conviction for murder—Sentence compensation to widow of deceased.—The accused was sentenced to death for causing the murder of his father and brother. Supreme Court while confirming the conviction, reduced the sentence to imprisonment for life and also imposed a fine of Rs. 10,000/- which if collected should be paid to the widow and her minor children as it is only fair that proper compensation should be provided for the dependants of the deceased by the accused who has the capacity to pay. Guruswamy v. State of T.N., AIR 1979 SC 1177 : (1979) 3 SCC 797 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 879 : 1979 CrLJ 704 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 95 : (1979) 1 SCWR 87 : 1979 SCCrR 131 : (1979) 2 SCJ 275 : 1979 MLJ (Cri) 636 : (1980) 1 MLJ (SC) 9.

[12107] ● Death sentence or life R.I. Imposition of.—Where the accused is convicted for an offence under Section 302, IPC, the Court should call upon the Public Prosecutor at the stage of Section 235(2) to state to the Court whether the case is one where the accused as a matter of justice should be awarded the extreme penalty of law or the lesser sentence of imprisonment for life. If the Public Prosecutor informs the Court that the State as prosecutor is of the opinion that the case is not one where extreme penalty is called for and if the Sessions Judge agrees with the submission, the matter should end there. If on the other hand the Public Prosecutor states that the case calls for extreme penalty prescribed by law, the Court would be well advised to call upon the Public Prosecutor to state and establish, if necessary, by leading evidence, facts for seeking extreme penalty prescribed by law. Those reasons and the evidence in support of them would provide the special reasons according to the State which impel capital punishment. It would be open to the accused to rebut this evidence either by submissions or if need be, by leading evidence. At that stage the only consideration relevant for the purpose of determining the quantum of punishment, would be the consideration bearing on the question of sentence alone and not on the validity of the verdict of guilty. After considering the submissions and evidence it would be for the Court with its extreme judicious approach and bearing in mind the question that the extreme penalty is more an exception, to determine what would be the appropriate sentence. Rajendra Prasad v. State of U.P., AIR 1979 SC 916 : (1979) 3 SCC 646 : 1979 CrLJ 792.

[12108] ● Procedure for sentencing in Section 354(3) CrPC imposing capital punishment for murder 'special reasons'.—From a reading of Sections 354(3) and 235(2), CrPC and other related provisions of the Code of 1973, it is quite clear that for making the choice of punishment or for ascertaining the existence or absence of "special reasons" in that context, the Court must pay due regard both to the crime and the criminal. What is the relative weight to be given to the aggravating and mitigating factors, depends upon the facts and circumstances of the particular case. More often than not, these two aspects are so intertwined that it is difficult to give a separate treatment to each of them. This is so because 'style is the man'. In many cases, the extremely cruel or beastly manner of the commission of murder is itself a demonstrating index of the depraved character of the perpetrator. That is why it is not desirable to consider the circumstances of the criminal in two separate water-tight compartments. In a sense, to kill is to be cruel and therefore all murders are cruel. But such cruelty may vary in its degree of culpability. And it is only when the culpability assumed the proportion of extreme depravity that "special reasons" can legitimately be said to exist. There are numerous other circumstances justifying the passing of lighter sentence, as they are counter vailing circumstances of aggravation. It cannot be over-emphasized that the scope and concept of mitigating factors in the area of that penalty must receive a liberal and expansive construction by the Courts in accord with the sentencing policy writ large in Section 354(3). Judges should never be bloodthirsty. Hanging of murderers has never been too good for them. It is, therefore, imperative to voice the concern that Courts, aided by the broad illustrative guidelines indicated, will discharge the onerous function with evermore scrupulous care and humane concern, directed along the highroad of legislative policy outlined in Section 354(3), viz., that for persons convicted of murder, life imprisonment is the rule and death sentence an exception. A real and abiding concern for the dignity of human life postulates resistance to taking a life though law's instrumentality. That are ought not to be done save in the rarest of rare cases when the alternative option is unquestionably foreclosed. The Court should not venture to formulate rigid standards in an area in which the Legislature so warily treads. Only broad guidelines as indicated above can be laid down consistent with the policy indicated by the Legislature in Section 354(3). Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1980 SC 898 : (1980) 2 SCC 684 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 580 : 1980 CrLJ 636 : 1980 CrLR (SC) 388.

[12109] ● Mitigating circumstances to be given weight in determination of sentence.—The following mitigating circumstances undoubtedly are relevant circumstances and must be given great weight in the determination of sentence :—

1. That the offence was committed under the influence of extreme mental or emotional disturbance.
2. The age of the accused. If the accused is young or old, he shall not be sentenced to death.
3. The probability that the accused would not commit criminal acts of violence as would constitute a continuing threat to society.
4. The probability that the accused can be reformed and rehabilitated. The State shall by evidence prove that the accused does not satisfy the conditions 3 and 4 above.
5. That in the facts and circumstances of the case the accused believed that he was morally justified in committing the offence.

6. That the accused acted under the duress or domination of another person.

7. That the condition of the accused showed that he was mentally defective and that the said defect impaired his capacity to appreciate the criminality of his conduct. Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1980 SC 898 : (1980) 2 SCC 684 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 580 : 1980 CrLJ 636.

[12110] ● Procedure involving imposition and execution of death sentence not ultra-vires.—After an elaborate analysis the Supreme Court held that the procedure involving imposition and execution of death sentence is not unreasonable and is not ultra vires. Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1980 SC 898 : (1980) 2 SCC 64 : 1980 CrLJ 636.

[12111] ● Death sentence double murder of two children.—It is true that the murder of the two particular children was not preplanned. But that was because the accused did not know that they would hit upon those particular children that evening. What is important is that the accused had made all the preparations for committing the murder of a person or persons whom they would apparently oblige by offering a lift. The plan which they had hatched was that they would offer a lift to some young children, try to extort ransom from their parents by kidnapping them and do the children to death in the event of any impediments arising in the execution of their plan. The murder was not committed on the spur of the moment as a result of some irresistible impulse which can be send to have overtaken the accused at the crucial moment. There was a planned motivation behind the crime though the accused had no personal motive to commit the murder of these two children. Any two children would have been good enough for them. The petitioner was an active participator in the whole episode and but for his willing co-operation, Billa could never have succeeded in his design. In fact, the petitioner was in the company of Billa right from the moment that the children entered their car until they themselves, Ranga and Billa, entered the military compartment and were arrested. In between many atrocities were committed, many falsehoods uttered, many escapades achieved and many an evidence concealed or destroyed. The petitioner's part in carrying out the nefarious plan is no less significant than that of Billa and he is no less guilty than him. There is no room for treating the one differently from the other. They were hand in glove with each other. We, therefore uphold the death sentence imposed upon him. Kuljeet Singh alias Ranga v. Union of India, AIR 1981 SC 1572 (1573, 1574) : (1981) 3 SCC 324 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 726 : 1981 CrLJ 1045 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 328 : (1981) 3 SCR 512 : 1981 UJ (SC) 584.

[12113] ● Murder of young college boy—Sentence of death—Reduction to life imprisonment.—A young college boy was murdered because he was trying to wean away his sister from the influence of the appellant who had set his heart upon her. The appellant was smarting under the insult hurled at him by the deceased, the previous evening. When the appellant proclaimed his determination to marry her the deceased retorted, "you are a man of two paisa's worth. How can you dare to marry my sister". The dispute thus assumed the proportions of a feud over social status, the poor man fretting that the rich man's daughter would not be allowed to marry him for the mere reason that he did not belong to an equal class society. And it is evident that he believed, rightly or wrongly, that Ranjana was no unwilling to take him as a husband. The mental turmoil and the sense of being socially wronged through which the appellant was passing cannot be overlooked while deciding which is the appropriate sentence to pass, the rule being that, for the offence of murder, the normal sentence is the sentence of life imprisonment and not of death. If witnesses on whose evidence the life of an accused hangs in the balance, do not choose to reveal the whole truth, the Court, while dealing with the question of sentence, has to step in interstitially and take into account all reasonable possibilities, having regard to the normal and natural course of human affairs. Since a part of the crucial event has been screened from the Court's scrutiny and the possibility of an altercation between the appellant and the deceased cannot reasonably be excluded, it is unsafe to sentence the appellant to the extreme penalty. Dudh Nath Pandey v. State of U.P., AIR 1981 SC 911 (917) (1981) 2 SCC 166 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 379 : 1981 CrLJ 618 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 353 : (1981) 2 SCR 771.

[12114] ● Murder sentence—Sole-eye witness five year old child of deceased.—Where the conviction of accused was based on the sole eyewitness of five years of age less sentence of imprisonment for life is proper. Suresh v. State of U.P., AIR 1981 SC 1122 : (1981) 2 SCC 569 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 559 : 1981 CrLJ 1122 : 1981 UJ 784.

[12115] ● Less sentence proper—Where accused 17 years of age.—Lesser sentence is proper where the accused was of 17 when he committed the offence. Chekarshwar Nath Jain v. State of U.P., AIR 1981 SC 2009 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 609 : 1981 CrLJ 1690 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 85 : 1981 Supp SCC 11.

[12116] ● Accused in jail for ten long years—Death sentence altered to one of imprisonment for life.—Accused was just about 21 years. Sole eye-witness was a 5 years old son of the deceased, a young woman. Accused, servant of the family of the deceased, probably a sudden impulse of sex or theft made him momentarily insensible. Immediately after the crime, instead of even trying to run away which he could easily have done, he was found sitting in the chowk of the house crying bitterly. The witness was liable to a little tutoring in order to lend coherence and consistency to its disjointed thoughts which tend to stray. Extreme sentence cannot seek its main support from evidence of such kind which, even if true, is not safe enough to act upon for putting out life. Already appellant was in jail for ten long years and probably earned by now, right to be released, after taking into account remissions admissible to him, were he sentenced to life imprisonment. Hence sentence was altered from death to imprisonment for life. Suresh v. State of U.P., AIR 1981 SC 1122 : (1981) 2 SCC 569 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 559 : 1981 CrLJ 746 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 378 : 1981 CurLJ (Cri) 149 : 1981 CrAppR (SC) 278.

[12117] ● Murder committed under sudden impulse in grave fit of rage—Death sentence commuted into imprisonment for life.—In a case of murder of brother's wife and the nephew by the accused, aged about 22 years he was slapped by his brother during a quarrel. Murders were committed under a sudden impulse in a grave fit of rage. Death sentence was commuted to imprisonment for life in the ends of justice. Umilal v. State of M.P., AIR 1981 SC 1710 : (1981) 3 SCC 574 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 760 : 1981 CrLJ 1446 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 228.

[12118] ● High Court in doubt as to whether fatal shot fired by accused—Sentence reduced to life imprisonment.—Injuries found on the deceased showed that two shots were fired at him from two different guns. Evidence was not clear enough to compel the inference that whether the fatal injury was caused to the deceased by accused N. The High Court was in doubt about accused N fired the fatal shot and reduced the sentence from death to imprisonment for life. The reasoning of High Court was correct. Nidha Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1981 SC 376 : 1980 Supp SCC 211 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 962 : 1980 CrLJ 1421.

[12119] ● Murder of young boy—Accused sentenced to imprisonment for life.—When the appellant was not a habitual criminal and he did not commit the crime for any personal gain, the sentence was reduced to life imprisonment. In a case of murder of a young boy the appellant was not a habitual criminal. The circumstances which led to the crime were not likely to recur. The appellant did not commit the crime for any personal gain. Ends of justice will be met by sentencing the appellant to suffer imprisonment for life. Even if Section 433-A is upheld by the Supreme Court, Government will not, save for weighty reason, reduce or commute sentence of the appellant to less than 14 years, since, unquestionably, he had committed a very serious crime. Shida Gouda v. State of Karnataka, AIR 1981 SC 764 : (1981) 1 SCC 164 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 163 : 1981 CrLJ 324 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 112 : 1981 CrAppR (SC) 2 : 1981 Chand CrC 33 (SC) : 1981 MLW (Cri) 35.

[12120] ● Double murder of two young children—Death sentence upheld.—In a case of double murder of two young children committed in a professional manner by the two accused death sentence was upheld. Kuljeet Singh v. Union of India, AIR 1981 SC 1572 : (1981) 3 SCC 324 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 726 : 1981 CrLJ 1045 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 328 : 1981 Cr AppR (SC) 247 : 1981 UJ (SC) 584.

[12121] ● Death sentence—Mitigating circumstances.—Murder of Amin, a Government servant, was committed for effecting sale of lands of the accused in a revenue sale. He performed his ministerial duty and had no personal grudge against the appellant nor had he anything to gain for himself by sale of those lands. Such crimes committed against public servants for reasons arising out of the performance by them of their public duties must be discouraged and put down with a firm hand. Death sentence was confirmed. Gayasi v. State of U.P., AIR 1981 SC 1160 : (1981) 2 SCC 713 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 590 : 1981 CrLJ 883 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 385 : 1981 ALJ 441.

[12122] ● Murder—Terrific—No special reason.—Every murder is terrific. So the fact that murder is terrific has no special reason. Maniappan v. State of T.N., AIR 1981 SC 220 : (1981) 3 SCC 11 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 617 : 1981 CrLJ 726 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 387.

[12123] ● Accused 17 years of age—Death sentence set aside—Sentenced to life imprisonment.—It is clear from the certificate issued by the jail authorities that the accused was only 17 years of age when the offence was committed. Taking into consideration the extreme young age we set aside the sentence of death and sentence him to life imprisonment. Ujjagar Singh v. Union of India, AIR 1981 SC 2009 (1) : 1981 Supp SCC 8 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 606 : 1981 CrLJ 1690 (2) : 1981 CrLR (SC) 515.

[12124] ● Power of president to commute sentence of death—Nature and scope.—Undoubtedly, the President has the power in an appropriate case to commute any sentence imposed by a Court into a lesser sentence and as said by Chief Justice TAFT in James Shewan and Sons v. United States, (1914) 69 LWed 527 the executive clemency exists to afford relief from undue harshness or evident mistake in the operation or enforcement of the criminal law" and that the administration of justice by the Court is not necessarily or certainly considerate of circumstances which may properly mitigate guilt. But the question as to whether the case is appropriate for the exercise of power confirmed by Article 72 depends upon the circumstances and facts of each particular case. In this case not even the most liberal use of (President's) mercy jurisdiction could have persuaded the President to interfere with the sentence of death imposed upon the petitioners. Kuljit Singh alias Ranga v. Lt. Governor of Delhi, AIR 1982 SC 774 (774) : (1982) 1 SCC 417 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 234 : 1982 CrLJ 62 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 59.

[12125] ● Sentence of imprisonment must be deterrent and exemplary.—In a peculiar case, where the Court found that the offence proved did not answer a rarest of rare case entailing death sentence, but at the same time, usual life imprisonment which in practice means not more than 14 years' incarceration in prison was found to be too inadequate and a travesty of justice. The Supreme Court observed that it was a case that lay in the murky area between the sentence of death and of the usual life imprisonment. The accused have betrayed a tendency to settle their score by violence. They have no compunctions in using inhuman methods to achieve their ends. Respect for law and life is alien to them. It will take sufficiently long time to reorient their outlook towards society and its affairs, to instill in them respect for law and life, and social discipline, and to make them repent for the reprehensible crime perpetrated by them. It is also necessary that they are made to suffer for a sufficiently long time to bring home to them and others the unpleasant consequences of their brutal behaviour. At the same time, the relations and sympathisers of the victims and above all the members of the society must feel that justice has been done, that inhuman acts are adequately punished and crimes however audacious and horrendous are not dealt with lightly. The sentence of imprisonment has therefore to be both deterrent and exemplary. It is also necessary to keep such accused away from society for a sufficiently long period so that when they rejoin it, the society does not feel insecure again by their presence amidst it. It is for this reason mere life imprisonment which does not last for more than 14 years in normal cases would not meet the ends of justice. It is necessary that the accused should remain in jail for a sufficiently long period and according to us, that period should not be less than 25 years in any case. State of Maharashtra v. Manohar, 1982 (2) CrLJ 600 (SC).

[12126] ● Murder—Seven years elapsed since imposition of death penalty—Reduced to sentence of life imprisonment.—The accused was convicted on various counts of conspiracy, murder, robbery, abduction, etc., and sentenced to death. Though both the appellants were directly responsible for the murder of one of the victims, they were not the moving spirits of the band of criminals but were really 'junior partners', in the perpetration of the crimes. Their appearance on the scene was itself at a late stage and they were instruments in the hands of and under the domination of their fellow-accused. More than 7 years elapsed since the imposition of death penalty on them. In the circumstances, sentence of imprisonment for life was substituted for them. Kannan v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1982 SC 1192 : (1962) 2 SCC 352 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 430 : 1982 CrLJ 1570.

[12127] ● Accused 76 years—In jail for 19 months—Sentence reduced to period already undergone.—In a murder case the accused about 76 years old was not guilty of any overt act in strangulating the deceased. The accused was in jail for about 19 months. The sentence was reduced to period already undergone to meet the ends of justice. Jora v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1982 SC 64 : (1982) 3 SCC 229 : 1982 CrLJ 999.

[12128] ● Seven years elapsed since imposition of death penalty.—Where more than seven years elapsed since the imposition of death penalty, lesser penalty for life imprisonment was awarded. Kannan v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1982 SC 7192 : 1982 CrLJ 1570 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 258 : 1982 UJ (SC) 425.

[12129] ● Prison authorities to ascertain if death sentence commuted.—Before execution of death sentence, the prison authorities must ascertain personally if the death sentence has been commuted. Harbans Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1982 SC 849 : (1982) 2 SCC 101 : 1983 CrLJ 795 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 27.

[12130] ● Death sentence not to be passed except in rarest of rare cases.—Death sentence should not be passed except in rarest of the rare cases. Applying this principle, death sentence in the instant case was commuted to one for imprisonment for life. Earabhadrappa v. State of Karnataka, AIR 1983 SC 446 : (1983) 1 SCC 330 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 447 : 1983 CrLJ 846 : 1983 CrLR (SC) 268 : 1983 (1) Crimes 784 : 1983 CrAppR (SC) 232 : (1983) 2 KantLJ 1 : 1983 (1) CrLC 550 1983 SCCCrR 251.

[12131] ● Pre-meditated murder of wife and daughter sentence for life imprisonment substituted.—In a case of pre-meditated murders of wife and daughter, there was no justification for murder of daughter. The accused and his wife were frequently quarrelling and accused suspected her chastity. There was nothing to show that there was any basis for suspicion for entertaining the same. However, sexual jealousy and injured vanity often combine together to furnish powerful motive for murder particularly among rustic rural folk to which class the accused belonged. After considering all the circumstances, the Court holds that there are no sufficient grounds for departing from the rule of normal punishment and for imposing sentence of death. Sentence of imprisonment for life is substituted. Amruta v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1983 SC 629 : (1983) 3 SCC 50 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 570 : 1983 CrLJ 1057 : 1983 CrLR (SC) 325 : 1983 MahLR (SC) 78 : 1983 UJ (SC) 570 : 1983 CrAppR (SC) 275 : (1983) 2 SCWR 222.

[12132] ● Death sentence—Commutation of sentence to imprisonment for life.—The accused-petitioners and their co-conspirators got involved in six incidents during the course of which 10 murders and acts of robbery and dacoity were committed and from the record it was clear that each one of the three petitioners was involved in at least 7 murders out of the 10. In these writ petitions a fervent appeal has been made that their death sentences should be commuted to life imprisonment. Having regard to the magnitude, the gruesome nature of the offence and the manner of perpetrating them, this case in all the facts and circumstances should be regarded as falling within the rare of the rarest category and the extreme penalty of death was clearly called for. Any leniency shown in the matter of sentence would not only be misplaced but would certainly give rise to and foster a feeling of private revenge among the people leading to destabilisation of the society. The facts that for 5 years death sentence was hovering over their minds and that two of them had done translation work and wrote books could not be considered, as the petitioners were themselves responsible for the delay by indulging in successive petitions and writing and translating books required a composed mind and concentrated attention. If anything that belied that any specter of death penalty was hovering over their minds during the period they had been in jail. The writ petitions were dismissed. Munawar Harun Shah v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1983 SC 585 : (1983) 3 SCC 354 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 625 : 1983 CrLJ 971.

[12133] ● Extreme penalty of death to be inflicted—When.—The extreme penalty of death need not be inflicted except in gravest cases of extreme culpability;

Before opting for the death penalty the circumstances of the 'offender' also required to be taken into consideration along with the circumstances of the 'crime';

Life imprisonment was the rule and death sentence was an exception. In other words, death sentence should be imposed only when life imprisonment appeared to be an altogether inadequate punishment having regard to the relevant circumstances of the crime, and provided, and only provided, the option to impose sentence of imprisonment for life could not be conscientiously exercised having regard to the nature and circumstances of the crime and all the relevant circumstances;

A balance-sheet of aggravating and mitigating circumstances had to be drawn up and in doing so the mitigating circumstances had to be accorded full weightage and a just balance had to be struck between the aggravating and the mitigating circumstances before the option was exercised.

In order to apply these guidelines, inter alia the following question might be asked and answered :

(a) Was there something uncommon about the crime which rendered sentence of imprisonment for life inadequate and called for a death sentence?

(b) Were the circumstances of the crime such that there was no alternative but to impose death sentence even after according maximum weightage to the mitigating circumstances which spoke in favour of the offender?

If upon taking an overall global view of all the circumstances in the light of the aforesaid propositions and taking into account the answers to the questions posed hereinabove, the circumstances of the case were such that death sentence was warranted, the Court would proceed to do so. Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1983 SC 957 : (1983) 3 SCC 470 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 681 : 1983 CrLJ 1457 : 1983 CrLR (SC) 418 : (1983) 2 Crimes 268.

[12134] ● Multiple murder—Supreme Court declined to interfere.—In a case of multiple murder, motive for murders was gain. As murders were perpetrated in a cruel, callous and fiendish fashion, Supreme Court declined to interfere with sentence of death, though the accused was 22 years of age and case rested upon circumstantial evidence. Javed Ahmed Abdulhamid v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1983 SC 594 : (1983) 3 SCC 39 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 559 : 1983 CrLJ 960 : 1983 CrLR (SC) 324 : 1983 Mah LR (SC) 76 : 1983 UJ (SC) 569 : 1983 MLJ (Cri) 596.

[12135] ● Death sentence—Gruesome murder.—It is true that a period of five years has elapsed since the imposition of death penalty on them. But such lapse of time is not decisive of the matter but would be a factor to be borne in mind. In this case the normal judicial process itself come to or end only on 17th November, 1980 when this Court finally dismissed the Special Leave Petition of the Petitioners against their convictions and sentences. But for the subsequent lapse of time, the petitioners or at least some of them are responsible. Each one of them preferred a review petition against the dismissal of the special leave petition and those review petitions came to be dismissed on 11th February, 1981. Munawar Harun Shah v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1983 SC 585 (586) : (1983) 3 SCC 354 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 625 : 1983 CrLJ 971 : 1983 CrLR (SC) 312.

[12136] ● Accused suspecting chastity of wife—Life imprisonment substituted for sentence of death.—While on the one hand it was clear that the murders were premeditated and there was really no justification whatsoever for the murder, on the other hand, the circumstance was that the accused and the deceased were frequently quarreling and the accused suspected the chastity of his wife. Lesser sentence for life imprisonment will meet the end of justice. Amruta v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1983 SC 629 : (1983) 3 SCC 50 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 570 : 1983 CrLJ 1057 : 1983 UJ 570.

[12137] ● Execution of death sentence by hanging not ultra vires constitution.—The provisions of execution of death sentence by hanging till death is not ultra vires the Constitution. Deena v. Union of India, AIR 1983 SC 1155 : (1983) 4 SCC 645 : 1983 CrLJ 1602.

[12138] ● Instances of bride killing—Deterrent punishment necessary.—Instances of bride killing are alarmingly on the increase. If society should be ridden of this growing evil, it is imperative that whenever dastardly crimes of this nature were detected and the offence brought home to the accused, the Courts should deal with the offender most ruthlessly and impose deterrent punishment. Virbhan Singh v. State of U.P., AIR 1983 SC 1002 : (1983) 4 SCC 197 : 1983 CrLJ 1635 : (1983) 2 Crimes 376.

[12139] ● Appellant assaulted deceased with blunt side of gandasa—Not fit case to impose extreme penalty of death.—Although the fact that he was released on parole only a month before the present occurrence is admitted, in the facts and circumstances of this case the extreme penalty of death is not called for. To begin with the father of the appellant had executed a power of attorney which was sought to be assailed by the two brothers living separately, and this was the immediate cause of the assault. Secondly it is the admitted case of the prosecution that the appellant assaulted the deceased with the blunt side of the gandasa. Having regard to these circumstances it cannot be said that it is a fit case in which the extreme penalty of death should be given under Section 302, IPC. Surjit Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1983 SC 839 : (1983) 3 SCC 316 : 1983 CrLJ 1112.

[12140] ● Substitution of death sentence by sentence of life imprisonment cannot follow by application of two years formula.—A convict is undoubtedly entitled to pursue all remedies lawfully open to him to get rid of the sentence of death imposed upon him and indeed, there is no one, be he blind, lame, starving or suffering from a terminal illness, who do not want to live. The Vinoba Bhave, who undertook the "Prayopaveshana" do not belong to the world of ordinary mortals. Therefore, it is understandable that a convict sentenced to death would take recourse to every remedy which is available to him under the law to ask for the commutation of his sentence, even after the death sentence was finally confirmed by the Supreme Court by dismissing his Special Leave Petition or Appeal. But, it is, at least, relevant to consider whether the delay in the execution of the death sentence is attributable to the fact that he had resorted to a series of untenable proceedings which had the effect of defeating the ends of justice. It is not uncommon that a series of review petitions and writ petitions are filed in the Supreme Court to challenge judgments and orders which had assumed finality, without any seeming justification. Stay orders obtained in those proceedings and then, at the end of it all, came the argument that there had been prolonged delay in implementing the judgment or order. The Court called upon to vacate a death sentence on the ground of delay caused in executing that sentence should find why the delay was caused and who was responsible for it. If that is not done, the law laid down by the Supreme Court would become an object of ridicule by permitting a person to defeat it by resorting to frivolous proceedings in order to delay its implementation. And then, the rule of two years would become a handy tool for defeating justice. The death sentence should not, as far as possible, be imposed. But in that rare and exceptional class of cases wherein that sentence is upheld by the Supreme Court, the judgment or order of the Supreme Court ought not to be allowed by applying any rule of thumb. Finally, and that is no less important, the nature of the offence, the diverse circumstances attendant upon it, its impact upon the contemporary society and the question whether the motivation and pattern of the crime are such as are likely to lead to its repetition, if the death sentence was vacated, are matters which should enter into the verdict as to whether the sentence should be vacated for the reason that its execution was delayed. The substitution of the death sentence by a sentence of life imprisonment cannot follow by the application of the two years' formula, as a matter of "quod errat demonstrandum". Sher Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1983 SC 465 : (1983) 2 SCC 344 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 461 : 1983 CrLJ 803 : 1983 CrLR (SC) 247.

[12141] ● Delay in execution of sentence exceeding two years not by itself entitle person under sentence of death to demand questing sentence and converting it into sentence of life imprisonment.—An important question that arose for consideration in these two writ petitions was whether a delay exceeding two years in the execution of a sentence of death should be considered sufficient for setting aside that sentence. Reliance was placed on behalf of the petitioners upon a decision of the Supreme Court in T.V. Vatheeswaran v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1983 SC 361 (2) : 1983 CrLJ 481 : 1983 (1) Scale 115, and contended that since more than two years had passed since the petitioners were sentenced to death by the Trial Court, they were entitled to demand that the said sentence should be quashed and substituted by the sentence of life imprisonment. A prisoner who had experienced living death for years on end is entitled to invoke the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court for examining the question whether, after all the agony and torment he had been subjected to, it is just and fair to allow the sentence of death to be executed. That is the true implication of Article 21 of the Constitution and to that extent the Supreme Court is in broad and respectful agreement with the learned brethren in T.V. Vatheeswaran v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1983 SC 361, in their visualization of the meaning of that Article. The horizons of Article 21 are even widening and the final word on its conspectus should never have been said. So long as life lasts, so long shall it be the duty and the endeavour of the Supreme Court to give to the provisions of the Constitution a meaning which would prevent human suffering and degradation. Therefore, Article 21 is as much relevant at the stage of execution of the death sentence as it is in the interregnum between the imposition of that sentence and its execution. The essence of the matter is that all procedure, no matter what the stage, should be fair, just and reasonable. It is well-established that a prisoner cannot be tortured or subjected to unfair or inhuman treatment. It is a logical extension of the self-same principle that the death sentence, even if justifiably imposed, cannot be executed if supervening events made its execution harsh, unjust or unfair. Article 21 stood like a sentinel over human misery, degradation and oppression. Its voice is the voice of justice and fairplay. That voice can never be challenged on the ground that the time to heed to its imperatives is long since past in the story of a trial. It reverberated through all stages—the trial, the sentence, the incarceration and finally, the execution of the sentence. Sher Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1983 SC 465 : (1983) 2 SCC 344 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 461 : 1983 CrLJ 803 : 1983 CrLR (SC) 247 : (1983) 1 Crimes 1017 : 1983 SCC (Cri) R 213 : (1983) 1 SCJ 318 : (1983) 2 MLJ (SC) 46 : 1983 MLJ (Cri) 545 : 1983 (2) ChandLR (Cri) 491 : 1983 CrAppR (SC) 430.

[12142] ● Prolonged delay in execution of death sentence.—Prolonged delay in the execution of a death sentence is unquestionably an important consideration for determining whether the sentence should be allowed to be executed. But no hard and fast rule could be laid down as was done by the Bench in Vatheeswaran's case that "delay exceeding two years in the execution of a sentence of death should be considered sufficient to entitle the person under sentence of death to invoke Article 21 and demand the quashing of the sentence of death". That period of two years purports to have been fixed in that case after making "all reasonable allowance for the time necessary for appeal and consideration of reprieve". It is impossible to agree with that part of the judgment. One had only to turn to the statistics of the disposal of cases in the High Court and the Supreme Court to appreciate that a period far exceeding two years is generally taken by those Courts together for the disposal of matters involving even the death sentence. Very often, four or five years elapsed between the imposition of death sentence by the Sessions Court and the disposal of the Special Leave Petition or an Appeal by the Supreme Court in that matter. That was apart from the time which the President or the Governor, as the case might be, took to consider petitions filed under Article 72 or Article 161 of the Constitution or the time which the Government took to dispose of application filed under Sections 432 and 433, CrPC. Therefore, the fixation of the time limit of two years does not seem to the Court to accord with the common experience of the time normally consumed by the litigative process and the proceedings before the executive. Apart from the fact that the rule of two years runs in the teeth of common experience as regards the time generally occupied by proceedings in the High Court, the Supreme Court and before the executive authorities, no absolute or unqualified rule could be laid down that in every case in which there was a long delay in the execution of death sentence, the sentence should be substituted by the sentence of life imprisonment. There are several other factors which should be taken into account while considering the question as to whether the death sentence should be vacated. In this case under Sections 120-B, 302 and 201, IPC, the Sessions Judge awarded sentence of death to Saxena for the offence of murder. On appeal filed by him and in the confirmation proceedings, two Judges who heard the same differed on the point of guilt. On a reference to a third Judge, the conviction of Saxena under Section 302 was upheld but death sentence was reduced to life imprisonment. A Special Leave petition was filed by the State of U.P. contending that Saxena should be sentenced to death. If the Judge who had held that Saxena was not guilty of murder had taken a more pragmatic view of the facts, he would not have persuaded himself to the view that the deceased (wife of Saxena) might have committed suicide by hanging herself. Presumably, the death sentence so justifiably imposed by the Sessions Judge on Saxena was reduced to life imprisonment for the reason that two learned Judges differed on the question as to the guilt of the accused. If the High Court were to uphold the sentence of death. This Court would not have interfered with that sentence. But it was faced with a situation in which the High Court had reduced the sentence of death to imprisonment for life. So this Court feels that it was not called upon to restore the sentence of death. V.K. Saxena (Dr.) v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1984 SC 49 : (1983) 4 SCC 519 : 1983 CrLJ 1731 : 1983 CrLR (SC) 461.

[12143] ● Death sentence—Prolonged delay in execution exceeding two years effect.—Making all reasonable allowance for the time necessary for appeal and consideration of reprieve, delay exceeding 2 years in the execution of a sentence of death should be considered sufficient to entitle the person under sentence of death to invoke Articles 21 and demand the quashing of the sentence of death. The appropriate relief in such a case was to vacate the sentence of death and substitute the sentence of imprisonment for life. Articles 14, 19 and 21 of the Constitution of India were not mutually exclusive. They sustained, strengthened and nourished each other. They were available to prisoners as well as free men. Prison walls did not keep out Fundamental Rights. The dehumanising factor of prolonged delay in the execution of a sentence of death had the constitutional implication of depriving a person of his life in an unjust, unfair and unreasonable way as to offend the constitutional guarantee that no person should be deprived of his life or personal liberty except according to procedure established by law. 'Procedure established by law' did not end with the pronouncement of sentence; it could include the carrying out of sentence.

Note: The above case was decided by two Judges of the Supreme Court, one of them being CHINNAPPA REDDY, J., who delivered the judgment. But in Sher Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1983 SC 465, decided by a Bench of three Judges, overruled the above case. Again another Division Bench comprising CHINNAPPA REDDY, J., and another held that there is no question of one Division Bench of the same Court unless it be a Full Bench or a Constitution Bench. Javed Ahmed v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1985 SC 231 : (1985) 1 SCC 275 : 1984 CrLJ 1909. TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) *T.V. [12144] ● Crime committed out of poverty—Imprisonment for life awarded.—Accused killed his ailing wife as he could not provide money for her operation and also killed his two children as they would be neglected after their mother's death. Murder of near and dear ones including two innocent kids is gruesome. He did not commit their murder actuated by any lust, sense of vengeance or for gain. Plight of an economic have-not sometimes becomes so tragic that the only escape route is crime. Accused committed the murders because in his utter helplessness he could not find few chips to help his ailing wife and he saw the escape route by putting an end to their lives. This one circumstance is of such an overwhelming character that even though the crime is detestable, capital punishment should not be imposed. State of Uttar Pradesh v. M.K. Anthony, AIR 1985 SC 48 : (1985) 1 SCC 505 : 1985 CrLJ 493 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 41 : (1985) 1 RCCrR 87 : 1985 CurCrJ (SC) 18.

[12145] ● Murder—Death sentence—Commutation of.—In a murder case the accused was sentenced to death. Where there was clear evidence that the appellant and others were armed with guns and they participated in the murder of the deceased either by presence or by committing overt acts to shooting and that the appellant took a leading part in entering the house and aided and assisted others in murdering the six persons in the house, the conviction of the appellant under Sections 302 and 34, IPC, cannot be interfered with. There does not seem to be any reason why any leniency should be shown to the appellant in the question of sentence. This is most cruel, heinous and dastardly murder and there is no extenuating circumstances for reducing the sentence of death to imprisonment for life. Lok Pal Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1985 SC 891 : 1985 Supp SCC 76 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 400 : 1985 CrLJ 1134 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 189 : 1985 CrAppR (SC) 129 : (1985) 2 Rec CrR 82.

[12146] ● Accused attempting to attract ransom even after killing boy—Death sentence confirmed.—In the instant case, the accused was a professional child lifter who attempted to extract ransom after murdering the child inducing the father to believe that the child was alive. It was a rarest of rare case justifying death sentence. Henry Westmuller v. State of Assam, AIR 1985 SC 823 : (1985) 3 SCC 291 : 1985 CrLJ 1079.

[12147] ● Gruesome and cold blooded murder—Occurrence taking place over decade ago—Accused to undergo imprisonment for life.—Where the murder was gruesome and cold-blooded, the accused were convicted under Sections 302/34 and sentenced to death by the trial Court but the High Court in appeal set aside the same and acquitted them. While affirming the conviction in special leave appeal, the Supreme Court sentenced the accused to undergo imprisonment for life since the occurrence had taken place over a decade ago. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Lalloo, AIR 1986 SC 576 : 1985 SCC (Supp) 379 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 478 : 1986 CrLJ 546 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 437 : 1985 SCCrR 370 : 1985 CrAppR (SC) 253 : (1985) 2 Crimes 708 : 1986 ALJ 275 : (1986) 1 Supreme 80.

[12148] ● Bride burning—Imprisonment for life.—In this case of bride burning, the trial Court thought it fit to impose the punishment of death. But the High Court acquitted the respondents. In a suitable case of bride burning, death sentence may not be improper. But in the facts of this case and particularly on account of the acquittal by the High Court and almost two years have elapsed since then, it would not be proper to restore the death sentence as a necessary corollary to the finding of guilt. Respondents are accordingly sentenced to imprisonment for life. State (Delhi Administration) v. Laxman Kumar, AIR 1986 SC 250 : (1985) 4 SCC 476 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 2 : 1988 (1) CrLJ 155 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 501 : 1986 SCCrR 30 : (1985) 2 Crimes 758 : 1985 CrAppR (SC) 304 : (1986) 1 Supreme 1 : (1986) 1 Cr LC 149 : (1986) 1 ACrLR 111 : 1986 MLJ(Cri) 86.

[12149] ● Murder—Death sentence—Interference.—Where the accused, father and son, murdered four members of a family and their neighbours who intervened merely because the daughter of that person married a harijan and the accused were sentenced to death, the Supreme Court refused to interfere with the sentence, observing that it would be a mockery of justice to permit the accused to escape the extreme penalty of law and that to give the lesser punishment would be to render the justicing system of the country suspect and the common man would lose faith in Courts. Mahesh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1987 SC 1346 : (1987) 3 SCC 80 : 1987 CrLJ 1073 : 1987 Raj LR 213 : (1987) 1 (1) LJ Rep 574.

[12151] ● Death sentence—Murder committed with extreme brutality.—The appellants in this case were real brothers and were sentenced to death under Section 302 read with Section 149, IPC, for having committed the brutal murders of their two nieces aged 14 and 20 years and under Section 307 read with Section 149 also. Their convictions were not challenged but submissions were made mainly on the question of sentence. The High Court observed that on a careful consideration of the entire material, the facts and circumstances and the applicable law, it was satisfied that this was one of the rarest of the rare cases where death penalty was the only appropriate sentence which ought to be imposed on them. The two appellants were guilty of a heinous crime out of greed and personal vengeance and deserved the extreme penalty. This case fell within the test 'rarest of the rare cases' as laid down by this Court in Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1980 SC 898, as elaborated in the latter case of Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1983 SC 957. It also observed that the punishment should fit the crime. These were cold-blooded brutal murders in that the two innocent girls lost their lives. The extreme brutality with which the appellants acted shocked the judicial conscience. Failure to impose a death sentence in such grave cases where it is a crime against the society particularly in cases of murders committed with extreme brutality would bring to naught the sentence of death provided by Section 302 of the Penal Code. It was the duty of the Court to impose a proper punishment depending upon the degree of criminality and desirability to impose such punishment. The only punishment which the appellants deserved for having committed a reprehensible and gruesome murders of the two innocent girls to wreak their personal vengeance over the dispute they had with regard to their property with the girls' mother was nothing but death. As a measure of social necessity and also as a means of deterring other potential offenders, sentence of death on the two appellants was confirmed. Asharfi Lal & Sons v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1987 SC 1721 : (1987) 3 SCC 224 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 470 : 1987 CrLJ 1885 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 331 : (1987) 1 (1) IJ Rep 636 : (1987) 2 SCJ 489 : (1987) 2 UJ (SC) 152 : 1987 All CrC 342.

[12152] ● Death sentence conversion into life imprisonment.—In this case the evidence does not clearly indicate exact manner in which the murder was committed. It is note-worthy that Appellant 1 had not taken with him any weapon for assaulting the deceased but used two stitchers lying in the Bank premises, indicating that the murder was not pre-planned. Looking to the nature of the weapon used, it seems to us that the accused acted under a momentary impulse. In the circumstances we direct that the death sentence should be converted into one for life imprisonment. Laxmi Raj Shetty v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1988 SC 1274 : (1988) 3 SCC 319 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 633 (662) : 1988 CrLJ 1783 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 305 : JT 1988 (2) SC 180 : (1988) 2 Crimes 107.

[12153] ● Death sentence conversion into life imprisonment.—Where the victim, first wife of a doctor had illicit relationship with accused, a leprosy Inspector under the doctor and doctor's daughter discovered once her mother in compromising position with the accused and threatened to disclose it to her father and since then the victim gave up the amorous relationship with accused; one day ignited by a late night movie showing murder of four women, the accused rushed to her house and murdered the victim, and grievously injured her daughter. Death sentence is converted to life imprisonment. Moorthy v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1988 SC 1245 : (1988) 3 SCC 207 : 1988 CrLJ 1773.

[12154] ● Life imprisonment not death sentence.—As observed in State (Delhi Admn.) v. Lakshman Kumar, AIR 1986 SC 250, though we agree that in the case of bride burning, death sentence may not be improper, the persons who perpetrate such barbaric crime, without any human consideration, must be given extreme penalty. The appellant was acquitted by the trial Court in 1977 where as the High Court reversed her acquittal and gave the extreme penalty in 1985. When there are two opinions as to the guilt of the accused, by the two Courts, ordinarily the proper sentence would be not death but imprisonment for life. Apart from that, there is no direct evidence that the appellant had sprinkled kerosene on the deceased and lighted fire on her. There must have been other persons also who conspired to murder her and committed it but they are not before the Court. It is apparent from the judgment of the High Court that the decision to award death sentence is more out of anger than on reasons. The judicial discretion should not be allowed to be swayed by emotions and indignation. Having regard to all the facts and circumstances of the case, this is not a fit case for awarding the death sentence. The same is set aside and she is sentenced to imprisonment for life. Lichhamadevi v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1988 SC 1785 : (1988) 4 SCC 456 : 1988 CrLJ 1812 : JT 1988 (4) SC 42 : 1988 (3) Crimes 1 : (1988) 2 SCJ 637.

[12155] ● Brutal killing—Death sentence—Award of.—Where the accused was keen to grab the property and in pursuit of that motive they attacked the uncle and his family and killed all the members of the family eliminating thereby every one who could claim any share in the property, the attack was brutal and gave repeated blows on a young girl, his own uncle's daughter, with determination that she might not escape, the manner in which the two persons were done to death brutally deserved the awarding of the death sentence to the accused. Darshan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1988 SC 747 : (1988) 1 SCC 618 : 1988 CrLJ 909 : JT 1988 (1) SC 219.

[12156] ● Death sentence—Substitution by life imprisonment.—He also invites us to consider the circumstances that the first petitioner is now aged 69 years while the second petitioner is the father of three very young children we also notice that while both the petitioners are undoubtedly guilty of the offence of murder, the record does not disclose the degree of their culpability. We have nothing to indicate what part was played by each of the petitioners in the commission of the offence. Taking an overall view of all the circumstances we think that the safer course is to set aside the sentence of death and substitute in its place the sentence of imprisonment for life on both petitioners. Chandra Nath Banik v. State of West Bengal, 1988 SCC (Cri) 105 (105, 106) : 1987 Supp SCC 468.

[12157] ● Award of death sentence not inappropriate.—Where in a murder case the approver was related in equal degrees to the accused and also the deceased victim and gave a detailed version of the incident including his own participation in the commission of the crime and the Courts below accepted him as a truthful witness and found that there was no reason for the approver to implicate the accused on false charges and there was evidence about the presence of the accused along with the approver in the house of the deceased and the weapons of the crime were recovered at the instance of the accused, the said evidences, if taken together lent re-assurance by way of corroboration to the evidence of the approver. As the manner in which the entire family was eliminated indicated that the offence was deliberate, diabolical, pre-determined, cold-blooded and absolutely devilish and dastardly and the victims were innocent children done to death with lethal weapons when they were fast asleep, the sentence of death awarded cannot be said to be inappropriate. Ranjeet Singh v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1988 SC 672 : (1988) 1 SCC 633 : 1988 CrLJ 845.

[12158] ● Death penalty—Just and proper.—The person killed is no less than the Prime Minister of India who was the elected leader of the people. In our country we have adopted and accepted a system wherein change of the leader is permissible by a ballot and not by bullet. The act of the accused not only took away the life of a popular leader but also undermined our system which has been working so well for the last 40 years. There is yet another serious consideration. Beant Singh and Satwant Singh were persons posted on the security duty of the Prime Minister to protect her from any intruder or from any attack from outside and therefore if they themselves resorted to this kind of offence, there appears to be no reason or no mitigating circumstance for consideration on the question of sentence. Additionally, an unarmed lady was attacked by these two persons with a series of bullets and a number of them entered her body. The manner in which mercilessly she was attacked by these two persons on whom the confidence was reposed to give her protection repels any consideration of reduction of sentence. In this view of the matter, even the conspirator who inspired the persons who actually acted does not deserve any leniency in the matter of sentence. The sentence awarded by the trial Court and maintained by the High Court appears to be just and proper. (Per OZA, J.) Kehar Singh v. State (Delhi Administration), AIR 1988 SC 1883 : (1988) 3 SCC 609 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 711 : 1989 CrLJ 1 : (1988) 3 Crimes 209.

[12159] ● Rarest of rare cases—Penalty of death—Proper.—It is a gruesome murder committed by the accused who was employed as security guard to protect the Prime Minister. It is one of the rarest of rare cases in which extreme penalty of death is called for—(Per OZA, J.) Kehar Singh v. State (Delhi Administration), AIR 1988 SC 1883 : (1988) 3 SCC 609 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 711 : 1989 CrLJ 1.

[12160] ● Foul and senseless assassination—Death penalty proper.—The crime charged is not simply the murdering of a human being, but it is the crime of assassination of the duly elected Prime Minister of the country. The motive for the crime was not personal, but the consequences of the action taken by the Government in the exercise of constitutional powers and duties. In our democratic republic, if the Government becomes subversive of the purpose of its creation, the people will have the right and duty to change it by their irresistible power of ballot and have the Government of their own choice wisely administered. But no person who is duly constituted shall be eliminated by privy to conspiracies. Indian citizens are committed to the Constitution. They have faith in the ballot box. They have confidence in the democratic institutions and respect for constitutional authorities. The "Bule Star Operation" was not directed to cause damage to Akal Takht. Nor was it intended to hurt the religious feelings of Sikhs. The decision was taken by the responsible and responsive Government in the national interest. The Prime Minister was, however, made the target for the consequences of the decision. The security guards who were duty bound to protect the Prime Minister at the cost of their lives, themselves became the assassins. Incredible but true. All values and all ideals in life; all norms and obligations are thrown to the winds. It is betrayal of the worst order. It is the most foul and senseless assassination. The preparations for and the execution of this egregious crime do deserve the dread sentence of the law—(Per K. JAGANATHA SHETTY, J.) Kehar Singh v. State (Delhi Administration), AIR 1988 SC 1883 : (1988) 3 SCC 609 : 1989 CrLJ 1.

[12161] ● Death sentence substituted by sentence of life imprisoners.—The deceased was a Police Constable and was murdered while on duty. However provocative the behavior of the appellants may have been towards the members of the Naicker community, the incident had come to an end after PW 2 had floored Appellant 1 and the appellants had thereafter left the place of occurrence albeit vowing revenge on a future occasion. The whole episode was over and could have been forgotten as there was no immediate danger of retaliation by the appellants and consequently there was no need for their arrest. No report was made against the appellants for their provocative behaviour and no case was registered against them for the commission of any cognizable offence. The deceased acted over-zealously and attempted to apprehend the appellants. As the earlier incident had passed off, the appellants were perhaps unable to fathom the reasons for their attempted arrest and, therefore, tried to wriggle out from the clutches of the deceased by the use of force. Since the appellants felt that they were being unjustly treated by the deceased, they in order to free themselves attacked the deceased and caused the injuries. It cannot be said that the attack was pre-planned one. It was rather sudden and actuated by a desire to free themselves. It, therefore, follows that the murder cannot be said to belong to the rarest of rare category warranting the sentence of death. Anguswamy v. State of Tamil Nadu, (1989) 3 SCC 33 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 481 (485) : JT 1989 (2) SC 184.

[12162] ● Death sentence converted to life imprisonment.—In this case of murder, the High Court confirmed the sentence of death on three of the appellants and the sentence of imprisonment for life on 16 others while acquitting 13 other accused. If the case of the rest of the appellants is not considered as "rarest of the rare" case within the parameters of the decision of this Court in Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1980 SC 898, the case of the three appellants sentenced to death cannot be brought under the category of "rarest of rare" case particularly having regard to the facts of the case. A charge of conspiracy was framed against all the appellants, but they have all been exonerated. Further, the evidence connecting each of the three appellants with the death of each of the deceased is at variance inter se. Hence the appropriate sentence to impose would be the sentence of imprisonment for life and accordingly the sentence of death on those appellants is converted into a sentence of life imprisonment. Kannan v. State of T.N., AIR 1989 SC 396 : 1989 Supp (1) SCC 81 : 1989 CrLJ 825 : (1988) 3 Crimes 882.

[12163] ● Case not one of rarest of rare cases.—On facts, this case is not one of the rarest of rare cases.

In order that the sentences may be properly graded to fit the degree of gravity of each case, it is necessary that the maximum sentence prescribed by law should, as observed in Bachan Singh's case (AIR 1980 SC 898), be reserved for the rarest of rare cases which are of an exceptional nature. Sentences of severity are imposed to reflect the seriousness of the crime, to promote respect for the law, to provide just punishment for the offence, to afford adequate deterrent to criminal conduct and to protect the community from further similar conduct. It serves a three-fold purpose : (i) punitive, (ii) deterrent and (iii) protective. That is why this Court in Bachan Singh's case observed that when the question of choice of sentence is under consideration the Court must not only look to the crime and the victim but also the circumstances of the criminal and the impact of the crime on the community. Unless the nature of the crime and the circumstances of the offender reveal that the criminal is a menace to the society and the sentence of life imprisonment would be altogether inadequate, the Court should ordinarily impose the lesser punishment and not the extreme punishment of death which should be reserved for exceptional cases only. In the subsequent decision of Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1983 S

957, this Court, after culling out the guidelines laid down in Bachan Singh's case, observed that only in those exceptional cases in which the crime is so brutal, diabolical and revolting as to shock the collective conscience of the community, would it be permissible to award the death sentence. Allauddin Mian v. State of Bihar, AIR 1989 SC 1456 : (1989) 3 SCC 5 : 1989 CrLJ 1466.

[12164] ● Killing not for gain—Death sentence—Converted to life imprisonment.—In the present case, unfortunately the material for choice of sentence is scanty. The motive for the crime is obscure, the one stated, namely, the quarrel between two infants of both sides, does not seem to be correct. The killings were not for gain. The charge shows that the target was PW 6, the father, and not the two infants. The killing of the two infants was not in the contemplation of any of the accused. Both the girls were the victims of the offenders' ire resulting from frustration at the escape of their target. There is nothing so uncommon about the crime as to make the case an exceptional one. The mere fact that infants are killed, without more, is not sufficient to bring the case within the category of "the rarest of rare" cases. The extreme punishment of death on A-1 and A-2 for killing the two infants is not warranted and is converted into imprisonment for life. Allauddin Mian v. State of Bihar, AIR 1989 SC 1456 : (1989) 3 SCC 5 : 1989 CrLJ 1466.

[12165] ● Delay in execution of death sentence.—Delay in execution of death sentence—Violation of Article 21 of Constitution of India—Death sentence converted to life imprisonment.

This is a two-member Bench decision of Supreme Court which distinguish the 5-member Bench decision. Madhu Mehta v. Union of India, AIR 1989 SC 2299 : (1989) 4 SCC 62. TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) Triveniben v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1989 SC 1335 : (1989) 1 SCC 678 : 1990 CrLJ 1810.

[12166] ● Death sentence—Delay in execution of.—Undue delay in execution of death sentence would no proprio vigore entitle the convict to acquittal or commutation of death sentence to imprisonment for life. But it will only entitle the convict to approach the Supreme Court who will examine the nature of the delay caused and the circumstances ensued after the confirmation of the death sentence. The only delay which will be material for consideration would be the delay in disposal of the mercy petition or the delays occurring at the instance of the executives. There is no fixed period (2 years rule laid down in AIR 1983 SC 361 Overruled) after which the sentence of death would inexecutable Triveniben v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1989 SC 1335 : (1989) 1 SCC 678 : 1990 CrLJ 1810.

Note : But see, Madhu Mehta v. Union of India, AIR 1989 SC 2259 : (1989) 4 SCC 578 where this decision Triveniben was distinguished.

[12167] ● Court to give special reason when extreme penalty inflicted.—In ultimate analysis of the circumstances in which the extreme penalty should be inflicted cannot be enumerated in view of complex situation in society and the possibilities in which the offence could be committed and in this context in ultimate analysis the Legislature therefore was right in leaving it to the discretion of the judicial decision as to what should be the sentence in particular circumstances of the case. But the Legislature has put a further rider that when the extreme penalty is inflicted it is necessary for the Court to give special reasons thereof. State of Uttar Pradesh, Triveniben v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1989 SC 1335 : (1989) 1 SCC 678 : 1990 CrLJ 1810.

[12168] ● Murder—Imposition of death penalty—Permissibility.—Section 302, IPC casts a heavy duty on the Court to choose between death and imprisonment for life. The Court must show a high degree of concern and sensitiveness in the choice of sentence. In our justice delivery system several difficult decisions are left to the presiding officers, sometimes without providing the scales or the weights for the same. In cases of murder, however, since the choice is between capital punishment and life imprisonment the legislature has provided a guideline in the form of sub-section (3) of Section 354, CrPC. This provision makes it obligatory to assign reasons in support of the sentence awarded to the convict and further ordains that in case the Judge awards the death penalty, "special reasons" for such sentence shall be stated in the judgment. When the law casts a duty on the Judge to state reasons it follows that he is under a legal obligation to explain his choice of the sentence. The existence of the 'special reasons clause' in the above provision implies that the Court can in fit cases impose the extreme penalty of death which negatives the contention that there can never be a valid reason to visit an offender with the death penalty, no matter how cruel gruesome or shocking the crime may be. Allauddin Mian v. State of Bihar, AIR 1989 SC 1456 : (1989) 3 SCC 5 : 1989 CrLJ 1466 : 1989 CrLJ 1466.

[12169] ● Death sentence—Special reasons clause in Section 354, CrPC sufficient safeguard against arbitrary imposition of.—While rejecting the demand to the protagonist of the reformatory theory for the abolition of the death penalty, the legislature in its wisdom thought that the 'special reasons clause' should be sufficient safeguard against arbitrary imposition of the extreme penalty. Where a sentence of severity is imposed, it is imperative that the Judge should indicate the basis upon which he considers a sentence of that magnitude justified. Unless there are special reasons, special to the facts of the particular case, which can be catalogued as justifying a severe punishment the Judge would not award the death sentence. If a Judge is unable to explain with reasonable accuracy the basis for selecting the higher of the two sentence his choice should fall on the lower sentence. In all such cases, the law casts an obligation on the Judge to make his choice after carefully examining the pros and cons of each case. It must at once be conceded that offenders of some particularly grossly brutal crimes which send tremors in the community have to be firmly dealt with to protect the community have from the perpetrators of such crimes. Where the incidence of a certain crime is rapidly growing and is assuming menacing proportions, for example, acid pouring or bride burning, it may be necessary for the Courts to award exemplary punishments to protect the community and to deter others from committing such crimes. Since the legislature in its wisdom, thought that in some rare cases it may still be necessary to impose the extreme punishment of death to deter others and to protect the society and in a given case the country, it left the choice of sentence to the judiciary with the rider that the Judge may visit the convict with the extreme punishment provided there exist special reasons for so doing. In the face of this statutory provision which is consistent with Article 21 of the Constitution which enjoins that the personal liberty or life of an individual shall not be taken except according to the procedure established by law, this Court is unable to countenance counsel's extreme submission of death in no case. Allauddin Mian v. State of Bihar, AIR 1989 SC 1456 : (1989) 3 SCC 5 : 1989 CrLJ 1466 : 1989 CrLJ 1466.

[12170] ● Choice of punishment left to the discretion of Judge.—Even a casual glance at the provisions of the Penal Code will show that the punishments have been carefully graded corresponding with the gravity of offences; in grave wrongs the punishments prescribed are strict whereas for minor offences leniency is shown. Here again there is considerable room for manoeuvre because the choice of the punishment is left to the discretion of the Judge with only the outer limits stated. There are only a few cases where a minimum punishment is prescribed. Allauddin Mian v. State of Bihar, AIR 1989 SC 1456 : (1989) 3 SCC 5 : 1989 CrLJ 1466 : 1989 CrLJ 1466.

[12171] ● Death Sentence converted to life imprisonment.—In this case, out of the 31 appellants convicted for murder under Section 302, read with Section 34/149, IPC, three alone were sentenced to death while the rest were sentenced to imprisonment for life. If the cases of the 28 appellants are not considered as "rarest of the rare" case within the parameters of the decision in Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1980 SC 898 : 1980 CrLJ 636, the case of these three appellants cannot be brought under the category of "rarest of rare" case particularly having regard to the facts of this case. A charge of conspiracy was framed against all the appellants but all of them have been exonerated of the said charge. Hence the sentence of death has been converted into one of imprisonment for life for those three appellants also. Kannan v. State of T.N., AIR 1989 SC 396 : (1989) Supp (1) SCC 81 : 1989 CrLJ 825 : (1988) 3 Crimes 882.

[12172] ● Death sentence—Inordinate delay in execution.—As between funeral fire and mental worry, it is the latter which is more devastating, for, funeral burns only the dead body while the mental worry burns the living one. The mental torment may become acute when the Judicial verdict is finally set against the accused. Earlier to it there was every reason for him to hope for acquittal. That hope is extinguished after the final verdict. If, therefore, there is inordinate delay in execution, the condemned prisoner is entitled to come to the Court requesting to examine whether it is just and fair to allow the sentence of death to be executed. Triveniben v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1989 SC 1335 : (1989) 1 SCC 678 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 248 (284) : 1990 CrLJ 1810 : 1989 CrLR (SC) 267.

[12173] ● Inordinate delay in execution of death sentence would not render execution unconstitutional.—If the Court wants to have a look at the grievance as to delay in execution, it is needless to state that there should not be any delay either in listing or in disposal of the matter. The person who complains about the delay in the execution should not be put to further delay. The matter, therefore, must be expeditiously and on top priority basis, disposed of. The Court while examining the matter, for the reason already stated, cannot take into account the time utilized in the judicial proceedings up to the final verdict. The Court also cannot take into consideration the time taken for disposal of any petition filed by or on behalf of the accused either under Article 226 or under Article 32 of the Constitution after the final judgment affirming the conviction and sentence. The Court may only consider whether there was undue long delay in disposing of mercy petition, whether the State was guilty of dilatory conduct and whether the delay was for no reason at all. The inordinate delay may be a significant factor, but that by itself cannot render the execution unconstitutional. Nor it can be divorced from the dastardly and diabolical circumstances of the crime itself. Triveniben v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1989 SC 1335 : (1989) 1 SCC 678 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 248 (284, 285) : 1990 CrLJ 1810 : 1989 CrLR (SC) 267 : JT 1989 (1) SC 314 : (1989) 1 SCR 509 : (1989) 2 Crimes 391.

[12174] ● Hanging by neck till death scientific.—Hanging by neck till death is a scientific and one of least painful methods of execution of death sentence. Capital Punishment as provided by law is to be awarded in rarest of rare cases and as such procedure established by law for awarding death penalty is reasonable and it does not in any way violate the mandate of Article 21 of the Constitution. Sashi Nayar v. Union of India, AIR 1992 SC 395 : (1992) 1 SCC 96 : 1992 CrLJ 514 : (1991) 3 Crimes 767 (SC).

[12175] ● Convict awaiting execution of death sentence—Delay in Relief.—In the instant case there has been an avoidable delay, which is considerable in the totality of circumstances, for which the condemned prisoner is in no way responsible. Having regard to all the circumstances of the case, we deem it fit to and accordingly substitute sentence of prisonment for life in place of death sentence. The only relief a convict awaiting execution of death sentence can get from this Court on the ground of delay is conversion of the sentence into that of life imprisonment. However, on conversion of death sentence to life imprisonment, the petitioner would now be governed and dealt with as a life convict for all purposes. Daya Singh v. Union of India, AIR 1991 SC 1548 : (1991) 3 SCC 61 : 1991 SCC (Cri) 523 : 1991 CrLJ 1903 : JT 1991 (2) SC 349.

[12176] ● Rarest of rare case—Award of death sentence proper.—Where both accused persons had unmistakably unequivocally and without any reservation whatsoever admitted the fact that they were responsible for the murder of General Vaidya and they had no remorse or repentance, in fact they felt proud of having killed him in execution of their plan. The case fell within the description of the rarest of rare case to award extreme finally of death to both the accused. State of Maharashtra v. Sukhdeo Singh, AIR 1992 SC 2100 : (1992) 3 SCC 700 : 1992 SCC (Cri) 705 : 1992 CrLJ 3454 : JT 1992 (4) SC 73 : 1992 (3) Crimes 5 (SC).

[12177] ● Power to enhance sentence of life imprisonment to death to be sharing by exercised.—"Of course, the High Court has power and jurisdiction to enhance of life imprisonment to death but that power has to be exercised sparingly in "rarest of rare cases" for special reasons to be recorded. The reason given by the High Court to enhance the sentence of life imprisonment to death, without taking into account all circumstances and balancing the aggravating and the mitigating circumstances are neither "special reasons" nor otherwise adequate and sufficient to impose the sentence of death on either of the three convicts. A-1 to A-3. Anshad v. State of Karnataka, (1994) 4 SCC 381 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 1204.

[12178] ● Conspiracy to kill two children and their mother—Death sentence commuted to life sentence.—As far as the question of sentence to the appellants Gurbachan Singh and Raj Pal Sharma is concerned, we may state that there is convincing and conclusive evidence for their involvement and active participation in the criminal conspiracy with Suresh to do away with the three members of his family. But from the evidence on record it is clear that Gurbachan Singh had reached the house of Suresh at Ranchi in the fateful evening of 10th Oct, 1983 when Urshia was already done to death by the appellant Suresh Bahri and Raj Pal Sharma, when Raj Pal Sharma was seen wearing an underwear holding a dagger in his hand and cleaning the blood in the room with cotton. It is clear that Gurbachan Singh was not a party to the actual murder of urshia, although he was an active member of the party who hatched the conspiracy to kill her. Though Gurbachan Singh rendered assistance in sending the cot and chairs to Dhulli farm and sharpening the dagger and batalies for the murder of two children but he in fact was not present on 17/18-12-83 at Dhulli farm when the two children were done to death by the appellants Suresh and Raj Pal Sharma. In these facts and circumstances the appellant Gurbachan Singh does not deserve the extreme penalty of death but the adequate sentence for the part played would be life sentence. Suresh Chandra Bahri v. State of Bihar, AIR 1994 SC 2420 : 1995 Supp (1) SCC 80 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 60.

[12179] ● Sentence of death be reserved for rarest of rare cases.—It can therefore be seen that the choice as to which one of the two punishments provided for murder is the proper one in a given case will depend upon the particular circumstances of that case and the Court has to exercise its discretion judicially and on well-recognised principles after balancing all the mitigating and aggravating circumstances of the crime. The Court also should see whether there is something uncommon about crime which renders sentence of imprisonment of life inadequate and calls for death sentence. The nature of the crime and the circumstances of the offender should be so revealing that the criminal is a menace to the society and the sentence of imprisonment of life would be inadequate. The sentence of death should be reserved for the rarest of rare cases after a due consideration of both mitigating and aggravating circumstances. Shankar v. State of Tamil Nadu, (1994) 4 SCC 478 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 1252 (1286, 1287) : 1994 CrLJ 3071 : 1994 (2) Crimes 1.

[12180] ● Rarest of rare cases—Warranting imposition of death sentence.—It has been established by the evidence that A-1 was the leader of the gang which indulged in illicit arrack and brothel business which are unlawful and most harmful to the society. He was responsible for spoiling the life of many girls. He used to keep some of the girls for himself by setting up a separate residence. He used to be very cruel to them and used to burn the young girls with cigarette butts and as a result one of them committed suicide. Lalita, D-1 who could not adjust herself to live with him was brutally murdered and in order to screen the said offence he got the body buried. Having successfully committed the murder of Lalita, he planned to murder Sudalai, D-2 obviously apprehending that he may cause some trouble. He was also angry with him because he was interfering with his business. D-2 was also brutally murdered and what is more, in a diabolical manner the body was burnt in A-1's house. Thereafter the remnants of the body were taken and thrown in the Boat Yard. Then D-3 who was the supporter of D-2 was also brutally murdered since it was apprehended that he may expose them with regard to the murders of D-1 and D-2. D-3 was also brutally murdered in the same manner in which D-1 and D-2 were murdered and his body was also buried. When D-4 to D-6 threatened to his running of brothel business, A-1 obviously to prove his supremacy in the illicit business wanted to eliminate them and they were severely beaten and brutally murdered. D-6 was strangulated in a cold-blooded manner and all the three bodies were buried. Thus it can be seen that A-1 indulged in these crimes in an organized manner. His own confession, though retracted, which is found to be true and voluntary gives the details of the diabolical and cruel manner in which he participated in killing D-1 to D-3 as well as D-4 to D-6. The crime indulged was gruesome, cold-blooded, heinous, atrocious and cruel and he has proved to be an ardent criminal and thus a menace to the society. It is an exceptional case where the crime committed by him is so gruesome, diabolical and revolting which shocks the collective conscience of the community. There cannot be any doubt that his case is one of the rarest of rare cases fully warranting the imposition of death sentence. Shankar v. State of Tamil Nadu, (1994) 4 SCC 478 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 1252 (1286, 1287) : 1994 CrLJ 3071.

[12181] ● Murder—Retracted confession of accused corroboration—Death sentence justified.—A-2 throughout had been actively associated with A-1. He participated in every crime. So far murders of D-1 to D-3 are concerned A-2 played an active role in a most cruel and diabolical manner as we find from his own retracted confession. As a close associate of A-1 in every unlawful business activity, A-2 went on participating with him in these organized crimes. The reasons given above in respect of A-1 for awarding the death sentence equally apply to the case of A-2 also. Apart from their own retracted confessions, the evidence of PW-1 as corroborated by the other evidence as discussed above, also independently establishes the active participation of A-1 and A-2 in the murders of D-2 to D-6. Shankar v. State of Tamil Nadu, (1994) 4 SCC 478 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 1252 (1289) : 1994 CrLJ 3071 : 1994 (2) Crimes 1.

[12182] ● Sentence organised criminal activity—Social status of accused acquired not relevant.—Learned Counsel for the appellants pointed out that there is evidence to show that A-1 liberally donated to the social organizations and contended that he is not a hardened criminal and not a menace to the society and at any rate by wiping him out the crime cannot be wiped out. This submission only manifests a state of despondency which cannot gain the place of relevancy in the matter of judicial adjudication of crimes of this nature involving "organized criminal activity". In large urban areas this kind of organized crime has taken deep roots. It has become the way of life of these organized criminal groups particularly indulging in underground unlawful activities. Eventually the underground economy has entered on the vitals of the society gradually rendering it malignant. The organized crime has profit as its primary goal to be achieved at any cost. The potential for criminal violence in such crimes is inherently present in an organised crime group. The activities of crime groups indulge in may vary numerously. Prostitution is an activity bad in social sense as witnessed and is prohibited legally. Yet for many potential buyers the services of prostitutes are goods in the strict economic sense of the term "goods". The buyers are willing to pay for these goods in the market transaction. It is these monetary values, though illegal, underlying that eventually lead to growth of these organized crimes and further criminal specialization whose only common aim is attainment of wealth primarily, of course and then if possible power and influence by illegal means. It has thus become an enterprise not infrequently aiming at purchase of respectability. After all money is money and that which is illegally gained can seemingly be legally spent to achieve social status. That kind of criminally acquired social status is completely out of place and forlorn as to come anywhere near the concept of "mitigating circumstances". Shankar v. State of Tamil Nadu, (1994) 4 SCC 478 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 1252 (1290-1291) : 1994 CrLJ 3071 : 1994 (2) Crimes 1.

[12183] ● Occurrence taking place more than a decade ago—Death sentence not warranted.— Keeping in view the facts and circumstances of the case, and particularly the accepted prosecution case that both Brij Mohan and Barchia, who are alleged to be armed with fire-arms did not even enter the house to commit the dacoity and remained outside the house and caused the death of two persons outside the house, it was only the other accused persons who went inside the house differently armed, the number of injuries inflicted by them on the deceased inside the house and the weapons used in causing those injuries, while committing dacoity and not keeping or using the firearms, which were otherwise available, it is not possible to say that it is the "rarest of the rare cases" which may warrant the imposition of the sentence of death for the occurrence which occurred more than a decade ago. Brij Mohan v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1994 SC 739 (744) : (1994) 1 SCC 413 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 527 : 1994 CrLJ 922 : (1994) 1 Crimes 288.

[12184] ● Death sentence—Rarest of rare cases.—The extreme penalty can be inflicted only in gravest cases of the extreme culpability and in making choice of the sentence, in addition to the circumstances of the offender also. In the instant case the victim had several external and internal injuries on her person including a serious injury in her private parts showing the brutality with which she was subjected to while committing rape on her. The victim of the age of 7 years could not have ever resisted the act with which she was subjected to. The appellant seems to have acted in a beastly manner as after satisfying his lust he thought that the victim might expose him for the commission of the offence of forcible rape on her to the family members and others, the appellant with a view to screen the evidence of his crime also put an end to the life of innocent girl who had seen only seven summers. The evidence on record is indicative of the fact as to how diabolically the appellant had conceived of his plan and brutally executed it and such a calculated cold blooded and brutal murder of a girl of a very tender age after committing rape on her would undoubtedly fall in the category of rarest of the rare case attracting no punishment other than the capital punishment. Laxman Naik v. State of Orissa, AIR 1995 SC 1387 : (1994) 3 SCC 381 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 656 : 1995 CrLJ 2692 : JT 1994 (2) SC 39 : 1994 (1) UJ 645 : 1994 (1) Crimes 806.

[12185] ● Sentence of death converted into one for life imprisonment.—Accused committed death of his wife and children. Some children were buried in house. It was apparent from statement of accused that it was a mental case. He committed offence not with intention to commit murder of his children but only by way of deliverance from day-to-day strain of life, he being financially crippled. If accused had not stated details of manner of occurrence in his statement under Section 313, CrPC, investigation by police would have led only to the fact that at the instance of accused three dead bodies were recovered which had been buried for six months. Extreme penalty of sentence of death should not be awarded. Sentence of death is converted into one of life imprisonment. Janki Das v. State (Delhi Administration), AIR 1995 SC 1002 : 1994 Supp (3) SCC 143 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 1673 : 1995 CrLJ 1464 : JT 1994 (5) SC 604 : 1994 (3) Crimes 375.

[12186] ● Large number of deaths on one side-not ipso facto ground to bring case into category of rarest of rare cases.—In spite of the presence of the police party, a rioting took place. The prosecution party in large numbers alongwith four gunmen from Dariyapur whose services were enlisted and also the armed police party proceeded to the village under the umbrella provided by the Labour Minister and Pradhan of Village Dariyapur to bury the dead body of the old lady. The evidence of PW-20 also shows that there was tension. The way the prosecution party went to the Village in gusto with a spirit of bravado itself indicates that there must have been some provocative acts which created the tension particularly in the back ground of the acute faction. Nothing happened for quite some time and it is also the case of the prosecution that the accused did not interfere with the burial. It is only thereafter that some incident triggered off in firing by the accused persons. Unfortunately 10 persons of the side of the prosecution died. Held, the large number of deaths on one side cannot ipso facto be a ground to bring the case into the category of "rarest of rare cases" particularly when we take into consideration the other aspects mentioned above. It is pertinent to note that none of the accused caused any injuries to any of the policemen. No doubt prosecution alleged that one Constable received a stray pellet injury which is simple. However, he was not even examined. Admittedly the police fired and caused the death of one of the accused persons. Yet there is nothing to show that the accused acted cruelly and attacked them. To that extent they manifested a sense of restraint. No doubt the accused were the aggressors. But aggression again could also be due to provocation, resulting in a disturbed and agitated state of mind. Many a time, in such a situation, heat of passion would be the mob of the man that commits a riot on his reason and does not look beyond the moment of its existence, causing disappearance of the sense of reasoning. Shamsul Kanwar v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1995 SC 1748 : (1995) 4 SCC 430 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 753 : JT 1995 (4) SC 159 : 1995 (2) UJ 660 : 1995 (2) SCJ 466 : 1995 (2) Crimes 487.

[12187] ● Number of victim not a yardstick—For upholding death penalty.—True, number of victims by itself is not a yardstick to discern a case of the category described by the Constitution Bench in Bachan Singh's case, AIR 1980 SC 898. Nonetheless number of victims is not altogether outside the scope of consideration and should not be marginalized in appropriate cases. Vide Sheikh Ishaque v. State of Bihar, AIR 1995 SC 2001 : (1995) 3 SCC 392. To the same effect : (1) Gentela Vijaya-vardhan Rao v. State of A.P., AIR 1996 SC 2791 (2794-95) : (1996) 6 SCC 241 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 1290 : 1996 CrLJ 4151 : JT 1996 (7) SC 491 : 1996 (3) Crimes 197 : 1996 (3) SCJ 247.

[12188] ● Death sentence—Mitigating circumstances.—This is one of the rarest of the rare cases not merely because of the record number of innocent human beings roasted alive by the appellants but by the inhuman manner in which they have plotted the scheme and executed it. What they needed, perhaps, was only wealth by plundering others. For that motive they designed a scheme with the highest proportion of viciousness. Carrying most inflammable liquid in a can together with a match box they sneaked into a passenger bus during the dawn of the ill-fated day. None of the harmless faces of the unfortunate passengers not even those of some cute children in the bus had deterred these appellants from incinerating them into charred corpses in a spilt second. When human mind was allowed to be transformed itself into such demonic form and the planned programme was executed with extreme depravity, the Supreme Court agreed with the Courts below that this is one of the rarest of the rare cases in which alternative option is unquestionably foreclosed. Gentela Vijayavardhan Rao v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1996 SC 2791 (2795) : (1996) 6 SCC 241 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 1290 : 1996 CrLJ 4151 : JT 1996 (7) SC 491 : 1996 (3) Crimes 197 : 1996 (6) Supreme 356 : 1996 (3) SCT 247.

[12189] ● High Court's power in disposing of appeals from conviction or acquittal essentially same.—It is well settled that the High Court's power in disposing of appeals from conviction or acquittal are essentially the same. It is equally well settled that where the credibility of the evidence depends upon factors other than the demeanour of witnesses, the appellate Court is free to come to its own conclusions as to the credibility. But at the same time if the view taken by the Trial Court in acquitting the accused is not palpably wrong there would no occasion for reversal of the order of acquittal. Further the High Court should also consider the reasons advanced by the Trial Court before altering the order of acquittal to order of conviction. Betal Singh v. State of M.P., AIR 1996 SC 2770 (2771-72) : (1996) 8 SCC 205 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 571 : 1996 CrLJ 4006 : JT 1996 (3) SC 591 : 1996 (2) CCR 39 : 1996 (1) Crimes 216 : 1996 (3) Supreme 108.

[12190] ● Brutal murder—No justification to commute death penalty to imprisonment for life.—The appellant has committed one of the most heinous crimes by killing his poor wife who was in advanced stage of pregnancy and three minor children for no fault on their part. The appellant had a solemn duty to protect them and to maintain them but he has betrayed the trust reposed on him in a very cruel and calculated manner without any provocation whatsoever. The appellant did not even spare his mother who very rightly tries to prevent him from committing such unpardonable crime. The appellant also attacked his mother with the axe which he had used to kill his wife and minor children and caused injuries on her person with an intention to kill her. The brutality and cruelty with which the crimes have been perpetrated cannot but shock the conscience of the society. After killing the wife and three minor children and injuring the mother he did not become remorseful and desist from committing any further crime. But like a blood thirsty demon, in a cool and calculated manner he went to one of the neighbour's house and attempted to kill the wife of the neighbour while she was asleep and as such utterly helpless to give any resistance. When in his attempt to flee away from the place of occurrence, the poor old Gulabji came on his way, the appellant did not hesitate to kill him in extremely brutal manner before the eyes of his wife. All the said heinous crimes were committed without any provocation. The appellant was not even remorseful after the said incident of successive five murders and attempt to kill two others including the appellant's mother. The appellant did not go to see the ailing mother injured by him and did not also attend the funeral of his wife and even his three innocent minor children. The crimes had been committed with utmost cruelty and brutality without any provocation, in a calculated manner. It is the nature and gravity of the crime but not the criminal, which are germane for consideration of appropriate punishment in a criminal trial. The Court will be failing in its duty if appropriate punishment is not awarded for a crime which has been committed not only against the individual victim but also against the society to which the criminal and victim belong. The punishment to be awarded for a crime must not be irrelevant but it should conform to and be consistent with the atrocity and brutality with which the crime has been perpetrated, the enormity of the crime warranting public abhorrence and it should respond to the society's cry for justice against the criminal. If for such heinous crimes the most deterrent punishment for wanton and brutal murders is not given, the case of deterrent punishment will loose its relevance. There is no justification to commute the death penalty to imprisonment for life. Ravji v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1996 SC 787 (793-94) : (1996) 2 SCC 175 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 1225 : JT 1995 (8) SC 520 : 1996 (1) SCJ 144 : 1995 (4) Crimes 695.

[12191] ● Death penalty—Commutation of sentence.—From the record, particularly the confessions made by the two appellants which formed the principal basis for their conviction it was clear that the appellants did not commit the two murders on their own volition prompted by any motive or greed much less, evincing total depravity and meanness. Indeed, it was the case of the respondents themselves at the GCM the Major R.S. Budhwar along with other Officers of the Unit of the appellants instigated and compelled them to commit the above two murders by exploiting their religious feelings. The record further indicates that initially the appellants declined to take any step towards the commission of the offences but ultimately they succumbed to the "threat, command and influence" of their superiors. So far as the murders of the other two officers are concerned they became the unfortunate victims of circumstances as they happened to be present at the time of the incident. Another mitigating factor calls for commutation of the sentence is that Major Budhwar who along with another officer (since dead) masterminded the two murders were awarded life imprisonment whereas the appellants who carried out their orders have been sentenced to death. In dealing with this aspect of the matter the High Court, however, observed that the appellants committed the offences while the officers were only abettors. Held, in a case of the present nature which relates to a disciplined force as the Army, the offence committed by the officers who conceived the plan, was more heinous than that of the appellants who executed the plan as per their orders and directions. It is of course true that those orders being not lawful the appellants, even as disciplined soldiers, were not bound to comply with the same nor their carrying out such order minimised the offences but certainly this is factor which cannot be ignored while deciding the question of sentence. Another factor which persuades the Court to commute the sentence is the post-murder repentance of the appellants who not only surrendered before the authorities within two days but also spoke out the truth in their confessional statements. In fact, but for their confessional statements the Officers, who were the mastermind, could not have been brought to book. R.S. Budhwar (Major) v. Union of India, AIR 1996 SC 2000 (2004-05) : 1996 CrLJ 2862 : 1996 (2) CCR 196.

[12192] ● Murder committed in pre-meditated and calculated manner with extreme cruelty one brutality—Still not proper to award extreme punishment.—The conviction of the appellants has been based on the basis of eye witness account of a boy aged about 9 years. According to this witness, at the time of incident he hid himself near a Kotna and from the place of hiding, he had witnessed the murder of the said six persons namely, his father, mother, three sisters and uncle. After keeping in mind the relevant considerations for awarding the extreme penalty of death and also on considering the fact that in the instant case, the sole eye witness did not tell the names of four of the appellants we feel that although the murders had been committed in a premeditated and calculated manner with extreme cruelty and brutality, for which normally sentence of death will be wholly justified, in the special facts of the case, it will not be proper to award extreme sentence of death on the appellants. Raja Ram Yadav v. State of Bihar, AIR 1996 SC 1613

(1614, 1616) : (1996) 9 SCC 287 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 1004 : 1996 CrLJ 2307 : JT 1996 (4) SC 140 : 1996 (1) CCR 145 : 1996 (2) Crimes 59 : 1996 (3) Supreme 482.

[12193] ● Rape and murder—Death sentence—No interference.—The appellant was close to the family of Parmeshwar and the deceased and her siblings used to call him Tiwari uncle. Obviously her closeness with the appellant encouraged her to go to his shop, which was near the saloon where she had gone for a haircut with her father and brother, and ask for some biscuits. The appellant readily responded to the request by taking her to the nearby grocery shop and handing over a packet of biscuits apparently as a preclude to his sinister design which unfolded in her kidnapping, brutal rape and gruesome murder as the numerous injuries on her person testify; and the finale was the dumping of her dead body in a well. When an innocent hapless girl of 7 years was subjected to such barbaric treatment by a person who was in a position of her trust his culpability assumes the proportion of extreme depravity and arouses a sense of revulsion in the mind of the common man. In fine, the motivation of the perpetrator, the vulnerability of the victim, the enormity of the crime, the execution thereof persuaded the Supreme Court to hold that this is a "rarest of rare" cases where the sentence of death is eminently desirable not only to deter others from committing such atrocious crimes but also to give emphatic expression to society's abhorrence of such crimes. Kamta Tiwari v. State of M.P., AIR 1996 SC 2800, at p. 2802-2803 : (1996) 6 SCC 250 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 1298 : 1996 CrLJ 4158 : JT 1996 (8) SC 198 : 1996 (6) Supreme 482 : 1996 (3) Crimes 241 (SC).

[12194] ● Attack pre-meditated—Not on account of any provocation or mental revenge—Death sentence not interfered with.—At about 12-1 on the intervening night of 20th and 21st February, 1994, the accused started to kill his wife with the help of a sword and on hearing the shoutings the children woke up. The wife questioned the accused why he was trying to kill her and the accused without giving any answer inflicted more injuries on her head, hand and foot. By that time, the eldest daughter tried to save her mother and instead of leaving his wife from attack, he started inflicting wounds on his first daughter with the same sword. Not satisfied with that, he also inflicted injuries with the same sword to another daughter and finding that the sword he had used had been bent, he left that sword and took out another big sword, kept in a box in the room, and with the help of the second sword, he inflicted injuries to the other children. All the injured persons fell down and the wife and two children succumbed to the injuries and the other three children escaped death. On the facts established on the record, there appears to be no mitigating circumstance whatsoever, but only aggravating circumstances which justify the imposition of death sentence. The manner in which the crime was committed, the weapon used, the brutality of the crime, number of persons murdered, the helplessness of the victims, the Supreme Court cannot come to any other conclusion except the one, the Sessions Judge and the High Court arrived at to award the capital sentence to the appellant. Umashankar Panda v. State of M.P., AIR 1996 SC 3011, at pp. 3015, 3016 : (1996) 8 SCC 110 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 543 : 1996 CrLJ 1988 : JT 1996 (2) SC 747 : 1996 (1) CCR 225 : 1996 (2) Supreme 493.

[12195] ● Death sentence—Imposition of.—The trial Court had awarded the death sentence but the Supreme Court refrained from doing so for two reasons normally, (1) the present is not a case of "rarest of the rare" and (2) the respondent having enjoyed acquittal ever since High Court's judgment dated 19-11-1982, death sentence, even if it would have been merited, would not have been imposed by the Supreme Court. State of Madhya Pradesh v. Dhirendra Kumar, AIR 1997 SC 318 : (1997) 1 SCC 93 : JT 1996 (10) SC 93 : 1996 (4) Crimes 195 : 1996 (8) Supreme 272.

[12196] ● Aggravating and mitigating factors to be balanced for deciding just and appropriate sentence.—For deciding just and appropriate sentence to be awarded for an offence, the aggravating and mitigating factors and circumstances in which a crime has been committed are to be delicately balanced in a dispassionate manner. Surja Ram v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1997 SC 18 : (1996) 6 SCC 271 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 1314 : 1997 CrLJ 51 : JT 1996 (8) SC 461 : (1996) 4 Crimes 45 : 1996 (3) SCJ 275.

[12197] ● Murder committed in cool and calculated manner—Rarest of rare case Death sentence justified.—It is true that the appellant was not convicted for any other offence on any previous occasion but such fact can hardly be considered as mitigating factor in favour of the appellant that will outweigh all the aggravating factors and circumstances in which the crime of the murders had been committed. Surja Ram v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1997 SC 18 : (1996) 6 SCC 271 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 1314 : 1997 CrLJ 51 : 1996 (7) Supreme 248 : 1996 (4) Crimes 45 : 1996 (3) SCJ 275.

[12198] ● Conviction upheld by Supreme Court sentence of imprisonment for life awarded.—Present appeals were filed in 1990 and they are being disposed of in April, 1997. Having regard to the passage of time it is not proper to confirm the death sentence awarded to Abdul Ali (A-1) by the IVth Addl. Sessions Judge. We reject the reference. The Supreme Court upheld the conviction of A-1 to A-4 under Section 302/34 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced each of the accused persons to suffer imprisonment for life. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Abdul, AIR 1997 SC 2512 : 1997 CrLJ 2997 : JT 1997 (5) SC 265 : 1997 (2) CCR 108 : 1997 (2) Crimes 78 : 1997 (4) Supreme 414.

[12199] ● Crime committed by accused falls in category of rarest of rare cases—Extreme penalty of death justified.—The members of the family of the brother of the deceased were absolutely innocent and two of them were even minors. Such murders and attempt to commit murders in a cool and calculated manner without provocation cannot but shock the conscience of the society which must abhor such heinous crime committed on helpless innocent persons. Punishment must also respond to the society's cry for justice against the criminal. While considering the punishment to be given to the accused, the Court should be alive not only to the right of the criminal to be awarded just and fair punishment by administering justice tempered with such mercy as the criminal may justly deserve, but also to the rights of the victims of the crime to have the assailant appropriately punished and the society's reasonable expectation from the Court for the appropriate deterrent punishment conforming to the gravity of the offence and consistent with the public abhorrence for the heinous crime committed by the accused. Held, in the facts and circumstances of the case the crime committed by the accused falls to the category of rarest of rare cases for which extreme penalty of death is fully justified. Suraj Ram v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1997 SC 18 : (1996) 6 SCC 271 : 1997 CrLJ 51.

[12200] ● Rarest of rare cases—Appellant be sentenced to death.—The principal reason which weighted with the Courts below to hold that the extreme penalty of death was called for, was that earlier the appellant had committed a murder for which he was serving the sentence of life imprisonment at the material time and that he committed another murder while he was released on parole. Undoubtedly, felonious propensity of an offender is a factor which requires consideration while dealing with the question of imposition of the sentence of death but that cannot be made the sole basis for such sentence as all other factors relating to the commission of the crime including motives, manner and magnitude have also to be taken into consideration. Taking an overall view of the attending facts and circumstances of the instant case this is one of the rarest of the rare cases where the appellant should be sentenced to death. Krishan v. State of Haryana, AIR 1997 SC 2598 : (2000) 10 SCC 451 : 1997 CrLJ 3180 : 1997 (2) CCR 78 : 1997 (2) Crimes 59.

[12201] ● Mitigating circumstances would not bring case to be rarest of rare case—Death sentence not warranted.—Appellant Pushparaj was instrumental in getting the boy from the school by telling him that his father is waiting but thereafter he had not played any role either in conceiving the idea of killing him or factually taken any part in the killing of the boy. On the other hand the evidence discloses that it is he who pleaded with Mohan not to kill the boy when Mohan divulged that boy should be killed. It is he who refused to accompany Mohan to pick up the ransom money after the death of the boy and in fact no ransom money has been paid to him nor any recovery of any incriminating material at his instance has been recovered. He had no criminal history earlier, but as he known to the father of the deceased and happened to be a neighbour of accused Mohan and Gopi he got himself involved in getting the boy kidnapped. So far as appellant No. 4 Muthu is concerned, according to the learned counsel appearing for the appellants, the only link that has been established is the alleged phone call he supposed to have made to Mohan asking him to kill the boy. He has not participated in the actual murder of the boy. On the other hand his statement under Section 313, CrPC indicates that he has helped in searching of the missing boy. He also did not receive any part of ransom money nor there has been any recovery made at his instance. The mitigating circumstances clearly do not bring their case to be the rarest of rare cases and do not bring their activities to be either diabolical or act of depraved mind warranting the extreme penalty of death sentence. Mohan v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1998 SC 2238 (2241, 2242) : (1998) 5 SCC 336 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 1308 : 1998 CrLJ 3276 : JT 1998 (4) SC 116 : 1998 (2) Crimes 329.

[12202] ● Aggravating circumstances—Death sentence confirmed.—Aggravating Circumstances.—Immediately after the boy was brought from the school by accused Pushparaj, Mohan took him in the van and kept him in confinement at a solitary place. It is he who conceived the idea of taking the life of the young boy. It is he who did not accede to the request of co-accused Muthu who persuaded him not to kill the boy and, on the other hand, Mohan threatened Muthu that unless the boy is killed he would divulge the entire episode and then not only Muthu but his parents will also be in trouble. It is Mohan's master-mind which was responsible for the ultimate act of brutal killing of the boy and it is he who directed Muthu to catch hold of the legs of the boy so that he could easily strangulate the boy with the rope. So far as appellant Gopi is concerned, he not only did participate by pulling the rope around the neck of the boy, but went to his house and brought a coir rope. After removing the rope from the neck of the boy he encircled the coir rope again around the boy's neck and pulled the said rope for about ½ a minute and the boy stopped breathing. Thereafter he took out one Keltron T.V. Box from underneath the cot and packed the boy in the box. These aggravating circumstances on the part of accused Mohan and Gopi clearly demonstrate their depraved state of mind and the brutality with which they took the life of a young boy. It further transpires that after killing the boy and disposing of the dead body of the boy, Mohan also did not lose his lust for money and got the ransom of 5 lakhs. In view of the aforesaid aggravating circumstances appearing as against appellant Mohan and appellant Gopi who happened to be the brother the Supreme Court cannot but confirm the death sentence awarded against them which has been affirmed by the High Court. Mohan v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1998 SC 2238 (2242) : (1998) 5 SCC 336 : 1998 CrLJ 3276 : 1998 (2) Crimes 329.

[12203] ● Death sentence proper—Life imprisonment awarded.—The dead body of Sandeep was totally charred and, therefore, doctor could not find any injury on his dead body. Is in these circumstances A-6 could not be bracketed with accused persons who have been awarded death sentence. A-6, is entitled to a differential treatment for want of conclusive evidence that he had caused fire arm injuries to Sandeep. This finding by itself would not absolve A-6 from his culpability in the present crime with the aid of Section 149, IPC as regards other murders. His presence was proved beyond every reasonable doubt at the time of occurrence. He was a member of an unlawful assembly having a common object to commit the murders in question and in prosecution thereof used his fire arm along with other accused who were armed with fire arms. In view of these proved facts the death sentence awarded to Rajendra (A-6) was not proper and instead he must fall in the group comprising of accused/appellants who used the fire arms and have been awarded life imprisonment. Shiv Ram v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1998 SC 49 (60) : (1998) 1 SCC 149 : 1998 CrLJ 76 : 1997 (4) Crimes 76.

[12204] ● Five murders committed—Case squarely falls within ambit of rarest of rare case.—The accused persons first fired at Kamlesh, injured him and thereafter opened the door and searched for Ram Gulam and Sheo Pal. Kamlesh was immobilised by causing a gun shot injury. Sukhdarshan (since deceased) came out of his room. He was fired at on a non-vital part by immobilizing him and thereafter the accused persons assaulted him with Banka; A-2, A-4 and A-13 held him facilitating A-1 to severe his head. The accused did not stop there but thereafter they fired at Surendra and assaulted him by Bankas. A-2, A-4 and A-13 caught hold of him and A-1 severed his head. Sandeep a young boy of 10 years when came out of the room which was then set on fire was bodily lifted by a-5 and A-8 who threw him into the smouldering fire. He was roasted alive. Bhuwaneshwari who was returning from the market was fired at and was given the same cruel treatment by severing his head. This only shows that they were thirstily to severe the heads from the alive but injured bodies in order to take revenge of the murder of Chandrika. All the three heads were put together in a piece of cloth and a victory procession was taken out by accused giving slogans "Shyma Manohar Zindabad; Nandlal and Premgiri Zindabar etc., etc.", and then they went to the house of Chandrika. Held, a simple question which requires to be considered is as to whether the conscience of a society was not shocked to see such ghastly and brutal murders? The accused persons had shown scant regard for the human dignity. Upon taking overall view of the circumstances in the light of the ratio laid down by the Supreme Court and taking into account the manner of commission of crime, motive for commission of crime and criminals, magnitude of the crime and little regard for the human dignity and in particular a young boy of 10 years, the Court must draw a final balance sheet of the aggravating and mitigating circumstances after giving due consideration to the rival contentions put forth before the Court as regards six condemned prisoners. The justification clearly leans in favour of death sentence to each of the six condemned prisoners. Totality of circumstances outweighted the mitigating circumstances. Sentence of life imprisonment to these six accused persons would be totally inadequate in the facts and circumstances of this case. The proved facts of this case squarely falls within the ambit of "rarest of rare" case. Five murders were committed in an extremely brutal, grotesque, diabolical, revolting or dastardly manner which would arouse intense and extreme indignation of the community. Award of lesser punishment to these six accused persons would disintegrate the rule of law upon which the edifice of our civilized society stands. Shiv Ram v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1998 SC 49 (62) : (1998) 1 SCC 149 : 1998 CrLJ 76 : 1997 (3) CCR 70 : 1997 (4) Crimes 76.

[12205] ● Death sentence—When not justified.—The death of three persons occurred not from the firing from revolvers held by Dudh Nath Ram and Victor but on account of firing from the 303 rifles held by the three Constables. It is true that the prosecution evidence established the fact that firing had taken place from a very close range but that by itself would not make out the case to be a rarest of rare cases justifying the extreme penalty of death. No aggravating circumstances have been indicated so far as accused Dudh Nath Ram and accused Victor are concerned to award the extreme penalty of death sentence. The judgment of the High Court starts with the expression that the case may be treated "as one of the most sensational trials of the recent years, so far as the State of Bihar is concerned and according to the High Court the murder is a diabolical one because three innocent persons have been killed by the police officers who were supposed to be the protectors of law abiding citizens." The High Court has not kept in view the several decisions of the Supreme Court and has not examined the circumstances proved while considering the question of sentence but on the other hand have been swayed away with the fact that trial is a sensational one, and therefore, the officials must be awarded the extreme penalty of death. Brijlala Pd. Sinha v. State of Bihar, AIR 1998 SC 2443 (2455) : (1998) 5 SCC 699 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 1382 : 1998 CrLJ 3611 : JT 1998 (4) SC 534 : 1998 (3) Crimes 4 : 1998 (5) Supreme 379 : 1998 (9) Supreme 35 : 1998 (4) Crimes 127.

[12206] ● Murder shocking but per se does not justify death penalty.—Crimes such as murder are committed for gain and there is nothing exceptionally gruesome about the manner of committing this murder. A murder by its very nature is shocking. But that per se does not justify death penalty. State of H.P. v. Manohar Singh Thakur, AIR 1998 SC 2941 (2945) : 1998 CrLJ 3630 : 1998 (3) CCR 116 : 1998 (3) Crimes 84 (SC) : 1998 (6) Supreme 139.

[12207] ● Death sentence—Case falls under rarest of rare cases.—The brutal manner in which the appellant wiped out the entire family of his uncle (except one of his sons, who, fortunately at the material time was studying in Coimbatore), obviously to grab his properties, had shocked the judicial conscience. Nonetheless the Supreme Court looked into the record to find out whether there were any extenuating or mitigating circumstances in favour of the appellant but found none. If, in spite thereof, the Supreme Court commute the death sentence to life imprisonment it will be yielding to spasmodic sentiment, unregulated benevolence and misplaced sympathy. Govindasami v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1998 SC 2889 (2894) : (1998) 4 SCC 531 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 1092 : 1998 CrLJ 2913 : JT 1998 SC 260 : 1998 (2) Crimes 238 : 1998 (4) Supreme 147.

[12208] ● Distinction based on degree of complicity to be brutality to be drawn.—A distinction based on the degree of complicity and brutality will have to be drawn which has got a vital impact in awarding the sentence. It is well settled while awarding the sentence, the Court has to bear in mind the crime and the criminal. Shobhit Chamar v. State of Bihar, AIR 1998 SC 1693 (1702) : (1998) 3 SCC 544 : 1998 CrLJ 2259 : 1998 (2) Crimes 5.

[12209] ● Capital punishment commuted to life imprisonment.—Whether the case is one of the rarest of the rare case is a question which has to be determined on the facts of each case. Suffice it to mention that the choice of the death sentence has to be made only in the rarest of the rare case and that where culpability of the accused has assumed depravity or where the accused is found to be an ardent criminal and menace to the society and; where the crime is committed in an organised manner and is gruesome, cold-blooded, heinous and atrocious; where innocent and unarmed persons are attacked and murdered without any provocation, the case would present special reason for purposes of sub-section (3) of Section 354 of the Criminal Procedure code. Now in the facts of this case, the mitigating circumstances in favour of the appellants are that A-1 is a qualified Civil Engineer and a married person having a son of four years old, his parents are serving at Spiritual Life Centre, Narsapur for the last thirty-six years; A-2 is 'Thaneshri' and 'Vasaishri', titles conferred on him for his body building; his marriage is a love marriage performed against the will of his parents as well as the volition of the parents of the wife and there is nobody to look after his wife and their two daughters and two sons of whom one is 1 ½ years' old; A-3 pleaded that he is having a sick father and that he is only 27 years' old and an unmarried person. They are having no adverse antecedents in the sense of being habitual criminals. The aggravating circumstances are that A-1 is no other than the nephew (daughter's son) of the deceased Mr. Mohan Ohol. Because of the relationship, he gained access inside the house for him and for his friends; they enjoyed the hospitality of Ohols' family as it was found that there were five used plates in the sink which indicate that five had food; may be, all the three appellants and the couple or two of them. The victims were unarmed; the heinous crime was committed for gains, namely to rob the valuables of the Ohols family; to give effect to their nefarious plans the unholy alliance of the appellants not merely robbed the family of the valuables but killed all the three members of the family then in the house and above all committed sexual assault on Mrs. Ruhi Ohol. It cannot but be a dastardly act for A-1 to commit rape of Mrs. Ohol, who is none other than the wife of his maternal uncle and perhaps as old as his mother. Considering the cumulative effect of all the factors, it cannot be said that the offences were committed under the influence of extreme mental or emotional disturbance for, the whole thing was done in a pre-planned way; having regard to the nature of offences and circumstances in which they were committed, it is not possible for the Court to predict that the appellant would not commit criminal act of violence or would not be a threat to the society. A-1 is 35 years' old. A-2 is 35 years' old and A-3 is 25 years' old. The appellants cannot be said to be too young or too old. The possibility of reform and rehabilitation, however, cannot be ruled out. From the facts and circumstances, it is not possible to predict as to who among the three played which part. It may be that role of one has been more culpable in degree than that of others and vice versa. Where in a case like this it is not possible to say as to whose case falls within the 'rarest of the rare" case, it would serve the ends of justice if the capital punishment is commuted into life imprisonment. Ronny alias Ronald James Alwaris, v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1998 SC 1251 (1269) : (1998) 3 SCC 625 : 1998 CrLJ 1638 : 1998 (2) Crimes 65.

[12211] ● No error committed by trial Court and High Court in awarding death sentences.—The evidence on record proved beyond every reasonable doubt that the appellant was the principal offender/miscreants who fired from his fire-arm on all the six persons including the two innocent children. He had a deep routed revenge based upon suspicion about the murders of his brother and nephew by Haridwar Pandey which prompted him to take avenge against the family members of Haridwar and had gone to the extent of killing six persons belonging to the family of Haridwar in a most brutal, heinous and barbaric manner. Nothing was suggested to the eyewitnesses on behalf of A-2 that any of these deceased persons had played any role in committing the murders of his brother and nephew and at any rate having regard to the ages of Anil Pandey and Sunil Pandey it could not be even remotely suspected that they could be the assailants. Shobhit Chamar (A-2) wanted not only to teach a lesson to the family members of Haridwar but also to create a terror in the minds of the family members of Haridwar to satisfy his ego and muscle power. A-2 exhibited most inhuman conduct while rejoicing his victory after commission of the crime. It is in this background, it was held that the trial Court as well as the High Court has committed no error in awarding death sentence to him. Shobhit Chamar v. State of Bihar, AIR 1998 SC 1693 (1703) : (1998) 3 SCC 455 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 790 : 1998 CrLJ 2259 : JT 1998 (2) SC 259 : 1998 (2) Crimes 5 : 1998 (3) Supreme 112.

[12212] ● Death sentence substituted with that of life imprisonment.—In a case special reasons given by the trial Court in awarding death sentence to the appellants and confirmed by the High Court, were that it was such a cruel act where the appellants have not even spared the innocent child and the motive being to grab the property. When the matter was carried to Supreme Court it was observed "Having regard to the guidelines stated above, it may be noticed that in the present case it was not pointed out by the prosecution that it was a cold blooded murder. There is nothing on record to show how the murder has taken place. In the absence of such evidence, we do not find that the case before us falls within the category of rarest of rare cases, deserving extreme penalty of death. Keeping in view the aforestated facts, we are of the view that the ends of justice would be met if we substitute the death sentence with that of life imprisonment under Section 302/341, IPC, while upholding the appellants' conviction, as recorded by the High Court" Sheikh Abdul Hamid v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1998 SC 942 : (1988) 3 SCC 188 : (1998) 1 Crimes 148.

[12213] ● Death sentence—Accused killed two old ladies by strangulation—Rarest of rare case.—From the prosecution evidence if it is apparent that there was no premeditated plan to kill any person and the main objective was to commit robbery. In course of the incident as stated by PW-2 when the two old ladies got up and rushed towards culprits one of them strangulated them one after the other. The post-mortem report also indicated that the death of the two ladies are on account of strangulation. The Sessions Judge awarded death sentence to accused 'D' on the ground that as soon as the driver 'N' entered into the house and 'D' shot the gun which hit 'N' and he died. This itself cannot be held to be sufficient to hold that it is an act of an depraved mind. The number of persons died in the incident is not the determinative factor for deciding whether the extreme penalty of death could be awarded or not. On the evidence of PW-2 as well as the evidence of PW-5 it is difficult to hold that the death of the persons were either disbolical, ghastly or gruesome. A. Deivendran v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1998 SC 2821 : (1997) 11 SCC 720 : 1998 CrLJ 814 (834) (SC).

[12215] ● Rape and murder—Death sentence.—The circumstances indicate that the prosecutrix probably was not unwilling initially to allow the appellant to have some liberty with her. The appellant, not being able to resist his urge for sex, went ahead in spite of her unwillingness for a sexual intercourse who offered some resistance and started raising shouts at that Stage. In order to prevent her from raising shouts, the appellant tied the Salwar around her neck which resulted in strangulation and her death we do not, therefore consider thus therefore, to be a fit case in which the extreme penalty of death deserves to be imposed upon the appellant. Kumudi Lal v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1999 SC 1699 : (1999) 4 SCC 108 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 491 (493) : 1999 CrLJ 2523 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 277 : JT 1999 (3) SC 121.

[12216] ● Death sentence—No straight Jacket formula for awarding of.—It is possible in a given set a facts that the Court might think even in a case where death sentence can be awarded, the same need not be awarded because of the peculiar facts of that case like the possibility of one or more of the accused being responsible for offences less culpable than the other accused. In such circumstances in the absence of their being no material available to bifurcate the case of each accused person the Court might think it prudent not to award to extreme penalty of death. But then such a decision would rest on availability of evidence in particular case. A straight jacket formula for awarding death sentence can not be evolved which is applicable to all cases. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Dharmendra Singh, AIR 1999 SC 3789 : (1998) 8 SCC 325 : 2000 CrLJ 5.

[12217] ● Capital punishment imposition of in rarest of rare cases.—Capital punishment can be imposed in the rarest of the rare cases and if there are any aggravating circumstances such as the accused having any criminal record in the past; the manner of committing the crime; delay in imposing the sentence and so on. Kishori v. State of Delhi, AIR 1999 SC 382 (386) : (1999) 1 SCC 148 : 1999 CrLJ 584.

[12218] ● Sentence of death modified to life imprisonment.—In between the house of the deceased and the accused, there was some vacant land and a dispute regarding the same was going on between the accused and the deceased. An order favourable to the accused was passed by the Court but the litigation was still pending. The accused while working in the cattle shed saw the deceased tying his buffalo on the disputed land and, therefore, he went to that place and gave one blow on his back which led to his death. The evidence discloses that the act of the deceased in tying his buffalo and using that land had infuriated the appellant and thus the incident had happened all of a sudden. This case cannot be regarded as a rarest of rare case where the penalty of death would be justified. The Court modified the order of sentence by reducing it to life imprisonment. Rajendra Rai v. State of Bihar, AIR 1999 SC 996 (997, 998) : (1999) 2 SCC 423 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 1239 : 1999 CrLJ 1448 : JT 1999 (1) SC 334 : 1999 (1) Crimes 57 (SC).

[12219] ● Death sentence to be awarded in exceptional cases.—Unless the nature of crime and the circumstances of the offender reveal that the criminal is a menace to the society and the sentence of life imprisonment would be altogether inadequate the Court should ordinarily impose the lesser punishment and not extreme punishment of death which should be, reserved for exceptional case only. Mahendra Nath Das @ Gobinda Das v. State of Assam, AIR 1999 SC 1926 : (1999) 5 SCC 102 : 1999 CrLJ 3479 : 1999 (3) Crimes 86 (SC).

[12220] ● Choice of sentences—Death or life imprisonment.—The riot in Delhi broke out as a result of the death of Smt. Gandhi and her death appears to be the symbol or web around which the violent emotions were released. The acts attributed to the mob of which the appellant was a member at the relevant time cannot be stated to be a result of any organised systematic activity leading to genocide. Perhaps, one can visualise that to the extent there was unlawful assembly and to the extent that the mob wanted to teach stern lesson to the Sikhs there was some organisation; but in that design that they did not consider that women and children should be annihilated which is a redeeming feature. When an amorphous group of persons come together it cannot be said that they indulge in any systematic or organised activity. Such group may indulge in activities and may remain cohesive only for a temporary period and thereafter would disintegrate. The acts of the mob of which the appellant was a member cannot be stated to be the result of any organisation or any group indulging in violent activities formed with any purpose or scheme so as to call an organised activity. In that sense it may be said that the acts of the mob of which the appellant was a member was only the result of a temporary frenzy. He did not play the role of a leader of the mob as noticed earlier. This not a case where Courts below should have imposed a capital punishment. Kishori v. State of Delhi, AIR 1999 SC 382 (386, 387) : (1999) 1 SCC 148 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 1 : 1999 CrLJ 584 : JT 1998 (8) SC 248 : 1999 (1) Crimes 18 (SC).

[12221] ● Death sentence—Rarest of rare case—Consideration of individual role played by each accused.—The accused Dharampal had given the threat on the previous occasion that if anybody gives evidence in the rape case the whole family will be wiped off. It is he who after being convicted in the said rape case preferred an appeal and obtained a bail from the High Court and has totally misutilised that privilege of bail by killing 5 persons who were all members of family of witness whose deposition was responsible for his conviction in the rape case. It is he who has assaulted each of the 5 deceased persons by means of Kulhari and the nature of the injury as found by the doctor would indicate that the act is an act of a depraved mind and is of most brutal and heinous in nature. It is he who had consecrated the plan to put into action his earlier threat but he has taken the help of his brother. In the facts and circumstances narrated the act of accused Dharampal in giving brutal and merciless blows on the 5 deceased persons cannot but be held to be rarest of rare case for awarding the extreme penalty of death sentence. Nirmal Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 1999 SC 1221 (1224) : (1999) 3 SCC 670 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 472 : 1999 CrLJ 1836 : JT 1999 (2) SC 225 : 1999 (3) Supreme 212 : 1999 (2) Crimes 25 (SC).

[12222] ● Death sentence—When not proper.—Accused was all throughout feeling that he and his family members were humiliated by the other party who were rich and influential and who were intending to grab the plot/Ghar belonging to them. He was working in BSF as a disciplined member of the Armed Forces aged about 23 at the relevant time, having no criminal antecedent. Appellant-accused was feeling much more hurt because family members of the appellant including women-folk were not getting any police protection even though they were assaulted. It has been pointed out in the application that his younger brother's wife having seven months' pregnancy was assaulted and she was required to be hospitalised. It also reveals that for a period of more than three months appellant was requesting the authorities to take action so that he and his family members can live in peace. It was his allegation that the SHO of the Police Station was conniving with the other side and had demanded five thousands rupees as a ransom which their family members were unable to pay, therefore, no action was taken against the other party. Even though this is a gruesome act on the part of the appellant, yet it is a result of human mind going astray because of constant harassment of the family members of the appellant as narrated above. It could be termed as a case of retribution or act for taking revenge. No doubt, it would not be a justifiable act at all, but the accused was feeling morally justifiable on his part. Hence, it would be difficult to term it as the "rarest of the rare" cases. Further, this is not a crime committed because of lust for wealth or women, that is to say, murders are neither for money such as extortion, dacoity or robbery; nor even for lust and rape; it is not an act of anti-social element, kidnapping and trafficking in minor girls or of an anti-social element dealing in dangerous drugs which affects the entire moral fibre of the society and kills number of persons; nor is it crime committed for power or political ambitions or part of organised criminal activities. It is a crime committed by the accused who had a cause to feel aggrieved for injustice meted out to his family members at the hands of the family of the other party who according to him were strong enough physically as well as economically and having influence with the authority which was required to protect him and his family. The bitterness increased to a boiling point and because of the agony suffered by him and his family members at the hands of the other party and for not getting protection from the police officers concerned or total inaction despite repeated written prayers goaded or compelled the accused to take law in his own hands which culminated in gruesome murders, may be that his mind got derailed of the track and went astray or beyond control because of extreme mental disturbances for the constant harassment and disputes. Further considering the facts and circumstances, it cannot be said that he would be a menace to the society; there is no reason to believe that he cannot be reformed or rehabilitated and that he is likely to continue criminal acts of violence as would constitute a continuing threat to the society. Om Prakesh v. State of Haryana, AIR 1999 SC 1332 (1338, 1339) : (1999) 3 SCC 19 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 334 : 1999 CrLJ 2044 : JT 1999 (1) SC 599.

[12224] ● Death sentence—Rarest of rare case—Absence of mitigating factors.—In this case the facts establish the depravity and criminality of the accused in no uncertain terms. No regard being had for precious life of the young child also. The compassionate ground of the accused being of 22 years of age cannot in the facts of the matter be termed to be at all relevant. The Learned Sessions Judge has considered the matter from all its aspects and there is no infirmity under Section 235(2) or under Section 354(3) of the code. The murder was cold blooded and brutal without any provocation. The savage nature of the crime has shocked our judicial conscience. The murder was cold blooded and brutal without any provocation. It certainly makes it rarest of the rare cases in which there are no extenuating or mitigating circumstances. Jai Kumar v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1999 SC 1860 : (1999) 5 SCC 1 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 638 : 1999 CrLJ 2569 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 409 : JT 1999 (3) SC 504 : (1999) 3 Crimes 120.

[12225] ● Death sentence—Reasons given do not conform to guidelines.—In Machhi Singh v. State of Punjab, (1983) 3 SCC 470 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 681. This Court held that in order to award death sentence the Court should ask itself and answer the following questions: (1) Was there something uncommon about the crime which renders sentence of imprisonment for life inadequate and calls for a death sentence? (2) Were the circumstances of the crime such that there is no alternative but to impose death sentence even after according maximum weightage to the mitigating circumstances which speak in favour of the offender? The reasons given by the trial Court for awarding death sentence do not conform to the guidelines laid down in Machhi Singh's case. Ramji Raj v. State of Bihar, AIR 1999 SC 3857 : (1999) 8 SCC 389 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 1446 (1451, 1452) : 2000 CrLJ 19 : JT 1999 (8) SC 236 : (1999) 4 Crimes 308.

[12226] ● Sentence altered to imprisonment for life.—"Another consideration which we find different to overlook is – She (accused) is the mother of a little female child who would not have even experienced maternal cuddling as that little one was born in captivity. Of course, the maxim "justicia non novit patrem nee matrem" (Justice knows no father nor mother) is a pristine doctrine. But it cannot be allowed to reign with its rigour in the sphere of sentence determination. As we have confirmed the death sentence passed on the father of that small child, an effort to save its mother from gallows may not militate against jus gladii so that an innocent child can be saved from imposed orphanhood. Thus, on an evaluation of the plus and minus, pros and cons we persuade ourselves to save A-1 (Nalini) from gallows. Hence, the sentence passed on her is altered to one of imprisonment for life. State of Tamil Nadu v. Nalini, AIR 1999 SC 2640 : (1999) 5 SCC 253 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 691 (788) : 1999 CrLJ 3124 : JT 1999 (4) SC 106.

[12227] ● Death sentence—In rarest of rare cases.—The acts attributed to the mob of which the appellant was a member at the relevant time cannot be stated to be a result of an organized systematic activity leading to genocide. Perhaps it can be visualized that to the extent there was unlawful assembly and to the extent that the mob wanted to teach a stern lesson to the Sikhs, there was some organisation; but in that design, that they did not consider that women and children should be annihilated which is a redeeming feature. When an amorphous group of persons come together, it cannot be said that they indulge in any systematic or organised activity. Such group may indulge in activities and may remain cohesive only for a temporary period and thereafter would disintegrate. The acts of the mob of which the appellant was a member cannot be stated to be the result of an organisation or any group indulging in violent activities formed with any purpose or scheme so as to call an organized activity. In that sense, we may say that the acts of the mob of which the appellant was a member was only the result of a temporary frenzy. He did not play the role of a leader of the mob as noticed earlier on the totality of the circumstances, this is not a case which can be called "a rarest or rare cases" which warrants imposition of maximum punishment of capital sentence. Kishori v. State (NCT) of Delhi, AIR 2000 SC 562 (567) : (2000) 2 SCC 83 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 324 : 2000 CrLJ 756.

[12228] ● Rape and murder of minor girl—Sentence of death altered to life imprisonment.— It is disconcerting that a case like this in which the prosecution has presented such reliable and formidable circumstances forming into a complete chain and pointing unerringly to the irresistible conclusion that the little girl was raped and killed by none other than the respondent himself, indeed in unmerited acquittal from the High Court. Criminal justice unfortunately became a casualty in this case when the High Court side-stepped all such circumstances and exonerated the culprit of such a grotesque crime. Extreme penalty of death can be chosen for such a crime, but as the accused was once acquitted by the High Court. We refrain from imposing that extreme penalty in spite of the fact that this case is perilously near the region of the "rarest of the rare cases" envisaged by the constitution Bench in Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, 1980 SCC (Cri) 580. State of Maharashtra v. Suresh, (2000) 1 SCC 471 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 263 (271, 272) : 2000 CrLR (SC) 122.

[12230] ● Killing of children due to ignorance—Life imprisonment awarded.—Looking at the horrendous acts committed by the accused, it can doubtlessly be said that this is an extremely rare case. Nonetheless a fact which loom's large in this case is that the accused genuinely believed that a hidden treasure trove could be winched to the surface by infantile sacrifice ceremonially performed. It is germane to note that none of the children were abducted or killed for ransom or for vengeance or for committing robbery. It was due to utter ignorance that these accused became so gullible to such superstitious thinking. Of course, such thinking was also motivated by greed for gold. Accordingly the accused should undergo imprisonment for life for the offence under Section 302 read with Section 34, IPC. State of Maharashtra v. Damu Gopinath Shinde, AIR 2000 SC 1691 : (2000) 6 SCC 269 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1088 (1103, 1104) : 2000 CrLJ 2301 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 538.

[12231] ● Case fall within category of rarest of rare cases—Accused deserves death penalty.— The appellant was charged under Sections 302 and 326, IPC for having caused the death of four persons of a family. He was also charged with having caused injuries with the sharp edged weapon to Smt. Jayanti Das, the mother of deceased 1 and Shri Rajen Hazarika, neighbour of the deceased. It was a case of pre-planned cold-blooded brutal murder of four inmates of a house. It is true that life sentence is the rule and death sentence is an exception. But present case is an exceptional case which warrants the awarding of maximum penalty under the law to the accused-appellant. The crime committed by the appellant is not only shocking but it has also jeopardised the society. The awarding of lesser sentence only on the ground of the appellant being a youth at the time of occurrence cannot be considered as a mitigating circumstance in view of our findings that the murders committed by him were most cruel, heinous and dastardly. We have no doubt that the present case is the rarest of the rare requiring the maximum penalty imposable under law. Ramdeo Chauhan v. State of Assam, AIR

2000 SC 2679 : (2000) 7 SCC 455 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1392 (1399) : 2000 CrLJ 3954 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 616 : 2000 CrAppR (SC) 437. TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) Narayan Chetanram Chaudhary v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2000 SC 3352 : (2000) 8 SCC 457 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1546 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 700.

[12232] ● Appellant killing out of confusion—Not fit case to award death sentence.—What appears to have been overlooked by the Courts below is that the appellant and Sudipa wanted only Sudipa's mother to be removed from this world. At no point of time the appellant had planned to kill Sudipa's father and her grand parents. Sudipa was ill-treated by her mother and no other way could be seen for improving Sudipa's future. It was, therefore, out of helplessness and frustration that Sudipa and appellant had decided to remove her. There was no other reason. Till Sudipa's mother was made to eat the "kalojam" mixed with poison, there was not even the remotest desire on the part of the appellant to kill Sudipa's father or her grand parents. The subsequent events happened unexpectedly. The appellant killed them out of confusion and fright that he would be named as the murderer of Sudipa's mother. If all these circumstances would have been taken into consideration, probably the Trial Court would not have imposed the death sentence upon the appellant. And the High Court would not have confirmed the same considering the facts and circumstances of the case, it can be said that this is not a fit case in which the death sentence can be regarded as an appropriate punishment. Randhir Basu v. State of West Bengal, AIR 2000 SC 908 (924) : (2000) 3 SCC 161 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 587 : 2000 CrLJ 1417 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 364 : JT 2000 (1) SC 618.

[12233] ● Capital punishment substituted to imprisonment for life.—The crime committed is undoubtedly serious and heinous and the conduct of the appellant is reprehensible. It reveals a dirty and perverted mind of a human being who has no control over his carnal desires. Then the question is : Whether the case can be classified as of a "rarest of rare" category justifying the severest punishment of death. Treating the case on the touchstone of the guidelines laid down in Bachan Singh 1, Machhi Singh 2 and other decisions and balancing the aggravating and mitigating circumstances emerging from the evidence on record, we are not persuaded to accept that the case can be appropriately called one of the "rarest of rare cases" deserving death penalty. We find it difficult to hold that the appellant is such a dangerous person that to spare his life will endanger the community. We are also not satisfied that the circumstances of the crime are such that there is no alternative but to impose death sentence even after according maximum weightage to the mitigating circumstances in favour of the offender. The case is one in which a humanist approach should be taken in the matter of awarding punishment. Accordingly, the capital sentence imposed against the appellant by the Courts below is set aside. Instead the appellant shall suffer rigorous imprisonment for life. Subject to the above modification of sentence, the appeals filed by the accused are dismissed. Mohd. Chaman v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2001) 2 SCC 28 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 278 (289) : 2001 CrLJ 725.

[12234] ● When two views possible about question of sentence, view favouring grant of life in comparison of death accepted.—There is no denial of the fact that the appellant-accused convicts, who were earlier involved in the murder of Om Prakash, son of Bhagwan Ram left no stone unturned to eliminate the whole family of the said Bhagwan Ram including three eyewitnesses in that case, namely, Bhagwan Ram, Sunder Ram and Subash Chander. It is also established that the aforesaid accused persons attacked the deceased and the injured at the dead hour of night when they were sleeping, being incapable of defending themselves. The means adopted in execution of the evil designs speak of the mental condition of the accused persons whom the trial Court found to have been involved in the commission of a crime termed by it as rarest of the rare cases. The High Court, while commuting the death sentences, appears to have completely ignored various pronouncements of this Court dealing with the yardstick to be adopted while awarding the death sentence. Merely because 8 persons, convicted by the trial Court, were acquitted, by itself cannot be termed to be a justified ground for commuting the death sentence. However, as the High Court, presumably on a general conspectus and upon consideration of facts of the case, found that the accused persons should not be awarded with death sentence, we feel that for interfering with the discretion of the Court, further exceptional grounds are required to be made out. When two views are possible about the quantum of sentence, a view which favours the grant of life in comparison of death is generally accepted. Subash Chander v. Krishan Lal, AIR 2001 SC 1903 : (2001) 4 SCC 458 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 735 (742, 743) : 2001 CrLJ 1825.

[12235] ● Death sentence commutation of—To life imprisonment.—In the present case from, the confessional statement made by the accused, it would appear that there was no intention on the part of the accused to commit the murder of the deceased-child. He caused injury to the deceased by giving two brick blows as she stated that she would disclose the incident at her house. There is nothing on record to indicate that the appellant was having any criminal record nor he can be said to be a grave danger to the society at large. In these circumstances, it would be difficult to hold that the case of the appellant would be rarest of rare case justifying imposition of death penalty. The conviction of the appellant under section is upheld, but the sentence of death is commuted to imprisonment of life. Raju v. State of Haryana, AIR 2001 SC 2043 (2045, 2046) : (2001) 9 SCC 50 : 2001 CrLJ 2580 : 2001 CrLR (SC) 448 : JT 2001 (5) SC 213.

[12236] ● Technicalities of law not to come in way of dispensing justices.—Despite holding that neither was the petitioner juvenile nor were the provisions of the Act applicable to the case, we examined this matter from another angle i.e. to find out as to whether the petitioner was near or about the age of a juvenile for the purposes of ascertaining as to whether the death sentence can be substituted by imprisonment for life. We are of the considered opinion that the technicalities of law cannot come in the way of dispensing justice in a case where the accused is likely to be given the extreme penalty imposable under law. Ram Deo Chauhan v. State of Assam, 2001 SCC (Cri) 915 (934).

[12237] ● Imposition of death penalty—Laying down standards.—Regarding the question of laying down standards and norms restricting the area of imposition of death penalty, if by "laying down standards", it is meant that "murder" should be categorised beforehand according to the degrees of its culpability and all the aggravating and mitigating circumstances should be exhaustively and rigidly enumerated so as to exclude all free play of discretion. The argument merits rejection. Such standardisation is well-nigh impossible. Firstly, degree of culpability cannot be measured in each case; secondly, criminal cases cannot be categorised, there being infinite, unpredictable and enforceable variations; thirdly, on such categorisation, the sentencing process will cease to be judicial; and fourthly, such standardisation or sentencing discretion is a policy-matter belonging to the legislature beyond the Court's function. Mohd. Chaman v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2001) 2 SCC 28 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 278 (283, 284) : 2001 CrLJ 725.

[12238] ● Supreme Court would not venture to formulate rigid standards in area in which Legislature warily treads.—This Court should not venture to formulate rigid standards in an area in which the legislature so warily treads. Only broad guidelines consistent with the policy indicated by the legislature in Section 354(3) can be laid down. Mohd. Chaman v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2001) 2 SCC 28 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 278 (284) : 2001 CrLJ 725.

[12239] ● Death sentences commuted to life imprisonment—Appellant to serve twenty years of imprisonment including period already undergone.—Crimes, like the one before us, cannot be looked upon with equanimity because they tend to destroy one's faith in all that is good in life. A young man was given an opportunity to learn goldsmithery. He was once sent away for an alleged act of theft. Yet again, on the day of incident, he was permitted to accompany the deceased old man and as per the evidence, he accompanied the deceased to his house. The reward of that kindness is murder of the old man and his wife along with three daughters including one whose marriage was to be held after two months. Hence, even though we reduce the death penalty, we think that punishment should be sufficient so as to have deterrent effect as well as (sic one that gives), no further chance to the accused for relapsing into the crime and becoming a danger to society. Of course, the nature of the crime committed by the appellant was so horrendous and exceptionally cruel and sadistic. However, we are inclined to take a lenient view having regard to the various facts and circumstances of the case. In dealing with criminal matters where death sentence is prescribed in law as the punishment for the crime, the Courts are required to answer new challenges as the object has to be not only to protect the society at large, but impose appropriate sentence lest there should be tendency to undermine the public confidence in the criminal justice delivery system. In the interest of justice, we commute the death sentence imposed upon the appellant and direct that the appellant shall undergo the sentence of imprisonment for life. We further direct that the appellant shall not be released from the prison unless he had served out at least 20 years of imprisonment including the period already undergone by the appellant. As regards offences under Sections 392 and 397, IPC, we confirm the conviction of the appellant and no separate sentence is awarded. Shri Bhagwan v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 2001 SC 2342 : (2001) 6 SCC 296 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 1095.

[12240] ● No previous enmity nor any acquaintance with victims—Death sentence altered to life imprisonment.—The appellants had neither any previous enmity with the victims nor even any acquaintance with them. It is an admitted fact that they acted in a rage of fury blindfolded by communal frenzy. We are aware that in most of the communal riots the participants are by and large illiterate and indoctrinated people. When the literate leaders try to keep themselves away, without participating in the perpetration of crimes though, perhaps, some such persons would fan up the communal frenzy by their utterances in the minds of the ignorant poor people who in a deranged fury rush into the streets prowling for prey. It was an unfortunate plight of the people who are ignorant about the real sublime thoughts of religions that they threw themselves into the cauldron of communal delirium which was burning up to the boiling point. That was a time when the minds of the rioters turned demented and no sensible thoughts would enter into them. The leaders and the society have not played their part to teach them that religions are not meant for killing fellow human beings. If ignorance had promoted people to take up cudgels in the name of religion for indulging in carnage or murders they are no doubt liable to be convicted and sentenced for the offence committed by them. But we have great difficulty to treat such a case as rarest of rare cases in which the alternative sentence of life imprisonment can unquestionably be foreclosed. Thus, we alter the sentence passed on Nasim @ Naso for the offence under Section 302 read with Section 149, IPC and impose the next alternative (imprisonment for life) for the said offence. Subject to this modification of the sentence we dismiss both these appeals. Lakeman Shah v. State of West Bengal, 2001 SCC (Cri) 829.

[12242] ● Death sentence or life imprisonment—Factors to be considered.—The appellant had been labouring under the strain suspecting character of his wife. This fact is mentioned by none else but by the complainant Ashaben herself in her report. She also admitted in her statement in Court that quite often there has been quarrel between the two on that count. Though denied, a suggestion has been made to PW-3 Ashaben in her cross-examination that the appellant had been telling her that their sons were not of him. It is true that does not seem to be any immediate cause before the commission of offence, yet the fact remains that rightly or wrongly such a painful belief was being entertained by the appellant since long which constantly engaged his mind as admittedly there had been quarrels on that count between the two. Obviously he would have been brooding under that idea, which perhaps he could not contain any more. It is true that two innocent children lost their lives for no fault of theirs. We also notice that Dharia is a weapon, which is ordinarily to be found in the house of any farmer or agriculturist in that area as stated by PW- 3. He seems to have used the weapon as lying in the house. The offence was obviously not committed for lust of power of otherwise or with a view to garb any property nor in pursuance of any organized criminal or anti-social activity. Chances of repetition of such criminal acts at his hands making the society further vulnerable are also not apparent. He had no previous criminal record. For the above reasons in our view it cannot be said that the case falls in the category of rarest of rare cases so as to make the appellant liable for extreme penalty of death. The crime committed is not doubt heinous and unpardonable. The act of the appellant is condemnable. In our view however the normal sentence of life imprisonment for the offence of murder would meet the ends of justice. Dharmendrasinh v. State of Gujarat, AIR 2002 SC 1937 : (2002) 4 SCC 679 : 2002 CrLJ 2631 : 2002 (3) SCR 193 : 2002 (3) SCJ 435 : 2002 (2) Crimes 294 (SC).

[12243] ● Death sentences—Rarest of rare cases—Circumstances constituting explained.—In rarest or rare cases where the collective conscience of the community is so shocked, that it will expect the holders of the judicial power center to inflict death penalty irrespective of their personal opinion as regards desirability or otherwise of retaining death penalty, death sentence can be awarded. The community may entertain such sentiment in the following circumstances:-

(1) When the murder is committed in an extremely brutal, grotesque, diabolical, revolting, or dastardly manner so as to arouse intense and extreme indignation of the community.

(2) When the murder is committed for a motive which evinces total depravity and meanness; e.g. murder by hired assassin for money or reward; or cold-blooded murder for gains of a person vis-a-vis whom the murder is in a dominating position or in a position of trust; or murder is committed in the course for betrayal of the motherland.

(3) When murder of a member of a scheduled Caste or minority community etc., is committed not for personal reasons but in circumstances which arouse social wrath, or in cases of 'bride burning' or 'dowry deaths' or when murder is committed in order to remarry for the sake of extracting dowry once again or to marry another woman on account of infatuation.

(4) When the crime is enormous in proportion. For instance when multiple murders, say of all or almost all the members of a family or a large number of persons of a particular caste, community, or locality, are committed.

(5) When the victim of murder is an innocent child, or a helpless woman or old or infirm person or a person vis-à-vis whom the murderer is in a dominating position, or a public figure generally loved and respected by the community.

If upon taking an overall global view of all the circumstances in the light of the aforesaid propositions and taking into account the answers to the questions posed by way of the test for the rarest of rare cases, the circumstances of the cases are such that death sentence is warranted, the Court would proceed to do so. Lehna v. State of Haryana, (2002) 3 SCC 76 : 2002 (1) SCJ 406 : (2002) 1 SCR 377.

[12244] ● Court to state "special reasons" in case of death sentence.—Section 354(3) of the Code, marks a significant shift in the legislative policy underlying the old Code as in force immediately before 1st April 1974, according to which both the alternative sentences of death or imprisonment for life provided for murder were normal sentences. Now, under Section 354(3) of the Code the normal punishment for murder is imprisonment for life and death penalty is an exception. The Court is required to state the reasons for the sentence awarded and in case of death sentence 'special reasons' are required to be stated, that is to say, only special facts and circumstances will warrant the passing of the death sentence. It is in the light of these successive legislative changes in Code and the juridical decisions prior to the amendment made by Act 26 of 1955 and again Act 2 of 1974 have to be understood. Lehna v. State of Haryana, (2002) 3 SCC 76 : 2002 (1) SCJ 406.

[12245] ● Death sentence—Mental conditions of accused relevant.—It is true three lives have been lost. But at the same time, the mental condition of the accused which led to the assault cannot be lost sight of. The same may not be relevant to judge culpability. But is certainly a factor while considering question of sentence. There is no evidence of any diabolic planning to commit the crime, though cruel was the act. Deprived of his livelihood on account of the land being taken away, the accused was, as the evidence shows, exhibiting his displeasure, his resentment. Frequency of the quarrels indicate lack of any sinister planning to take away lives of the deceased. The factual scenario gives impressions of impulsive act and not planned assaults. In the peculiar background, death sentence would not be proper. A sentence of imprisonment for life will be more appropriate. The sentence is accordingly modified, while confirming the conviction for offence punishable under Section 302, IPC. Lehna v. State of Haryana, (2002) 3 SCC 76 : 2002 (1) SCR 377.

[12246] ● Death sentence—Award of.—While imposing death penalty, the factors to be taken into account by the Court, for illustration are : the motive of the crime, the manner of the assault, the impact of the crime on the society as a whole, the personality of the accused, circumstances and facts of the case as to whether the crime committed is for satisfying any kind of lust, greed or in pursuance of any organised anti-social activity or by way of organised crime, drug trafficking or the like or the chances of inflicting the society with a similar criminal act that is to say vulnerability of the members of the society at the hands of the accused in future or commission of murder which may be shocking to the conscience. State of Punjab v. Gurmej Singh, AIR 2002 SC 2811 : (2002) 6 SCC 663 : 2002 CrLJ 3741 : JT 2002 (6) SC 299 : 2002 (4) Crimes 11 (SC).

[12247] ● Death sentence when not justified.—In rarest of rare cases when collective conscience of the community is so shocked that it will expect the holders of the judicial power centre to inflict death penalty irrespective of their personal opinion as regards desirability or otherwise retaining death penalty, such a penalty can be inflicted. In the facts and circumstances of the present case, it is not possible to come to the conclusion that the present case would fall within the category of rarest of rare one. Therefore, we are clearly of the opinion that in the fitness of things, extreme penalty of death was not called. Farooq v. State of Kerala, AIR 2002 SC 1825 : (2002) 4 SCC 697 : 2002 CrLJ 2534 : JT 2002 (4) SC 1 : 2002 (3) Scale 361 : 2002 (2) Crimes 183 (SC).

[12248] ● Death penalty awarded by Court below propriety of.—Having regard to the absence of evidence to the contrary that the appellants are a menace to the society threatening the peaceful and harmonious co-existence of the society and they are likely to be a continuous threat to the society if once they come out of incarceration, no doubt the crime was committed in a heinous and brutal manner but viewed from the facts and circumstances, as noticed above, it would be difficult to hold that the case falls within the category of "rarest of rare". At the same time, there is no reason to believe that they cannot be reformed or rehabilitated. Viewed from the aforesaid perspective, we are of the opinion that the appellants must be given a chance to repent that what they have done is neither approved by the law or by the society and be reformed or rehabilitated and become good and law abiding citizens. Bachhitar Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 2002 SC 3473 : (2002) 8 SCC 125 : JT 2002 (7) SC 413 : 2002 (9) SRJ 511 : 2002 (7) Scale 59.

[12249] ● Designated Court justified in upholding conviction.—As a result of the incident of gruesome murder of 35 persons of one community there was great commotion in the locality. There cannot be any manner of doubt that the villagers were done to death in an extremely diabolic, revolting and dastardly manner and had affected the normal tempo of life of the community in the locality. The crime in the present case is not only ghastly, but also enormous in proportion as 35 persons, all of whom belonged to one community, were massacred. Thus, after taking into consideration the balance sheet of aggravating and mitigating circumstances, in which 35 persons have been deprived of their lives by the accused persons who were thirsty of their blood. I have no doubt in holding that culpability of the accused persons assumes the proposition of extreme depravity that a special reason can legitimately be said to exist within the meaning of Section 354(3) of the Code of Criminal Procedure in the case on hand and it would be mockery of justice if extreme penalty of death is not imposed. Thus, I am clearly of the opinion that the Designated Court was quite justified in upholding convictions of the appellants and awarding the extreme penalty of death which punishment alone was called for in the facts of the present case. Krishna Mochi v. State of Bihar, AIR 2002 SC 1965 : (2002) 6 SCC 81 : 2002 CrLJ 2645 : JT 2002 (4) SC 186 : 2002 (3) SCR 1 : 2002 (3) SCJ 163 : 2002 (2) Crimes 236 (SC).

[12250] ● Accused to suffer imprisonment for life—Not to be released before 20 years of imprisonment.—From the record, it is revealed that accused-Prakash Patil did not have any criminal tendency. He was working as Water Analyser (Sr. scientific Assistant). The facts and circumstances of the case reveal that he killed his brother, brother's wife and children because of frustration, as he was not partitioning the alleged joint property. No doubt, it is heinous and brutal crime but at the same time, it will be difficult to hold that it is rarest of rare case. It is also difficult to hold that appellant is a menace to the society and there is no reason to believe that he cannot be reformed or rehabilitated and that he is likely to continue criminal acts of violence as would constitute a continuing threat to the Society Re : Om Prakash v. State of Haryana, (1999) 3 SCC 19. Considering the facts and circumstances, we set aside the death sentence and direct that for murders committed by him, he shall suffer imprisonment for life but he shall not be released unless he had served out at least 20 years of imprisonment including the period already undergone by him. Prakesh Dhawai Khairnar (Patil) v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2002 SC 340 (350) : (2002) 2 SCC 35 : 2002 CrLJ 928 : (2002) 1 Crimes 18.

[12251] ● Death penalty—Modified to life imprisonment—Accused not entitled to commutation or premature release.—In this case considering the heinous act of terrorism and brutal murder of two Police Constables who were on duty to guard Shailesh Haldankar, even though the we held that this would not be a fit case for imposing death sentence, we direct that accused will not be entitled to any commutation or premature release under Section 433-A of CrPC, Prisoners Act, Jail Manual or any other statute and the rules made for the purpose of commutation and remissions. Jayawant Dattatray Suryarao v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2002 SC 143 : (2001) 10 SCC 109 : 2002 CrLJ 226.

[12252] ● Rape and murder—Not rarest of rare case—Death sentence not justified.—In the instant case the accused was sentenced to death, for offence of rape and murder of 6 year's old child. The learned Counsel for the appellant submitted that in any set of circumstances, this is not the rarest of the rare case where accused is to be sentenced to death. He submitted that age of the accused on the relevant day was less than 22 years. It is his submission that even though the act is heinous, considering the fact that no injuries were found on the deceased, it is probable that death might have occurred because of gagging her mouth and nosetrix by the accused at the time of incident so that she may not raise hue and cry. The death, according to him, was accidental and unintentional one. In the present case, there is nothing on record to indicate that the appellant was having any criminal record nor it can be said that he will be a grave danger to the Society at large. It is true that his act is a heinous one and requires to be condemned but at the same time it cannot be said that it is rarest of the rare case where accused requires to be eliminated from the society. Hence, there is no justifiable reason to impose the death sentence. Bantu v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2002 SC 70 (72) : 2002 CrLJ 211.

[12253] ● Murder—Mitigating circumstances—Death sentence not warranted.—Every murder is a heinous crime. Apart from personal implications it is also a crime against the society but in every case of murder death penalty is not to be awarded. Under the present legal position imprisonment for life is the normal rule for punishing crime of murder and sentence of death, as held in different cases referred to above, would be awarded only in the rarest of rare cases. The number of factors are to be taken into account namely, the motive of the crime, the manner of the assault, the impact of the crime on the society as a whole, the personality of the accused, circumstances and facts of the case as to whether the crime committed, has been committed for satisfying and kind of lust, greed or in pursuance of anti-social activity or by way of organized crime, drug-trafficking or the like. Chances of inflicting the society with the similar criminal act that is to say vulnerability of the members of the society at the hands of the accused in future and ultimately as held in several cases mitigating and aggravating circumstances of each case has to be considered and a balance has to be struck. Dharmendra Singh v. State of Gujarat, AIR 2002 SC 1937 : (2002) 4 SCC 679 : 2002 CrLJ 2631 : JT 2002 SC 239 : 2002 (3) SCR 193 : 2002 (3) SCJ 435 : 2002 (2) Crimes 294 (SC).

[12254] ● Rape and murder sentence altered to life imprisonment.—In the present case the accused was found guilty of offence of rape and murder of 3 year's old girl. Accused was convicted and sentenced to trial Court, but acquitted by High Court. Regarding sentence we would have concurred with the Sessions Court's view that the extreme penalty of death can be chosen for such a crime. However, as the accused was once acquitted by the High Court, we reform from imposing that extreme penalty in spite of the fact that this case is perilously near the region of "rarest of the rare cases" as envisaged by the constitution Bench in Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1980 2 SCC 684). However, the lesser option is not unquestionably foreclosed and so alter the sentence, in regard to the offence under Section 302, IPC is altered to imprisonment for life. State of Maharashtra v. Bharat Fakira Dhiwar, AIR 2002 SC 16 (23) : (2002) 1 SCC 622 : 2002 CrLJ 218.

[12255] ● Death sentence—Commutation of to life imprisonment.—Appellant, a fruit vendor, has no criminal background. His wife and daughter were not pleased with the house appellant had purchased after raising loans. They were engaging in quarrels constantly with appellant. Continuous harassment and constraint ragging could have reached a boiling point resulting in the dastardly act of murder.

The appellant though hailing from a poor family, had no criminal background and it could not be reasonably postulated that he will not get rehabilitated or that he would be a menace to the society. The boy of tender age would also once for all be deprived of the parental protection. Keeping in view all these aspects, it would not be said that the imposition of life imprisonment would not adequately meet the requirements of the case or that only an imposition of the extreme punishment alone would do real or effective justice. Vashram Narshibai Rajpara v. State of Gujarat, AIR 2002 SC 2211 : (2002) 9 SCC 168 : 2002 CrLJ 2930 : JT 2002 (4) SC 433 : (2002) 2 Crimes 306.

[12256] ● Appreciation of evidence—Benefit of doubt.—In this case, incidentally the persecution involved both the father and the son—whereas the father has to wait outside, the son was completing his part of duty in a most heinous killing of four person. The Sessions Court however, in the absence of iota of evidence of even his presence outside the door acquitted the father, though convicted the son under Section 302 and the High Court converts the sentence of death penalty to that of life imprisonment but the State has also appealed against the High Court's findings and Mr. Sushil Kumar appearing for the State in no uncertain terms, submitted that the States appeal is by reason of the fact that a social evil ought not to be allowed to be in the midst of the society since accused Ravi is not only an evil but a social menace. The State's anxiety to put a man in the gallows is however not very plainly understandable, neither it is understandable as to the statute, attitude being eye for an eye and tooth for a tooth—it is true that it is the State's responsibility to maintain law and order but the State on the other hand also maintains reformatory Schools and if the State has failed to bring the accused to books in a Court of law, can the State's failure to be countenanced by the Apex Court. Deepak Kumar v. Ravi Virmani, AIR 2002 SC 1320 : (2002) 2 SCC 737 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 470 (484) : 2002 CrLJ 1781.

[12257] ● Nothing on record to suggest that accused menace to society—Death sentence not warranted.—There is no evidence on record to suggest that the appellants are a menace to society as evidence by their past deeds. It is not possible to conclude that they are those who cannot be reformed or rehabilitated and that they constitute a continuing threat to the society. In fact, apart from the incident in question, there is not even an allegation about the appellants having indulged in such behaviors in the past or having resorted to violence and committed any offence whatsoever. They appear to belong to a middle class farmer family for whom land has great value. But even so, there is nothing to suggest that they may repeat such barbarism in future so that they would constitute a continuing threat to the society. Having regard to all the facts and circumstances, and also having regard to the fact that the evidence does not disclose the immediate cause of the incident, we do not find it safe to confirm the sentence of death awarded by the High Court to Lallan Singh and Babban Singh. Ram Anup Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 2002 (SC) 3006 : (2002) 6 SCC 686 : 2002 CrLJ 3927 : JT 2002 (5) SC 621 : 2002 (3) Crimes 71 (SC).

[12258] ● Terrorist act—Death sentence most appropriate.—As the factual scenario of the present case shows, at least nine persons died, several persons were injured, a number of vehicles caught fire and were destroyed on account of the perpetrated acts. The dastardly acts were diabolic in conception and cruel in execution. The "terrorists" who are sometimes described as "death merchants" have no respect for human life. Innocent persons lose their lives because of mindless killing by them. Any compassion for such persons would frustrate the purpose of enactment of TADA, and would amount to misplaced and unwarranted sympathy. Death sentence is the most appropriate sentence in the case at hand, and learned trial Judge has rightly awarded it. Devender Pal Singh v. State (NCT) of Delhi, AIR 2002 SC 1661 : (2002) 5 SCC 234 : 2002 CrLJ 2034 : JT 2002 (3) SC 264 : 2002 (2) Crimes 133 (SC).

[12259] ● Murder committed in most diabolical and brutal manner—Beyond reformation—Death sentence justified.—In the instant case the crime had been cleverly pre-planned and committed in a brutal and diabolical manner. Three out of four inmates of the house in which he was employed, were eliminated. There was an attempt to kill the fourth person (PW- 1) also. The accused had inflicted injuries on the young Sarit in such a cruel manner that his neck was practically severed from his body. Multiple injuries were inflicted on the vital parts of other victims. The cruel tendency of the appellant was writ large even in the manner of attack. His antecedents also revealed a cruel and savage behaviour on his part. The evidence on record reveals that he killed a pet bird and pressed feathers inside the nose of the hen. The crime committed by the accused shocks the conscience of the society at large. He is beyond reformation though he is young. Om Prakesh v. State of Uttranchal, (2003) 1 SCC 648 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 412 (422) : 2003 CrLJ 483.

[12260] ● Court required to state special reasons for awarding death sentence.—A balance-sheet of aggravating and mitigating circumstances has to be drawn up and in doing so the mitigating circumstances here to be accorded full weightage and a just balance has to be struck between the aggravating and the mitigating circumstances before the option is exercised. In order to apply these guidelines, inter alia, the following questions may be asked and answered: (a) Is there something uncommon about the crime which renders sentence of imprisonment for life inadequate and calls for a death sentence? (b) Are the circumstances of the crime such that there is no alternative but to impose death sentence even after according maximum weightage to the mitigating circumstances which speak in favour of the offender? State of Rajasthan v. Kheraj Ram, (2003) 8 SCC 224 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 1979 : AIR 2004 SC 3432.

[12262] ● Judicial discretion of Bench hearing appeal not to be curtailed.—The petition has been filed for issuance of a guidance as to what should be the appropriate approach in the case where one of the Judges in the Bench of Supreme Court while hearing an appeal against death sentence, acquits the accused person. We do not think that the judicial discretion of the Bench hearing the appeal can be curtailed in any manner by issuing guidelines. V. Mohini Giri v. Union of India, AIR 2003 SC 642 (642) : (2003) 9 SCC 158.

[12263] ● Multiple murders—Not role criterion for death penalty.—It is time the incident in question has prematurely terminated the life of 21 people but number of deaths cannot be role criterion for awarding the maximum punishment of death. What is the relative weight to be given to the aggravating and mitigating factors, depends on the facts and circumstances of the particular case. More often than not, these two aspects are so intertwined that it is difficult to give a separate treatment to each of them. This is so because style is the man. In many cases, the extremely cruel or beastly manner of the commission of murder is itself a demonstrated index of the depraved character of the perpetrator. That is why, it is not desirable to consider the circumstances of the crime and the circumstances of the criminal in two separate watertight compartments. As to the aggravating circumstances pre-planned, calculated, cold-blooded murder has always been regarded as one of an aggravated kind; so also a murder "diabolically conceived and cruelly executed" and the test of Ediga Anamma: "The weapons used and the manner of their use, the horrendous features of the crime and hapless, helpless state of the victim". Ram Pal v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 2003 SC 4168 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 1595 : 2003 CrLJ 3760 (3762) : (2003) 3 Crimes 234.

[12264] ● Murder of wife by strangulation case not falling within ambit of rarest of rare cases.—The facts of the case as unfolded by the prosecution are brief but horrendous, which shook human conscience. The marriage of the deceased Sujatha with accused Babu was solemnised on 2-2-1993 thereafter, the couple stayed together in the parental house of the bridegroom. The deceased seems to have elicited information from PW- 3 Lekha, wife of the elder brother of the accused, that the accused had a premarital affair with another woman. The deceased could not tolerate the information and became repulsed and adopted an unresponsive attitude towards the overtures, approach made by the accused and she succeeded in keeping him at bay on the bridal night. She adopted the same stiff attitude towards the accused on the second night also, i.e., 3-2-1993, which had enraged the accused. On being unable to sustain the lust for sex, persistently prevented by the deceased, the accused decided to end the life of the deceased, strangulated her and killed her. Thereafter, the body of the deceased was lifted and taken to an unused well, situated about 17 metres away from the house of the accused and dumped. In the present case in our view though the murder is gruesome, but taking the facts and circumstances into consideration, the crime committed by the accused does not satisfy the above tests and it is difficult to say that it falls within the ambit of the "rarest of rare" cases. In our view therefore, the sentence of life imprisonment for an offence under Section 302 would be adequate. Babu s/o Raveendran v. Babu s/o Bahuleyan, (2003) 7 SCC 37 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 1569 (1571, 1576).

[12265] ● For awarding a punishment of death sentence special reasons are required.—For awarding a punishment of death sentence, there must be some special reasons, the Courts should give relative weight to the aggravating and mitigating factors available on the facts of the case, the case in question should be a rarest of the rare cases. The fact that the murders in question were committed in such a deliberate and diabolic manner while the victims were sleeping, without any provocation whatsoever from the victims' side, that too having enjoyed the hospitality and kindness of the victims, indicates the cold-blooded and premeditated approach of the appellant to put to death the victims which included a child of three years' age just to gain some monetary benefit. The extenuating circumstances put forth by the learned counsel for the appellant in regard to the age of the appellant, his surviving relatives and the possibility of rehabilitation would not justify the Courts to impose a sentence of life imprisonment on the facts and circumstances of this case. Hence, the case in hand is a rarest of the rare cases involving a preplanned brutal murder without provocation, hence, there is no reason whatsoever to interfere even with the quantum of punishment awarded by the Courts below. The Supreme Court agreed with the findings of the Courts below and coming to the conclusion that the instant case was a rarest of rare case involving a preplanned brutal murder without provocation. Dayanidhi Bisoi v. State of Orissa, AIR 2003 SC 3915 : (2003) 9 SCC 310 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 1798 : 2003 CrLJ 3697 (3704) : (2003) 3 Crimes 167.

[12266] ● Brutal murder—Death sentence-Imprisonment for life not adequate sentence.—The aggravating circumstances of the case, however, are that the appellants, having known that on the next day a marriage was to take place in the house of the complainant and there would be lots of relatives present in her house, came there on the evening of 21-11-1991 when a feast was going on and started firing on the innocent persons. Thirteen persons were killed on the spot and eight others were seriously injured. The appellants thereafter went to another place and killed the father and brother of PW- 15. out of the thirteen persons, one of them was a seven-year-old child, three others were at the threshold of their lives. The postmortem reports show that their ages ranged between 15 and 17 years. They had also their right to live in this world peaceably and these appellants had no grievance or enmity against any one of them. In the course of wide-ranging submissions, the counsel for the appellants laid stress on the point that the underlying principle of our sentencing jurisprudence is reformation and there is nothing in evidence to show that the appellants may be a threat or menace to the society. It is true that we cannot say that they would be a further menace to the society or not as "we live as creatures saddled with an imperfect ability to predict the future". Nevertheless, the law prescribes for future, based upon its knowledge of the past and is being forced to deal with tomorrow's problems with yesterday's tools. The entire incident is extremely revolting and shocks the collective conscience of the community. The acts of murder committed by the appellants are so gruesome, merciless and brutal that the aggravating circumstances far outweigh the mitigating circumstances. Moreover, the two accused who were earlier tried are already sentenced to death and their special leave petition was finally disposed of by this Court.

Having regard to these facts, we do not think that this is a case where imprisonment for life is an adequate sentence to meet the ends of justice. Gurdev Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 2003 SC 4187 : (2003) 7 SCC 258 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 1616 (1627) : 2003 CrLJ 3764.

[12267] ● Death sentence—No rigid formula or standard to be fixed.—The consistent view of this Court in a series of rulings is to the effect that no rigid formula or standards can be fixed and only a broad guidelines consistent with the legislative policy indicated by the legislature in Section 354(3) CrPC alone shall be considered for invoking the extreme penalty of death sentence. A survey of some of the decisions of this Court would give an idea as to how this Court viewed various circumstances, which would warrant invocation of death penalty. Gurdev Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 2003 SC 4187 : (2003) 7 SCC 258 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 1616 (1625) : 2003 CrLJ 3764.

[12268] ● Court to record special reasons in case of capital punishment.—After amendment of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898 in 1974, there was significant change in the legislative policy with regard to the sentence of death or imprisonment for life provided for murder and certain other capital offences under the Indian Penal Code. As per the changed policy, when conviction for an offence punishable with death or in the alternative, with imprisonment for life or imprisonment for a term of years is recorded, the judgment should state reasons for the sentence awarded and in the case of sentence of death, special reasons must be given. Therefore, as per Section 354(3) CrPC, in every case where the Court finds that the capital punishment is the inevitable consequence, the Court should give special reasons. The constitutional validity of death sentence was itself challenged in Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab. One of the grounds of attack was that Section 354(3) CrPC provides for imposition of death penalty in an arbitrary and whimsical manner inasmuch as it does not lay down any rational principle or criterion for invoking the extreme penalty. The constitutional validity of the said section was upheld and the Constitution Bench stated that it is difficult to lay down a formula of universal application when facts are bound to be different from case to case and it would frustrate the very purpose of conferring a discretion on Courts. Gurdev Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 2003 SC 4187 : (2003) 7 SCC 258 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 1616 (1624) : 2003 CrLJ 3764.

[12269] ● Brutality in built in every murder.—Brutality is in built in every murder but in the case of every murder death sentence is not imposed. Life imprisonment is the rule and death sentence is the exception. The latter sentence is imposed in rarest of rare cases. Taking note of the mitigating circumstances, there is no scope for interference with the life sentence awarded. Prem Sagar v. Dharambir, AIR 2004 SC 21 : (2004) 1 SCC 113 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 22 (24) : 2004 CrLJ 17.

[12270] ● Death sentence—Justification for.—Section 302, IPC prescribes death or life imprisonment as the penalty for murder. While doing so, the Code instructs the Court as to its application. The changes which the Code has undergone in the last three decades clearly indicate that Parliament is taking note of contemporary criminological thought and movement. It is not difficult to discern that in the Code, there is a definite swing towards life imprisonment. Death sentence is ordinarily ruled out and can only be imposed for "special reasons", as provided in Section 354(3). There is another provision in the Code which also uses the significant expression "special reason". It is Section 361. Section 360 of the Code re-enacts, in substance, Section 562 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898 (in short "the old Code"). Section 361 which is a new provision in the Code makes it mandatory for the Court to record "special reasons" for not applying the provisions of Section 360. Section 361 thus casts a duty upon the Court to apply the provisions of Section 360 wherever it is possible to do so and to state "special reasons" if it does not do so. In the context of Section 360, the "special reasons" contemplated by Section 361 must be such as to compel the Court to hold that it is impossible to reform and rehabilitate the offender after examining the matter with due regard to the age, character and antecedents of the offender and the circumstances in which the offence was committed. This is some indication by the legislature that reformation and rehabilitation of offenders and not mere deterrence, are now among the foremost objects of the administration of criminal justice in our country. Section 361 and Section 354(3) have both entered the statute-book at the same time and they are part of the emerging picture of acceptance by the legislature of the new trends in criminology. It would not, therefore, be wrong to assume that the personality of the offender as revealed by his age, character, antecedents and other circumstances and the tractability of the offender to reform must necessarily play the most prominent role in determining the sentence to be awarded. Special reasons must have some relation to these factors. Criminal justice deals with complex human problems and diverse human beings. A judge has to balance the personality of the offender with the circumstances, situations and the reactions and choose the appropriate sentence to be imposed. Sushil Murmu v. State of Jharkhand, AIR 2004 SC 394 : (2002) 2 SCC 338 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 529 (533-34) : 2004 CrLJ 658.

[12271] ● Death penalty not warranted.—The question that arose for consideration was whether the case fall in the category of "rarest and rare case" in which death penalty should be imposed on the appellant was aged 36 years at the time of the occurrence and there is no evidence that the appellant had involved in any other criminal case previously and the appellant was a migrant labour from U.P. and was living in impecunious circumstances and it could not be said that he would be a menace to the society in future and no materials were produced to draw such a conclusion. The death penalty was not warranted in this case. The Supreme Court confirmed conviction of the appellant on all the counts, but the sentence of death penalty imposed on him for the offence under Section 302, IPC was commuted to life imprisonment. Surendra Pal Shivbalakpal v. State of Gujarat, AIR 2004 SC 4862 : (2005) 3 SCC 127 : 2004 CrLJ 4642 (4644) : 2004 (4) Crimes 110.

[12272] ● Normal punishment for in under death no longer operative.—The former rule that the normal punishment for murder is death is no longer operative and it is now within the discretion of the Court to pass either of the two sentences prescribed in this section; but whichever of the two sentences he passes, the judge must give his reasons for imposing a particular sentence. The amendment of Section 367(5) of the old Code does not affect the law regulating punishment under IPC. This amendment relates to procedure and now Courts are no longer required to elaborate the reasons for not awarding the death penalty; but they cannot depart from sound judicial considerations preferring the lesser punishment. Sushil Murmu v. State of Jharkhand, AIR 2004 SC 394 : (2004) 2 SCC 338 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 529 (534-35) : 2004 CrLJ 658.

[12273] ● Court to state reasons for sentence awarded.—Section 354(3) of the Code marks a significant shift in the legislative policy underlying the old Code as in force immediately before 1.4.1974, according to which both the alternative sentences of death or imprisonment for life provided for murder were normal sentences. Now, under Section 354(3) of the Code the normal punishment for murder is imprisonment for life and death penalty is an exception. The Court is required to state the reasons for the sentence awarded and in the case of death sentence "special reasons" are required to be stated, that is to say, only special facts and circumstances will warrant the passing of the death sentence. It is in the light of these successive legislative changes in the Code that the judicial decisions prior to the amendment made by Act 26 of 1955 and again Act 2 of 1974 have to be understood. Sushil Murmu v. State of Jharkhand, AIR 2004 SC 394 : (2004) 2 SCC 338 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 529 (534-535) : 2004 CrLJ 658.

[12274] ● Balance to be struck between an aggravating and mitigating circumstances.—A balance sheet of aggravating and mitigating circumstances has to be drawn up and in doing so the mitigating circumstances have to be accorded full weightage and a just balance has to be struck between the aggravating and the mitigating circumstances before the option is exercised. In order to apply these guidelines, inter alia, the following questions may be asked and answered : (a) is there something uncommon about the crime which renders sentence of imprisonment for life inadequate and calls for a death sentence? and (b) are the circumstances of the crime such there is no alternative but to impose death sentence even after according maximum weightage to the mitigating circumstances which speak in favour of the offender? Sushil Murmu v. State of Jharkhand, AIR 2004 SC 394 : (2004) 2 SCC 338 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 529 (535-36) : 2004 CrLJ 658.

[12275] ● "Rarest of rare cases" when collective conscience of community so shocked to inflict death penalty.—In rarest of rare cases when the collective conscience of the community is so shocked that it will expect the holders of the judicial power centre to inflict death penalty irrespective of their personal opinion as regards desirability or otherwise of retaining death penalty, death sentence can be awarded. The community may entertain such sentiment in the following circumstances :

(1) When the murder is committed in an extremely brutal, grotesque, diabolical, revolting or dastardly manner so as to arouse intense and extreme indignation of the community.

(2) When the murder is committed for a motive which evinces total depravity and meanness e.g. murder by a hired assassin for money or reward or a cold-blooded murder for gains of a person vis-a-vis whom the murderer is in a dominating position or in a position of trust, or murder is committed in the course of betrayal of the motherland.

(3) When murder of a member of a Scheduled Caste or minority community etc. is committed not for personal reasons but in circumstances which arouse social wrath, or in cases of "bride-burning" or "dowry deaths" or when murder is committed in order to remarry for the sake of extracting dowry once again or to marry another woman on account of infatuation.

(4) When the crime is enormous in proportion. For instance when multiple murders, say of all or almost all the members of a family or a large number of persons of a particular caste, community, or locality, are committed.

(5) When the victim of the murder is an innocent child, or a helpless woman or an old or infirm person or a person vis-a-vis whom the murderer is in a dominating position or a public figure generally loved and respected by the community. Sushil Murmu v. State of Jharkand, AIR 2004 SC 394 : (2002) 2 SCC 338 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 529 (536-37) : 2004 CrLJ 658.

[12276] ● "Rarest of rare cases Death sentence warranted.—"If upon taking an overall global view of all the circumstances in the light of the aforesaid propositions and taking into account the answers to the questions posed by way of the test for the rarest of rare cases, the circumstances of the case are such that death sentence is warranted, the Court would proceed to do so. Sushil Murmu v. State of Jharkhand, AIR 2004 SC 394 : (2002) 2 SCC 338 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 529 : 2004 CrLJ 658.

[12277] ● Award of punishment outcome of cool deliberation.—A convict hovers between life and death when the question of gravity of the offence and award of adequate sentence comes up for consideration. Mankind has shifted from the state of nature towards a civilized society and it is no longer the physical opinion of the majority that takes away the liberty of a citizen by convicting him and making him suffer a sentence of imprisonment. Award of punishment following conviction at a trial in a system wedded to the rule of law is the outcome of cool deliberation in the Courtroom after adequate hearing is afforded to the parties, accusations are brought against the accused, the prosecuted is given an opportunity of meeting the accusations by establishing his innocence. It is the outcome of cool deliberations and the screening of the material by the informed man i.e. the judge that leads to determination of the lis. Sushil Murmu v. State of Jharkhand, AIR 2004 SC 394 : (2002) 2 SCC 338 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 529 (537) : 2004 CrLJ 658.

[12278] ● Sentence—Punishment not to be disproportionate.—The principle of proportion between crime and punishment is a principle of just deserts that serves as the foundation of every criminal sentence that is justifiable. As a principle of criminal justice it is hardly less familiar or less important than the principle that only the guilt ought to be punished. Indeed, the requirement that punishment not be disproportionately great, which is a corollary of just deserts, is dictated by the same principle that does not allow punishment of the innocent, for any punishment in excess of what is deserved for the criminal conduct is punishment without guilt. The criminal law adheres in general to the principle of proportionality in prescribing liability according to the culpability of each kind of criminal conduct. It ordinarily allows some significant discretion to the judge in arriving at a sentence in each case, presumably to permit sentences that reflect more subtle considerations of culpability that are raised by the special facts of each case. Judges in essence affirm that punishment ought always to fit the crime; yet in practices sentences are determined largely by other considerations. Sometimes it is the correctional needs of the perpetrator that are offered to justify a sentence, sometimes the desirability of keeping him out of circulation, and sometimes even the tragic results of his crime. Inevitably, these considerations cause a departure from just deserts as the basis of punishment and create cases of apparent injustice that are serious and widespread. Proportion between crime and punishment is a goal respected in principle, and in spite of errant notions, it remains a strong influence in the determination of sentences. Anything less than a penalty of greatest severity for any serious crime is thought to be a measure of toleration that is unwarranted and unwise. But in fact, quite apart from those considerations that make punishment unjustifiable when it is out of proportion to the crime, uniformly disproportionate punishment has some very undesirable practical consequences. Sushil Murmu v. State of Jharkand, AIR 2004 SC 394 : (2002) 2 SCC 338 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 529 (537-38) : 2004 CrLJ 658.

[12279] ● Grant of life imprisonment rule and death penalty exception.—True, the grant of life imprisonment is the rule and death penalty an exception in the rarest of rare cases by stating "special reasons" for awarding it but, at the same time, it is also true that the punishment awarded must be commensurate with the crime committed by the accused. It is also true that ordinarily the sentence is not enhanced by the appellate Court unless it is such a gross case that nothing but maximum sentence stipulated in law deserves to be awarded.

We are conscious of the fact that the power to enhance death sentence from life should be very rarely exercised and only for strongest-possible reasons and not only because the appellate Court is of that view. The question of enhancement of sentence to award death penalty can, however, be considered where the facts are such that to award any punishment less than the maximum would shock the conscience of the Court. Simon v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 2 SCC 694 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 646 (656).

[12280] ● Court to consider nature of crime as well as accused.—The Court has to consider the nature of the crime as well as the accused. The trial Court has rightly come to a definite conclusion that the case falls in the category of the rarest of rare cases for imposing capital punishment. The reasons given by the trial Court for not awarding it have been stated above. In support of the reason stated by the trial Court that it appears that the first accused Veerappan compelled the appellants to join his gang, learned counsel for the appellants contends that if a crime is committed under duress, it would be a mitigating circumstance for not awarding death penalty. Simon v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 2 SCC 694 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 646 (657).

[12281] ● Court to pay due regard to crime and criminal for ascertaining existence of special reason.—For ascertaining the existence or absence of "special reasons", the Court must pay due regard both to the crime and the criminal. What is the relative weight to be given to the aggravating and mitigating factors, depends on the facts and circumstances of the particular case. More often than not, these two aspects are so intertwined that it is difficult to give a separate treatment to each of them. In many cases, the extremely cruel or beastly manner of the commission of murder is itself a demonstrated index of the depraved character of the perpetrator. That is why, it is not desirable to consider the circumstances of the crime and the circumstances of the criminal in two separate watertight compartments. The Constitution Bench said that though all murders are cruel but cruelty may vary in its degree of culpability and it is only then the culpability assumes the proportion of extreme depravity that "special reasons" can legitimately be said to exist. Simon v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 2 SCC 694 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 646 (658-59).

[12282] ● None of Mitigating circumstances to be taken into consideration in isolation.—None of the mitigating circumstances noticed in Bachan Singh's case, (1980) 2 SCC 684 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 580 can be taken into consideration in isolation. The circumstance of duress or domination of another person is required to be taken into consideration as a relevant circumstance but that has to be considered on the facts of a particular case while considering and balancing all other aggravating and mitigating circumstances. That alone is not the determining factor. Simon v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 2 SCC 694 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 646 (659-660).

[12283] ● Death sentence—Mitigating factors against award of.—The facts of the present case do not show that the appellants were compelled to fall in line with the criminal activity of Accused-1 or that they joined his group on account of any duress or compulsion. The manner in which the crime was committed clearly shows that any person can contemplate the disastrous effect of blasting of landmines. It is evident that the crime was diabolically planned. The appellants are a threat and grave danger to society at large. They must have anticipated that their activity would result in elimination of a large number of lives. As a result of criminal activities, the normal life of those living in the area has been totally shattered. It would be a mockery of justice if extreme punishment is not imposed. Thus, having given anxious consideration to all the circumstances aggravating and mitigating, in our view, there can hardly be a more appropriate case than the present one to award maximum sentence. We have to perform this onerous duty for self-preservation i.e. preservation of persons who are living and working in the area where the appellants and their group operate. Simon v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 2 SCC 694 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 646 (660).

[12284] ● Awarding of death sentence—Exception.—Brutality in taking away the life of the victim is only one of the factors which is required to be taken into consideration for coming to the conclusion that the case at the hand is one of rarest of rare ones warranting imposition of death penalty. Imposition of punishment for life, it is the rule. Awarding of death sentence as an exception. Sardar Khan v. State of Karnataka, AIR 2004 SC 1695 : (2004) 2 SCC 4427 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 564 (569) : 2004 CrLJ 310.

[12285] ● Death sentence altered to life imprisonment.—In the dead of night, the four respondents came to spot armed with lathies in their hands and assaulted the deceased where they were sleeping resulting in multiple murders. The respondents were annoyed by the declaration of deceased H that he would give away his agricultural land to PW-31. The case is not one of "rarest of rare cases" where death sentence as to be awarded. Hence death is altered to life imprisonment. Prithvi v. Mam Raj, AIR 2004 SC 2729 : (2004) 13 SCC 279 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 198 (207).

[12286] ● Execution of death sentence postponed.—In the instant case, the execution of death sentence of accused was postponed and some representation also had been made to the President of India by certain Associations and citizens. The supreme, in petition before it to view the rejection of pardon, held that there was no reason to consider the matter at this stage. Bikas Chatterjee v. State of W.B., (2004) 13 SCC 711 : (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 531.

[12287] ● Death sentence—Constitutional validity.—Death sentence has passed the test of constitutional validity. It has come to stay as part of our law of penology. At the same time, it hardly needs to be emphasised that the capital punishment ought to be imposed only in very rare and exceptionally grave cases of murder. "Scrupulous care and humane concern" should inform the approach of Court. The view held by this Court in Sk. Ishaque v. State of Bihar, (1995) 3 SCC 392 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 534, apart from other cases is that the number of persons killed, though a factor to be taken into account, should not be the sole consideration to condemn the criminal to death. A delicate balancing of various factors such as those which give an insight into the state of mind, motivation, attitude and propensities of the accused has to be done while at the same time, keeping in view the larger societal interests. The principle that in case of murder, life imprisonment is the normal rule and the death sentence should be handed down in rarest of rare cases should be course be uppermost in the mind of the judge. Though no hard-and-fast rules can be laid down, prima facie, a dangerous criminal who has indulged in the killing spree in an extremely brutal and horrendous manner to achieve his own selfish gains or to satisfy his physical lust or to disrupt the public order and peace, should be considered to be a menace to society and he be subjected to the extreme punishment of death. However, even in such cases, mitigating circumstances are not out of place. While death sentence ought to be imposed in the rarest of rare cases, so long as the law provides for it and such law has withstood the judicial scrutiny, the Court cannot make it a dead letter and refuse to impose death sentence where nothing short of it would be appropriate and adequate. The justification behind death sentence is to respect the collective conscience of the society in relation to crimes of extreme brutality and terrorism and to impart security to the society. The element of deterrence is of course inherent in it. Death sentence serves a threefold purpose : (i) punitive, (ii) deterrent, and (iii) protective. Gyasuddin Khan v. State of Bihar, 2005 SCC (Cri) 630 (637-38).

[12288] ● Death sentence or life imprisonment.—The nature of the crime, the circumstances of the criminal and the impact of the crime on the community are broadly the considerations that ought to be kept in view by a Court called upon to choose between the death sentence and the life imprisonment. At the same time, the circumstances in which the death sentence can be imposed cannot be placed in pigeon holes. The enumeration of aggravating and mitigating circumstances in the case of Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab, 1980 SCC (Cri) 850 : (1980) 2 SCC

684 is not exhaustive and is not intended to fetter the judicial discretion. This Court guardedly said that they are broad indicators or guidelines and that it did not propose to formulate rigid standards vis-à-vis the sentencing process. Each one of the enumerated factors cannot be viewed in isolation. A holistic view has to be taken on the facts presented in each case. Gyasuddin Khan v. State of Bihar, 2005 SCC (Cri) 630 (635).

[12289] ● Death sentence, common life imprisonment.—The indiscriminate killing of fellow policemen resorted to by a member of a disciplined force is no doubt an aggravating factor, but in view of the mitigating circumstances, the Supreme Court held that it would not be appropriate to award death sentence and the accused was sentence to life imprisonment with fine. Gyasuddin Khan v. State of Bihar, 2005 SCC (Cri) 630 (640).

[12290] ● Death sentence.—In the present case the aggravating circumstances against the accused are : (a) this is a case of cold-blooded murder; (b) the accused was leading the gang; (c) the victims did not provoke or contribute to the incident; (d) two victims were burnt to death by locking the house from outside; (e) one of the victims was a young boy, aged about 6 years, who, somehow, managed to come out of the burning house, but he was mercilessly thrown back into the fire by the appellant; (f) the dragging of Nagarmol Bordoloi by the appellant Holiram to his house and then cutting him into pieces in broad daylight in the presence of bystanders; (g) the entire incident took place in broad daylight and the crime was committed in the most barbaric manner to deter others from challenging the supremacy of the appellant in the village; (h) the entire incident was pre-planned by the accused-appellant.

Held : "There is nothing to show that there was repentance by the accused at any point of time or an explanation for the occurrence. Even when questioned under Section 235(2), Criminal Procedure Code, the accused stated that he had nothing to say on the point of sentence. The fact that the appellant remained silent would show that he has no repentance for the ghastly act he committed. The appellant was in service and he should have been a model to the society as very few people from his community get opportunity to work in government service. But the appellant, instead of setting an example to others, organised a gang and instigated them to join his heinous activities. There was no spark of any kindness or compassion and his mind was brutal and the entire incident would have certainly shocked the collective conscience of the community. We are unable to find any mitigating circumstance to refrain from imposing the death penalty on the appellant." Holiram Bardoloi v. State of Assam, 2005 SCC (Cri) 915 (923-923).

[12291] ● Death sentence—Rarest of rare cases.—In rarest of rare cases when the collective conscience of the community is so shocked, that it will expect the holders of the judicial power centre to inflict death penalty irrespective of their personal opinion as regards desirability or otherwise of retaining death penalty, death sentence can be awarded. The community may entertain such sentiment in the following circumstances :

(1) When the murder is committed in an extremely brutal, grotesque, diabolical, revolting, or dastardly manner so as to arouse intense and extreme indignation of the community.

(2) When the murder is committed for a motive which evinces total depravity and meanness; e.g. murder by hired assassin for money or reward; or cold-blooded murder for gains of a person vis-à-vis whom the murderer is in a dominating position or in a position of trust, or murder is committed in the course for betrayal of the motherland.

(3) When murder of a member of a Scheduled Caste or minority community etc., is committed not for personal reasons but in circumstances which arouse social wrath; or in cases of 'bride burning' or 'dowry deaths' or when murder is committed in order to remarry for the sake of extracting dowry once again or to marry another woman on account of infatuation.

(4) When the crime is enormous in proportion. For instance when multiple murders, say of all or almost all the members of a family or a large number of persons of a particular caste, community, or locality, are committed.

(5) When the victim of murder is an innocent child, or a helpless woman or old or infirm person or a person vis-à-vis whom the murderer is in a dominating position, or a public figure generally loved and respected by the community.

If upon taking an overall global view of all the circumstances in the light of the aforesaid propositions and taking into account the answers to the questions posed by way of the test for the rarest of rare case, the circumstances of the case are such that death sentence is warranted, the Court would proceed to do so." State of U.P. v. Satish, 2005 SCC (Cri) 642 (651-52)

[12292] ● Death penalty—Rarest of rare cases.—In the instant case, the High Court enumerated the following circumstances in this case as indicative that it is one of the "rarest of rare cases" where imposition of death penalty is justified :

1. The accused was already convicted to life imprisonment for murder of his first wife Malakawwa. He committed the present murders while he was out on parole.
2. That the murder was the result of preplanning on his part is evident from the fact that the murder weapon is a Jambia, a hunting knife used for attack, not ordinarily available in a house.
3. Even if the accused had some reason to suspect the fidelity of his wife, which motivated him to murder her, there could have been absolutely no reason for killing the defenceless child of 1-½ years of age.
4. The murders were committed when the victims were helpless and asleep.
5. No extenuating circumstances in favour of the accused were either pleaded or proved.

The Supreme Court taking all the circumstances in consideration held that the High Court was right in coming to the conclusion that the appellants case bristled with special circumstances requisite for imposition of death penalty. Saibanna v. State of Karnataka, 2005 SCC (Cri) 1094 (1100).

[12293] ● Case based on circumstantial evidence.—Where the victim of rape and murder was a six years old girl, the High Court's judgment acquitting the accused-appellant of the charges was set aside and the accused was convicted and awarded death sentence. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Satish, AIR 2005 SC 1000 : (2005) 3 SCC 114 : 2005 CrLJ 1428 (1432, 1433) : 2005 (1) Crimes 146 (SC).

[12294] ● Death sentence—Rarest of rare cases.—In the instant case, there can be no doubt that the most appropriate punishment is death sentence. That is what has been awarded by the trial Court and the High Court. The present case, which has no parallel in the history of the Indian Republic, presents us in crystal-clear terms, a spectacle of the rarest of rare cases. The very idea of attacking the overpowering a sovereign democratic institution by using powerful arms and explosives and imperilling the safety of a multitude of peoples' representatives, constitutional functionaries and officials of the Government of India and engaging in a combat with the security forces is a terrorist act of the gravest severity. It is a classic example of rarest of rare cases.

The gravity of the crime conceived by the conspirators with the potential of causing enormous casualties and dislocating the functioning of the Government as well as disrupting the normal life of the people of India is something which cannot be described in words. The incident, which resulted in heavy casualties, had shaken the entire nation, and the collective conscience of the society will only be satisfied if capital punishment is awarded to the offender. The challenge to the unity, integrity and sovereignty of India by these acts of terrorists and conspirators, can only be compensated by giving maximum punishment to the person who is proved to be the conspirator in this treacherous act. The appellant, who is a surrendered militant and who was bent upon repeating the acts of treason against the nation, is a menace to the society and his life should become extinct. The death sentence is upheld. State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu, 2005 SCC (Cri) 1715 (1859-1860).

[12295] ● Death sentence—Gruesome murder.—Held : The facts of the present case shocked the judicial conscience. A greedy son-in-law with the intention of grabbing the property of his father-in-law wiped out the entire family, even the three minor innocent children were not spared. The facts of the case shocked the judicial conscience. The gruesome murder was perpetrated in cold-blooded, premeditated and well-organised manner. It calls for deterrent sentence. Such gruesome and cold-blooded murder with a view to grab the property does not only delict the law but also has a deleterious effect on civil society. At the time of granting leave, this Court did not issue notice for enhancement of punishment. However, considering the nature of the crime and the manner in which it has been perpetrated, the ends of justice would warrant that the appellant should be in jail in term of Section 57, IPC. It is directed that the appellant shall not get the benefit of any remission either granted by the State or by the Government of India on any auspicious occasion. Reddy Sampath Kumar v. State of A.P., 2005 SCC (Cri) 1710 (1712).

[12296] ● Death sentence justification.—When there was a long lapse of time the death sentence imposed upon the accused by the Sessions Court was held not justified by the Apex Court. State of M.P. v. Paltan Mallah, AIR 2005 SC 733 : (2005)

3 SCC 169 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 674 : (688-89) : 2005 CrLJ 918.

[12297] ● Conversion of conviction.—"The appellant herein along with accused Subhash Krishna Savant, Mahadu Raghunath Waghmare and Ramji Balu Waghmare were tried and by judgment rendered by the Trial Court while the other three accused persons were acquitted of the charges, the appellant was convicted under Section 302 of the Penal Code and sentenced to death penalty. Apart from this conviction, the appellant was convicted for other offences also. Against the order of acquittal of the other accused persons, appeal was preferred by the State of Maharashtra before the High Court. So far as the appellant is concerned, he preferred an appeal apart from the fact that there was a reference. The High Court, upon appraisal of evidence, came to the conclusion that the order of acquittal of the other three accused persons was perverse one, as such, it reversed the same. So far as the conviction of the appellant under Section 302, IPC is concerned, the High Court was of that view that it was not a case where the appellant should have been convicted under Section 302, IPC simpliciter. Accordingly, the High Court converted the conviction of the appellant from Section 302, IPC to Section 302 read with Section 34, IPC and convicted the appellant and the other three accused persons thereunder. So far as the other three accused persons are concerned, they have been sentenced to undergo imprisonment for life and to pay fine of Rs. 500 each." Govind Vaman Patil v. Sate of Maharashtra, (2005) 12 SCC 179 : (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 541 (542).

[12298] ● Delay in execution of death sentence.—The time for consideration of delay in execution of death sentence started to run from the point of disposal of appeal and it cannot be said to be a case of delay in execution of death sentence requiring death sentence being substituted by the sentence of life imprisonment for reason of delay in execution of death sentence. Gurmeet Singh v. State of U.P., AIR 2005 SC 3611 : (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 138 (145) : 2005 CrLJ 4384 : JT 2005 (8) SC 628 : 2005 (4) Crimes 84.

[12299] ● Accused killing 13 persons for a flimsy reason.—The appellant in this case, along with the co-accused, killed as many as 13 persons for a flimsy reason. All the victims were closely related to the appellant and they were killed in the most dastardly manner. Most of the victims were sleeping when they were attacked. The appellant did not spare even the small kids with whom he had apparently no enmity. The appellant did not have even a grain of mercy or human kindness in his heart. Considering all these aspects, this is a fit case where the death penalty is to be commuted to life imprisonment. Gurmeet Singh v. State of U.P., AIR 2005 SC 3611 : 2006 (1) SCC (Cri) 138 (143) : 2005 CrLJ 4384 : JT 2005 (8) SC 628 : 2005 (4) Crimes 84.

[12300] ● Balance-sheet of aggravating and mitigating circumstances has to be drawn before awarding extreme penalty.—While deciding the question as to whether the extreme penalty of death sentence is to be awarded, a balance-sheet of aggravating and mitigating circumstances has to be drawn up. In the instant case the matter was remitted to High Court for consideration afresh on question of sentence. Union of India v. Devendra Nath Rai, (2006) 2 SCC 243 : (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 487 (493) : 2006 CrLJ 967 : JT 2006 (1) SC 370 : 2006 (1) Supreme 295.

[12301] ● Awarding of death sentence—Principles.—The principle of proportion between crime and punishment is a principle of just desert that serves as the foundation of every criminal sentence that is justifiable. As a principle of criminal justice it is hardly less familiar or less important than the principle that only the guilty ought to be punished. Indeed, the requirement that punishment not be disproportionately great, which is a corollary of just desert, is dictated by the same principle that does not allow punishment of the innocent, for any punishment in excess of what is deserved for the criminal conduct is punishment without guilt.

The criminal law adheres in general to the principle of proportionality in prescribing liability according to the culpability of each kind of criminal conduct. It ordinarily allows some significant discretion to the Judge in arriving at a sentence in each case, presumably to permit sentences that reflect more subtle considerations of culpability that are raised by the special facts of each case. Judges in essence affirm that punishment ought always to fit the crime; yet in practice sentences are determined largely by other considerations. Sometimes it is the correctional needs of the perpetrator that are offered to justify a sentence, sometimes the desirability of keeping him out of circulation, and sometimes even the tragic results of his crime. Inevitably these considerations cause a departure from just desert as the basis of punishment and create cases of apparent injustice that are serious and widespread.

Proportion between crime and punishment is a goal respected in principle, and in spite of errant notions, it remains a strong influence in the determination of sentences. Anything less than a penalty of greatest severity for any serious crime is thought to be a measure of toleration that is unwarranted and unwise. But in fact quite apart from those considerations that make punishment unjustifiable when it is out of proportion to the crime, uniformly disproportionate punishment has some very undesirable practical consequences. Shivu v. R.G. High Court of Karnataka, (2007) 4 SCC 713 : 2007 (2) SCC (Cri) 686 : 2007 CrLJ 1806 (1812) : 2007 (2) Crimes 24 (SC).

[12302] ● Ordinarily death penalty not to be awarded if case is proved by circumstantial evidence.—There are authorities for the proposition that if the evidence is proved by circumstantial evidence, ordinarily death penalty would not be awarded. Bishnu Prasad Sinha v. State of Assam, AIR 2007 SC 848 : (2007) 11 SCC 467 : 2007 CrLJ 1145 (1155) : 2007 (1) Crimes 147.

[12303] ● Imposition of death sentence—Guidelines.—In rarest of rare cases when collective conscience of the community is so shocked that it will expect the holders of the judicial power centre to inflict death penalty irrespective of their personal opinion as regards desirability or otherwise of retaining death penalty, death sentence can be awarded. The community may entertain such sentiment in the following circumstances:

(1) When the murder is committed in an extremely brutal, grotesque, diabolical, revolting or dastardly manner so as to arouse intense and extreme indignation of the community.

(2) When the murder is committed for a motive which evinces total depravity and meanness; e.g. murder by hired assassin for money or reward or a cold-blooded murder for gains of a person vis-a-vis whom the murderer is in a dominating position or in a position of trust, or murder is committed in the course for betrayal of the motherland.

(3) When murder of a member of a Scheduled Caste or minority community etc., is committed not for personal reasons but in circumstances which arouse social wrath, or in cases of 'bride burning' or 'dowry deaths' or when murder is committed in order to remarry for the sake of extracting dowry once again or to marry another woman on account of infatuation.

(4) When the crime is enormous in proportion. For instance when multiple murders, say of all or almost all the members of a family or a large number of persons of a particular caste, community, or locality, are committed.

(5) When the victim of murder is an innocent child, or a helpless woman or old or infirm person or a person vis-a-vis whom the murderer is in a dominating position or a public figure generally loved and respected by the community. Bablu v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 2007 SC 697 : 2007 (2) SCC (Cri) 590 : 2007 CrLJ 1160 : 2007 (2) Crimes 62 (SC).

[12304] ● What constitutes rarest of rare case.—Death sentence can be awarded only, if in the opinion of Court, the case answers the description of "rarest of rare cases". It is the fact situation of the case that determines as to whether the case falls within the category of "rarest of rare case". Alok Nath Dutta v. State of West Bengal, (2007) 12 SCC 230 : 2007 (1) Crimes 321 (SC) : 2007 (2) Supreme 664.

[12305] ● Imposition of death sentence in cases based on circumstantial evidence, if permissible.—(Per S.B. SINHA, J): It has been a fundamental point in numerous studies in the field of Death Penalty jurisprudence that cases where the sole basis of conviction is circumstantial evidence, have far greater chances of turning out to be wrongful convictions, later on, in comparison to ones which are based on fitter sources of proof. Convictions based on seemingly conclusive circumstantial evidence should not be presumed as full proof incidences and the fact that the same are circumstantial evidence based must be a definite factor at the sentencing stage deliberations, considering that capital punishment is unique in its total irrevocability. Any characteristic of trial, such as conviction solely resting on circumstantial evidence, which contributes to the uncertainty in the culpability calculus, must attract negative attention while deciding maximum penalty for murder.

(Per MARKANDEY KATJU, J.): No principle of law that only direct evidence is strong and reliable while circumstantial evidence is weak and unreliable. Circumstantial evidence can be as strong and reliable as direct evidence, but the only requirement is that the prosecution must establish beyond reasonable doubt that there is a chain of links which connects the accused with the crime.

Swami Sharaddananda v. State of Karnataka, AIR 2007 SC 2531 (4548) : (2007) 12 SCC 288 : JT 2007 (7) SC 403 : 2007 (7) SCR 616 (JUSTICE S.B. SINHA).

[12306] ● Death penalty—If can be abolished.—In India the death penalty cannot be abolished by a judicial verdict as death sentence is contemplated by the Constitution and the I.P.C. Thus Article 72(1)(c) of the Constitution specifically mentions that the President of India has the power to grant pardons, reprieves or suspension of any death sentence. Similarly Article 72(3) also contemplates the power in the Governor of the State to suspend, remit or commute a death sentence. Hence if we hold that the Courts have no power to impose a death sentence we will really be amending the Constitution by a judicial verdict. Again, if we hold that the Courts have no power to impose death sentence merely because the death sentence has been abolished is some foreign countries in Europe or because there is a demand in the international fora that death sentence should be abolished, we will be really amending the Constitution by a judicial verdict. In my opinion this Court has no power to amend the Constitution by a judicial verdict. The Constitution can only be amended by Parliament in the manner prescribed by Article 368 of the Constitution. This Court cannot arrogate to itself the power of Parliament under the Constitution and must maintain self-restraint. Moreover, what has happened in foreign countries cannot be automatically applied to our country where the situation is different.

No doubt Parliament can abolish the death sentence by deleting it as one of the punishments prescribed in the I.P.C. or other statutes, but this Court cannot do so. The Court cannot legislate or amend the law. There is broad separation of powers under the Constitution and this Court must not ordinarily encroach into the legislative or executive domain as held by us in Indian Drugs & Pharmaceuticals Ltd. v. The workman of Indian Drugs & Pharmaceuticals Ltd., 2007 (1) SCC 408. Swamy Sharaddanandea v. State of Karnataka, AIR 2007 SC 2531 : (2007) 12 SCC 288 : 2007 (7) SCR 616 : JT 2007 (7) SC 403.

[12307] ● Long interval of time between commission of offence and final conviction.—It is well known that now-a-days a long interval of time frequently occurs between the commission of the offence and the final conviction by this Court (because of the delays in the trial, appeals, etc.), and hence if we lay down any absolute principle of law that merely because of this long interval death penalty cannot be imposed then in all such cases merely because of lapse of time death penalty cannot be imposed even though the murder was cold blooded, diabolical and heinous. This again would be amending the Constitution by a judicial verdict. Moreover this would give encouragement to the accused and their lawyers to delay proceedings in Court (by unnecessary adjournments, interlocutory applications, etc.) to avoid the death penalty. I, therefore, cannot agree with the view that merely because a long lapse of time has occurred between the commission of the offence and the final decision of this Court the death penalty cannot be imposed. Swamy Sharaddanandea v. State of Karnataka, AIR 2007 SC 2531 : (2007) 12 SCC 288 : 2007 (7) SCR 616 : JT 2007 (7) SC 403.

[12308-09] ● Death sentence.—The instant case is one wherein accused Sonia, along with accused Sanjiv [her husband] has not only put an end to the lives of her step brother and his whole family, which included three tiny tots of 45 days, 2-1/2 years and 4 years, but also her own father, mother and sister in a very diabolic manner so as to deprive her father from giving the property to her step brother and his family. The fact that murders in question were committed in such a diabolic manner while the victims were sleeping, without any provocation whatsoever from the victims' side indicates the cold-blooded and premeditated approach of the accused to cause death of the victims. The brutality of the act is amplified by the grotesque and revolting manner in which the helpless victims have been murdered which is indicative of the fact that the act was diabolic of most superlative degree in conception and cruel in execution and that both the accused persons are not possessed of the basic humanness and completely lack the psyche or mind set which can be amenable for any reformation. If this act is not revolting or dastardly, it is beyond comprehension as to what other act can be so. In view of these facts we are of the view that there would be failure of justice in case death sentence is not awarded in the present case as the same undoubtedly falls within the category of rarest of rare cases and the High Court was not justified in commuting death sentence into life imprisonment. Ram Singh v. Sonia, AIR 2007 SC 1218 : 2007 (2) SCC (Cri) 1 : 2007 CrLJ 1642 (1660, 1661) : 2007 (2) Crimes 1 (SC).

[12310] ● Inspection of death sentence—Principles.—When the collective conscience of the community is so shocked, that it will expect the holders of the judicial power centre to inflict death penalty irrespective of their personal opinion as regards desirability or otherwise of retai ning death penalty, the same can be awarded. It was observed:

The community may entertain such sentiment in the following circumstances:

(1) When the murder is committed in an extremely brutal, grotesque, diabolical, revolting, or dastardly manner so as to arouse intense and extreme indignation of the community.

(2) When the murder is committed for a motive which evinces total depravity and meanness; e.g. murder by hired assassin for money or reward; or cold-blooded murder for gains of a person vis-s-vis whom the murdered is in a dominating position or in a position of trust; or murder is committed in the course for betrayal of the motherland.

(3) When murder of a member of a Scheduled Caste or minority community, etc. is committed not for personal reasons but in circumstances which arouse social wrath; or in cases of 'bride burning' or 'dowry deaths' or when murder is committed in order to remain for the sake of extracting dowry once again or to marry another woman on account of infatuation.

(4) When the crime is enormous in proportion. For instance when multiple murders, say of all or almost all the members of a family or a large number of persons of a particular caste, community, or locality, are committed.

(5) When the victim of murder is an innocent child, or a helpless woman or old or infirm person or a person vis-a-vis whom the murderer is in a dominating position, or a public figure generally loved and respected by the community. Shivaji v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2009 SC 56 ; (2008) 15 SCC 269 : JT 2008 (9) 528 : 2008 (6) Supreme 541 : 2008 (4) Crimes 102 (SC).

[12311] ● Deep-rooted personal rivalry leading murder.—An organised murders of innocent people call for death penalty. But where a murder was committed due to deep-rooted mutual personal rivalry, it was held that death sentence was not called for. Shiwaji v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2009 SC 56 : (2008) 15 SCC 269 : 2008 (4) Crimes 102 (SC) : JT 2008 (9) SC 528.

[12312] ● Death sentence in cases based on circumstantial evidence.—The plea that in a case of circumstantial evidence death should not be awarded is without any logic. If the circumstantial evidence is found to be of unimpeachable character in establishing the guilt of the accused, that forms the foundation for conviction. That has nothing to do with the question of sentence as has been observed by this Court in various cases while awarding death sentence. The mitigating circumstances and the aggravating circumstances have to be balanced. In the balance sheet of such circumstances, the fact that the case rests on circumstantial evidence has no role to play. In fact in most of the cases where death sentence are awarded for rape and murder and the like, there is practically no scope for having an eye-witness. They are not committed in the public view. But very nature of things in such cases, the available evidence is circumstantial evidence. If the said evidence has been found to be credible, cogent and trustworthy for the purpose of recording conviction, to treat that evidence as a mitigating circumstance, would amount to consideration of an irrelevant aspect. The plea of learned Amicus Curiae that the conviction is based on circumstantial evidence and, therefore, the death sentence should not be awarded is clearly unsustainable.

The case at hand falls in the rarest of rare category. The circumstances highlighted above, establish the depraved acts of the accused, and they call for only one sentence, that is death sentence. The circumstances if the case establish the prosecution case and call for one death-sentence. Shivaji v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2009 SC 56 ; (2008) 15 SCC 269 : 2008 (4) Crimes 102 (SC) : JT 2008 (9) SC 528.

[12313] ● Commission of murder due to deep-seated rivalry.—In operating the sentencing system, the law should adopt the corrective machinery or the deterrence based or factual matrix. By deft modulation the sentencing process should be stern where it should be, and tampered with mercy where it warrants to be. The facts and given circumstances in each case, the nature of the crime, the conduct of the accused, the nature of weapons used and all other attending circumstances are relevant facts which would enter out the area of consideration. For instance, a murder committed due to deep-seated mutual and personal rivalry may not call for penalty of death. But an organized crime or mass murders of innocent people would call for imposition of death sentence. State of Madhya Pradesh v. Sheikh Shahid, AIR 2009 SC 2951 (2953) : (2009) 12 SCC 715 : JT 2009 (8) SC 277. TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) State of Madhya Pradesh v. Basadi, AIR 2009 SC 3081 : (2009) 12 SCC 318 : 2009 CrLJ 4234 : 2009 (2) Crimes 273 (SC). (2) Ankush Maruti Shinde v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2009 SC 2609 : (2009) 6 SCC 667 : JT 2009 (6) SC 358.

[12314] ● Imposition of death sentence when proper.—On the intervening night of 6th and 7th January 2001 when the inmates of the house were asleep, six members of one family lost their lives in a matter of three houses. The accused, in search of greenespastures abroad for which purpose he needed money but was refused to be paid by the members of victims family. The prosecution alleged that all these murders were cold-blooded, planned and executed with precision and there was no trace of life left in them before he left the scene of occurrence. As there was no direct evidence, the prosecution relied on circumstances. The prosecution witness saw the accused at 5.45 am. on 7.1.2001 coming out from the house of the deceased. The presence of the accused persons on spot was supported by finger-prints as also by the presence of accused heirs recovered from the scene of occurrence. The evidence of the prosecution witnesses showed that the accused was a conscientious person who need the debts. The prosecution case also found support from judicial and extra-judicial confessions. The appeal was held to be without merit and was dismissed. M.A. Antony v. State of Kerala, AIR 2009 SC 2549 : (2009) 6 SCC 220 : JT 2009 (7) SC 372.

[12315] ● Imposition of death sentence when permissible.—The choice of the death sentence has to be made only in the rarest of the rare cases and that where culpability of the accused has assumed depravity or where the accused is found to be an ardent criminal and menace to the society and; where the crime is committed in an organized manner and is gruesome, cold-blooded, heinous and atrocious, where innocent and unarmed persons are attacked and murdered without any provocation. State of Punjab v. Manjit Singh, AIR 2009 SC 2888 : (2009) 14 SCC 31 : 2009 (9) SCR 864 : JT 2009 (8) 482 : 2009 (8) Scale 622.

[12316] ● Death sentence altered to life imprisonment.—It is no doubt true that both the respondents behaved in a most cruel manner, killed four persons while they were asleep. Three, out of the four deceased persons, were murdered within the precincts of a Gurdwara. But, there are certain mitigating circumstances in the case which cannot be lost sight of. Both the respondents, as is disclosed from the records, had illicit relationship with the third accused namely Bhinder Kaur and when she narrated her woes and the harassment, both the accused persons, as it appears from the record, lost their balance and acted in a cruel manner by entering into the house of Sewa Singh-deceased in the dead night and killing Sewa Singh in the house and other three sons in the Gurdwara. Thereafter, they also gave threat to everybody outside the house by stating that they have killed those persons and, therefore, no one should dare to come near them. This behaviour on the part of the accused-respondents would show that they acted in the manner being driven more by infatuation and also being devoid of their sense on coming to know about the ill treatment meted out to Bhinder Kaur. Though the act of the accused is a gruesome one but it was a result of human mind going astray. No doubt, they acted in a ghastly manner for which, in our considered view, they have been adequately punished. The High Court has given its reasons for not awarding the death sentence and also relied upon a Supreme Court decision for the purpose.

In view of the aforesaid discussion, keeping in view entire facts and circumstances of the case, the reasons given by the High Court for altering and converting capital sentence to a sentence of life are found to be cogent and reasonable. We do not intend to interfere with the said judgment and order passed by the High Court. Therefore, the life sentence awarded to all the three accused persons by the High Court stands upheld. State of Punjab v. Manjit Singh, AIR 2009 SC 2888 : (2009) 14 SCC 31 : 2009 (9) SCR 864.

[12317] ● Imposition of death sentence—When proper.—"The murders were not only cruel, brutal but were diabolic. The High Court has held that those who were guilty of rape and murder deserve death sentence, while those who were convicted for murder only were to be awarded life sentence. The High Court noted that the whole incident is extremely revolting, it shocks the collective conscience of the community and the aggravating circumstances have out-weighted the mitigating circumstances in the cases of accused persons 1, 2 & 4; but held that in the case of others it was to be altered to life sentence. The High Court itself noticed that five members of a family were brutally murdered, they were not known to the accused and there was no animosity towards them. Four of the witnesses were of tender age, they were defenseless and the attack was without any provocation. Some of them were so young that they could not resist any attack by the accused. A minor girl of about fifteen years was dragged in the open field, gang raped and done to death. There can be no doubt that the case at hand falls under the rarest of rare category. There was no reason to adopt a different yardstick for A2, A3 and A5. In fact, A3 was the main person. He assaulted PW-1 and took the money from the deceased.

Above being the position, the appeal filed by the accused persons deserves dismissal, which we direct and the State's appeal deserves to be allowed. A2, A3 and A5 are also awarded death sentence. In essence all the six accused persons deserve death sentence." Ankush Maruti Shinde v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2009 SC 2609 : (2009 6 SCC 667 : 2009 (7) SCR 182 : JT 2009 (6) 358.

[12318] ● Death sentence—Requirements.— For a case to be regarded in the rarest of rare category, fact situation has to be exceptional like after committing one offence another offence is committed so as to cover up the first offence. State of Punjab v. Manjit Singh, AIR 2009 SC 2888 (2890) : (2009) 14 SCC 31 : 2009 (9) SCR 864 : JT 2009 (8) SC 482.

[12319] ● Death sentence, when proper.— Murder of six members of a family including helpless women and children having been committed in a brutal, diabolic and bristly manner and the crime being one which is enormous in proportion which shocks the conscious of law, the death sentence as awarded in respect of accused Sattan and Guddu was the appropriate sentence and the High Court ought not to have altered it. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Sattan, (2009) 4 SCC 736 : 2009 (2) Crimes 121 (SC) : JT 2009 (4) SC 347.

[12320] ● Death sentence held not justified.— "The accused persons were not criminals. They were friends. The deceased was said to have been selected because his father was rich. The motive, if any, was to collect some money. They were not professional killers. They ;have no criminal history. All were unemployed and were searching for jobs.

"Further if age of the accused was a relevant factor for the High Court for not imposing death penalty on accused Nos. 2 and 3, the same standard should have been applied to the case of the appellant also who was only two years older and still a young man in age. Accused Nos. 2 and 3 were as much a part of the crime as the appellant. Though it is true, that it was he who allegedly proposed the idea of kidnapping, but at the same time it must not be forgotten that the said plan was only executed when all the persons involved gave their consent thereto.

"It must be noted that the discretion given to the Court in such cases assumes onerous importance and its exercise becomes extremely difficult because of the irrevocable character of death penalty. One of the principles which we think is clear is that the case is such where two views ordinarily could be taken, imposition of death sentence would not be appropriate, but where there is no other option and it is shown that reformation is not possible, death sentence may be imposed.

"Section 354(3) of the Code of Criminal Procedure requires that when the conviction is for an offence punishable with death or in the alternative with imprisonment for life or imprisonment for a term of years, the judgment shall state the reasons for the sentence awarded, and in the case of sentence of death, the special reasons thereof.

"We do not think that the reasons assigned by the Courts below disclose any special reason to uphold the death penalty. The discretion granted to the Courts must be exercised very cautiously especially because of the irrevocable character to death penalty. Requirements of law to assign special reasons should not be construed to be an empty formality. Discussed above warrants the award of the death penalty. There are no special reasons to record the death penalty and the mitigating factors in the present case, discussed previously, are, in our opinion, sufficient to place it out of the "rarest of rare" category.

"For the reasons aforementioned, we are of the opinion that this is not a case where death penalty should be imposed. The appellant, therefore, instead of being awarded death penalty, is sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for life." Santosh Kumar Satishbhushan Bariyar v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 6 SCC 498 : 2009 (9) SCR 90 : JT 2009 (7) 248 : 2009 (7) Scale 341.

[12321] ● Death sentence based on circumstantial evidence.—"We will assume that in Swamy Shraddananda (supra), this Court did not lay down a firm law that in a case involving circumstantial evidence, imposition of death penalty not would be permissible. But, even in relation thereto the question which would arise would be whether in arriving at a conclusion some surmises, some hypothesis would be necessary in regard to the manner in which the offence was committed as contra-distinguished from a case where the manner of occurrence had no role to play. Even where sentence of death is to be imposed on the basis of the circumstantial evidence, the circumstantial evidence must be such which leads to an exceptional case. We must, however, add that in a case of this nature where the entire prosecution case revolves round the statement of an approver or dependant upon the circumstantial evidence, the prudence doctrine should be invoked. For the aforementioned purpose at the stage of sentencing evaluation of evidence would not be permissible, the Courts not only have to solely depend upon the findings arrived at for the purpose of recording a judgment of conviction, but also consider the matter keeping in view of evidences which have been brought on record on behalf of the parties and to particular the accused for imposition of a lesser punishment. A statement of approver in regard to the manner in which crime has been committed vis-a-vis the role played by the accused on the one hand, and that of the approver, on the other, must be tested on the touchstone of the prudence doctrine. Santosh Kumar Satishbushan Bariyar v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 6 SCC 498 : 2009 (9) SCR 90 : JT 2009 (7) 248.

[12322] ● Death sentence—Recording of special reasons and pre sentence hearing.—Under Sections 235(2) and 354(3) of the Criminal Procedure Code, there is a mandate as to a full fledged bifurcated hearing and recording of "special reasons" if the Court inclines to award death penalty. In the specific backdrop of sentencing in capital punishment and that the matter attracts constitutional prescription in full force, it is incumbent on the sentencing Court to oversee comprehensive compliance to both the provisions. A scrupulous compliance of both provisions is necessary such that an informed selection of sentence could be based on the information collected and collated at this stage. Santosh Kumar Satishbhusan Bariyar v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 6 SCC 498 : 2009 (9) SCR 90 : JT 2009 (7) 248.

[12323] ● Doctrine of rehabilitation to be kept in mind while imposing punishment.—Rarest of rare dictum places an extraordinary burden on the Court, in case it selects death punishment as the favoured penalty, to carry out an objective assessment of facts to satisfy the exceptions ingrained in the rarest of rare dictum. The background analysis leading to the conclusion that the case belongs to rarest of rare category must confirm to highest standards of judicial rigor and thoroughness as the norm under analysis is an exceptionally narrow exception.

Whether primacy should be accorded to aggravating circumstances or mitigating circumstances, is not the question. Court is duty bound by virtue of Bachan Singh (supra) to equally consider both and then to arrive at a conclusion as to respective weights to be accorded. We are also bound by the spirit of Article 14 and Article 21 which forces us to adopt a principled approach to sentencing. This overarching policy flowing from Bachan Singh (supra) applies to heinous crimes as much as it applies to relatively less brutal murders.

Principled application of rarest of rare dictum does not come in the way of individualized sentencing. With necessary room for sentencing, consistency has to be achieved in the manner in which rarest of rare dictum has to be applied by Courts.

While imposing any sentence on the accused the Court must also keep in mind the doctrine of rehabiliation. This, considering Section 354(3) of the Code, is especially so in the cases where the Court is to determine whether the case at hand fails within the rarest of rare case. Santosh Kumar Satishbhusan Bariyar v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 6 SCC 498 : 2009 (9) SCR 90 : JT 2009 (7) 248.

[12324] ● Consideration for selection of penalty.—Selection of penalty must be not require a judge to reflect on his personal perception of crime. Santosh Kumar Satishbhusan Bariyar v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 6 SCC 498 : 2009 (9) SCR 90.

[12325] ● Death sentence—Relevant factors.—For imposition of death sentence, mere number of persons killed or the nature of crime is not the only circumstance justifying the death sentence, after factors such as background of the criminal, his psychology, his social conditions and his mindset for committing the offence are also relevant. Dilip Premnarayan Tiwari v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2010 SC 361 : (2010) 1 SCC 775 : 2010 (1) Crimes 3 (SC) : JT 2009 (5) SC 1.

[12326] ● Proceedings for confirmation of death sentence.—The proceeding before the High Court are in the nature of an extended trial. The conformational proceedings are always the original proceedings. Merely because no question was asked to the doctor who recorded the dying declaration, the document could not have been held back and an opportunity was bound to be given by getting the document proved, if necessary. Fairness of the trial is the basic requirement in criminal law. The Public Prosecutor ought not, to have opposed the production of the document. Dilip Premnarayan Tiwari v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2010 SC 361 : (2010) 1 SCC 775 : 2010 CrLJ 905 (915) : (2010) 1 Crimes 3.

[12327] ● Murder—Death sentence.—There is no manner of doubt that killing six persons and wiping almost the whole family on flimsy ground of honour serving the family would fall within the rarest of rare case. However, considering the fact that the incident had roughly taken place before 20 years and the High Court had acquitted the respondents the Hon'ble Supreme Court reduced the capital sentence to rigorous imprisonment for life with fine of Rs. 25,000/-. State of U.P. v. Krishna Master, AIR 2010 SC 3071 : 2010 CrLJ 3889 (3905).

[12328] ● Number of persons killed—Not by itself a circumstance justifying death sentence.—Mere number of persons killed is not by itself a circumstance justifying the death sentence. Dilip Premnarayan Tiwari v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2010 SC 361 : (2010) 1 SCC 775 : 2010 CrLJ 905 (915) : (2010) 1 Crimes 3.

[12329] ● Death sentence—Factors to be considered.—In a death sentence matter, it is not only the nature of the crime but the background of the criminal, his psychology, his social conditions and his mindset for committing the offence are also relevant. Dilip Premnarayan Tiwari v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2010 SC 361 : (2010) 1 SCC 775 : 2010 CrLJ 905 (915) : (2010) 1 Crimes 3.

[12330] ● Multiple murders arising out of inter-caste marriage—Sentence.—Sister of accused No. 1, Sushma, fell in love with deceased who used to live in the neighbourhood of their residential house. The deceased being a Keralite and belonging in 'Ehava Caste", the marriage was not approved by the family of Sushma, since Sushma belonged to a Brahmin family from the State of U.P. Despite extreme opposition to marriage, both married before the Registrar of marriage. Dilip accused No. 1 was a young person not having crossed his 25 years of life and not having any criminal antecedents. If he became the victim of his wrong but genuine caste considerations, it would not justify the death sentence. The murders was the outcome of social issue like a marriage with a person of so-called lower caste. No doubt, the murder was brutal. However, this was not a diabolic murder nor had the murder acted in depravity of their minds by disfiguring the bodies. True is it that the two ladies who were assaulted were helpless and so were Krishnan and Prabhu. But when we weigh all the circumstances, particularly about the mindset of accused No. 1, the cruel acts on the part of the accused would not justify the death sentence. Accused No. 2 had not assaulted Krishnan or Prabhu to begin with, who has assaulted Prabhu and Abhayraj is still not clear, as it could also be that in the assaults leading role could have been then by the unknown accused. Accused No. 3 had joined Accused No. 1 only he was residing in the same house. Accused No. 3 had played less role. In that view the accused would be liable to life imprisonment. Dilip Premnarayan Tiwari v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2010 SC 361 : (2010) 1 SCC 775 : 2010 CrLJ 905 (919, 920) : (2010) 1 Crimes 3.

[12331] ● Sentence—Death penalty substituted by life imprisonment.—In this case, the aggravating circumstances against the accused showed that it was a cold blooded murder of five persons including one woman of the middle age, the unfortunate victims did not provoke or resist. The murders of five innocent persons were committed for ransom which was executed despite the fact that the poor villagers were unable to pay the ransom as demanded, the accused were fully aware of the inability and poverty of the victims. In this case, one of the convicts was around 65 years old. Further the convicts belonged to an extremely poor background and had committed the heinous crimes for want of money. It may not be misplaced to note that criminal who commits crimes due to his economic backwardness is most likely to reform. Taking into account all the above aggravating and mitigating circumstances the death penalty was substituted by life imprisonment. Mulla v. State of U.P., AIR 2010 SC 942 : (2010) 3 SCC 508 : 2010 CrLJ 1440 (1456, 1457, 1459) : (2010) 1 Crimes 157.

[12332] ● Death sentence—Guidelines for imposition of.—(a) The extreme penalty of death may be inflicted in gravest cases of extreme culpability; (b) While imposing death sentence the circumstances of the offender also require to be taken into consideration along with the circumstances of the crime; (c) Death sentence be imposed only when life imprisonment appears to be an altogether inadequate punishment having regard to the relevant circumstances of the crime; and (d) Extreme penalty can be imposed after striking the balance between aggravating and mitigating circumstances found in the case.

Aggravating circumstances include : (a) If the murder has been committed after previous planning and involves extreme brutality; or (b) if the murder involves exceptional depravity.

Mitigating circumstances include : (a) That the offence was committed under the influence of extreme mental or emotional disturbance; (b) The age of the accused. If the accused is young or old, he shall not be sentenced to death; (c) The probability that the accused would not commit criminal acts of violence as would constitute a continuing threat to society; (d) The probability that the accused can be reformed and rehabilitated. The State shall by evidence prove that the accused does not satisfy the conditions (c) and (d) above; (e) That in the facts and circumstances of the case the accused believed that he was morally justified in committing the offence; (f) That the accused acted under the duress or domination of another person; and (g) That the condition of the accused showed that he was mentally defective and that the said defect impaired his capacity to appreciate the criminality of his conduct. Muniappan v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 2010 SC 3718 : (2010) 7 SCC 567 : JT 2010 (9) 95 : 2010 (8) Scale 637.

[12333] ● Murder committed by putting house on fire—Death sentence awarded.—In the instant case the murder was committed in a cruel, grotesque and diabolical manner. When all the members of the family were having their food, the accused poured petrol in the room and set it to fire and went to the extent of closing the door. Everybody in that room was burnt with the exception of Balwant Singh, who somehow, managed to open the door and come out. Even he was not spared and almost beheaded by the accused. It was clear that the accused had done this with pre-meditated and cold-blooded mind, as he had taken the trouble of carrying petrol to his own cousin's house. As if all this was not sufficient, he was also carrying a sword, and probably prepared himself to fire on the complainant party, as a pistol with two bullets in it was also found on the spot. The accused shown extreme depravity of mind in causing a sword blow on the neck of Balwant Singh, who himself was burnt and was trying to escape. A murder by burning, by itself, would be a very cruel act. The agony caused to the dying witnesses because of their burn injuries would be enormous. Again, when it is seen that there was no immediate provocation to the accused and all this only was on account of the enmity going on in respect of the family lands, the enormousness of the crime is increased by many folds.

Out of the five persons who lost their life, Kamla was barely 16 years old while Prem Singh was 19 years old only. Their life was nipped in bud. Both the ladies who lost their life, as also the other three persons who lost their life were without any arms and were helpless. They could not have even saved themselves and did succumb to the burn injuries. The balance sheet of the aggravating circumstances thus exceeds the mitigating circumstances. In fact, there is no mitigating circumstance in this case. Insofar as the other circumstance of the accused remaining under the shadow of death sentence right from 2004 is concerned, that circumstance, by itself, is sufficient to mitigate his horrible crime.

Considering the overall circumstances, we are of the opinion that the death sentence was rightly awarded by the Trial Court and was rightly confirmed by the High Court. We find no reasons to interfere in this appeal. The appeal is dismissed. Sunder Singh v. State of Uttaranchal, (2010) 10 SCC 611 : JT 2010 (9) 632 : 2010 (9) Scale 571 : 2010 (4) Crimes 250 (SC).

[12334] ● Rarest of rare cases—How to evaluate.—While evaluating the category of rarest of the rare, must give the facts of the particular case, the predominant consideration. Vikram Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 2010 SC 1007 : 2010 (3) SCC 56.

[12335] ● Accused going to extent of sprinkling petrol in bus full of girls and setting it on fire—Death sentence awarded.—In the instant case the murders involved exceptional depravity on the part of Nedu @ Nedunchezhian (A.2), Madhu @ Ravindran (A. 3) and C. Muniappan (A. 4). These were the murders of helpless, innocent, unarmed, young girl students in a totally unprovoked situation. No mitigating circumstances could be pointed to us, which would convince us to impose a lesser sentence on them. Their activities were not only barbaric but inhuman of the highest degree. Thus, the manner of the commission of the offence in the present case is extremely brutal, diabolical, grotesque and cruel. It is shocking to the collective conscience of society. We do not see any cogent reason to interfere with the punishment of death sentence awarded to Nedu @ Nedunchezhian (A.2), Madhu @ Ravindran (A. 3) and C. Muniappan (A. 4) by the Courts below. C. Muniappan v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 2010 SC 3718 : (2010) 9 SCC 567 : JT 2010 (9) 95 : 2010 (8) Scale 637.

[12336] ● Relevant consideration for imposition of death sentence.—Circumstances under which murders take place also differ from case to case and there cannot be a straitjacket formula for deciding upon circumstances under which death penalty must be awarded. In such matters, it is not only a nature of crime, but the background of criminal, his psychology, his social conditions, his mindset for committing offence and effect of imposing alternative punishment on the society are also relevant factors. C. Muniappan v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 2010 SC 3718 : (2010) 9 SC 567 : JT 2010 (9) SC 95.

DEATH OF COMPLAINANT

[12337] ● Death of Complainant—Case does not abate.—On the death of complainant, the case did not abate. It was open to the sons of the complainant to apply for continuation of proceedings against the accused person. By granting such prayer, no illegality has been committed by the Courts. Rashida Kamaluddin Syed v. Shaikh Saheblal Marden, (2007) 3 SCC 548 : 2007 (2) SCC (Cri) 63 : 2007 CrLJ 2306 (2311) : 2007 (2) Crimes 407, (Balasaheb K. Thackery v. Venkat @ Babru, (2006) 5 SCC 530 : (2006) 3 Crimes 52 : JT 2006 (7) SC 44; Ashwin Nanabhai Vyas v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1967 SC 983 : 1967 (1) SCR 807 referred to).

DECENCY

[12338] ● Decency.—The dictionary meaning of "Decency" is "correct and tasteful standards of behaviour as generally accepted; conformity with current standards of behaviour or property; avoidance of obscenity; and the requirements of correct behaviour". (See the Oxford Encyclopedia English Dictionary); "Conformity to the prevailing standards of propriety, morality, modesty, etc: and the quality of being decent". Colling English Dictionary; Ramesh Yeshwant Prabhoo v. Prabhaker K. Kunte, AIR 1996 SC 1113 : (1996) 1 SCC 130 at 152.

[12339] ● "Decency"—Meaning of.—The ordinary dictionary meaning of "Decency" indicates that the action must be in conformity with the current standard of behaviour or property, etc. In a secular polity, the requirement of correct behaviour or propriety is that the appeal for votes should not be made on the ground of the candidate's religion which by itself is no index of the suitability of a candidate for membership of the house. R.Y. Prabhoo v. P.K. Kunte, AIR 1996 SC 1113 (1126) : (1996) 1 SCC 130.

DECENCY OR MORALITY

[12340] ● Decency or morality.—In view of the expression in the interest of "and the context of election campaign for a free and fair poll, the right to contest the election being statutory and subject to the provisions of the statute, the words "Decency or morality" do not require a narrow or pedantic meaning to be given to these words. Ramesh Yashwant Prabhoo v. Prabhaker K. Kunte, AIR 1996 SC 1113 : (1996) 1 SCC 130 at (152).

DECIDE

[12341] ● "Decide" in Rule 30(8), Defence of India Rules.—The use of the word "decide" in Rule 30(8) of the Defence of India Rules does not compel a judicial approach. The mere fact that an executive authority has to decide something does not make the decision judicial. Prven Dutta v. Chief Commissioner of Tripura, AIR 1964 SC 596 : 1965 (1) CrLJ 501.

DECISION

[12342] ● Decision.—According to dictionary meaning "to decide" means settle (question, issue, dispute) by giving victory to one side; give judgment (between for, in favour of, against); bring, come to a resolution" and "decision" means "settlement of question etc. Conclusion, formal Judgment, making up one's mind resolve, resoluteness, decided character". Province of Bombay v. Khushal'das S. Advani, AIR 1950 SC 222 : 1950 SCR 621 (642).

[12343] ● Judgment not to be purely mechanical.—A judgment should not be purely mechanical. It must show that the Court has applied its mind to all the facts and circumstances of the case from all aspects. It is not enough to make copious quotations from the evidence on record without giving reasons to show why the witness was believed or disbelieved. In other words, the judgment must first give a summary of the evidence of each material witness and then give a proper appraisal of the evidence so as to indicate the reasons why the witness was accepted or rejected. Aftab Ahmad Khan v. State of Hyderabad, AIR 1954 SC 436 : 1954 CrLJ 1155 : 1954 SCA 672 : 1954 SCJ 655 : 1955 SCR 588 : 1954 (2) MLJ 338 : 1954 MWN 743 : 1954 AWR (Supp) 69.

[12344] ● Decisions of English Court merely of persuasive authority.—Decisions of the English Courts are merely of persuasive authority. Even where a later decision of an English Court is at variance with a decision of the Supreme Court, that cannot by itself justify an application to the Court to reconsider its earlier decision on a question of law. Manipur Administration, Manipur v. Thokchom Bira Singh, AIR 1965 SC 87 : 1965 (1) CrLJ 120 : 1965 SCD 8 : (1965) 1 SCJ 451 : (1964) 7 SCR 123 : 1965 ACrR 250 : 1965 MLJ (Cri) 233 : 1965 AWR (HC) 358 : (1965) 1 ALT 96.

[12345] ● Distinction between law and canon of construction.—There is nothing in our Constitution which can prevent Supreme Court from departing from its previous decision if it is satisfied of its error and its baneful effect on general interests of the public. While continuity and consistency are conducive to the smooth evolution of the rule of law, hesitancy to set right deviations will retard its growth. Decision of the Court, based on a concession made by parties, cannot be given the same value as one given upon a careful consideration of pros and cons of the question raised. The rule of construction that the King is not bound by a statute unless he is expressly named or brought in by necessary implication, which was accepted by the Privy Council in interpreting statutes vis-à-vis the Crown is inconsistent with and incongruous in the present set up. We have no Crown. It is inconsistent with the rule of law based on the doctrine of equality. It introduces conflicts and discrimination. There is no justification to accept the English canon of construction, for it brings about diverse results and conflicting decisions. The said canon of construction was not 'the law in force' within the meaning of Article 372 of the Constitution, and should not be applied for construing statutes in India. There is an essential distinction between a law and canon of construction. Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, West Bengal v. Corporation of Calcutta, AIR 1967 SC 997 : 1967 CrLJ 950 : (1967) 1 SCA 508 : (1967) 2 SCR 170 : (1967) 1 SCWR 745.

[12346] ● Declaration of emergency.—Article 352(1) requires only a declaration of emergency threatening the security of India by one of the causes mentioned. The words "to that effect" can have no other meaning. The power to make the declaration can no doubt be exercised only when the President is satisfied about the emergency, but we do not see that the Article requires the condition precedent for the exercise of the power, that is, the President's satisfaction to be stated in the declaration.

Article 352 by clause (2) provides that a Proclamation issued under clause (1) may be revoked by a subsequent proclamation and shall cease to operate at the expiration of two months unless before the expiration of that period it has been approved by resolution of both Houses of Parliament. This clause also states that the Proclamation shall be laid before each House of Parliament. It has not been stated that the Houses of Parliament did not approve to proclamation within the period of two months. It would appear, therefore, that the only way a Proclamation ceases to have effect is by one of the events mentioned in this clause. None of this has happened. Nothing contained in an address by the President to the House of the Parliament can operate to terminate the Proclamation. P.L. Lakhanpal v. Union of India, AIR 1967 SC 243 : 1967 CrLJ 282 : (1967) 2 SCJ 105.

[12347] ● Essence of decision is its ratio and not every observation found therein.—What is the essence in a decision is its ratio and not every observation found therein nor what logically follows from the various observations made in it. It is not a profitable task to extract a sentence here and there from a judgment and to build upon it. State of Orissa v. Sudhansu Sekhar Misra, AIR 1968 SC 647 : (1968) 2 SCJ 236.

[12348] ● Expression "decision not according to law"—Wider ambit than expression—Decision contrary to law.—The expression "decision not according to law" is wider in ambit than the expression "decision contrary to law" the object of the latter is to see that there has been no miscarriage of justice and that the decision is according to law, and instances of it are in which the Court which made the order had no jurisdiction or in which the Court has based its decision on evidence which should not have been admitted or cases where the unsuccessful party has not been given a proper opportunity of being heard or the burden of proof has been placed on wrong shoulders. Wherever the unsuccessful party has not had a proper trial according to law, there the High Court can interfere. Nalini Naicker v. Seth Manghraj, AIR 1969 SC 1344 : (1969) 1 SCC 688 : (1969) 2 SCJ 831.

[12349] ● Order passed in application under Section 488, CrPC summary order.—The order passed in an application filed under Section 488, CrPC is summary order which does not finally determine the rights and obligations of the parties thereto. It is an order made in a proceedings under a provision enacted with a view to provide a summary remedy for providing maintenance, and for preventing vagrancy. The decision of the Criminal Court that there was a marriage between Barbara and Sethurathinam and that it was a valid marriage will not operate as decisive in any civil proceeding between the parties for determining those questions. The order of the Criminal Court is not conclusive between the parties. The Civil Court in hearing the proceeding initiated by Sethurathinam will decide it on the evidence which may be produced before the Court uninfluenced by the decision of High Court, as to factum of the ceremony of marriage or as to alleged conversion of Barbara to Hinduism before the marriage or as to the validity of a marriage between a Hindu male and Christen female. Sethurathinam Pillai, S. v. Barbara, (1971) 3 SCC 923 : 1972 SCC (Cri) 171 (172) : 1970 UJ (SC) 105.

[12350] ● Decision of criminal Court not res judicata.—In civil proceedings, the decision of a Criminal Court is not res judicata. The decision of Criminal Court would not preclude him from raising plea that he was not negligent or that the accident was due to the contributory negligence of the defendant. Adi Pherozshah Ghandhi v. H.M. Serrvai, Advocate General of Maharashtra, AIR 1971 SC 385 : (1970) 2 SCC 484 : (1971) 1 SCR 863.

[12351] ● Two out of six judges making observation not regarded as laying down law.—Articles 141 & 22(5) and Misa, Section 8(1).—Where two of the six judges made certain observations, it cannot be regarded as laying down the Law on the point when a Bench of five Judges have held otherwise. John Martin v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1975 SC 775 : (1975) 3 SCC 836 : 1975 SCC (Crl) 255 : 1975 CrLJ 637.

[12352] ● Obiter dictum of Supreme Court be accepted as binding.—Declaration of law by the Supreme Court even if it be only by the way has to be respected. Even obiter dictum of that Court should be accepted as binding. But it does not mean that every statement contained in a judgment of that Court would be attracted by Article 141. Statements on matters other than law have no binding force, as on facts no two cases could be similar and its own decisions which were essentially on questions of fact could not be relied upon as precedents for decision of other cases.

The Sessions Court made a passing reference to an obiter observation of the Supreme Court in Malwa Co-operative Milk Union Ltd., Indore v. Biharilal, 1968 JabLJ 213. The reading of his judgment showed that the mention of the SC ruling was meant to fortify himself and not to apply the ratio of that case. In fact, HIDAYATULLAH, J. (as he then was) was not laying down the law that minimal deficiencies in the milk components justified acquittal in food adulteration cases. In the course of his judgment, the learned Judge to drive home the point that the case itself was so marginal, referred to the microscopic difference from the said standard. To distort that passage, tear it out of context and devise a new defence out of it in respect of food adulteration cases, was to be grossly unjust to the judgment. The law of good adulteration as also the right approach to decisions of the Supreme Court were set out correctly in State of Kerala v. Vasudevan Nair, 1975 CrLJ 97 : 1975 FAC 8 (Ker), wherein such distortion of the passage in the judgment did not and could not pass muster and in fact such misuse of that ruling was repelled by the High Court. The Supreme Court dismissed the appeal as ill-advised. Amritsar Municipality v. Hazara Singh, AIR 1975 SC 1087 : (1975) 1 SCC 794 : 1975 SCC (Cri) 354 : 1975 CrLJ 928 : 1975 MLW (Cri) 76 : 1975 KLT 275.

[12353] ● Decision of co-ordinate Court.—It is true that the decision is pending before this Court in appeal. That however cannot be sufficient reason for the learned Judge to ignore it and absence that it is unnecessary to keep back this matter tell the Supreme Court decides the matters. When there is a decision of a co-ordinate Court, it is open to the learned Judge to differ from it but in that case the only judicial alternative is to refer it to a larger bench and not to dispose of the appeal by taking a contrary view. Judicial discipline as well as decorum suggest that as the only course.

The pendency of the special leave petition in the Supreme Court against the first decision cannot be sufficient reason for the learned Judge to improve that and observe that it is unnecessary to keep back this matter. Eknath Shankarrao Mukkawar v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1977 SC 1177 (1181, 1182) : (1977) 3 SCC 25 : 1977 CrLJ 964 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 352 : (1977) 3 SCR 513.

[12354] ● Judgment of Supreme Court proceeding on concession.—Judgment of the Supreme Court proceeding on concession and not on any analysis or examination of the relevant provisions in no way helps as a precedent. Lakshmi Shanker v. State (Delhi Administration), AIR 1979 SC 451 : (1979) 1 SCC 229 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 269 : 1979 CrLJ 207 : 1978 CrLR (SC) 541 : 1979 SCCrR 28 : (1979) 2 SCR 348 : 1979 UJ (SC) 63 : 1979 CrAppR (SC) 126.

[12355] ● When certain question neither raised nor argued.—When a certain question is neither raised nor argued, a discussion by the Court after "pondering over the issue in depth" would not be a precedent binding on the Courts. Sita Ram v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1979 SC 745, is not an authority regarding the scope of Section 384, CrPC to summarily dismiss the appeal. Rajpur Ruda Meha v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1980 SC 1707 : (1980) 1 SCC 677 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 317 : 1980 CrLJ 1246 : 1980 CrLR (SC) 100 : (1980) 2 SCR 353 : 1980 CrAppR (SC) 57 : (1980) GujLR 411.

[12356] ● No warrant for High Court to reduce to husk decision of Supreme Court by its doctrine gloss.—We need not labour the point because this Court has already interpreted Section 127(3)(b) in (Bai Tahira v. Ali Hussain Fiddali Chotia (1979) 2 SCC 316 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 473) and no Judge in India, except a larger Bench of the Supreme Court with out a departure from judicial discipline can whittle down, wish away or be unbound by the ratio thereof. The language is unmistakably the logic at play is irresistible the conclusion reached is inescapable, the application of the law as expounded there is an easy task. And yet, the Division Bench….. has by the fine art of skirting the real reasoning laid down " unlaw" in the face of the law in Bai Tahira which is hardly a severe and surely a mischief unintended by the Court may be, but embarrassing to the subordinate Judiciary. There is no warrant for the High Court to reduce to a husk a decision of this Court by its doctrine gloss. Fuzleenbi v. K. Khader Vali, AIR 1980 SC 1730 : (1980) 4 SCC 125 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 916 (920) : 1980 CrLJ 1249 : 1980 CrLR (SC) 524.

[12357] ● Decision of Supreme Court declaratory of law.—The decision of the Supreme Court are declaratory of the law. Ganga Sugar Corporation Ltd. v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1980 SC 286 : (1980) 1 SCC 223 : (1980) 1 SCR 769.

[12358] ● Previous decision when ruled out by larger Bench.—It is well settled that whenever a previous decision is overruled by a larger Bench, the previous decision is completely wiped out and Article 141 will have no application to the decision which has already been overruled, and the Court would have to decide the cases according to law laid down by the latest decision of this Court and not by the decision which has been expressly overruled. Ramdas Bhikaji Chaudhari v. Sadanand, AIR 1980 SC 126 : (1980) 1 SCC 550 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 268 (271) : 1980 CrLJ 111 : 1980 CrLR (SC) 41 : (1980) 1 SCR 849 : 1980 UJ (SC) 63.

[12359] ● Earlier finding altering finality.—An earlier finding which had attained finality is binding in the subsequent proceedings in the case. The question about the binding force of a finding at an earlier stage would depend on the question as to what the allegations were, what facts were required to be proved and what findings were arrived at. The question, thus, is not whether the ingredients of the two offences are the same but whether the facts alleged and required to be proved in the particular case to establish the offences are basically the same. Amritlal Ratilal Mehta v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1980 SC 301 : (1980) 1 SCC 121 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 81 (84) : 1980 CrLJ 214 : 1980 CrLR (SC) 48 : (1980) 2 SCR 72 : 1980 CrAppR (SC) 1 : 1980 UJ (SC) 79. TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) Bhagwat Ram v. State of Rajasthan, (1972) 2 SCC 446; (2) State of Rajasthan v. Tarachand Jain, AIR 1973 SC 2131 : (1974) 3 SCC 72 : 1973 CrLJ 1396.

[12360] ● Law laid down by Supreme Court binding on all.—The law laid down by the Supreme Court is binding on all, notwithstanding the fact that it is against the State or a private party and that it is binding on even those who were not parties before the Court. A mere reading of Article 141 of the Constitution brings into sharp focus its expanse and its all pervasive nature. In cases like this where numerous petitions are disposed of by a common judgment and only one appeal is filed, the parties to the common judgment could very well have and should have intervened and could have requested the Court to hear them also. They cannot be heard to say that the decision was taken by the this Court behind their back or profess ignorance of the fact that an appeal had been filed by the State against the common judgment. We would like to observe that in the fitness of things, it would be desirable that the State Government also took out publication in such cases to alert parties bound by the Judgment, of the fact that an appeal has been preferred before this Court. Shenoy and Co., Bangalore v. Commercial Tax-Officer, Circle II, Bangalore, AIR 1985 SC 621 : (1985) 2 SCC 512.

[12361] ● Sessions Judge over looking binding nature of Law declared by Supreme Court.—The High Court failed to consider the matter in some detail especially when its attention was drawn to the decision of the Supreme Court instead of dismissing the revision in limine, since the order of the Sessions Judge referred to it. The observations of the Sessions Judge disclosed a confusion of thought about the effect of a decision rendered by the Supreme Court and a misreading of Article 141 of the Constitution of India. There was nothing like any prospective operation alone of the law laid down by the Supreme Court. The law laid down by it applied to all pending proceedings. The Sessions Judge overlooked the binding nature of the law declared by the Supreme Court, mandating under Article 141, every Court subordinate to the Supreme Court to accept it. The High Court could have, if it had examined the matter, corrected the error into which the Sessions Judge fell. The order of the High Court was set aside. A.S. Gauraya v. S.N. Thakur, AIR 1986 SC 1440 : (1986) 2 SCC 709 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 249 : 1986 CrLJ 1074.

[12362] ● High Court to take words in Judgment in sense in which they were used.—Under the guise of interpreting a Supreme Court Judgment in that case, the High Court virtually sat in appeal over the Judgment of this Court and modified it. The High Court must ought to have taken the words in that judgment in the sense in which they were and ought to have applied them to the facts before it, instead of trying to put its own words in the mouth of this Court. G.K

Dudani v. S.D. Sharma, AIR 1986 SC 1455 (1463, 1464) : 1986 (Supp) SCC 239.

[12363] ● Law declared by Supreme Court.—What the Judges of this Court expressly decide or what they must be considered to have decided by necessary implication by reference to the facts stated by the Judges themselves are what constitute precedents. We cannot traverse beyond the judgment ignoring what has been said in the judgment. When a question is answered "pressly or by necessary implication we cannot ignore the answer by referring to the decisions appealed against and holding that the real question was something else. Gopal Upadhyaya v. Union of India, AIR 1987 SC 413 : 1986 (Supp) 3 SCC 501 : (1987) 1 UJ (SC) 51.

[12364] ● Bench of two judges not to disregard decision of three Judges.—Judicial discipline requires that a Bench of two Judges should not disregard the decision of a Bench of three Judges; but if the Bench of two Judges is inclined to disagree with what has been said by the Bench of three Judges on the ground that it does not represent the correct law on the subject. The case would be referred to a larger Bench. Ujagar Prints v. Union of India, AIR 1987 SC 874 (876) : JT 1987 (2) SC 54 : 1986 (Supp) SCC 652 : (1987) 1 UJ (SC) 209.

[12365] ● Law must be definite and certain.—Law must be definite, and certain. If any of the features of the law can usefully be regarded as normative, it is such basic postulates as the requirement of consistency in judicial decision making. It is this requirement of consistency that gives to the law much of its rigour. At the same time, there is need for flexibility. Professor H.L.A. Hart regarded as one of the leading thinkers of our time observes in his influential book "The Concept of Law" depicting the difficult task of a Judge to strike a balance between certainty and flexibility:

"When there is obscurity in the language of a statute, it results in confusion and disorder. No doubt the Courts so frame their judgments as to give the impression that their decisions are the necessary consequence of predetermined rules. In very simple cases it may be so; but in the vast majority of cases that trouble the Courts, neither statute nor precedents in which the rules are legitimately contained allow of only one result. In most important cases there is always a choice. The Judge has to choose between alternative meanings to be given to the words of a statute or between alternative meanings to be given to the words of a statute or between rival interpretation of what a precedent amounts to. It is only the tradition that Judges "find" and do not "make" law that conceals this, and presents their decisions as if they were deductions smoothly made from clear pre-existing rules without intrusion of the Judge's choice" Baliram Waman Hiray (Dr.) v. Mr. Justice B. Lentin, AIR 1988 SC 2267 : (1988) 4 SCC 419 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 941 (965).

[12366] ● Each Bench small or large exercises power vested in Court.—Each Bench, whether small or large, exercises the powers vested in the Court and decisions rendered by the Benches irrespective of then size are considered as decisions of the Court. The practice has developed that a large Bench is entitled to overrule of a smaller Bench notwithstanding the fact that each of the decisions is that of the Court. That principle, however, would not apply in the present situation and since we are sitting as a Bench of Seven we are not entitled to reverse the decision of the Constitution Bench. Overruling when made by a larger Bench of an earlier decision of a smaller one is intended to take away the precedent value of the decision without affecting the binding effect of the decision in the particular case." A.R. Antulay v. R.S. Nayak, AIR 1988 SC 1531 : (1988) 2 SCC 602 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 372 (438) : 1988 CrLR (SC) 366 : JT 1988 (2) SC 325.

[12367] ● Precedent authority only.—It is well settled that a precedent is an authority only for what it actually decides and not for what may remotely or even logically follows from it. Goodyear India Ltd. v. State of Haryana, AIR 1990 SC 781 (793, 794) : (1990) 2 SCC 71 : JT 1989 (4) SC 229.

[12368] ● Decision on question not argued.—A decision on a question which has not been argued cannot be created as precedent. Goodyear India Ltd. v. State of Haryana, AIR 1990 SC 781 (796) : (1990) 2 SCC 71 : JT 1989 (4) SC 229.

[12369] ● Remission—Pardon etc.—Grant of—Framing of guidelines.—No doubt in Maru Ram case (AIR 1980 SC 2147), the constitution Bench of the Supreme Court did recommend the framing of guidelines for the exercise of power under Articles 72 and 161 of the Constitution. But that was a mere recommendation and not a ratio decidendi having a binding effect on the Constitution Bench in Kehar Singh's case (AIR 1989 SC 653). Therefore, the observation made by the Constitution Bench in Kehar Singh's case does not upturn any ratio laid down in Maru Ram's case. Nor has the Bench in Kehar Singh's case said anything with regard to using the provisions of extant Re mission Rules as guidelines for the exercise of the clemency powers. Ashok Kumar alias Golu v. Union of India, AIR 1991 SC 1792 (1803, 1804) : (1991) 3 SCC 498 : 1991 CrLJ 2483.

[12370] ● Decision not to mean conclusion.— A "Decision" does not merely mean the "conclusion" it embraces within its fold the reasons which form the basis for arriving at the "conclusion". The judgment of the trial Court contains only "conclusion" and nothing more. The judgment of the trial Court cannot, therefore, be sustained. Mukhtar Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1995 SC 686 (690) : 1995 AIR SCW 467 : (1995) 1 SCC 760.

[12371] ● Word decision in common parlance more or less natural expression.—The word "decision" in common parlance is more or less a natural expression and it can be used with reference to purely executive acts as well as Judicial orders. The mere fact that an executive authority has to decide something does not make the decision judicial. It is the manner in which the decision has to be arrived at which makes the difference and the real test "is there any duty to decide judicially". Mukhtar Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1995 SC 686 (690) : 1995 AIR SCW 467 : (1995) 1 SCC 760.

DECISION OF HIGH COURT IN REVISION

[12372] ● Decision of High Court in revision.—The judgment of the High Court in revision is binding in the subsequent proceedings in the case. State of Rajasthan v. Tarachand Jain, AIR 1973 SC 2131 : 1973 SCC (Cri) 774 (781) : 1973 CrLJ 1396.

DECISION OF SUPREME COURT

[12373] ● Decision of Supreme Court are binding.—The decision of the Supreme Court laying down the position in law are laws binding on all irrespective of the fact whether one was party to that or not or any notice of those proceedings were served on him. Star Diamond Co. India v. Union of India, AIR 1987 SC 179 : (1986) 4 SCC 246 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 431.

DECOMPOSITION

[12374] ● Medical officer finding marks of injuries—Cause of death—Decomposition.— The very fact that Medical Officer found marks of injuries from which he could give a definite opinion about the cause of death shows that the decomposition was not so advanced as to deny identification. Hardayal v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1976 SC 2055 : (1976) 2 SCC 812 : 1976 SCC (Cri) 317 : 1976 CrLJ 1578.

[12375] ● Decomposition.—'Decomposition' is not something which always takes place suddenly or immediately. It is a process which, in some cases, may be slow and in some cases, quick. Decomposition cannot be noticed or ascertained by the Court when it inspects the part of the sample under sub-section (2-B) of Section 13 of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954, to ascertain whether the mark and seal or fastening are intact and the signature or thumb-impression, as the case may be, not tampered with, before dispatching that part to the Central Food Laboratory. Even with the mark and seal intact, and the signature or thumb-impression, as the case may be, not tampered with, the sample might have already decomposed or decomposition might have already commenced. Whether a sample has decomposed or not can only be ascertained when the sealed container is opened in the Central Food Laboratory for the purpose of analysis. Charanji Lal v. State of Punjab, AIR 1984 SC 80 : (1984) 1 SCC 329 : 1984 CrLJ 15 : (1983) 2 Crimes 850.

DEEM/DEEMING PROVISION

[12376] ● Proceeding before commission of Inquiry not judicial proceedings.—The learned Advocate-General contends that use of the words "deemed to be " in Section 5(4) of commission of Enquiry Act, 1952 indicates that the proceedings before a commission of inquiry are not judicial proceedings, but by legal fiction they have to be regarded as judicial proceedings for the purposes of Sections 193 and 228, IPC. It is contended that the word "decreed" is however, sometimes used by the Legislature in order to remove any doubt in the matter. He drew our attention to the following observations of LORD RADCLIFFE in St. Aubyn v. Attorney General, 1952 AC 15.

[12377] ● Deeming provision.—"Deemed to be held" creates fiction and includes, co-sharers who may not be in actual possession have nontheless the title or a right in the property co-shared. Kailash Rai v. Jai Jai Ram, AIR 1973 SC 893 : (1973) 1 SCC 527 : (1973) 3 SCR 411.

[12378] ● Deeming provision—Construction of.—This Court while construing such deeming provision has adopted and applied in a number of cases the rule of construction expounded by Lord ASQUITH in East End Dwellings Co. Ltd. v.

Finsbury Borough Council 1952 AC 109 at p. 132 in the following words:

"If you are bidden to treat an imaginary state of affairs as real, you must surely, unless prohibited from doing so, also imagine as real the consequences and incidents which, if the putative state of affairs had in fact existed must inevitably have flowed from or accompanied it. One of these in this case is emancipation from the 1939 level of rents. The statute says that you must imagine a certain state of affairs; it does not say that having done so, you must cause or permit your imagination to boggle when it comes to the inevitable corollaries of that state of affairs". State of Andhra Pradesh v. Vallabhapuram Ravi, AIR 1985 SC 870 (875, 876) : (1984) 4 SCC 410 : 1984 SCC (Cri) 635 : 1984 CrLJ 1511 : 1984 CrLR (SC) 397 : (1984) 2 Crimes 552.

[12379] ● "Deemed"—Meaning of.—LORD RADCHIFFE observed in St. Aubyn v. Attorney General 1952 AC 15: "The word "deemed" is used a great deal in modern legislation. Sometimes it is used to imposed for the purpose of a statute an artificial construction of a word or phrase that would not otherwise prevail. Sometimes it is used to put beyond doubt a particular construction that might otherwise be uncertain. Sometimes it is used to give a comprehensive description that includes what is obvious, what is uncertain and what is, in the ordinary sense impossible". Baliram Waman Hiray (Dr.) v. Mr. Justice B. Lentin, AIR 1988 SC 2267 (2282) : (1988) 4 SCC 419 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 941 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 799 : JT 1988 (4) SC 265 : (1989) 3 Crimes 655.

[12380] ● Dowry Prohibition Act enacted to provide effective check to dowry deaths.—The Dowry Prohibition Act, 1961 was enacted to provide an effective check to dowry deaths which were continuing dispute the then prevailing laws. Various amendments were brought in bringing more stringent provisions in the aforesaid 1961 Act in order to stem the onslaught on the life of a married woman. It is true as argued by the learned counsel for the appellant that in criminal jurisprudence benefit of doubt is extendable to the accused. But that benefit of doubt would arise in the context of the application of penal law, and in the facts and circumstances of a case. The concept of benefit of doubt has an important role to play but within the confines of the stringency of laws. Since the cause of death to a married woman was to occur not in normal circumstances but as a "dowry death", for which the evidence was not so easily available, as it is mostly confined to within four walls of a house, namely, husband's house, where all likely accused reside. Hence the aforesaid amendments brought in the concept of deemed "dowry death" by the husband or the relatives, as the case may be. This deeming clause has a role to play and cannot be taken lightly and ignored to shield an accused, otherwise the very purpose of the amendment will be lost. Of course, the prosecution has to prove the ultimate essential ingredients beyond all reasonable doubt after raising the initial presumption of "deemed dowry death" Pawan Kumar v. State of Harayana, AIR 1998 SC 958 (962, 963) : (1998) 3 SCC 309 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 740 : 1998 CrLJ 1144 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 216.

[12381] ● Category of officers while exercising powers under specific provisions become public servant—Legal fiction.—A specific category of officers while exercising powers under specific sections have, by legal fiction, become "public servant" and it is only for the purposes of the Cooperative Societies Act. That by itself does not make those persons "public servants" under the Indian Penal Code, so as to be prosecuted for having committed the offence under the Penal Code. When a person is "deemed to be" something, the only meaning possible is that whereas he is not in reality that something, the Act of Legislature requires him to be so treated obviously for the purposes of the said Act and not otherwise. State of Maharashtra v. Laljit Rajshi Shah, AIR 2000 SC 937 : (2000) 2 SCC 699 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 533 : 2000 CrLJ 1494.

[12382] ● Dangerous person—Whether detenu, acted in manner prejudicial to maintenance of public interest.—Under the explanation under Section 2(a)(iv) Maharashtra Prevention of Dangerous Activities of Slumlords, Bootleggers and Drugs Offenders Act, 1981 it is provided that public order shall be deemed to have been affected adversely or shall be deemed likely to be affected adversely if any of the activities of any of the persons referred to in the clause directly or indirectly is causing or calculated to cause any harm, danger or alarm or a feeling of insecurity among the general public or any section thereof, or a grave or widespread danger to life or public health. The deeming clause in Explanation widens the scope of the provision in Section 2(a) of the aforesaid Act. It follows that if a person is found to be repeatedly engaged in such activities as mentioned in 2(b-1) which affect adversely or are likely to affect adversely the maintenance of public order, he can be detained as a dangerous person in exercise of the power under Section 3 of the Act. Phulwari Jagdambaprasad Pathak v. R.H. Mendonca, AIR 2000 SC 2527 : (2000) 6

[12383] ● Legal fiction.—The legislative may sometimes create a claim of fictions by the same Act or by succeeding Acts. If the legislature is competent to enact a provision creating a legal fiction, there is no reason why it cannot create a chain of fictions of necessity arises. It is true that in interpreting a provision creating a legal fiction it is not open to the Court to import another fiction. State of West Bengal v. Sadan K. Bormal, AIR 2004 SC 3666 : 2004 (3) Crimes 161 : JT 2004 (2) Supp SC 367.

[12384] ● Deem.—So called deemed surrender on another criminal case cannot be taken as starting point for counting 15 days police remand or 90 days or 60 days as the case may be under Section 167, CrPC. State of West Bengal v. Dinesh Dalmia, AIR 2007 SC 1801 : (2007) 5 SCC 773 : 2007 (3) SCC (Cri) 19 : 2007 CrLJ 2757 (2763).

[12385] ● "Deemed"—Meaning.—"The word "deemed" is used a great deal in modern legislation. Sometimes it is used to impose for the purposes of a statute an artificial construction of a word or phrase that would not otherwise prevail. Sometimes it is used to put beyond doubt a particular construction that might otherwise be uncertain. Sometimes it is used to give a comprehensive description that includes what is obvious, what is uncertain and what is, in the ordinary sense, impossible."

Whether the word "deemed" when used in a statute established a conclusive or a rebuttable presumption depended upon the context. Hindustan Co-op. Housing Building Society Ltd. v. Registrar, Co-operative Societies, (2009) 14 SCC 302 : 2009 (2) SCR 331 : JT 2009 (2) 530 : 2009 (2) Scale 760.

DEFAMATION
(Ss. 499, 500, IPC)

[12386] ● Defamation.—In a case an editor of a local Telegu Weekly Journal published an article describing a stationary Sub-Magistrate of the place as corrupt. When contempt of Court proceeding was drawn it was argued that since the editor is prima facie punishable for defamation under Section 500, IPC, the offence cannot in view of aforesaid provision then Section 2(3) Contempt of Courts Act, 1926 be taken cognizance of by the High Court. The provision aforesaid excludes the jurisdiction of High Court only in cases where the acts alleged to constitute contempt of a subordinate Court are punishable as contempt under specific provisions of the Indian Penal Code but not where these acts merely amount to offences of other descript for which punishment has been provided for in the Indian Penal Code, This would be clear from the language of the sub-section which uses the words "where such contempt is an offence and does not say "where the act alleged to constitute such contempt is an offence". It is argued that if such was the intention of the Legislature, it could have expressly said that the High Court's jurisdiction will be ousted only when the contempt is punishable as such under the Indian Penal Code. It seems that the reason for not using such language in the sub-section may be that the expression "Contempt of Court" has not been used as description of any offence in the Indian Penal Code, though certain acts which would be punishable as contempt of Court in England, are made offence under it. Baithana Ram Krishna v. State of Madras, AIR 1952 SC 149 : 1952 CrLJ 832 : 1952 SCJ 137.

[12387] ● Scope of—Section 195, CrPC, 1898.—Section 195, CrPC requires that when a person gives to a public servant false information relating to an offence, or lodges with a public servant a false charge against any person as to the commission of an offence, or institutes in any Court proceedings against any person on a false charge, and thereby commits an offence under Section 182 or 211 of the Penal Code, no Court shall take cognizance of that offence except upon a complaint made by such public servant or Court. Section 195, CrPC thus prohibits the taking of cognizance, except upon the complaint made by the public servant or Court concerned, of offences arising from the making of false charges against an innocent person. It does not prohibit a Court from taking cognizance, on the complaint made by a private person, of any other offence disclosed in a false information given to the police under Section 154, CrPC or in a false complaint given to a Magistrate under Section 200, CrPC. Therefore, if a complaint lodged before a Court under Section 200, CrPC or a first information relating to an offence given to the police under Section 154, CrPC is not only false but also contains defamatory statements against any person, that person is entitled to prosecute the offender under Section 500 of the Penal Code, and Section 195, CrPC cannot be pleaded by the accused as a bar against such prosecution. Bashir-ul-Huq v. State of W.B., AIR 1953 SC 293 : 1953 CrLJ 1232 : 1953 SCJ 405 : 1953 SCR 836 : 1953 SCA 1062 : (1953) 1 MLJ 775 : 1953 ALJ 362 : 1953 MWN 749.

[12388] ● Offence of defamation cognizance of—Taken on basis, of facts in complaint.—The provisions of Section 198, CrPC are mandatory, and it means that cognizance of an offence of defamation, can be taken only on the basis of the facts stated in the complaint made by the person whose reputation has been harmed. Section 238(3), CrPC emphasizes this position by specifically stating that conviction for an offence referred to in Section 198 is not legal if no complaint has been made in respect of it. If the facts stated in the complaint are not deposed to by the complainant or his witnesses, the accused must be discharged, even though the evidence given discloses another but quite a new offence of defamation. In other words, when cognizance of an offence of defamation has been taken on a complaint setting out a particular set of facts, the charge framed must be confined to those facts only, and if those facts are not supported by evidence, the only course open to the Magistrate is to discharge the accused, leaving it to the complainant, if he so desires, to file a fresh complaint on the facts disclosed during the trial. If in such a case the Magistrate proceeds to frame a charge on the facts disclosed in evidence but as to which there was no complaint before him as required by Section 198, CrPC he acts without jurisdiction, and thereafter if he acquits the accused, even though he is of opinion that the accused had uttered the defamatory words with which he was charged, on the ground that Section 198 stood in the way of an order of conviction, his order of acquittal must be regarded as a nullity. In the present case, this was exactly what had happened. The aggrieved complainant had applied to the High Court in revision against the decision of the Magistrate, but the High Court dismissed the application. He appealed to this Court by special leave. The appeal was allowed, the order of acquittal made by the Magistrate was set aside, and the accused was discharged, leaving it to the appellant to file a fresh complaint, if he so desired, on the facts on which the charge had been framed in the trial Court. Abdul Rehman Mahomed Yusuf v. Mahomed Haji Ahmad Agbotwala, AIR 1960 SC 82 : 1960 CrLJ 1581 : 1960 SCJ 87 : (1960) 1 SCR 749 : 1960 NLJ 209 : 1960 MPLJ 513 : 1960 ACrR 76 : 26 CutLT 181 : 62 BomLR 143 : 1960 MLJ (Cri) 32.

[12389] ● Publication by member of question disallowed by Speaker of Legislation Assembly.—The only question in the present appeal was whether a member of the Legislature could claim absolute privilege under Article 194 of the Constitution in respect of publication by him outside the House of Legislature of questions put by him inside the House which were disallowed by the Speaker, or whether he is liable to be prosecuted and convicted of the offence under Section 500, IPC like any other offender if such published matter is defamatory of any person. The legal position in England is that a member of the House of Commons is immune from prosecution in respect of speeches made by him in the House, but the immunity does not extend to publication of the same speech outside separately from the rest of the proceedings in the House, and if the speech contains matters which are defamatory of any person, the member is liable for defamation. The law in England in respect of the privileges and immunities of the members of the British Parliament is that there is no absolute privilege attaching to the publication of extracts from the proceedings of the House of Commons. So far as a member of the House of Commons is concerned, he has an absolute privilege in respect of what he has spoken within the four walls of the House, but there is only a qualified privilege even in respect of his own speech in the House, if he causes the same to be published in the public press. The publication of the proceedings of Parliament, which is not under the authority of the House, stands exactly on the same footing as publication of the proceedings in Courts of justice, and all the limitations placed on the one to prevent injustice to individuals necessarily attach to the other. So long as the legal position in India in this matter is not crystallised by law made by our Legislatures, the privileges, powers and immunity of the members of our Legislatures are the same as those of the members of the House of Commons as stated above, and no more. In the present case, in the exercise of his powers under Rules 28 and 29 of the Assembly Procedural Rules, the Speaker had disallowed certain questions asked by the appellant as they contained imputations of a personal character against an outsider. The appellant had got those questions published, and it was not his case that the publication was of the proceedings of the Legislature. That being so, there was no absolute privilege in his favour in respect of such publication and if the questions so published contained any defamatory imputations against the character of any person, a criminal prosecution for defamation under Section 500 of the Penal Code could lie against him in respect of such publication. Jatish Chandra Ghosh (Dr.) v. Hari Sadhan Mukherjee, AIR 1961 SC 613 : 1961 (1) CrLJ 743 : 1961 AWR (HC) 231.

[12390] ● Defamation—What is.—Section 499 of the Penal Code contains a number of Exceptions which lay down what is not defamation. The Fourth Exception says that it is not defamation to publish a substantially true report of the proceedings of a Court of justice. But there is no Exception in Section 499 making a similar concession in respect of proceedings of a House of Legislature or Parliament. The question, therefore, has to be decided entirely on the basis of the privileges of the members of the Legislature as laid down in Article 194, which under clause (3) of that Article are the same as those of the members of the House of Commons in England, and no more. Jatish Chandra Ghosh (Dr.) v. Hari Sadhan Mukherjee, AIR 1961 SC 613 : 1961 (1) CrLJ 743 : 1961 AWR (HC) 231.

[12391] ● Section 499—Exception 8 and 9—Applicability.—In the present case, the accused K who was a police officer and one Mst. R were neighbours. K addressed an application to the District Panchayat Officer in which he stated that R was a woman of loose character who was having illicit connection with goondas, who came at all hours of the night, and that her immoral activities reflected badly on the locality, and asked the Panchayat to take suitable action to get the house vacated by R and thus end the prostitution adda. The accused was convicted under Section 500, Penal Code, for having made a grossly defamatory statement and was sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for six months. The only question in this case is whether the case falls within Exception 8, or Exception 9 to Section 499. Exception 8 provides that it is not defamation to prefer in good faith an accusation against a person to anyone in lawful authority over that person with respect to the subject matter of the accusation. Exception 9 provides that it is not defamation to make an imputation on the character of another if it is made in good faith for the protection of the interest of the maker or for the public good. The District Panchayat Officer or the Panchayat had no such lawful authority over the woman defamed as would bring the communication within Exception 8. The Panchayats have jurisdiction only under the Punjab Gram Panchayat Act, 1952 and under Section 38 of that Act the criminal jurisdiction of the Panchayat is confined to the offences specified in Schedule I-A to the Act. Prostitution is not an offence under the Penal Code and the keeping of a disorderly or bawdy house is not an offence within Schedule 1A. Further, Section 42 of the Act provides that the Panchayat shall not take cognizance of any offence under the Penal Code in which the complainant or the accused is a public servant. So, even if the complaint be taken to be a complaint of a public nuisance, it was excluded from the jurisdiction of the Panchayat as the complainant was a public servant. Therefore, the defence based on Exception 8 must fail. The terms of Exception 9 also were not satisfied, even if good faith be taken to have been established. For the application of Exception 9 it is not enough that the accused makes the imputation in good faith to protect his own interest. It is further necessary that the person to whom the communication is made has an interest in protecting the person who makes the accusation. In other words, besides the bona fides of the person making the imputation, the person to whom the imputation is conveyed must have a common interest with the person making it which is served by the communication. The Exception can apply only when the accused has established such common interest in the subject-matter of the communication between himself and the person to whom the communication is made. The Panchayat or its officer had no such common interest in the communication made to it by the accused, and hence an essential condition of the application of Exception 9 was absent. That being so, Exception 9 could not be invoked by the accused. Kanwar Lal v. State of Punjab, AIR 1963 SC 1317 : 1963 (2) CrLJ 345 : 1963 SCD 350.

[12392] ● Section 499—Exceptions 8 and 9, IPC—Applicability.—The point of difference between Exception 8 and Exception 9 is that under Exception 8 it has to be established by the accused that the person to whom the communication is made has lawful authority to deal with the subject-matter of the communication and take action against the person complained against, while under Exception 9 it has to be established that the person to whom the communication is made has a common interest with the accused in the subject-matter of the communication. Where the accused fails to establish either such lawful authority or such common interest his case would not fall under either Exception. Kanwar Lal v. State of Punjab, AIR 1963 SC 1317 : 1963 (2) CrLJ 345 : 1963 SCD 350.

[12393] ● When and proved to have made defamatory comments with ulterior motive without justification deserves deterrent punishment.—In this case it has been urged for the appellant, that the sentence was severe and be reduced to the period of imprisonment already undergone. We do not see any justification for reducing the sentence. The Press has great power in impressing the minds of people and it is essential that persons responsible for publishing anything in newspapers should take good care before publishing anything, which tends to harm the reputation of a person Reckless comments are to be avoided. When one is proved to have made defamatory comments, with an ulterior motive and without the least justification, motivated by self interest, he deserves a deterrent sentence. Sahib Singh v. State of U.P., AIR 1965 SC 1451 : 1965 (2) CrLJ 434 : (1965) 2 SCR 823.

[12394] ● Sanction for prosecution in respect of defamation—Person includes collection of persons identifiable.—Following points have been urged on behalf of the appellant:

(1) That the sanction granted was a general sanction and not with respect to the defamation of any particular Public Prosecutor or Assistant Public Prosecutor and that such sanction was not contemplated by law.

(2) That it is not proved that the appellant had any intention to harm the reputation of any particular Public Prosecutor or Assistant Public Prosecutor.

(3) That there was no evidence that the remarks were defamatory towards any particular group.

(4) That the prosecution did not lead any evidence to establish that the defamed group had any reputation which could be harmed.

(5) That the remarks were for public good.

The sanction in question is with respect to defamation of two persons (1) R. K. Sharma, Assistant Public Prosecutor, Aligarh, and (2) the other Police Prosecuting Staff of Government of Uttar Pradesh, which would be the entire prosecuting staff in the State. There is, thus, nothing wrong with the form of sanction.

The language of Explanation 2 to Section 499, IPC is general and any collection of persons would be covered by it. Of course, that collection of persons must be identifiable in the sense that one could, with certainty, say that this group of particular people had been defamed, as distinguished from the rest of the community. The prosecuting staff of Aligarh or, as a matter of fact, the prosecuting staff in the State of Uttar Pradesh, is certainly such an identifiable group or collection of persons. There is nothing indefinite about it. This group consists of all members of the prosecuting staff in the service of the Government of Uttar Pradesh. Within this general group of Public Prosecutors of U.P. there is again an identifiable group of prosecuting staff, consisting of Public Prosecutors and Assistant Public Prosecutors at Aligarh. This group of persons would be covered by Explanation 2 and could, therefore, be the subject of defamation. The impugned remarks are per se defamatory of the group of persons referred to. The defence in the Courts below was that they were for public good and the appellant was protected under Exceptions 3 and 9 of Section 499, IPC The tenor of the Article did not indicate, that the purpose of the appellant in publishing these remarks was 'public good'. The impugned remarks could certainly lead the readers of the Article to believe or suspect that the prosecuting staff is corrupt in the discharge of its duties as Public Prosecutors, and are thus bound to affect the reputation of the prosecuting staff adversely. Unless proved otherwise, the presumption is that every person has a good reputation. Exception 3 to Section 499, IPC comes into play when some defamatory remarks are made in good faith. Nothing has been brought on the record to establish that those defamatory remarks were made by the appellant, after due care and attention and so, in good faith. Exception 9 gives protection to imputations made in good faith for the protection of the interest of the person making it or of any other person or for public good. The appellant has not established his good faith and, as we have said above, the imputations could not have been said to have been made for the public good. We are, therefore, of the opinion that the appellant has been rightly held to have committed the offence under Section 500, IPC. Sahib Singh Mehra v. State of U.P., AIR 1965 SC 1451 : 1965 (2) CrLJ 434 : 1965 SCD 600 : (1965) 2 SCR 823.

[12395] ● Good faith and public good both to be satisfied.—"Normally, we would not have examined the correctness of the finding recorded by the High Court in respect of the appellant's plea of good faith, because that is a finding made by the High Court on appreciating oral and documentary evidence, and as it happens, the said finding confirms the view taken by the trial Judge himself. Whether or not good faith has been proved by an accused person who pleads in his defence the Ninth Exception to a charge of defamation under Section 500, IPC would be a question of fact and even if it is assumed to be a mixed question of fact and law, if the Courts below make a concurrent finding on such a question, this Court generally does not re-examine the matter for itself while exercising its jurisdiction under Article 136 of the Constitution. But in the present case, we cannot accept the finding of the High Court, because it is plain that in dealing with the question of good faith the High Court has misdirected itself materially on points of law. In the present case, the ingredient of public good is satisfied, and the only question which arose for decision in the Courts below and arises before us, is whether the imputation can be said to have been made in good faith. There is no doubt that the requirements of good faith and public good have both to be satisfied, and so the failure of the appellant to prove good faith would exclude the application of the Ninth Exception in his favour even if the requirement of public good is satisfied. If it can be shown that the appellant had led evidence to show, that he acted in good faith, and by the test of probabilities that evidence proved his case, he would be entitled to claim the benefit of Exception 9. In other words, the onus on the accused person may well be compared to the onus on a party in civil proceedings, and just as in civil proceedings the Court trying an issue makes its decision by adopting the test of probabilities, so must a criminal Court hold that the plea made by the accused is proved if a preponderance of probability is established by the evidence led by him. In dealing with the claim of the appellant under the Ninth Exception, it was not necessary, and indeed it was immaterial, to consider whether the appellant had strictly proved the truth of the allegations made by him. In considering the question as to whether the appellant acted in good faith in publishing his impugned statement, we have to enquire whether he acted with due care and attention. There is no doubt, that the mere plea that the accused believed that what he stated was true by itself, will not sustain his case of good faith under the Ninth Exception. Simple belief or actual belief by itself is not enough. The appellant must show that the belief in his impugned statement had a rational basis and was not just a blind simple belief. That is where the element of due care and attention plays an important role. If it appears that before making the statement the accused did not show due care and attention, that would defeat his plea of good faith. But it must be remembered that good faith does not require logical infallibility. Harbhajan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1966 SC 97 : 1966 CrLJ 82 : (1966) 1 SCJ 753.

[12396] ● Editor means person who controls selection of matter to be published in newspaper.—The term "editor" is defined in the Act to mean a person who controls the selection of the matter that is published in a newspaper. Where there is mentioned an editor is a person who is responsible for selection of the material Section 7 raises the presumption in respect of such a person. The name of the person has to be printed on the copy of the newspaper. Therefore not the members of the editorial board, but the persons declared as editor, publisher or printer are liable for any defamatory imputation in any newspaper news item. State of Maharashtra v. Dr. R.B. Choudhari, AIR 1968 SC 110 : 1968 CrLJ 95 : (1967) 3 SCR 708 : 1967 CAR 221.

[12397] ● Presumption as to selection of material for publication.—In a case M admitted that the defamatory article was written by him. Three other persons were shown as members of the editorial board along with M. It was held the presumption under Section 7, Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867 is attracted to M, he having selected the material for publication and such presumption cannot be drawn against other persons. State of Maharashtra v. R.B. Choudhury, AIR 1968 SC 110 : 1968 CrLJ 95 : (1967) 3 SCR 708 : 1967 CAR 221.

[12398] ● Defamatory statement against character—Punishment for defamation—Conviction.—In this appeal, the prosecution case was that one Bishan Kaur, a nurse filed a complaint against the present appellant, who was at that time President of the Municipal Committee, that he had made defamatory remarks against her character at a public meeting and that he further wrote a letter to the Civil Surgeon which contained defamatory statement against her character and further that he repeated the same before the Civil Surgeon. The appellant pleaded justification under Exceptions I, VIII and IX to Section 499, IPC. Counsel for the appellant contended that good faith of the appellant was established by two features : (1) that as President he had to act in public interest; (2) Large number of people who signed the application and passed the resolution were present at the meeting and there were allegations against the nurse. Hence, he acted not only in good faith but also for public good. The concurrent findings of fact were : (1) there was no record of the proceedings of the meeting and therefore not dependable to rely only on the oral evidence of the complainant that the appellant had defamed her at the meeting. (2) The application alleged to have been made by the residents of the place and further alleged to have been read over by the Secretary of the Municipal Committee at the meeting was a manufactured document. (3) The resolution alleged by the appellant to have been passed by the residents at the meeting was also a forged document. The main reason for rejecting both the application and the resolution from consideration by both the Courts was that none of these alleged documents was put to any of the prosecution witnesses some of whom admittedly attended the meeting. The genuineness of the document was rightly disbelieved. The evidence was that the imputation concerning the complainant was not true but was motivated by animus of the appellant. The appellant totally failed to prove both the truth and the publication of the imputation was for the public good. The appellant did not examine anybody connected with the letter relied on by him. Documents do not prove themselves. There was no proof that the appellant made any enquiry about the matters before he wrote the letter or that he acted with reasonable care. The appellant was a man of power and wealth and that was all the more, why he should have acted with restraint and decorum. He failed in both. His conviction was, therefore, correct. Chaman Lal v. State of Punjab, AIR 1970 SC 1372 : (1970) 1 SCC 590 : 1970 SCC (Cri) 253 : 1970 CrLJ 1266 : 1970 SCCrR 452.

[12399] ● Libel by husband through letters written to wife publication.—Unless there is publication, there can be no offence of defamation committed. The rule that husband and wife are one in the eye of law as in England has not been adopted in its full force in our system of law and certainly not in our criminal jurisprudence. A person making libelous statement in a communication to his wife is not absolutely protected in a criminal proceeding for defamation, for under the Eighth Exception and the Illustration to Section 499 the statements are privileged only when they are made in good faith. In determining the criminality of an act under the Indian Penal Code, the Courts will not extend the scope of special Exceptions by resorting to the rule peculiar to English common law that the husband and the wife are regarded as one. The decision reported in AIR 1967 Ker 228 was reversed. Case law discussed. M.C. Verghese v. T.J. Ponnan, AIR 1970 SC 1876 : 1970 CrLJ 1651 : 1970 SCCrR 193 : (1970) 2 SCJ 353 : (1969) 2 SCR 692 : 1970 MLJ (Cri) 636 : 1968 KLT 904.

[12400] ● Defamation—Not necessary that complaint for defamation set out actual words used by accused.—The proposition laid down in English decisions dealing with libel that the actual words alleged to be used must be stated in the indictment cannot be applied on all fours when dealing with the cases of defamation by spoken words under Section 499, IPC. It will be highly desirable no doubt, if the actual words stated to have been used by an accused and which are all defamatory are reproduced by the complainant. In cases where the words spoken are too many or the statements made are too long, it will be the height of the technicality to insist that the actual words and the entire statements should be reproduced verbatim. It is in the interests of the complainant to get a proper adjudication from the Court that as far as possible the words spoken or the statements actually made and which he alleges to be defamatory are before the Court. But a complaint cannot be thrown out on the mere ground that the actual words spoken or the statements made have not been stated in the complaint. From the point of view of the accused also it is necessary that the matters alleged to be defamatory in the complaint must be so stated as to enable them to know the nature of the allegations that they have to meet. Balraj Khanna v. Motiram, AIR 1971 SC 1389 : 1971 CrLJ 1110 : 1971 SCD 822 : 1971 UJ (SC) 605 : 73 PunLR (D) 271.

[12401] ● Exceptions to Section 499, IPC arise only after commencement of trial.—Rejection of the complaint by the Magistrate under Section 203, CrPC, on the ground that the matter is covered by the Exceptions to Section 499, IPC, does not arise at that stage. The question of applicability of the Exceptions to Section 499, IPC, as well as other defences that may be available to the accused will have to be gone into during the trial of the complaint. Balraj Khanna v. Motiram, AIR 1971 SC 1389 : 1971 CrLJ 1110 : 1971 SCD 822 : 1971 UJ (SC) 605 : 73 PunLR (D) 271.

[12402] ● For attracting 9th exception to Section 499, IPC—Imputation to be made good faith.—For attracting the 9th Exception to a case, the imputation must be made in good faith, must be for protection of the interest of the person making it or of any other person or for the public good. Good faith, protection of the interest of the person making it and public good are all questions of fact. The person alleging good faith has to establish as a fact that he made enquiry before he made the imputation and he has to give reasons and facts to indicate that he acted with due care and attention and was satisfied that the imputation was true. The proof of the truth of the statement is not an element of the 9th Exception as of the 1st Exception to Section 499, IPC In the 9th Exception, the person making the imputation has to substantiate that his enquiry was attended with due care and attention and he was thus satisfied that the imputation was true. The accent is on the enquiry, care and objective and not subjective satisfaction. In a proceeding under Section 144, CrPC, no question of title is involved. Even otherwise, that by itself will not entitle a person to make a defamatory statement and then take the plea that it was for the protection of the interest of the person making the imputation. It would not be open to a person to deny or resist possession in that proceeding by hurling defamatory invectives and then claim the benefit of protection of interests. Sukra Mahto v. Basudeo Kumar, AIR 1971 SC 1567 : 1971 CrLJ 1168 : 1971 SCD 590 : (1971) 2 SCCrR 315.

[12403] ● Sentence—Awarding of judicial and judicious discretion of Court.—Awarding of sentence lies mainly on the judicial and judicious discretion of the Court. Decision on question of sentence can never be regarded as precedent. Dalbir Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1979 SC

[12404] ● Prosecution of newspaper editor for defamation—Question of good faith and public good to be decided at regular trial.—In a prosecution of a newspaper editor for defamation, the defence was that the news item was based on a Government report. The accused applied for production of the report before he was examined, was rejected. Revision referred to the High Court was allowed and the prosecution quashed under Sections 397 & 482, CrPC, on the ground that the accused (Editor) was entitled to the protection under Section 499, Exception 9. Prayer was to quash the order of the Magistrate and for direction to him to call for the report. Report was made available to the High Court and so it quashed the prosecution. The High Court order under Section 482 amounted to prejudging the issue. It should not have used the Enquiry Report for basing its conclusions.. Questions of "good faith" and "public good", etc, are questions of fact to be decided at a regular trial and not to be answered even before the accused was examined. Sewakram v. R.K. Karanjia, AIR 1981 SC 1514 : (1981) 3 SCC 208 : 1981 CrLJ 894 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 798.

[12405] ● Defamation—Journalists do not enjoy any special privilege.—Journalists do not enjoy any special privilege. If they make assertions of facts as opposed to comments on them, they must either justify the assertions or, in the limited cases specified in the Ninth Exception, show that the attack on the character of another was for the public good, or that it was made in good faith. Sewakram v. R.K. Karanjia, AIR 1981 SC 1514 : (1981) 3 SCC 208 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 798 : 1981 CrLJ 894.

[12406] ● Publication of life story or biography—Nor Govt. or its officials to impose any restraint on publication.—Neither the Government nor the officials who apprehend that they may be defamed, have the right to impose a prior restraint upon the publication of the alleged autobiography of Auto Shankar. The remedy of public officials/public figures, if any, will arise only after the publication and will be governed by the principles indicated herein. We must make it clear that we do not express any opinion about the right of the state or officials to prosecute the petitioners under Section 499/500, IPC. This is for the reason that even if they are entitled to do so, there is no law under which they can prevent the publication of a material on the ground that such material is likely to be defamatory of them.

It must be held that the petitioners have a right to publish, what they allege to be the life-story/autobiography of Auto Shankar insofar as it appears from the public records, even without his consent or authorisation. But if they go beyond that and publish his life story they may be invading his right to privacy and will be liable for the consequences in accordance with law. Similarly, the State or its officials cannot prevent or restrain the said publication. The remedy of the affected public officials/public figures, if any, is after the publication, as explained hereinabove. R. Rajagopal alias R.R. Gopal v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1995 SC 264 (275, 276) : (1994) 6 SCC 632 : (1995) 2 SCJ 86.

[12407] ● Allegations not disclosing offence under Section 500, IPC—Magistrate not justified in issuing process.—The complaint did not contain any of the allegations constituting the offence of defamation punishable under Section 500, IPC. The contents of the magazine were alleged to be defamatory against the Marwari community, lowering them in the estimate of the public or their reputation was lowered in the society. As, the complaint filed in the Court of the judicial Magistrate did not contain any of the allegations so as to constitute the offence of defamation defined in Section 499, IPC and punishable under Section 500 the Magistrate was not justified in issuing the process against the appellant. Shatrughan Prasad Sinha v. Rajbhau Surajmal Rathi, (1996) 6 SCC 263 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 1310 : 1997 CrLJ 212 (SC) : 1996 (4) Crimes 27.

[12408] ● Exception 8 to Section 499, IPC—Applicability of.—Exception 8 to S. 499, IPC clearly indicates that it is not a defamation to prefer in good faith an accusation against any person to any of those who have lawful authority over that person with regard to the subject-matter of accusation. The report of the Treasury Officer clearly indicates that pursuant to the report made by the accused persons against the complainant, a departmental inquiry had been initiated that the complainant was found to be guilty. Under Such circumstances the fact that the accused persons had made a report to the superior officer of the complainant alleging that he had abused the treasury officer in a drunken state which is the gravamen of the present complaint and nothing more would be covered by Exception 8 to Section 499 of the IPC. By perusing the allegation made in the complaint petition we are also satisfied that no case of defamation has been made out. Rajendra Kumar Sitaram Pandey v. Uttam, AIR 1999 SC 1028 : (1999) 3 SCC 134 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 393 (397) : 1999 CrLJ 1620 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 130 : JT 1999 (1) SC 426.

[12409] ● Defamation—Locus standi to file complaint.—The collocation of the words "by some persons aggrieved" in S. 199, CrPC definitely indicates that the complainant need not necessarily be the defamed person himself. Whether the complainant has reason to feel hurt on account of the publication is a matter to be determined by the Court depending upon the facts of each case. If a company is described as engaging itself in nefarious activities, its impact would certainly fall on every director of the company and, hence, he can legitimately feel the pinch of it. Similarly, if a firm is described in a publication as carrying on offensive trade, every working partner of the firm can reasonably be expected to feel aggrieved by it. If K.J. Hospital is a private limited company, it is too far-fetched to rule out any one of its directors, feeling aggrieved on account of pejoratives hurled at the company. Hence the appellant cannot justifiably contend that director of K.J. Hospital would not fall within the wide purview of "some person aggrieved" as envisaged in Section 199 (1) CrPC. John Thomas v. K. Jagadeesan, AIR 2001 SC 2651 : (2001) 6 SCC 30 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 974 (978) : 2001 CrLR (SC) 495 : JT 2001 (5) SC 398.

[12410] ● Imputation prima facie defamatory.—The only effect of an imputation being per se defamatory is that it would relieve the complainant of the burden to establish that the publication of such imputations has lowered him in the estimation of the right thinking members of the public. However, even if the imputation is not per se defamatory, that by itself would not go to the advantage of the publisher, for the complaining person can establish on evidence that the publication has in fact amounted to defamation even in spite of the apparent deficiency. So the appellant cannot contend, at this stage, that he is entitled to discharge on the ground that the imputations in the extracted publication were no per se defamatory. John Thomas v. K. Jagdeesan, AIR 2001 SC 2651 : (2001) 6 SCC 30 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 974 (978) : 2001 CrLR (SC) 495 : JT 2001 (5) SC 398.

[12411] ● Defamatory attack on Judge libel.—A defamatory attack on a judge may be a libel so far as the judge is concerned and it would be open to him to proceed against the libellor in a proper action if he so chooses. S.K. Sundaram In re, AIR 2001 SC 2374 : (2001) 2 SCC 171 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 304 (311).

[12412] ● Who can make complaint for defamation.—In this case it was submitted that the imputation were mainly against the father of the complainant, and therefore a complaint ought to have been made by the father of the complainant. Reference was made to the provisions of Section 199, CrPC. On perusal of the complaint by the Court, it was found that similar defamatory words were used against the complainant also apart from the father, and therefore, it was held that the right of the complainant to move the Court and lodge a complaint before the competent Magistrate would not be challenged. Ram Swarup v. Mohd Javed Razack, AIR 2005 SC 2005 : (2005) 10 SCC 393 : 2005 CrLJ 1725 (1726) : 2005 (1) Crimes 345.

[12413] ● Withdrawal of proceedings.—In the instant case, defamation was alleged to have been made by a T.V. Channel by telecasting commentary against the Chief Minister. Ministers and other public functionaries knowing fully that the said commentary would harm their reputation. The T.V. Channel stated that the it shall broadcast the clarification to show the bona fides within the time indicated by the Court. The parties subject to the above condition agreed to withdraw all the proceedings. Ramaji Rao, Chairman Group of Companies v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2006 SC 3334 : (2006) 8 SCC 321 : 2006 SCC (Cri) 480 : 2006 (4) Crimes 168 (SC).

[12414] ● Prayer for quashing complaint for defamation—Scope of power of High Court.—Allegations made in the said complaint petition in our opinion, make out a case for proceeding against the appellant under Section 500 of the Indian Penal Code as thereby imputation concerning the respondent had been made intending to harm or knowing or having reason to believe that such imputation would harm his reputation.

"At this stage, in our opinion, it would have been premature for the High Court to consider the materials placed by the appellant before it so as to arrive at a definite conclusion that there was no element of bad faith on the part of the appellant in making the said complaint before the police authorities.

Respondent was furthermore discharged by the learned Magistrate in exercise of its jurisdiction under Section 167(5) of the Code of Criminal Procedure stating that the police authorities could not complete the investigation within a period of six months ......

For the reasons aforementioned, we do not find any infirmity in the impugned judgment. Furthermore, the question, as to whether a totally false complaint has been made as against the respondent or not as he was not even in India prior to the date of occurrence, is required to be gone into by the learned Trial Judge.

Accordingly, the appeal is dismissed". M.A. Rumugam v. Kittu, AIR 2009 SC 344 : (2009) 1 SCC 101 : 2008 (15) SCR 642 : JT 2008 (11) 638 : 2008 (14) Scale 200 : 2008 (4) Crimes 344 (SC).

[12416] ● Section 499, IPC—Defamation—Essential ingredients.—In the instance case, the appellants statement published in India Today is a rather general endorsement of pre-marital sex and her remarks are not directed at any individual or even at a "company or any association or collection of persons". There is no direct attack on the reputation of anyone in particular. Instead the purported remarks are in the nature of rhetorical questions wherein it was asked if people in Tamil Nadu were not aware of the incidence of sex. Nowhere it has been suggested that a woman in Tamil Nadu had engaged in pre-marital sex. The complainant was not an aggrieved person. The complaint under Section 499, IPC is liable to be quashed. S. Khushboo v. Kannaimmal, 2010 CrLJ 2828 (2837) (SC).

[12417] ● Defamation—Requirements.—To attract the provisions of section there must be an imputation and such imputation must have been made with the intention of harmony or knowing or having reason to believe that it will harm reputation of person about whom it is made. Jeffrey J. Diermeier v. State of West Bengal, (2010) 6 SCC 243.

[12418] ● Good faith—Defence.—"The question whether the accused person acted in "good faith" and for "public good" has to be considered on the facts and circumstances of each case, having regard to the nature of imputation made; the circumstances on which it came to be made and the status of the person who makes the imputation as also the status of the person against whom imputation is allegedly made. These and a host of other considerations would be relevant and required to be considered for deciding appellants' plea of "good faith" and "public interest". Unfortunately, all these are questions of fact and matters for evidence. In this case the stage for recording of evidence had not reached and, therefore, in the absence of any evidence on record, we find it difficult to return a finding whether or not the appellants have satisfied the requirements of "good faith" and "public good" so as to fall within the ambit of the Tenth Exception to Section 499 IPC. Similarly, it will neither be possible nor appropriate for this Court to comment on the allegations levelled by respondent No. 2 and record a final opinion whether these allegations do constitute defamation. Reading the complaint as a whole, we find it difficult to hold that a case for quashing of the complaint under Section 482 of the Code has been made out. At this juncture, we say no more lest it may cause prejudice to either of the parties.

"For the afore-going reasons, we are of the opinion that the High Court was right in refusing to quash the complaint under Section 500 IPC. Jeffrey J. Diermeier v. State of West Bengal, (2010) 6 SCC 243 : JT 2010 (5) 278 : 2010 (5) Scale 695.

[12419] ● Defamation—Degree and nature of proof which accused is required to furnish.—The accused is not required to discharge the burden by furnishing evidence to prove the case beyond reasonable doubt. Jeffrey J. Diermeier v. State of West Bengal, (2010) 6 SCC 243.

DEFAULT

[12420] ● Default.—There must be a clear indication in the judgment or order of the Appellate Court that it has applied its judicial mind to the particular appeal with which it was dealing and such an indication will be available when the Appellate Court has considered the material on record, which means not only the judgment and petition of appeal, but also the other relevant materials. It is to be noted that if the appellant or his pleader is not present or if the public prosecutor is not present, it is not obligatory on the Appellate Court to postpone the hearing of the appeal. But the disposal of the appeal must be after the Appellate Court has considered the appeal on merits. Shyam Dev v. State of Bihar, AIR 1971 SC 1606 : 1971 SCC (Cri) 353 : 1971 CrLJ 1171.

Note: After the new Section 385, this case has no relevance.

[12421] ● Sentence of imprisonment in default of fine—Powers of Magistrate.—Section 65, IPC, only fixes a maximum period of imprisonment which can be awarded for default of payment of fine whenever any Court convicts. On the other hand, Section 30 (Section 33 of the old Code) governs specifically the powers of a First Class Magistrate on this matter and it also contains the principle embodied in Section 65, IPC, in its application to Magistrates. Just as a First Class Magistrate trying an offence under Section 406, IPC, cannot impose the maximum amount of imprisonment prescribed therein, because his powers of awarding imprisonment are specifically limited to those conferred by Section 29 of the Code (Section 32 of the old Code), so also he cannot, by resorting to Section 65, IPC, award a period of imprisonment in default of payment of fine on the erroneous assumption that he has the power to award the maximum sentence prescribed by Section 406, IPC. Chhajulal v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1972 SC 1809 : 1972 CrLJ 1184 : 1972 SCD 447 : (1972) 2 SCA 286.

[12422] ● Defective publication of cause list—Claim for hearing by absent party.—Where the cause-list was improperly published in that it did not show either the name of the appellants or their Advocates but only the number of the case, it will be wrong to post the Advocate with notice of hearing. When an Advocate examines the cause list, he is generally not guided by the number of the case but by his name appearing against the case. Where an appeal against acquittal came for hearing nearly 2 1/2 years after the issue of notice to the accused and the cause-list of the day of hearing contained only appeal number but not the names of the accused-respondent and his Advocate resulting in conviction of the accused without hearing his counsel, it could not be said that the accused was given a reasonable opportunity of hearing. Hence, an application filed by the counsel later on to give him an opportunity for rehearing the appeal was dismissed holding that no opportunity had been denied to the appellant of being heard, it will be idle to say so. The matter was remanded for hearing the appeal afresh after issuing necessary notice to the parties. Swarth Mahto v. Dharam Deo, AIR 1972 SC 1300 : (1972) 2 SCC 273 : 1972 SCC (Cri) 676 : 1972 CrLJ 879 : (1972) 2 SCA 76.

[12423] ● Recall of case disposed of by judicial order not possible for any Magistrate.—There is no provision in the CrPC empowering a Magistrate to review his own order or recall the same. The subordinate criminal Court has no inherent powers like the High Court. The Magistrate has absolutely no jurisdiction to recall the order dismissing the complaint. The remedy of the respondent is to move the Sessions Judge or the High Court in revision. The Magistrate has become functus officio and has no power to review or recall that order on any ground whatsoever. The order of recall is entirely without jurisdiction. All subsequent proceedings following upon recalling the said order would fall to the ground including the order summoning the appellant which should also be treated to be a nullity and destitute of any legal effect. It is suggested by the counsel for the respondent that the application given by him for recalling the order of dismissal of the complaint would amount to a fresh complaint. This Court is unable to agree with that contention because there is no fresh complaint and that the settled position of law is that a second complaint can lie only on fresh facts or even on the previous facts only if a special case is made out. The appeal is therefore allowed setting aside the order of the High Court maintaining the order of the Magistrate and the order of the Magistrate summoning the appellant is quashed. Bindeshwari Prasad v. Kali Singh, AIR 1977 SC 2432 : (1977) 1 SCC 57 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 33 : 1978 CrLJ 187.

[12424] ● Hearing of appeal in absence of Appellant—Remanding of for fresh disposal.—Appeal was pending before the Jodhpur Bench of the High Court. While pending, appeal was transferred to the Bench at Jaipur without notice to the appellant. Appeal was heard by the Jaipur Bench in the absence of the appellant. Although High Court at Jaipur had given reasons for dismissing the appeal, the fact remains that the appellant was not represented, the possibility of the appellant having persuaded the High Court to take a different view cannot be reasonably excluded. Appeal was remanded to the Jaipur Bench for disposal. Shyam Sunder v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1982 SC 1175 : (1981) 2 SCC 672 : 1982 CrLJ 1388 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 57.

[12425] ● Complaint—Dismissal of for default.—The Supreme Court had already held in the case of Bindeshwari Prasad Singh v. Kali Singh, that no criminal Court had any inherent jurisdiction not provided for in the CrPC. A second complaint was permissible in law if it could be brought within the limitations imposed by he Supreme Court in Pramatha Nath Taluqdar v. Saroj Ranjan Sarkar, (see below). Filing of a second complaint is not the same thing as reviving a dismissed complaint after recalling the earlier order of dismissal. So far as the accused is concerned, dismissal of a complaint for non-appearance of the complainant or his discharge or acquittal on the same ground is a final order and in the absence of any specific provision in the Code, a Magistrate could not exercise any inherent jurisdiction. What the Court has to see is not whether the Code contained any provision prohibiting a Magistrate from entertaining an application to restore a dismissed complaint, but the task should be to find out whether the said Code contains any provision enabling a Magistrate to exercise an inherent jurisdiction which he otherwise did not have. The order of the High Court is set aside and the original order of the Magistrate dismissing the complaint is restored. A.S. Gauraya v. S.N. Thakur, AIR 1986 SC 1440 : (1986) 2 SCC 709 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 249 : 1986 CrLJ 1074 : (1986) 3 Crimes 1.

[12426] ● Criminal appeal not to be dismissed for default in appearance.—It is now well settled that no criminal appeal can be dismissed for default in appearance. The Court has to go through the record of the case even in the absence of the appellant or his counsel and decide the matter on merit. Parasuram Patel v. State of Orissa, (1994) 4 SCC 664 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 1320 : 1994 CrLJ 624.

[12427] ● Discretion as to whether personal attendance of complainant be dispensed with or not to be exercised judicially.—Reading the Section in its entirety would reveal that two constraints are imposed on the Court for exercising the power under the Section. First is, if the Court thinks that in a situation it is proper to adjourn the hearing then the Magistrate shall not acquit the accused. Second is, when the Magistrate considers that personal attendance of the complainant is not necessary on that day the Magistrate has the power to dispense with his attendance and proceed with the case. When the Court notices that the complainant is absent on a particular day the Court must consider whether personal attendance of the complainant is essential on that day for the progress of the case and also whether the situation does not justify the case being adjourned to another date due to any other reason. If the situation does not justify the case being adjourned the Court is free to dismiss the complaint and acquit the accused. But if the presence of the complainant on that day was quite unnecessary then resorting to the step of axing down the complaint may not be a proper exercise of the power envisaged in the section. The discretion must, therefore, be exercised judicially and fairly without impairing the cause of administration of criminal justice. Associated Cement Co. Ltd. v. Keshvanand, AIR 1998 SC 596 : (1998) 1 SCC 687 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 475 : 1998 CrLJ 856.

[12428] ● Non-appearance of counsel due to his appointment as State Counsel—Dismissal of revision.—The Counsel who was appearing for the appellant in the criminal revision was appointed as a Counsel for the State and as such he did not appear for the appellant. There was also no material to show that the appellant after having knowledge of such appointment his counsel failed to appoint another lawyer to conduct the case before the High Court. In view of the peculiar circumstances of the case, the Supreme Court in the interest of justice to set aside the order of High Court dismissing the revision and remitted the matter to the High Court for fresh hearing. Satin Chandra Pegu v. State of Assam, AIR 2007 SC 457 : (2006) 12 SCC 446 : 2007 CrLJ 309 (310) : 2007 (1) Crimes 33 (SC).

[12429] ● Revision cannot be dismissed in default.—Criminal revision should not be dismissed in default but should be decided on merits. Madan Lal Kapoor v. Rajiv Thapar, (2007) 7 SCC 623 : 2007 SCC (Cri) 437 : 2007 CrLJ 4684.

[12430] ● Criminal appeal not to be dismissed default.—In Beni Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, (1996) 4 SCC 720, a three Judge Bench of the Supreme Court held that criminal appeal should not be dismissed in default but should be decided on merits. If despite notice neither the appellant nor his counsel is present the Court should decide the appeal on merits. If the appellant is in jail, the Court can appoint a lawyer at State expense to assist it. Thus would equally apply to revision. Madan Lal Kapoor v. Rajiv Thapar, (2007) 7 SCC 623 : 2007 SCC (Cri) 437 : 2007 CrLJ 4684.

DEFECTIVE INVESTIGATION

[12431] ● Defective investigation Court to be circumspect in evaluating evidence.—In the case of a defective investigation the Court has to be circumspect in evaluating the evidence and may have to adopt an active and analytical role to ensure that truth is found by having recourse to Section 311 or at a later stage also resorting to Section 391 instead of throwing hands in the air in despair. It would not be right in acquitting an accused person solely on account of the defect; to do so would tantamount to playing into the hands of the investigating officer if the investigation is designedly defective if the lapse or omission is committed by the investigating agency designedly or because of negligence, the prosecution evidence is required to be examined de hors such omissions to find out whether the said evidence is reliable or not. The contaminated conduct of officials should not stand in the way of Courts getting at the truth by having recourse to Sections 311, 391 of the Code and Section 165 of the Evidence Act at the appropriate and relevant stages and evaluating the entire evidence; otherwise the designed mischief would be perpetuated with a premium to the offenders and justice would not only be denied to the complainant party but also made an ultimate casualty. Zahira Habibullah Sheikh v. State of Gujarat, AIR 2004 SC 3114

(2004) 4 SCC 158 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 999 : (2004) 2 Crimes 213.

[12432] ● Investigation when faulty.—After having clearly concluded that the investigation was faulty and there were serious doubts about the genuineness of the investigation, it would have been proper for the High Court to accept the prayer made for additional evidence and/or retrial. Abrupt conclusions drawn about false implication not only cannot stand the test of scrutiny but also lack judicious approach and objective consideration, as is expected of a Court. Zahira Habibullah Sheikh v. State of Gujarat, AIR 2004 SC 3114 : (2004) 4 SCC 158 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 999 (1018) : (2004) 2 Crimes 213.

[12433] ● Defective investigation.—When witnesses are branded as partisan or inimical, their evidence has to be analysed with care and scrutiny. Even if the investigation is defective, that pales into insignificance when ocular testimony is found credible and cogent. Dhanaj Singh alias Shera v. State of Punjab, AIR 2004 SC 1920 : (2004) 3 SCC 654 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 851 (854) : (2004) 1 JCC 607 : 2004 CrLJ 1807 : JT 2004 (3) SC 380 : (2004) 2 Crimes 2.

[12434] ● Defective investigation Court to be circumspect in evaluating evidence.—In the case of a defective investigation, the Court has to be circumspect in evaluating the evidence. But it would not be right in acquitting an accused person solely on account of the defect; to do so would tantamount to playing into the hands of the Investigation Officer if the investigation is designedly defective. Dhanaj Singh alias Shera v. State of Punjab, AIR 2004 SC 1920 : (2004) 3 SCC 654 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 851 (854) : 2004 CrLJ 1807 : JT 2004 (3) SC 380 : (2004) 2 Crimes 2 : (2004) 1 JCC 607.

[12435] ● Statement of witness—Reliability.—The evidence of PW-32 to the effect that he awake because of barking dogs and saw four persons running by and when he flashed the torch, he noticed three of the respondents and a fourth persons whom he could not recognise is also disbelieved by the High Court on the ground that the place where PW-32 was sleeping was not shown in the site plan. The High Court also attached importance to the fact that the investigating officer had not put the date on which the statement of this witness was taken, although the investigating officer explained that he had forgotten to mention the date. The High Court assumes that on the date of the incident itself, the police knew the names of the assailants, therefrom it deduces that the fact that they were arrested till 30.8.1993 makes the statement of the witness unreliable. This, to say the least is another price of perverse reasoning. Prithvi v. Mam Raj, 2005 SCC (Cri) 198 (206).

[12436] ● No ground for rejection of testimony of witness.—A further reason for disbelieving the evidence of Prithvi by the High Court is that while Prithvi stated that he could see the assailants because there was light on the spot coming from a bulb fitted in the electric pole near the chaki of Birbal, (which was situated about fifteen steps from the place of occurrence) the investigating officer when cross-examined said that he did not remember anything about it nor did he include any electric pole in the site plan. Assuming that this was faulty investigation it could hardly be a ground for rejection of the testimony of Prithvi which had a ring of truth met. Prithvi v. Mam Raj, 2005 SCC (Cri) 198 (205-06).

[12437] ● Testimony of eye-witness rejection of.—Assuming that this was a faulty by Investigating Officer, investigation could hardly be a ground for rejection of the testimony of eye-witness which, has a ring of truth in it. Prithvi v. Mam Raj, 2005 SCC (Cri) 198 (205-06).

[12438] ● Defective Investigation.—From the evidence of PW-26, it is seen that he states that he noticed a person of medium height with curly hair having somewhat darkish complexion coming out of the house of the MLA who after threatening him shot the deceased three times. According to him, there was a tubelight near the place of the incident, hence, he could identify the accused. The High Court in its judgment has observed that the factum of the existence of a tubelight at the place of the incident is doubtful because the sketch of the place of the incident as prepared by the prosecution did not indicate any such light. It is only for the first time while giving evidence before the Court, PW-26 pointed out a place in the sketch where according to him the tubelight was placed. The trial Court accepted it and came to the conclusion that there was sufficient light at the place of the incident. The High Court, per contra, observed that if really there was a tubelight at the place of the incident, the investigation officer would not have failed to mark the existence of that tubelight in the sketch. If really there was a tubelight by which PW-26 identified the respondent, then the investigating agency would certainly have shown the existence of a tubelight and its placement in the sketch because it was a very important fact mainly because the identification of the accused is a vital factor to be proved by the prosecution. The benefit of the omission to point out the existence of such light in the sketch should go to the accused. State of M.P. v. Ghudan, 2005 SCC (Cri) 801 (804).

DEFENCE

[12439] ● Defence.—The right given by Section 340(1) does not extend to a right in an accused person to be provided by a lawyer by the State or by the police or by the Magistrate. The practice which has developed of giving an accused a lawyer at the expense of the State in cases in which he is charged with a capital offence, is only a privilege and not a right. If the accused in such a case desires to be defended by a lawyer or if he desires to engage one himself, or desires to get his relations to engage one for him, it is his duty to inform the Magistrate about it. The only duty cast on the Magistrate is to afford him the necessary opportunity. In the present case, the trial proceedings had continued for several days and there was nothing on the record to show that the accused had objected to his not being represented by a lawyer. It was held that under these circumstances it had to be assumed that he had not been denied the opportunity to engage a lawyer and no breach of Section 340 had taken place. Tara Singh v State, AIR 1951 SC 441 : 52 CrLJ 1491 : 1951 SCJ 518 : 1951 SCR 729 : 1951 (2) MLJ 291 : 1951 MWN 757 : 1951 MWN (Cri) 225 : 1951 ALJ 640 : 64 MLW 996.

[12440] ● Adequate opportunity of engaging lawyer in defence.—Adequate opportunity of engaging a lawyer in his own defence. If in fact such opportunity is afforded to the accused, and yet though he has ample means of his own, he refuses to avail himself of that opportunity and insists upon a lawyer being engaged for him by the State, or if an accused for whom a lawyer is so engaged at Government cost refuses to accept that lawyer and insists upon the engagement of a lawyer of his own choice, then, in such cases, the Court has no option except to proceed with the trial though the accused is not represented by any lawyer. In such a case if the trial results in conviction, it cannot be said that the trial is vitiated merely because the accused had remained unrepresented at the trial. On the other hand, if it is found that the accused in a capital case who had no means of his own was desirous of a lawyer being engaged in his defence and yet the opportunity was denied to him with the result that he was handicapped in his defence, such denial amounts to a negation of a fair trial. In that case, the Court can presume that a failure of justice has been occasioned and after setting aside the conviction may direct a re-trial. However, in any such case it is for the accused to show that he had been denied a fair opportunity to obtain a lawyer in his defence, and a denial of such opportunity cannot be presumed merely from the fact that the accused was not represented at the trial by a lawyer. Janardhan Reddy v. State of Hyderabad, AIR 1951 SC 217 : 52 CrLJ 736 : 1951 SCJ 320 : 1951 SCR 344 : 1951 MWN 613.

[12441] ● Conviction of accused not to be based upon his own statement.—Conviction of an accused person cannot be based only upon his own statement recorded under Section 342. In the absence of any other evidence on record which establishes the guilt of the accused, conviction cannot rest merely on the answers given by an accused when examined under that section, because such answers are not "evidence" and cannot take the place of evidence on which alone conviction can legally be based.

An admission made by an accused person under Section 342 can be used and relied upon only for the purpose of lending corroboration to the prosecution evidence, when it exists. In the present case the accused was charged under Section 66(b) of the Bombay Prohibition Act on the ground that he was found in possession of rectified spirit without a permit as required by law. The prosecution case rested on the evidence of witnesses that the goods were recovered from a particular godown and that the accused was in possession of that godown. When examined under Section 342, CrPC, the accused admitted that he was in charge of the godown but denied that the goods were found in the godown and said that they were found outside it. The Magistrate relied on the admission of the accused that the godown was in his possession and holding the evidence on record established that the goods were recovered from the godown, rejected his statement that the goods were not recovered from the godown as false. Under these circumstances it cannot be said that the conviction of the accused was based solely on his statement recorded under Section 342. The Magistrate had only used that statement as supporting the prosecution evidence concerning the possession of the godown, which had not been challenged in the cross-examination of the prosecution witness, and the Magistrate was fully justified in doing this. If the conviction of the accused had been based solely on his statement recorded under Section 342, he would have been justified in his contention that the conviction was bad, because in the absence of any evidence as to his possession of the godown, it would have been wrong to hold that the admission of the accused was "evidence" on which his possession of the godown was established. Conviction was confirmed and the appeal was dismissed. Vijendrajit Ayodhya Prasad v. State of Bombay, AIR 1953 SC 247 : 1953 CrLJ 1097 : 1953 SCJ 328 : 1953 SCA 395.

[12442] ● Circumstances under which Supreme Court not to interfere.—In a criminal appeal under Article 136, the Supreme Court will not interfere with the decision appealed against merely on the ground (a) that there has occurred in the proceeding some error or irregularity which is only technical and has not occasioned any failure of justice, or (b) that it is possible to take a view of the evidence in the case which is different from that of the Courts below. An illegality or irregularity in procedure will be a good ground for interference with the decision appealed against only when it is of such a nature that a failure of justice or a denial to the accused of a fair trial may either be presumed to have been occasioned thereby, or such failure or denial is shown to have in fact been occasioned. Applying this principle, a refusal to give to the accused an opportunity to produce and examine defence witnesses at his trial is an illegality which is fatal to he proceeding, and if on appeal the High Court had rejected his plea of prejudice and has confirmed his conviction, it is a fit case for interference. Habeeb Mohammad v. State of Hyderabad, AIR 1954 SC 51 : 1954 CrLJ 338 : 1954 SCA 514 : 1953 SCJ 678 : 1954 SCR 475 : 1954 MWN 233.

[12443] ● Provisions of Sections 256 and 257, CrPC (1898) imperative.—The provisions of Sections 256 and 257 of the Code are imperative, and except when a Magistrate is satisfied, on grounds which must be clearly set out in his order, that an application for the issue of summons to defence witnesses has been made for the purpose of vexation or delay only, the Magistrate is bound to issue the process applied for. Rules of procedure designed for the purpose of ensuring that the accused receives a fair trial should be scrupulously observed, and Courts should be zealous to see that there occurs no breach or contravention of those rules. If the appellate Court finds that for no fault of the accused he has been denied an opportunity to adduce his evidence during the trial, it must be held that he has been deprived of a fair trial. Such a deprivation vitiates the trial straightway, and in such a case conviction of the accused has to be set aside even though the prosecution evidence may have established a strong case for holding him to be guilty, because a failure of justice resulting from such a denial must be presumed. It cannot be said that Section 537 cures such irregularity. Ronald Wood Mathams v. State of W.B., AIR 1954 SC 455 : 1954 CrLJ 1161 : 1954 SCA 907 : 1954 SCJ 649 : 1955 SCR 216 : 1954 MWN 738 : 1954 AWR (Sup) 74.

[12444] ● Breach of proviso to Section 342-A CrPC 1898 committed by commenting on failure of accused to give evidence.—Under Cl. (b) of the Proviso to Section 342-A of the old Code (Section 315 now) it is specifically provided that the failure of an accused to give evidence shall not be made the subject of any comment, by any of the parties, or the Court, or give rise to any presumption against himself, or any person charged, together with him, at the same time. As such, it is illegal for the High Court to have commented upon and to have also drawn a presumption against the accused DP to give evidence under Section 342-A (Section 315 now) as also the appellant. In a prosecution for committing fraud by attesting loan applications in the names of fictitious persons, the accused pleaded that he attested the same on the assurance of one S and he was acquitted by the trial Court but on appeal by the State, the High Court convicted him under Section 467 read with Section 109, IPC, on the ground that he had not examined himself as a witness under Section 342-A of the old Code nor did he adduce any other evidence. The conviction cannot be sustained as the High Court has thrown the burden of proof on the accused instead of finding out whether the prosecution has proved its case and whether the order of acquittal was erroneous and further it has committed a breach of proviso to Section 342-A (Section 315 now) by commenting on the failure of the accused to give evidence and by drawing a presumption against him, both of which were illegal under Cl. (b) of Proviso to Section 342-A (Section 315 now) and hence the conviction was reversed and the accused acquitted. Baidyanath v. State of Bihar, AIR 1968 SC 1393 : 1968 CrLJ 1650 : (1968) 2 SCA 552 : (1968) 2 SCJ 922 : (1968) 2 SCWR 813 : 1968 ACrR 474 : 1968 AWR(HC) 764 : 1969 MLJ(Cri) 1.

[12445] ● Defence witness not to be cross-examined with previous statement to police.—A defence witness cannot be cross-examined with his previous statement to the police under S. 161, CrPC. Laxman Kalu v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1968 SC 1390 : 1968 CrLJ 1647 : (1968) 2 SCJ 930 : (1968) 2 SCWR 557 : 1969 MLJ (Cri) 3.

[12446] ● PFA Act not infringes guarantee of Article 20(3) of Constitution.—Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954 does not infringe the guarantee of Art. 20 (3). But by enacting that a plea by the vendor in a prosecution for an offence pertaining to sale of adulterated or misbranded article of good, that he was ignorant of the nature, substance or quality will not be a defence. Andhra Pradesh Grain and Seed Merchants' Association v. Union of India, AIR 1971 SC 2346 : (1970) 2 SCC 71 : 1970 SCC (Cri) 307 (315, 316) : 1971 CrLJ 1556 : (1971) 1 SCR 166.

[12447] ● Defence of accused not to be ignored.—The Additional Sessions Judge was not right in observing that the defence that the accused was entitled to claim the toll may be ignored because defence of an accused person can legitimately be taken into consideration while assessing the value of the evidence and judging the guilt or innocence of the accused. The appellant's defence in this case would clearly tend to support the complainant's case that the amount received was demanded as toll which was an unlawful demand. Basudev Hazra v. Matiar Rahaman Mandal, AIR 1971 SC 722 : (1971) 1 SCC 433 : 1971 SCC (Cri) 189 (192) : 1971 CrLJ 646 : (1971) 3 SCR 478 : 1971 UJ (SC) 270 : 1971 Cr AppR (SC) 165.

[12448] ● Acquittal of accused on ground that his participation doubtful.—Where the High Court maintained the acquittal of one accused because his participation appeared to be doubtful, though he was also present at the time of the incident but that his name was not mentioned in the F.I.R. and that he was said to have been empty-handed and only in the dying declaration his name was mentioned, and further that the evidence disclosed that he and another accused moved aside after two others had given blows to the deceased, but the High Court did not give the benefit of the same doubt to another accused, as it thought, that his participation had been proved by the defence evidence and also by the fact that he had received injuries, the Supreme Court held that the said reasoning and the distinction drawn on its basis was entirely unsustainable and that the prosecution had to stand on its own legs and it could not take advantage of the weakness of the defence and also that injuries found on the accused were more compatible with the conclusion, that he was a victim rather than a participant in the assault. Omkar Singh v. State of U.P., AIR 1974 SC 1550 : (1975) 3 SCC 276 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 884 : 1974 CrLJ 1015 : 1974 SCD 708.

[12449] ● Specific defence taken by accused.—The burden of proving a plea specifically set up by the accused which may absolve him from criminal liability, certainly lies upon him. It is a different matter that the quantum of evidence by which he may succeed in discharging his burden of creating a reasonable belief, that circumstances absolving him from criminal liability may have existed, is lower than the burden resting upon the prosecution to establish the guilt of an accused beyond reasonable doubt. Neither an application of S. 103 nor of S. 106 of the Evidence Act could, however, absolve the prosecution from the duty of discharging its general or primary burden of proving the prosecution case beyond reasonable doubt. It is only when the prosecution has led evidence which, if believed, will sustain a conviction, or, which makes out a prima facie case, that the question arises of considering facts of which the burden of proof may lie upon the accused. Sawal Das v. State of Bihar, AIR 1974 SC 778 : (1974) 4 SCC 193 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 362 (366) : 1974 CrLJ 664 : 1974 CrLR (SC) 186.

[12450] ● Both trial Court and Session Court relying on conjectures and surmises disbelieved defence evidence.—In the instant case, the prosecution case was that the Managing Committee of a Co-operative Society passed a resolution to raise a loan of Rs. 4,000/- from a Co-operative Bank and authorised the appellant, who was an ordinary member of the Society, to receive the sum from the Bank on the basis of a promissory note executed by some members of the Executive Committee on behalf of the Society. According to the Manager of the Bank, the Secretary of the Society, Mahnga Ram had accompanied the appellant when the payment was made to him in the Bank and also attested the signatures of the persons on the management of the Society. According to the President, the appellant had to pay the amount to the cashier who would make the entry in the accounts. The cashier was dead. Thereafter, a notice was sent to the appellant that he had not got the amount received by him entered in the books of the Society and an explanation was called for. The appellant replied to that notice that as per the instructions of the committee he had given the amount to Mahnga Ram, the Secretary, and he did not know whether it was entered in the book or not and that it was only on the receipt of the notice, that he had come to know that the entries regarding that amount had not been made. He also stated that the money was paid to the Secretary in the presence of three named persons. The appellant was charged under Section 406, IPC, in respect of the sum of Rs. 4,000/- entrusted to him. The appellant examined the three witnesses named by him in his defence. The witnesses were disbelieved by the Magistrate for the reason, that they had not represented at the earliest to any higher authorities against the false implication of the appellant in this case. One of the witnesses was a shareholder of the Society and he was not cross-examined by the Prosecution. His evidence was disbelieved because if his evidence was true he would naturally have told the office-bearers of the Society about the payment by the accused to the Secretary and the case would have been asked to be dropped by the Society but no such thing had been done. It was not known wherefrom the Magistrate drew that inference. No such question was asked from the witness and there was no material to support that observation. Another witness was disbelieved on the ground that he did not report to the higher authorities when the police did not hear when he represented to them of the false implication of the accused. The criticism was invalid, for it depended upon a person's nature whether he should write or not to high officers in a particular case. As regards the third witness the criticism was that he did not remember any other transaction done at his shop by him on that day when the accused was alleged to have paid the amount to the Secretary and also that he should have advised the accused to obtain a receipt from the Secretary, or got the payment entered in the registers of the Society. The Sessions Court and the High Court disbelieved the D.Ws. like the trial Court. It seemed that the defence version could not be disbelieved merely because if the money had not been paid, as stated by the appellant, it would have been expected that the non-payment would be known to the President and the Cashier much sooner. The only foolish thing the appellant did was that he delivered the money and did not take the receipt from Mahnga Ram. The evidence of the D.Ws. had been disbelieved on pure conjectures and surmises. It was not common that the persons who were witnesses to a transaction go about complaining to the higher authorities if the transaction was impugned. A person could not be allowed to be convicted on mere suspicion and hence the appeal was allowed. Des Raj v. State of Punjab, AIR 1974 SC 2292 : (1971) 3 SCC 235 : 1971 SCC (Cri) 443 : 1974 CrLJ 1531 : 1971 SCD 876 : 74 PunLR 20.

[12451] ● Appointment of defence counsel—Need for.—Sessions Judges should view with sufficient seriousness the need to appoint State Counsel for undefended accused in grave cases. Indigence should never be a ground for denying fair trial or equal justice. Therefore, particular attention should be paid to appoint competent Advocates, equal to handling the complex cases, not patronising gestures to raw entrants to the bar. Sufficient time and completed papers should also be made available to the Advocate chosen so that he may serve the cause of justice with all the ability at his command and the accused felt confident that his counsel chosen by the Court has had adequate time and material to defend him properly. R.N. Wasawa v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1974 SC 1143 : (1974) 3 SCC 581 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 59 : 1974 CrLJ 799 : 1974 SCD 139.

[12452] ● Non-examination of most material evidence to prove defence version in criminal case strongest possible circumstance to discredit defence version.—The High Court further points out that Smt. Rambeti who is said to have been hit by a gun-shot fired by Shyampal Singh was the most material witness to prove the defence version and yet she has not been examined and no explanation for her non-examination has been given by the defence. Mr. Garg suggested that as she was a woman so the defence did not take the risk of examining her. In our opinion the non-examination of Smt. Rambeti is the strongest possible circumstance to discredit the defence version, because she alone could have been in the best position to explain whether the injuries were caused as a result of the shot fired by Shyampal Singh or just accidentally. Gajendra Singh v. State of U.P., AIR 1975 SC 1703 : (1975) 4 SCC 241 : 1975 SCC (Cri) 499 (503) : 1975 CrLJ 1494 : 1975 CrLR (SC) 385.

[12454] ● Statements made to Police—Use of.—Statements of witnesses recorded by police officer: User for contradiction: Who can be contradicted: Court witness and defence witness not liable to be contradicted. Only witnesses on behalf of the prosecution can be contradicted by reference to their statements made to the police, and not Court witnesses or defence witnesses. Shakila Khader v. Nausher Game, AIR 1975 SC 1324 : (1975) 4 SCC 122 : 1975 SCC (Cri) 379 : 1975 CrLJ 1105.

[12455] ● Defence not to prove its case with same rigour as prosecution.—It is well settled that it is not necessary for the defence to prove its case with the same rigour as the prosecution is required to prove its case, and it is sufficient if the defence succeeds in throwing a reasonable doubt on the prosecution case which is sufficient to enable the Court to reject the prosecution version. Lakshmi Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 1976 SC 2263 : (1976) 4 SCC 394 : 1976 SCC (Cri) 671 (679) : 1976 CrLJ 1736 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 76.

[12456] ● Duty of prosecution and Court.—It is well settled that the prosecution can succeed by substantially proving the very story it alleges. It must stand on its own legs. It cannot take advantage of the weakness of the defence. Nor can the Court on its own make out a new case for the prosecution and convict the accused on that basis. From whatever angle the matter may be looked at the prosecution case had miserably failed to make out a case against the appellant. When the substratum of the evidence given by the eye-witnesses examined by the prosecution was found to be false, the only prudent course, in the circumstances of this case, left to the Court was to throw out the prosecution case in its entirety against all the accused. Bhagirath v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1976 SC 975 : (1976) 1 SCC 20 : 1975 SCC (Cri) 742 (745, 746) : 1976 CrLJ 706 : 1975 CrLR (SC) 560.

[12457] ● Standards to be employed to judge truth or falsity of version of defence.—Another question that arises is what are the standards to be employed in order to judge the truth or falsity of the version given by the defence? Should the accused prove his case with the same amount of rigour and certainty, as the prosecution is required, to prove a criminal charge, or it is sufficient if the accused puts forward a probable or reasonable explanation which is sufficient to throw doubt on the prosecution case? Three cardinal principles of criminal jurisprudence are well-settled, namely :

(i) that the onus lies affirmatively on the prosecution to prove its case beyond reasonable doubt and it cannot derive any benefit from the weakness or falsity of the defence version while proving its case;

(ii) that in a criminal trial the accused must be presumed to be innocent unless he is proved to be guilty; and

(iii) that the onus of the prosecution never shifts. Rabindra Kumar Dey v. State of Orissa, AIR 1977 SC 170 : (1976) 4 SCC 233 : 1976 SCC (Cri) 566 : 1977 CrLJ 173 : 1976 CrLR (SC) 436.

[12458] ● Onus of proving exception mentioned in IPC lies on accused.—It is true that under Section 105 of the Evidence Act the onus of proving exceptions mentioned in the Indian Penal Code lies on the accused, but this section does not at all indicate the nature and standard of proof required. The Evidence Act does not contemplate that the accused should prove his case with the same strictness and rigour as the prosecution is required to prove a criminal charge. In fact from the cardinal principles referred to above, it follows that, it is sufficient if the accused is able to prove his case by the standard of preponderance of probabilities as envisaged by Section 5 of the Evidence Act as a result of which he succeeds not because he proves his case to the hilt but because probability of the version given by him throws doubt on the prosecution case and, therefore the prosecution cannot be said to have established the charge beyond reasonable doubt. In other words, the mode of proof, by standard of benefit of doubt, is not applicable to the accused, where he is called upon to prove his case or to prove the exceptions of the Indian Penal Code on which he seeks to rely. It is sufficient for the defence to give a version which competes in probability with the prosecution version, for that would be sufficient to throw suspicion on the prosecution case entailing its rejection by the Court. Rabindra Kumar Dey v. State of Orissa, AIR 1977 SC 170 : (1976) 4 233 : 1976 SCC (Cri) 566 : 1977 CrLJ 173 : 1976 CrLR (SC) 436.

[12459] ● Obligatory on accused to produce evidence in defence.—In a criminal trial, it is not at all obligatory on the accused to produce evidence in support of his defence and for the purpose of proving his version he can rely on the admissions made by the prosecution witnesses or on the documents filed by the prosecution. In these circumstances, the Court has to probe and consider the materials relied upon by the defence instead of raising an adverse inference against the accused, for not producing evidence in support of his defence, because the prosecution cannot derive any strength or support from the weakness of defence case. The prosecution has to stand on its own legs, and if it fails to prove its case beyond reasonable doubt, the entire edifice of the prosecution would crumble down. Rabindra Kumar Dey v. State of Orissa, AIR 1977 SC 170 : (1976) 4 SCC 233 : 1976 SCC (Cri) 566 : 1977 CrLJ 173 : 1976 CrLR (SC) 436.

[12461] ● At the beginning and initial stage of trial truth veracity and effect of evidence not to be meticulously judged.—Reading the provisions contained in Sections 227 and 228, CrPC together in juxta-position, as they have got to be, it would be clear that at the beginning and the initial stage of the trial, the truth, veracity and the effect of the evidence which the prosecutor proposes to adduce are not to be meticulously judged. Nor is any weight to be attached to the probable defence of the accused. It is not obligatory for the Judge at that stage of the trial to consider in any detail and weigh in sensitive balance whether the facts, if proved, would be incompatible with the innocence of the accused or not. The standard of test and judgment which is to be finally applied before recording a finding regarding the guilt or otherwise of the accused is not exactly to be applied at the stage of deciding the matter under Section 227 or 228 of the Code. At the initial stage, if there is a strong suspicion which leads the Court to think that there is ground for presuming that the accused has committed an offence, then it is not open to the Court to say that there is no sufficient ground for proceeding against him. If the evidence which the prosecutor proposes to adduce to prove the guilt of the accused even if fully accepted before it is challenged in cross-examination or rebutted by the defence evidence, if any, cannot show that the accused committed the offence, then there will be no sufficient ground for proceeding with the trial. If the scales of a balance as to the guilt or innocence of the accused are something like even at the conclusion of trial, then, on the theory of benefit of doubt the case is to end in his acquittal. But if, on the other hand, it is so at the initial stage of making an order under Section 227 or Section 228, then in such a situation ordinarily and generally the order which will have to be made will be one under Section 228 and not under Section 227. State of Bihar v. Ramesh Singh, AIR 1977 SC 2018 : (1977) 4 SCC 39 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 533 : 1977 CrLJ 1606 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 375 : 1977 BBCJ (SC) 226 : 1977 CrAppR (SC) 267 : 1977 ChandLR (Cri) SC 274 : 1977 CurLJ (Cri) 214 : (1977) 3 ALR 443.

[12462] ● Prosecution witnesses contradicting their earlier statements.—The defence case was that the appellant was overpowered by three or four persons on the canal bank on the evening of the 16th May and in the scuffle his shirt was torn. Inspector Shiv Narain said in his evidence that at the time when he lodged the accused in the Police custody the clothes the accused was wearing were not torn. It is not clear what made him note the condition of the appellant's wearing apparel that evening. But he went on to add that next day, on the 17th May, when the accused was brought before him he found that the "shirt worn by the accused was torn from the right arm and both the shoulders". According to PW 12 he had the shirt removed from the person of the accused and too possession of the same. It is difficult to see wh this was necessary. Counsel for the appellan suggests that this story was introduced in antic pation of a defence case built on the torn shir We do not think that is an entirely baseles suggestion. Bhajan Singh v. State of Punjab, AI 1977 SC 674 : (1977) 4 SCC 596 : 1977 SC (Cri) 290 (293) : 1977 CrLJ 439 : 1976 CrL (SC) 556.

[12463] ● Right to adduce evidence in rebutta one of inevitable steps in defence case.—Th right to adduce evidence in rebuttal is one of th inevitable steps in the defence of a case by th accused and a refusal of the same amounts no only to an infraction of the provisions of th Criminal Procedure Code but also of the principles of natural justice and offends the famou maxim audi alteram partem. Rameshwar Dayal v State of U.P., AIR 1978 SC 1558 : (1978) 2 SC 518 : 1978 SCC (Cri) 311 (318) : 1978 CrL (SC) 182 : (1978) 3 SCR 59.

[12465] ● Defence taken by one accused not t be treated as evidence against co-accused.—It i well settled that the defence taken by one accuse cannot in law be treated as evidence against hi co-accused. S.P. Bhatnagar v. The State o Maharashtra, AIR 1979 SC 826 : (1979) 1 SC 535 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 323 (347) : 1979 CrLJ 566 1979 CrLR (SC) 328 : (1979) 2 SCR 875.

[12466] ● Rash and negligent driving— Conventional defences.—In our current considerations, the law under S. 304-A, IPC and under th rubric of negligence, must have due regard to th fatal frequency of rash driving of heavy dut vehicles and of speeding menaces. Thus viewed it is fair to apply the rule of res ipsa loquitur o course with care. Conventional defences, excep under compelling evidence, must break dow before the pragmatic Court and must be give short shrift. Rattan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1980 SC 84 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 17 (19) : 1980 CrL 11 : 1980 CrLR (SC) 44 : (1980) 1 SCR 846.

[12467] ● Medico-legal report led in evidence without objection effect.—Defence did not produce the Doctor who examined the injuries of the accused. However, the medico-legal report was led in evidence without any objection. The prosecution cannot profit by their failure to examine the Doctor. This medico-legal report (Ex PW-15/DY) was proved by Om Pal Singh (PW-15), record keeper of Police Hospital, who was acquainted with the hand writing and signature on Ex PW-15/DY. The medico-legal report shows that the possibility of Ramzani appellant having received these injuries on his hands with an iron bar, cannot be ruled out.

The injuries on the person of the accused have not been explained by the prosecution. So the prosecution has failed to discharge the burden of bringing home the guilt to the appellant beyond reasonable doubt. Mohd. Ramzani v. State of Delhi, AIR 1980 SC 1341 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 907 : 1980 CrLJ 1010 : 1980 Supp SCC 215.

[12468] ● Prosecution for exhibition of cinema film constituting offences under Sections 292 and 293, IPC.—In a prosecution under Sections 292 and 293 for exhibiting a cinema film certificate granted by the Film Censor Board gives rise to a rebuttable presumption. Function of Court is to decide, whether the ingredients of the offences are established. It is its primary and essential function and cannot abdicate that function in favour of another, no matter how august and qualified be the statutory authority. Act of recognition of moral worthiness by a statutory agency is not opinion evidence but an instance or transaction where the fact in issue has been asserted, recognised or affirmed. Certificate is a relevant material, important in its impact, though not infallible in its verdict. But Court is not barred, from trying the case because the certificate is not conclusive. Nevertheless, the Magistrate shall not brush aside what another tribunal has, for similar purpose, found. Raj Kapoor v. State (Delhi Administration), AIR 1980 SC 258 : (1980) 1 SCC 43 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 72 (80) : 1980 CrLJ 202 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 64.

[12469] ● False defence version does not strengthen prosecution case.—The defence version taken by the accused, appellant though false, would not strengthen the prosecution case. Baldev Raj v. State of Himachal Pradesh, AIR 1980 SC 436 : (1980) 2 SCC 564 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 491 : 1980 CrLJ 385.

[12470] ● Gun-shot injury—Gun broke when snatched.—According to the Investigating Officer, PW-14, when the licensed gun of Suraj Nath Chaudhary, PW-12, was seized by the witness from the house of Radha Chamar, its butt was found in a broken condition. This circumstance also lends some support to the defence version that PW-12 and his party men had attacked the appellant party and PW-12 opened the score by causing gun-shot injury to Chit Bahal, and when PW-12 reloaded the gun to fire again, Ram Ashrit, appellant, snatched the gun from PW-12 and broke it. Ram Ashrit v. State of Bihar, AIR 1981 SC 942 : (1981) 2 SCC 60 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 324 (328, 329) : 1981 CrLJ 484 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 177.

[12471] ● Defence witnesses entitled to equal treatment with those of prosecution.—Defence witnesses are entitled to equal treatment with those of the prosecution. The Courts ought to overcome their traditional, instinctive disbelief in defence witnesses. Dudh Nath v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1981 SC 911 : (1981) 2 SCC 166 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 379 : 1981 CrLJ 1618.

[12472] ● Difficult to hold from medical evidence that defence version false.—In the state of evidence in the present case, specially the medical evidence, it is difficult to hold with any certainty that the occurrence had taken place in the way the prosecution witnesses allege. From the medical evidence it is difficult to reach a firm conclusion that the defence version is altogether false. In these circumstances we do not find it safe to maintain the conviction of the appellants. Milkiyat Singh v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1981 SC 1579 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 264 (267) : 1981 CrLJ 1000 : 1980 CrLR (SC) 645 : 1981 UJ (SC) 127.

[12473] ● Falsity of defence not to take place of proof of facts.—Falsity of defence cannot take the place of proof of facts which the prosecution has to establish in order to succeed. A false plea can at best be considered as an additional circumstance if other circumstances point unfailingly to the guilt of the accused. Shankarlal Gyarasilal Dixit v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1981 SC 765 : (1981) 2 SCC 35 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 315 (322) : 1981 CrLJ 325 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 616 : (1981) 2 SCR 384.

[12474] ● Section 76 Illus (a), IPC—Applicability of.—The illustration to Section 76, IPC says that if a soldier fires on a man by the order of his superior officer in conformity with the commands of the law he commits no offence. The occasion to apply the provision of the section does not arise in the instant case, since the question as to whether the accused believed in good faith on account of a mistake of fact that he was bound by law to do the act which is alleged to constitute an offence, would arise only if the order is not justified or is otherwise unlawful. Since the situation prevailing at the scene of the offence was such as to justify the order given by the Deputy Commissioner of Police to open fire, the respondents can seek the protection of that order and plead in defence that they acted in obedience to that order and, therefore, they cannot be held guilty of the offence with which they are charged. That is the purport of the illustration of S. 76, IPC. State of West Bengal v. Shew Mangal Singh, AIR 1981 SC 1917 : (1981) 4 SCC 2 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 782 (785) : 1981 CrLJ 1683 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 501.

[12475] ● Authorities permitting sale of goods and granting amendment of licence.—The mere fact that the concerned authorities permitted sale of goods and granted amendment of licences to include also items other than the one for which originally the licence was issued, would not provide an irrebutable defence and entitle the accused to protection under Section 79, IPC. Jayantilal K. Kataka v. P. Govindan Nair, (1981) 2 SCC 423 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 458 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 508 : 1981 UJ (SC) 174.

[12476] ● Accused persons defended by public prosecutor who earlier had brief.—In the present case the accused persons were defended by the Public Prosecutor, who earlier, had the brief of the case with him. Also, it was found that the accused were supported by the ruling party in the State and when the trial was going on and the witnesses were giving evidence, there were a large number of supporters of the party who were allowed to assemble in the Court compound and who created a hostile atmosphere by shouting against the prosecution and in favour of the accused. Though the brother of the deceased and the complainant as also the witnesses were intimidated, no steps were taken for according protection to them, so that they might be able to give evidence truly and fearlessly in a proper atmosphere consistent with the sanctity of the Court. A few witnesses also turned hostile. It was further found, that when the trial commenced, the Special Public Prosecutor who was appointed only two days earlier was granted adjournment only for one day to prepare the case. In the abovesaid circumstances the trial could not be regarded as fair and just so far as the prosecution was concerned. The entire course of events showed that the conduct of the trial was heavily loaded in favour of the accused persons. The trial was vitiated and the acquittal of the accused was set aside, as confirmed by the High Court rejecting the application of appellant The Supreme Court ordered a re-trial of respondents Nos. 1 to 9 on the self-same charges for which they were tried before the learned Additional Sessions Judge and the trial ordered to be conducted, in a place other than Krishna Nagar because the atmosphere was not congenial to the appellant and the complainant. Hence the Sessions case was transferred to be tried by a City Civil and Sessions Judge to be appointed by the Chief Judge of that Court. It was also directed that a Senior Advocate practising on the criminal side in that Court should be appointed by the State Government as Special Public Prosecutor in consultation with the appellant and the complainant. Sunil Kumar Pal v. Phota Sheikh, AIR 1984 SC 1591 : (1984) 4 SCC 533 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 18 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 598.

[12477] ● Presence of accused at place of occurrence not proved by evidence.—Adverting to the case of Purna, his specific and positive defence was that on the date of occurrence that is on March 11, 1973 he was assigned the duty from 8.00 a.m. to 5.00 p.m. in Hydel Sub-Division at Mathura. In order to substantiate this defence, he examined DW-1, Mani Kant Trivedi, as clerk in the office of SDO Hydel who deposed that appellant Purna was on duty from 8.00 a.m. to 5.00 p.m. on March 11, 1973 in Hydel Sub-Division at Mathura. In support of this statement, he produced the time keepers' record made at the gate of power station at the time of entering the power station at 8.00 a.m. He stated that the gate is locked at 8.00 a.m. and reopened at 5.00 p.m. and the record shows that appellant-Purna was in the Hydel Sub-Division on that day from 8.00 a.m. to 5.00 p.m. According to PW 1 and PW 2 the incident occurred around between 2.00 p.m. to 3 p.m. But Mr. Chauhan the Prosecution witness does not say a single word about the register maintained at the gate. He has no knowledge whether the appellant Purna was or was not present in Hydel Sub-Division at Mathura. Witness Chauhan himself was working at Aurangabad Sub-Station. He had no personal knowledge about the presence of appellant Purna at the power station. His evidence is of a general nature and is very vague and it could not be accepted in preference to the evidence of DW-1 Mani Kant Trivedi, whose evidence was borne out by the contemporaneous record. Purna v. State of U.P., AIR 1984 SC 454 : (1984) 2 SCC 393 : 1984 SCC (Cri) 261 (262, 263) : 1984 CrLJ 187 : 1983 CrLR (SC) 258 : 1983 UJ (SC) 532 : (1983) 1 Crimes 973.

[12478] ● Demanding and accepting illegal gratification.—A Doctor in a Government Hospital was found guilty of demanding and accepting illegal gratification from the father of a patient under his treatment at the Hospital and was convicted for an offence under S. 5(1)(d) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 and for an offence under S. 161 of the IPC. The High Court allowed the appeal on forming the opinion that the respondent might have demanded and accepted the amount as and by way of his professional fees inasmuch as Government Doctor was permitted to have private practice of his own as per the relevant rules, though such was not his defence at any stage. The respondent accused had not offered any such explanation in his statement recorded under S. 313 of the CrPC. In fact the defence of the respondent before the Sessions Court was that he had never accepted any such amount form PW-3. It was his case that the story regarding passing of the currency notes was concocted and that he had not accepted any currency notes from PW-3, as alleged by the prosecution. According to him he had been "framed". What is more, it is obvious that if the respondent had accepted monetary consideration in respect of a patient being treated at the Government Hospital, it could scarcely have been contended that it was a part of permissible private practice and not illegal gratification. The High Court resorted to surmises and conjectures for which there was not the slightest basis, apart from the fact that no such defence was taken and no such plea was ever advanced by the respondent accused. Under the circumstances, the decision of the High Court cannot be sustained on the basis of the reasoning which found favour with it. State of U.P. v. Dr. G.K. Ghosh, AIR 1984 SC 1453 : (1984) 1 SCC 254 : 1984 SCC (Cri) 46 (48, 49) : 1985 CrLJ 904 : 1983 CrLR (SC) 490 : (1983) 3 SCR 993 : (1983) 2 Crimes 856.

[12479] ● No contention taken before trial Court or before High Court that petitioner only 15-1/2 years at time of occurrence.—The statement of the petitioner made before the trial Court under Section 313, CrPC was that the deceased was his aunt and had no issues and she wanted to adopt him as her son and there was no justification for the petitioner to murder her before she adopted him. The further statement and suggestion was that PW-4 suspected that the petitioner had illicit connection with the deceased and, therefore, if the petitioner would have thought of murdering, it would have been of PW-4 and not the deceased. If the petitioner was only 15-1/2 years old at the time of the occurrence and only a little over 18 years of age at the time of trial, it is improbable that such a stand would have been taken on behalf of the petitioner. Plea appears to be an after thought. Sushil Kumar Mehrotra v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1984 SC 1232 : (1984) 3 SCC 123 : 1984 SCC (Cri) 418 (420, 421) : 1984 CrLJ 990 : 1984 CrLR (SC) 266 : 1984 UJ (SC) 716.

[12480] ● Murder Trial—Circumstantial evidence.—The appellant in his defence took the stand that he was the driver of the taxi in which three persons came as passengers. Soon after the bridge had been crossed, the passengers started quarrelling among themselves. That diverted the attention of the appellant and resulted in a cyclist being dashed against. When the car came to standstill the three people who were quarrelling among themselves got down and two of them started assaulting the deceased with a knife after going a little away from the road. The appellant went there to rescue the deceased. In that process his wearing apparel got blood soaked. After fatally assaulting the deceased the assailants ran away when some people started collecting there. Ramesh Chand v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1985 SC 766 (767) : (1985) 1 SCC 464 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 100 : 1985 CrLJ 530 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 70 : (1985) 1 Crimes 336.

[12481] ● High Court rejecting defence version and convicting accused.—PW-7 was admittedly present at the spot and he has categorically spoken that when the appellant's fingers were put into the mixture they did not turn rosy. The Trial Court had referred to this fact and relied upon it. That evidence which had been accepted, probabilises the defence plea that the currency notes had not been received by the appellant in his left hand and, therefore, the insertion of the notes into the pocket of the appellant by some other persons were more probable. This is the defence plea which had been accepted by the Trial Court. We are inclined to think that reversal by the High Court was not warranted. Salim Khan Sardar Khan v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1986 SC 307 (309) : (1985) 4 SCC 234 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 511 : 1985 CrLJ 1901 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 547.

[12482] ● Murder of wife by husband—High Court in appeal against conviction entertaining unwarranted doubts.—The High Court has been obsessed with the defence plea that the accused could not have inflicted a clean cut wound on the throat of Sulochana without holding her head firm with his left hand. Since PWs-1 and 2 have stated that the accused was holding the torch in his left hand while inflicting the cut on Sulochana's neck with MO-1 held in his right hand, the High Court has concluded that the occurrence could not have taken place in that manner and, hence, their evidence is unacceptable. The High Court has failed to see that Sulochana was a woman of very weak constitution and furthermore the accused had knelt over her chest and pinned her hands to the ground with his knees and as such it would not have been possible for Sulochana to offer any resistance when the accused cut her throat. State of Kerala v. Bahuleyan, AIR 1987 SC 482 : (1986) 4 SCC 124 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 361 (364, 365) : 1986 CrLJ 1579 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 473 : JT (1986) SC 190 : (1986) 3 Crimes 364.

[12483] ● Confirming authority considered report of Advisory committee.—The report of the Advisory Committee was considered by the confirming authority. In the circumstances, it cannot be said that the confirming authority had not applied his mind to the evidence of the defence witness as contended on behalf of the appellant. It is, however, submitted by the learned Counsel for the appellant that the relevant portion of the evidence of the defence witness has not been mentioned in the report of the Advisory Committee, and accordingly, the confirming authority had no occasion to consider the same. We do not think that it is incumbent upon the Advisory Board to refer in detail the evidence of defence witness in its report. It will not be unreasonable to presume that all the records including the deposition of the said M.L. Khanna (defence witness) were before the confirming authority. It will be a mere surmise to hold that the confirming authority has not applied his mind to the deposition of the defence witness, even though such deposition has been referred to in the report of the Advisory Committee. Madhu Khanna v. Administrator Union Territory of Delhi, AIR 1987 SC 48 : (1986) 4 SCC 240 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 426 (430, 431) : 1986 CrLJ 318 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 401.

[12484] ● Defence founded on relevant and vital document.—Where defence is founded on a relevant and vital document seized from the custody of the accused and not deliberately produced, it is difficult to sustain the conviction of the accused. In the instant case it was the duty of the prosecution to produce the release order. The said statement of PW-2 that in the release order dated March 7, 1968 delivery was marked in respect of the goods which were dispatched outside without producing the release order in question, is no evidence at all and is also no answer to defence plea that the said 22 bags of wheat were loaded in the truck as per the release order No. 115. Chittaranjan Choudhary v. State of Bihar, AIR 1987 SC 856 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 287 : 1987 CrLJ 773 : 1987 (1) Crimes 383.

[12485] ● Vital document seized from custody of accused not produced.—Where, as in the instant case, the defence is founded on a relevant and vital document seized from the custody of the accused and not deliberately produced, it is difficult to sustain the conviction of the accused. It was the duty of the prosecution to produce the release order No. 115 in order to remove all doubts by showing that the goods which were being despatched by the appellant, were not covered by the release order. The said statement of PW-2 that in the release order dated March 7, 1968 delivery was marked in respect of the goods which were despatched outside without producing the release order in question, is no evidence at all and is also no answer to the defence plea that the said 22 bags of wheat were loaded in the truck as per the release order No. 115. The Munsif Magistrate completely overlooked that the said release was seized from the custody of the appellant. The Magistrate was, therefore, not justified in rejecting the defence plea on the ground of non-production of the release order by him. Chittaranjan Choudhury v. State of Bihar, AIR 1987 SC 856 : (1987) 2 SCC 104 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 287 : 1987 CrLJ 773 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 195 : 1987 UJ (SC) 477 : 1987 CrAppR (SC) 347 : (1987) 1 Crimes 383.

[12486] ● No explanation of injuries on accused person.—There is no clear explanation of the injuries on the accused person. The appellant has set up a defence that the scuffle started and it is only in that situation that he took out the knife and inflicted a blow. It is also not in dispute that it was only one blow which was inflicted by the present appellant. In these circumstances, the evidence of the prosecution does not clearly establish the manner in which the incident took place and, therefore, it could not be held that the incident did not take place in the manner suggested by the present accused appellant and in that situation it could not be held that he inflicted this injury with an intention to cause death. At best, knowledge could be imputed to him that it may result in death. In view of this, the conviction of the appellant under Section 302 could not be maintained and it is altered to S. 304, Part II, IPC. Katar Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1988 SC 2122 : (1988) 1 SCC 690 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 264 (265) : 1988 CrLR (SC) 77 : JT 1988 (1) SC 116.

[12487] ● Circumstantial evidence of deceased last seen with accused.—The prosecution has suggested that the appellant did not search for his father, but according to the appellant, the deceased had been taken away by Manjit Singh to their place on the pretext that Manjit Singh's wife, i.e., the appellant's sister was not well and this was also put in cross-examination to Nihal Singh. In the absence of evidence of Manjit Singh, the suggestion of the appellant cannot be brushed aside. Makhan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1988 SC 1705 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 916 (919) : 1988 CrLR (SC) 501 : JT 1988 (3) SC 126.

[12488] ● Evidence of living person—Mode of adducing.—The appellant's counsel submitted that the Courts below had failed to take into account the affidavit of Haliman filed by the defence which goes to show that the appellant was not involved in the incident. He submitted that Haliman being a close relative the deceased would not ordinarily come forward to file an affidavit exonerating the appellant notwithstanding the fact that the appellant is also his close relation. Haliman was not examined as a defence witness, nor was any request made to the Court at any time during the trial to examine her as a prosecution or Court witness. Proof of Haliman's signature on the affidavit is not forthcoming. Besides, if the defence wanted to rely on the evidence of this witness, the proper course was to call her as a defence witness. S. 3, Evidence Act, contemplates oral evidence or documentary evidence. In the case of a living person evidence in judicial proceedings must be tendered by calling the witness to the witness stand and cannot be substituted by an affidavit unless the law permits it, e.g. Ss. 295 and 407(3), CrPC, or the Court expressly allows it. Munir Ahmed v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1989 SC 705 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 455 (462) : 1989 CrLJ 845 : 1989 CrLR (SC) 196 : JT 1989 (1) SC 76 : 1989 CrAppR (SC) 127 : (1989) 2 Crimes 81.

[12489] ● All defence witnesses came to give evidence on being requested by accused.—All the defence witnesses came forward to give evidence on being requested by the accused. None of them was summoned. Many of them are from Rajwara of which the accused has been the Mukhiya for the last several years. It is, therefore, not surprising that they have tried to support his version. Kanti Kumari Roy v. Suresh Kumar Roy, AIR 1990 SC 1631 : 1990 SCC (Cri) 546 (553) : 1990 CrLJ 1630 : 1990 CrLR (SC) 278 : JT 1990 (2) SC 121 : 1990 CrAppR (SC) 194.

[12490] ● Conduct of accused throwing mattress over deceased burning woman.—"According to the witness, particularly PW-2 the deceased was found under a mattress and accused No. 1 was pressing the same on her and in the process he also got burns. The High Court has rightly observed that the culprits who had decided to put an end to the life of the deceased would never go to the extent of extinguishing the fire after throwing a mattress on her and in this view according to the High Court, the prosecution has not proved beyond reasonable doubt that this was a case of homicide and not suicide. The conduct of the accused in throwing the mattress over the burning woman is an important circumstance which creates a doubt about the prosecution version." State of Gujarat v. Mohan Bhai Raghbhai Patel, AIR 1990 SC 1379 (1381) : 1990 CrLJ 1462 : 1990 CrLR (SC) 313 : JT 1990 (2) SC 440.

[12491] ● Prosecution to succeed on basis of its own evidence.—The prosecution has to succeed on the basis of its own evidence and it cannot rely on the absence of defence to sustain the guilt as there is no justification for raising assumption against the appellants. The circumstances established by the prosecution are not sufficient to conclusively point to the appellants as the perpetrator of the crime or rule out the hypothesis of their innocence. The High Court was not justified in drawing adverse inference for completing the chain of circumstances to uphold the appellants conviction merely on the appellants false explanation in defence. Harendra Narain Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 1991 SC 1842 : (1991) 3 SCC 609 : 1991 SCC (Cri) 905 (906) : 1991 CrLJ 2666 : 1991 CrLR (SC) 581 : JT 1991 (3) SC 167 : (1991) 3 Crimes 297.

[12492] ● Appreciation of evidence—Presence of blood near tube-well.—If the defence version has to be rejected, this factor which weighs in favour of the defence ought to have been explained as an innocuous circumstance not affecting the genesis of the prosecution case. Buta Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1991 SC 1316 : (1991) 2 SCC 612 : 1991 SCC (Cri) 494 (498) : 1991 CrLJ 1464 : 1991 CrLR (SC) 384 : (1991) 2 Crimes 46.

[12493] ● No blood found from spot where incident occurred.—When two versions are before the Court, the version which is supported by objective evidence cannot be brushed aside lightly unless it has been properly explained. As stated earlier, the prosecution has not explained how blood was found from near the tubewell and no blood was found from the spot where according to them the incident occurred. Buta Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1991 SC 1316 : (1991) 2 SCC 612 : 1991 SCC (Cri) 494(499) : 1991 CrLJ 1464 : 1991 CrLR (SC) 384 : (1991) 2 Crimes 46.

[12494] ● Cumulative effect of all facts established to be consistent with hypothesis of guilt.—The circumstances relied upon must be found to have been fully established and the cumulative effect of all the facts so established must be consistent only with the hypothesis of guilt. But this is not to say that the prosecution must meet any and every hypothesis put forward by the accused however far-fetched and fanciful it might be. State of U.P. v. Ashok Kurmar Srivastava, AIR 1992 SC 840 : (1992) 2 SCC 86 : 1992 SCC (Cri) 241 (249) : 1992 CrLJ 1104.

[12495] ● Removal of dead bodies—Two fields away from disputed land.—It is beyond one's comprehension in the circumstances of the case that the respondents would have tried to remove the dead bodies of the accused persons after the occurrence because such a removal would be detrimental to their defence. Therefore, if at all any one had obliterated the scene of occurrence by removing the dead bodies, it must have been only by the prosecution, obviously, for putting up a theory that the occurrence did not take place in the field in dispute but in some other pasture land, that is, two fields away from the disputed land. Bir Singh v. State of U.P., 1992 Supp (2) SCC 264 : 1992 SCC (Cri) 915 (929) : 1992 CrLJ 1510.

[12496] ● Inquest report though not to be treated as evidence can be looked to test veracity of witness.—DW-2 was a panch witness in the inquest report which he attested and in which the presence of PW-3 is given as witness of the occurrence. DW-2 has no explanation except stating that he did not read the contents. Admittedly, he knows Punjabi language in which the inquest report was written. Therefore his explanation is not acceptable. The evidence of DW-2 is not of much consequence. DW-3 deposed that he is brother-in-law of the accused and that his wife had taken the son and daughter of the accused from the village. His evidence is not of much consequence. DW-1 also deposed that he heard an alarm from the house of the accused and went to the house of accused and saw the accused and his wife grappling and he tried to intervene, but before he could do so, the gun of the accused fired accidentally. Therefore, he took the accused to DW-2, village Sarpanch and thereafter they went to the Police Station and gave a report. But DW-2 was a panch witness in the inquest report wherein the version was that the accused deliberately shot at the deceased. No doubt the contents of the inquest report cannot be treated as evidence but they can be looked into to test the veracity of DW-2. Thus the evidence of DWs 1 to 3 is not of any help to the accused. Kuldip Singh v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1992 SC 1944 : 1992 SCC (Cri) 946 (948) : 1992 CrLJ 3592 : (1992) 3 SCC (Supp) 1.

[12497] ● Plea of accidental firing of gun.—In the instant case, the appellant's case was that he held the gun in his hands: Since the gun was loaded and the butt of it was severely hit by an axe blow the loaded gun went off. There was a scuffle between the parties and it is quite likely that in such scuffle, the butt of the gun was damaged by an axe blow. The Ballistic Expert has clearly stated that as soon as the gun was loaded it became automatically locked and the gun could not be fired unless the safety lock was moved forward. He has categorically stated that the axe blow on the butt could not move the safety lock forward so that the gun would go off. Raja Bhaiya alias Raghubir Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1993 SC 2567 (2571, 2572) : 1993 CrLJ 3658 : JT 1993 (5) SC 234 : (1993) 3 Crimes 382.

[12498] ● Quarrel over taking water from tubewell—Accused firing shot in exercise of right of private defence killing deceased.—The case of the appellant is that the deceased during the course of his insistence to take water to his land abused the appellant which led to a quarrel. According to him, when he and the deceased were grappling each other, the appellant's brother separated both of them. The deceased left the spot threatening that he would teach a lesson to the appellant. Therefore, the appellant fearing imminent danger to his life loaded his gun and sat there. Half an hour thereafter the deceased came with a gandasi and attack the appellant. Apprehending danger to his life, the appellant fired a shot in the air to scare away the deceased and others but it did not have any effect. When the deceased again attacked with gandasi, the appellant reloaded the gun and fired at the abdomen of the deceased for self-defence.

The medical evidence discloses that there was a contusion and two abrasions on the body of the deceased which injuries according to the Medical Officer could have been caused by any blunt weapon. It is not the case of the prosecution that the deceased was attacked by any blunt weapon. This fact indicates that the deceased had sustained these two injuries during the scuffle while they were grappling each other and rolling on the ground. In other words, the defence theory alone amply explains the injuries found on the deceased. Considering all the facts and circumstances of the case we feel that the appellant has fired the shot in the exercise of his right of private defence but has exceeded his right in putting an end to the life of the deceased. On the strength of the above findings we hold that the appellant would be liable to be convicted under S. 304, Part I and not under S. 302, IPC. Jasbir Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1993 SC 968 (969, 970) : 1993 SCC (Cri) 800 : 1993 CrLJ 301 : JT 1992 (3) SC 303.

[12499] ● Presence of accused at place of incident highly doubtful.—A-2 pleaded alibi. He stated that he was on duty at Patiala from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and even after office hours he remained at Patiala and during the subsequent days also he had been attending to his duties. No doubt he has not examined any witness in support of his alibi but PW-25, the Investigating Officer, admitted that he has verified the office records which show that both A-1 and A-2 attended their offices on 2nd Dec. 1978. It, therefore, emerges that A-2 was at Patiala and attended his office at least till 5 p.m. and Patiala is about 40 miles away from the scene of occurrence. In such a situation his presence at the scene of occurrence at about 7 p.m. becomes highly doubtful. Dharam Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1993 SC 319 : 1993 SCC (Cri) 1059 (1069) : 1993 CrLJ 150 : JT 1992 (6) SC 98 : (1992) 3 Crimes 748.

[12500] ● Acceptance of bribe complainant tried to thrust money in packet.—The case of the accused is that the complainant had tried to thrust the money in his pocket and he had resisted the said attempt, and thrown down the money on the floor. This version of the accused has been supported by the prosecution witness Raghubir Singh who is the adjacent shopkeeper and in whose shop the testing of ultraviolet rays on the currency notes was made. Since he was aware of what was going to happen he had naturally moved near the shop of the trap. According to this witness, he was standing outside the said shop and had heard the conversation inside the shop where the trap was laid. There is no reason why this witness who is a stranger both to the prosecution as well as to the accused would support the version of the accused, as stated above, if that was not the true version. Babu Lal Bajpai v. State of U.P., AIR 1994 SC 1538 (1539) : (1993) 4 SCC 414 : 1994 CrLJ 1383.

[12501] ● Accused case of false implication established to be false.—The defence of the accused is false when he says that it was his father who killed his wife and thereafter tried to inflict injures on him. The evidence shows that the father was not there when the incident occurred. This false explanation was rightly used by the learned Sessions Judge as an additional link to the chain of events presented by the prosecution. State of Madhya Pradesh v. Rattan Lal, AIR 1994 SC 458 (460) : 1994 CrLJ 131.

[12502] ● Grave and sudden provocation.—The defence case is that when the appellant took strong objection to the conduct of Bhikam for supplying liquor to his brother Bhura, the deceased threw a challenge saying that the appellant could do whatever he could do which resulted in exchange of gross insult by words. It was only under such piquant and provocative situation that the appellant (who had already become imbalanced with a broken heart on seeing the dead body of his brother, Bhura who suddenly passed away due to the consumption of liquor, administered by Bhikam) on being deprived of self-control by grave and sudden provocation, took a knife which was lying nearby and stabbed Bhikam. In support of his defence the appellant examined DW-1 to 3. After carefully examining the evidence, we are left with an impression that the defence version is more probable than that of the prosecution. In our opinion the appellant had been deprived of his self-control by the grave and sudden provocation on the indifferent and impertinent reply as well as of the gross indecent word uttered by the deceased against the appellant in a piquant situation when his brother was lying dead on account of the consumption of liquor administered by the deceased. The High Court has overlooked this defence theory but proceeded only on the evidence adduced by the prosecution. Taking an overall survey of the evidence it is felt that the appellant is entitled for Exception 1 to S. 300, IPC. Dayal v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1994 SC 30 (31) : 1994 CrLJ 10.

[12503] ● No material that accused participated in dacoity or caused injury.—The accused, particularly A-2, pleaded that they were innocent and they were going to a neighbouring place and the villagers who were running hither and thither caught hold of them and on suspicion they were implicated. The Sessions Judge acquitted all the accused.

The High Court convicted these two accused solely on the ground that they were caught while running. No recovery was effected from them. There is no material whatsoever that they participated in dacoity or caused injuries to inmates including the witnesses. The explanation given by the accused cannot be rejected outright. It is well-settled that the accused need not prove their plea beyond all reasonable doubt. Latel v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1994 SC 763 (764) : 1994 CrLJ 1122.

[12504] ● Right of private defence exceeded in view of type of injuries and weapon used.—It is well settled that the accused need not prove his defence. It is enough if he can show by preponderance of the probability that the plea taken by him is plausible and raises a reasonable doubt. Then he is entitled to the benefit. Having examined the material on record and the nature of the injuries found on the accused and the injuries on the deceased, the accused has exceeded the right of private defence. Accordingly conviction is set aside. Nizamuddin v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1994 SC 1041 (1043) : 1994 CrLJ 1386.

[12505] ● Evidence of defence not suffering from any infirmity.—There is nothing on record to show that the evidence of said defence witnesses suffers from any infirmity whatsoever. Kewal Krishan, DW-4, was neither questioned about the reports made by him to SDM and DC, by registered post nor about the contents of the letter/complaints. This suggests that the prosecution neither disputed the complaints made by the complainant nor the contents thereof.

The appeal was allowed. Daulat Ram v. State of Haryana, AIR 1995 SC 1998 : (1996) 11 SCC 711 : 1995 CrLJ 3648.

[12506] ● Accused killing his brother by axe—Defence witnesses falsely deposing to save accused.—Considering the evidence of the defence witnesses it can be said that they have deposed falsely in order to save the appellants. DW-1, the father having lost one son (Surjit Singh) obviously did not want to lose his other son (appellant No 2) by getting him convicted. So also DW-2 being the brother tried to save appellant No. 2 by deposing like that. The evidence of PW 5 and PW 7 does not suffer from serious infirmity. Their evidence establishes beyond doubt that appellant No. 2 has been rightly convicted under Section. 302, IPC. Jaswinder Kaur v. State of Punjab, AIR 1995 SC 2327 (2328) : 1995 CrLJ 3982 : (1995) 3 Crimes 396 : (1995) 2 UJ 528.

[12507] ● Murder committed due to grave and sudden provocation.—In his statement as his own defence witness, he has narrated the sequence of events by which he was provoked by the deceased. It stands out prominently that the deceased was a member of a high caste and the appellant of a low caste. Unfortunately, the appellant was subjected to repeated insults at the end of which, when his tolerance broke down, he made use of the knife and inflicted repeated injuries on the deceased who had unabashedly and lecherously asked the appellant to make available his wife to him for immoral purpose. This part of the statement of the appellant cannot be doubted. It is also in evidence that there was a job available in the school of the deceased Headmaster and that the appellant wanted to apply for the same to headmaster. This may have provided enough opportunity to the deceased to exploit the situation, as the appellant was unemployed in those days when the occurrence took place. Thus, from this analysis it becomes abundantly clear that the appellant was driven to the crime which was not premeditated and the occasion had sprung up at the moment, gradually leading to the point when the appellant lost his self-control, and due to grave and sudden provocation, inflicted the injuries on the deceased, successively within seconds. We think, therefore, that the offence made out against the appellant is under S. 304, Part I, IPC. Accordingly, the offence is scaled down from one punishable under S. 302, IPC to one under S. 304, Part I, IPC. Devku Bhikha v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1995 SC 2171 (2172) : 1995 CrLJ 3975 : (1996) 1 CCR 221.

[12508] ● Allegation in complaint make out prima facie case—Relevant consideration.—At the stage of issuing process, the Court is to see whether the allegations made in the complaint make out the offence prima facie. Whether the offence has been made out, whether he is liable and what are the defences open to him are not matters at this stage for consideration. It is for the learned Magistrate to proceed with the trial and to deal with according to law. Anil Saran v. State of Bihar, AIR 1996 SC 204 (206) : (1995) 6 SCC 142 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 1051 : 1996 CrLJ 408 : JT 1995 (6) SC 428.

[12509] ● Dowry death—Distressing to note practising Advocates without any compunction spoken falsehood.—It is most distressing to note that practising advocates, PW-6 and DW-2 with a view to exculpate the first respondent from the clutches of law, have, without any compunction, spoken falsehood and have no regard for truth betraying their duty of being responsible law officers who are expected to uphold truth and nothing but truth. State of U.P. v. Ramesh Prasad Misra, AIR 1996 SC 2766 (2768) : (1996) 10 SCC 360 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 1278 : 1996 CrLJ 4002.

[12510] ● False theories of stranger causing death.—These false theories set up by the first respondent are yet other circumstance to complete the chain to inculpate the first respondent in the commission of the offence of murder and scratching the evidence of murder. State of U.P. v. Ramesh Prasad Misra, AIR 1996 SC 2766 : (1996) 10 SCC 360 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 1278 (1283) : 1996 CrLJ 4002 : JT 1996 (9) SC 566 : (1996) 3 Crimes 181.

[12511] ● Circumstantial evidence—Evidence and proof.—It was next contended by Mr. Lalit that neither the Trial Court nor the High Court was justified in relying upon the evidence of the defence witness (DW-5) to record the conviction against the appellant. The prosecution having failed to prove its case against the appellant through its eye-witnesses, namely, PW-4 and PW-6 could not claim its success solely on the basis of the evidence of DW-5, more so, when he figured as a witness not on behalf of the appellant but on behalf of some of the other accused persons. We might have persuaded ourselves to accept the above contention of Mr. Lalit if the learned Courts below had, after discarding the evidence of PW-4 and PW-6 altogether, based their findings against the appellant solely relying upon the ocular version of the incident given out by DW-5 who was examined on behalf of two of the other accused persons to prove that they were not party to the murders but admitted, in cross-examination by the learned Public Prosecutor, that the appellant had fired at the deceased for in criminal cases the burden of proving the guilt of the accused beyond all reasonable doubts always rests on the prosecution and, therefore, if it fails to adduce satisfactory and reliable evidence to discharge that burden, it cannot fall back upon the evidence adduced by the accused persons in support of their defence to rest its case solely thereupon. In the instant case, we however, find that the Courts below made use of the evidence of DW-5 only for lending assurance to the conclusions already drawn by the learned Courts on the basis of the evidence of PWs-4 and 6. Such a course is legally and legitimately permissible. Jarnail Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1996 SC 755 : (1996) 1 SCC 527 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 146 : 1996 CrLJ 1139 : (1996) 2 SCJ 130.

[12512] ● Dying declaration—Reliability.—The High Court took into consideration the statements of certain persons for purposes of testing the reliability of the alleged dying declaration. Such evidence could be adduced in defence during the trial but surprisingly enough the High Court took into account the statement of certain persons to the effect that the deceased was a person of unsound mind at the investigation stage itself whose evidence is yet to be recorded at the trial and made observations that the deceased was a person of unsound mind and, therefore, the dying declaration could not be relied on. Such an approach to the case cannot be appreciated. We are satisfied that it was a case where the taking of cognizance of offence against the respondent deserved quashing by the High Court. State of Orissa v. Bansidhar Singh, AIR 1996 SC 938 (940) : (1996) 2 SCC 194 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 259.

[12513] ● Despite having full proof defence—Designated Court rejecting on ground that it was after thought.—"It has pained us to know that despite her having a full-proof defence, it has come to be rejected by the Designated Court on the ground that it was "an afterthought". The appellant's defence was that the. 315 bore rifle, which was said to have been recovered from his possession on 25-5-1990, was to bolster up a false case against him under S. 307, IPC, and the weapon was in fact one which was licensed in the name of Avtar Singh, a partner of the appellant in a liquor business, and was taken possession of on 23-5-1990, to prove which Avtar Singh was examined as DW-1. The Designated Court, however, regarded the defence as "an afterthought" because prosecution witnesses had not been asked about the same by giving any suggestion to them in cross-examination. We are afraid the Court made an apparent error in saying so inasmuch as PW-1, Sub-Inspector Gurinder Singh, who deposed that the recovery of the arm from the appellant, had been specifically asked whether the rifle was licensed in the name of Avtar Singh, and PW-2, Sub-Inspector Karnail Singh was suggested that the rifle in question belonged to Avatar Singh and had been taken possession from him. It is a different matter that these suggestions were denied. What is more, PW-2 admitted that in the DDR (Daily Diary Report). There was no mention about the details of the case property recovered from the appellant and the learned Additional Judge committed gross error in rejecting the aforesaid plea on the ground that it was an afterthought." Jagtar Singh v. State of Punjab, (1996) 8 SCC 364 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 683 (683-684) : (1996) 2 Crimes 105.

[12514] ● Appreciation of evidence—Appellants going to house of deceased on false pretext of searching for unauthorised fire-arms.—Where the evidence of the eye-witnesses is considered in the light of the respective cases of parties it stands fully established that the appellants came together to the premises of Phoola Devi on the plea that they wanted to search it. If the defence contention that on search an unlicensed pistol was recovered was true, it was obligatory on their part to prepare the seizure memo in respect of the same and then register a case against Phoola Devi. Similarly it must also be said that if really she had managed to run away from the Police Station after she was brought there under arrest, it was expected that not only there would be some daily diary entry in the Police Station in support thereof but also a prosecution launched against her for escaping from lawful custody. In absence of any evidence either oral or documentary to support the defence story, we are unable to accept the same.

We hasten to add that we are not unmindful of the settled principle of law that the prosecution must stand on its own feet and not on the weakness of the defence, but then these telltale circumstances not only falsify the defiance story but also lend credence to the prosecution case that to wreak their vengeance on Phoola Devi for having lodged complaint against them to their superiors that the appellants came to her house on the false pretext of searching for unauthorised firearms and forcibly took her to the Police Station - beating her all the way - as testified by the three eye-witnesses. Sukhpal v. State of M.P., AIR 1997 SC 468 (470) : (1997) 9 SCC 773 : 1997 SCC (Cri) 789 : JT 1997 (1) SC 387.

[12515] ● Failure of prosecution to prove that deceased met with homicidal death.—Having regard to the facts and circumstances, we are of the considered view that Prosecution has failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that Surinder Kaur met with a homicidal death. The defence plea of suicide cannot be ruled out." Prem Singh v. State of Punjab and Amarjit Singh v. State of Punjab and State of Punjab v. Bimal Kaur, AIR 1997 SC 221 (224) : 1997 SCC (Cri) 255 : 1997 CrLJ 69 : JT 1996 (9) SC 504.

[12516] ● Non-engaging of defending officer despite several opportunities.—"We find for the record that sufficient time was given to the appellant either to engage defence Counsel of his choice or to have a defending officer, but the appellant kept on changing defending officers or asked for adjustments for the purpose of engaging defence Counsel. He did not cross-examine witnesses when they were offered for cross-examination. He was given sufficient indulgence in this behalf by the Court. . . . The appellant repeatedly sought adjournments on one pretext or the other and was not satisfied with the various defence officers who were made available to him as per his request. The appellant who has argued the appeal before us is well versed with the Army Law and Army Rules and was quite capable of arguing his own case. He was throughout present at the Court Martial and could have cross-examined the witnesses had he so desired. He has been given sufficient indulgence by the Court and we do not see how any principles of natural justice have been violated in this case. The court-martial, therefore, cannot be faulted on the ground of non-compliance with the principles of natural justice." Major General Inder Jit Kumar v. Union of India, AIR 1997 SC 2085 (2089) : (1997) 9 SCC 1 : JT 1997 (4) SC 8.

[12517] ● Evidence of Police Officer—On examination of case diary prepared by Investigating officer and after interrogation accused found to be innocent.—"Coming now to the defence witnesses, we find that Swaran Singh (DW-1) and K.S. Kailey (DW-5), Deputy Superintendent of Police and Additional Deputy Superintendent of Police respectively of Ferozepur were examined to testify that they had perused the case diary prepared by the Investigating Officer and interrogated some of the accused and other persons. On their such exercise they found that three of the accused, namely, Dalip Singh (appellant), Shabeg Slingh and Arjan Singh were innocent. In our considered view, the Designated Court ought not to have permitted the defence to adduce the above evidence as it is not legally admissible. We may further add that if the result of investigation was to be made the basis of a Court's verdict regarding guilt or innocence of an accused, there would be no need of a trial in a Police case for, relying on the report submitted under S. 173(2), CrPC, a Court would be entitled to decide the fate of the person arraigned. The evidence of DWs-1 and 5 must, therefore, be left out of our consideration. Incidentally, we may mention that inspite of the opinion expressed by the above two superior officers, charge-sheet was submitted by the Investigating Officer against the abovementioned three accused." Dalip Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1997 SC 2985 (2988) : (1997) 11 SCC 573 : 1997 CrLJ 3647 : 1997 CrLR (SC) 447 : JT 1997 (5) SC 724 : (1997) 2 Crimes 6.

[12518] ● Statement of accused recorded under Section 313, CrPC—Use of.—"The law is 'That burden of proving Exception I to Section 300, IPC, as on the accused. But the mere fact that accused adopted another alternative defence during his examination under S. 313 of the IPC without referring to Exception No. 1 of S. 300 of the IPC is not enough to deny him of the benefit of the Exception, if the Court can cull out materials from evidence pointing to the existence of circumstances leading to that exception. It is not the law that failure to set up such a defence would foreclose the right to rely on the exception once and for all. It is axiomatic that burden on the accused to prove any fact can be discharged either through defence evidence or even through prosecution evidence by showing a preponderance of probability." State of U.P. v. Lakhmi, AIR 1998 SC 1007 (1010) : (1998) 4 SCC 336 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 929 : 1998 CrLJ 1411 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 578 : JT 1998 (1) SC 679.

[12519] ● Defence plea that complainant under influence of liquor—Beaten by villagers.—"From the cross-examination of PW-6, Devi Lal, it appears that the attempt of the defence was to point out that he was in an intoxicated condition on the date of the incident and was beaten by the villagers as he was found teasing women. This suggestion was denied by the witness and there is no other material on the basis of which it can be said that this witness was under influence of liquor and had misbehaved with anyone. He had categorically stated that when he was returning after taking medicine for his mother and was near Sri Ram Mandir, he was attacked by the appellant. Nothing was brought in the cross-examination on the basis of which it can be said that he was not telling the truth. The defence was able to extract only 2 or 3 omissions which are on minor points and do not affect the veracity of this witness. There is evidence to show that there was enough light at the place of incidence. The accused was a known person and, therefore, there was no difficulty in identifying him. As soon as this witness had regained consciousness and was in a position to give a statement, he had named appellant as the person who had given him the knife blows. Even if evidence of his father Hari Singh is discarded on the ground that possibly he could not have seen the actual assault on his son as he had come out of his house after hearing his cries, as contended by the learned Counsel for the appellant, that will not have any effect on the conviction of the appellant as the evidence of Devi Lal is quite sufficient to sustain it. As we find no infirmity in the trial Court's judgment even after reappreciating the evidence, the appellant's conviction deserves to be maintained." Shankar Lal v. State of Haryana, AIR 1998 SC 3271 (3272) : (1998) 6 SCC 239 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 1434 : 1998 CrLJ 4595 : JT 1998 (6) SC 239 : (1998) 3 Crimes 73.

[12520] ● Offences under TADA—Tried separately.—In the present case, the defence was that the appellant was taken into custody by the Police 15 days before the date of incident and that the complaint in that behalf was made to the Panchayat which had passed a resolution protesting against the detention of the appellant. This defence was considered by the Designated Court and was found not acceptable.

There was no reason for the Police to falsely involve the appellant. Moreover, the Designated Court has pointed out that no complaint was made to the Police authorities by the Panchayat regarding alleged unlawful detention of the appellant. In our opinion the Designated Court was justified in not accepting the defence raised by the appellant. Mohinder Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1999 SC 211 (212) : (1998) 7 SCC 390 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 1638 : 1999 CrLJ 263 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 746 : JT 1998 (7) SC 187.

[12521] ● Right of private defence—Determination of aggressor.—"While considering the right of private defence advanced by the appellant, the defence version that deceased and his party had trespassed into Periyanna's house and made a retaliatory attack for the forenoon incident has to be looked at. That version of the appellant had come on official record at 3.00 p.m. when appellant told like that to PW-6, Doctor. We do not think that appellant would have had sufficient time to concoct a false story to tell the Doctor so soon after the incident." Vijayan alias Vijayakumar v. State, AIR 1999 SC 1311 (1314) : (1999) 4 SCC 36 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 505 : 1999 CrLJ 2037 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 211 : JT 1999 (2) SC 322.

[12522] ● Court below not right in relying upon oral dying declaration.—Even though Saroj was cited as a witness in the charge-sheet, the prosecution did not examine her and this witness and Asha Kumari also tried to establish that she had not accompanied them in the car. At the instance of the defence, Saroj (PW-8) was summoned for cross-examination. She clearly stated that while Chandrakanta was being taken to Ranchi she was almost unconscious and she had not said anything to anyone in the car. No evidence was led by the prosecution to show that Chandrakanta was conscious when she had reached Ranchi. The Courts below were therefore not right in relying upon the oral dying declaration stated to have been made to her by Chandrakanta without any independent corroboration. Ramesh Prasad v. State of Bihar, AIR 2000 SC 398 (401) : (1999) 9 SCC 433 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 242 : 2000 CrLJ 503 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 694.

[12523] ● Appellant given three opportunities to produce defence evidence.—In the instant case, three opportunities were given to the appellant to produce defence evidence. The appellant failed to lead any evidence and file list of witnesses. Ultimately the trial Court closed the evidence for defence and posted the case for arguments. Though the appellant was given opportunities to present the defence evidence or to produce the list of defence witnesses and the appellant failed to avail of those opportunities, one more opportunity can be granted to the appellant for examining the defence witnesses if appellant proposes to do so. Selvi J. Jayababthα v. State, JT 2000 (8) SC 202 : (2002) 4 Crimes 230 (SC).

[12524] ● Circumstances surrounding dying declaration clear and convincing.—The circumstances surrounding the dying declaration are clear and convincing which we have found to be corroborated in material particulars. The general criticism of the defence cannot in any way be made basis for discarding the statement which was later on rightly treated as dying declaration of the deceased. Gulam Hussain v. State of Delhi, AIR 2000 SC 2480 : (2000) 7 SCC 254 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1343 (1349) : 2000 CrLJ 3949 : 2002 CrLR (SC) 634.

[12525] ● Accused Director not participating in affairs of company issuing cheque.—In this case, the accused director contends that he was not participating in the affairs of the company which issued the cheques. It is a defence which he can adopt in the prosecution. But merely raising such a contention now is no ground for quashing the prosecution. V.K. Jain v. Union of India, AIR 2000 SC 3609 : (2000) 1 SCC 709 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 302 (302-303) : (2000) 5 SLT 329.

[12526] ● No reason found to disbelieve evidence of prosecutrix.—The accused guilty under S. 376(1), I.P.Code, the Trial Court found no reason to disbelieve the evidence of the prosecutrix. The enmity alleged by the accused for falsely implicating him was rejected in our view correctly on the ground that given the present social ethos in this country, it was improbable that either the girl or her parents would set up such a case.

This was a case rape on a school girl. State of Karnataka v. Manjanna, AIR 2000 SC 2231 : (2000) 6 SCC 188 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1031 (1034) : 2000 CrLJ 3471 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 343.

[12527] ● Passing away of defence counsel in midway of trial.—The unfortunate development took place during trial, i.e., the passing away of the defence Counsel midway of the trial The Counsel who was engaged for defending the appellant, had cross-examined the witnesses but he could not complete the trial because of his death. When the new Counsel took up the matter, he would certainly be under the disadvantage that he could not ascertain from the erstwhile Counsel as to the scheme of the defence strategy which the predeceased Advocate had in mind or as to why he had not put further questions on certain aspects. In such circumstances, if the new Counsel thought to have the material witnesses further examined, the Court could adopt latitude and a liberal view in the interest of justice, particularly when the Court has unbridled powers in the matter as enshrined in S. 311 of the Code, After all the trial is basically for the prisoners and Courts would afford the opportunity to them in the fairest manner possible. We think that the plea of the defence that a further opportunity to put more questions to the three prosecution witnesses can be permitted on account of the unfortunate death of the defence Counsel pendente lite, and a new Counsel has to evolve his defence strategy afresh. The Court shall summon PW-1, PW-2 and PW-3 to be cross examined again on behalf of the accused. Hoffman Andreas v. Inspector of Customs, Amritsar, (2000) 10 SCC 430 : 2000 (4) Crimes 228 : JT 2000 (8) SC 155 : (2000) 7 Supreme 489 : (2000) 7 SLT 143.

[12528] ● Purpose of furnishing list of witnesses and document to Court.—The purpose of furnishing a list of witnesses and documents to the Court, before the accused is called upon to enter on his defence, is to afford an occasion to the Court to peruse the list. On such perusal, if the Court feels that examination of at least some of the persons mentioned in the list is quite unnecessary to prove the defence plea and the time which would be needed for completing the examination of such witnesses would only result in procrastination, it is the duty of the Court to short list such witnesses. We may also add that if the Court feels that the list is intended only to delay the proceedings, the Court is well within its powers to disallow even the whole of it. Arivazhagan v. State, AIR 2000 SC 1198 (1202) : (2000) 3 SCC 328 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 638 : 2000 CrLJ 1714 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 401.

[12529] ● Demand of illegal gratification.—The appellant was working as Assistant in the office of the Tehsildar. The appellant demanded illegal gratification for mutation of names in the Revenue record. It was argued that the appellant had not received any amount by way of illegal gratification and the amount recovered from the appellant was paid by PW-11 for the purchase of mustard oil. We do not find much force in the contention in view of clear and satisfactory evidence adduced by the prosecution that PW-11 had visited the appellant or 24-2-82 and that he had submitted 11 applications. It is pertinent to note that alongwith the money recovered from the appellant, the eight mutation applications were also found to be in possession of the appellant. The three applications, which were filed earlier, were also found in the office of the appellant. The defence plea set up by the appellant is highly improbable. Even according to the appellant himself, he was not having good relationship with PW-11. The appellant could not give any other satisfactory explanation for having received Rs. 48 from PW-11. The Courts below have rightly held that the appellant accepted the tainted money as illegal gratification. Biranchi Narayan Mohanty v. State of Orissa, (2001) 9 SCC 288 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 562 : 2001 CrLJ 720 : 2001 CrLR (SC) 96 : (2000) 8 Supreme 489 : (2001) 1 Crimes 77.

[12530] ● Accused not required to prove his case beyond reasonable doubt.— Where an accused sets up a defence or offers an explanation, he is not required to prove his defence beyond a reason doubt but only by preponderance of probabilities. M. Abbas v. State of Kerala, 2001 (3) Crimes 110 (SC).

[12531] ● Prosecution not bound to explain injuries found on accused.—The prosecution is not bound to explain injuries found on the accused in all cases. It is to be kept in mind that according to the defence case the occurrence took place when the respondent-Hanuman wanted to use the facility of drawing water from the tube-well when his turn came at 6.00 p.m. on the fateful day, then Panchu assaulted him with a lathi whereafter Hanuman in his defence pushed him and Panchu fell on the ground hitting a stone which resulted in the head injury. It was the further case of the defence that the two ladies PWs-1 and 2 pelted stones on the accused persons causing injuries to them. State of Rajasthan v. Hanuman, AIR 2001 SC 282 (284) : (2000) 1 SCC 337 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 143 : 2001 CrLJ 485 : 2001 CrLR (SC) 1.

[12532] ● Plea of self defence when to be taken.—A plea of self-defence can be taken by introducing such plea in the cross-examination of prosecution witnesses or in the statement of the accused persons recorded under S. 313, CrPC or by adducing defence evidence. And, even if the plea is not introduced in any one of these three modes, still it can be raised during the course of submissions by relying on the probabilities and circumstances obtaining in the case as held in Vijaya Singh case (AIR 1990 SC 1459). It is basic criminal jurisprudence that an accused cannot be compelled to be examined as a witness and no adverse inference can be drawn against the defence merely because an accused person has chosen to abstain from the witness-box. Kashi Ram v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2001 SC 2902 : (2002) 1 SCC 71 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 68 (80) : (2001) 4 Crimes 344 : (2001) 5 SCJ 164.

[12533] ● Evidence tendered by defence witnesses not to be termed tainted one.—Incidentally, be it noted that the evidence tendered by defence witnesses cannot always be termed to be a tainted one—the defence witnesses are entitled to equal treatment and equal respect as that of the prosecution. The issue of credibility and the trustworthiness ought also to be attributed to the defence witnesses at par with that of the prosecution. Rejection of the defence case on the basis of the evidence tendered by defence witness has been effected rather casually by the High Court. State of Haryana v. Ram Singh, AIR 2002 SC 620 (625) : (2002) 2 SCC 426 : 2002 CrLJ 987 : (2002) 1 Crimes 247.

[12534] ● Plea of alibi taken by both accused.—In the instant case the plea of alibi was taken by both the accused. Molai (A-2), has produced a certified copy of the proceeding sheet in criminal case No. 764/92, from the Court of Shri S.K. Srivastava, Ist Class Magistrate. We see no substance in this contention because the other evidence on record has positively established that Molai (A-2) was working in the house of Somvanshi (PW-6) and he was there till Pratibha (PW-3) came from the school at about 12 noon. The incident in question had occurred between 10 a.m. and 11.30 a.m. The proceeding sheet, Ex D-9, produced on record does not even remotely suggest at what point of time Molai (A-2) had gone to the Magistrate's Court. This document in our opinion does not help Molai (A-2) to show even prima faice his absence from the place of occurrence. The defence witness examined on behalf of the accused also does not take the defence case any further. Molai v. State of M.P., AIR 2002 SC 177 (184) : 1999 CrLR (SC) 779.

[12535] ● Evidence of defence witness not to be ignored by Court.—It is true, the evidence of the defence witness is not to be ignored by the Courts. Like any other witness, his evidence has to be tested on the touchstone of reliability, credibility and trustworthiness, particularly when he attempts to resile from and speak against records and in derogation of his earlier conduct and behaviour. If after doing so, the Court finds it to be untruthful, there is no legal bar in discarding it. Banti v. State of M.P., AIR 2004 SC 261 : (2004) 1 SCC 414 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 294 (298) : 2004 CrLJ 372 : (2003) 4 Crimes 415.

[12536] ● Defence of false implication based on alleged motive of complainant—Unacceptable.—The defence of false implication due to alleged incident of the complainant having not been able to purchase some property in competition with the accused party had not taken place in the immediate past. It could not be ground to falsely implicate the accused after such a long period. Such defence plea based on alleged motive of the complainant is also unacceptable when the specific defence taken through deposition of DW-1 was involvement of complainant in the chit fund business and alleged grudge over it with the accused party. State of Maharashtra v. Jagmohan Singh Kuldip Singh Anand, AIR 2004 SC 4412 : (2004) 7 SCC 659 : 2004 CrLJ 4257 : 2004 (3) Crimes 319.

[12537] ● Defence version—Some material required to support defence.—While it is true that burden is heavy on the prosecution to prove every ingredient of the offence, while the defence has only to probabilize the defence taken, there must be some material on record to support the defence plea and probabilize its case. In the instant case the counsel for the accused appellant submitted that the accused-appellant had also received injuries in the course of the occurrence, which remained unexplained by the prosecution. However, there was no evidence on the record to prove that the accused appellant had received any injury. Moreover, there was no suggestion made to PWs that they assaulted the accused appellant as a result of which he had suffered any injury. In the absence of any such suggestion to the prosecution witness, the argument of the counsel for the accused appellants which was not supported by any evidence on the record was not accepted. Nasir Sikandar Shaikh v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2005 SC 9 : (2005) 1 SCC 122 : 2005 CrLJ 2621 (2622) : (2004) 4 Crimes 282.

[12539] ● Summoning or recalling witness.—The power to summon any person as a witness or recall and re-examine any person already examined is the discretionary power of the Court in case such evidence appears to it be essential for a just decision of the case. Under Section 233, Cr.P.C. the accused can enter upon defence and he can apply for the issue of any process for compelling the attendance of any witness in his defence. The provisions of sub-section (3) of Section 233 cannot be understood as compelling the attendance of any prosecution witness examined, cross-examined and discharged to be juxtaposed as DWs. In the presence case PW-8 and PW-9 were juxtaposed as DW-1 and DW-2. This situation is not one what was contemplated by sub-section (3) of Section 233, Cr.P.C.

When such frivolous and vexatious petitions are filed, a Judge is not powerless. He should have used his discretionary power and should have refused relied on the ground that it is made for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice. In the present case, the witnesses were examined by the prosecution as eye-witnesses on 18.12.1990, cross-examined and discharged. Thereafter, an application under Section 311, Cr.P.C. was rejected. They were recalled purportedly in exercise of power under sub-section (3) of Section 233, Cr.P.C. and examined as DW-1 and DW-2 on behalf of the accused on 17.7.1995. This was clearly for the purpose of defeating the ends of justice, which is not permissible under the law.

In the present case, both PW-8 and PW-9 are related to the deceased. PW-8 is the elder brother of the deceased and PW-9 is the friend of the deceased. Being the close relative and friend of the deceased there is no rhyme and reason to depose falsely against the accused and allowing the real culprit to escape unpunished. On 21.9.1989, their statements were recorded under Section 164, Cr.P.C. before the Magistrate. On 18.12.1990, their depositions were recorded before the Sessions Judge. In both the statements they have stated that they were eye-witnesses and witnessed the occurrence. Both of them have stated that they saw the accused assaulting the deceased with knives and swords. They were subjected to lengthy cross-examination but nothing could be elicited to discredit the statement in-chief. Their examination as defence witnesses was recorded on 17.7.1995 when they resiled completely from the previous statements as prosecution witnesses. It, therefore, clearly appears that the subsequent statements as defence witnesses were concocted well as afterthought. They were either won over nor were under threat or intimidation from the accused. No reasonable person, properly instructed in law, would have acted upon such statements. State of Madhya Pradesh v. Badri Yadav, AIR 2006 SC 1769 : (2006) 9 SCC 549 : 2006 CrLJ 2128 (2131, 2132) : 2006 (2) Crimes 82.

[12540] ● Plea of self defence—Burden of proof on accused.—Under Section 105 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872 (in short 'the Evidence Act'), the burden of proof is on the accused, who sets up the plea of self-defence, and, in the absence of proof, it is not possible for the Court to presume the truth of the plea of self-defence. The Court shall presume the absence of such circumstances. It is for the accused to place necessary material on record either by himself adducing positive evidence or by eliciting necessary facts from the witnesses examined for the prosecution. An accused taking the plea of the right of private defence is not necessarily required to call evidence, he can establish his plea by reference to circumstances transpiring from the prosecution evidence itself. The question in such a case would be a question of assessing the true effect of the prosecution evidence, and not a question of the accused discharging any burden. Where the right of private defence is pleaded, the defence must be a reasonable and probable version satisfying the Court that the harm caused by the accused was necessary for either warding off the attack or for forestalling the further reasonable apprehension from the side of the accused. Krishna v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 2007 SC 2452 : (2007) 15 SCC 320 : 2007 CrLJ 3525 : 2007 (7) SCR 1157 : 2007 (3) Crimes 77 (SC).

[12541] ● Insanity of accused—Burden of proof.—Burden of proof rests on an accused to prove his insanity, which arises by virtue of Section 105 and is not so onerous as that upon the prosecution to prove that the accused committed the act with which he is charged. Burden on the accused is no higher than that resting upon a plaintiff or a defendant in a civil proceeding. Bapu v. State of Rajasthan, (2007) 8 SCC 66 : 2007 (3) SCC (Cri) 509 : JT 2007 (9) SC 110.

[12542] ● Duty of prosecution.—Even in cases where burden as on accused, prosecution must prove foundational facts. State of Maharashtra v. Dnyaneshwar Laxman Rao Nankhede, (2009) 15 SCC 200 : 2009 CrLJ 4425 : 2009 (11) SCR 513.

DEFENCE WITNESS
§ (See also "DEFENCE")

[12544] ● Defence witness.—So far as the question as to whether equal treatment being given to the evidence of prosecution and defence witnesses is concerned, there can be no quarrel with the proposition in law. In the present case, it was not that the Courts below glossed over the evidence of defence witnesses. In fact detailed analysis had been made to conclude as to why no importance could be attached to their evidence. After carefully analyzing the prosecution evidence and that tendered by the accused, the Trial Court recorded the conviction. The High Court in appeal made further detailed analysis of the evidence and came to hold that there was no infirmity in the conclusions of the Trial Court. The conclusions were not shown to suffer from any infirmity whatsoever to warrant interference. Anil Sharma v. State of Jharkhand, AIR 2004 SC 2294 : (2004) 5 SCC 679 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 1706 (1713) : 2004 CrLJ 2527 : JT 2004 (1) (Supp) SC 559 : (2004) 2 Crimes 373.

DEFICIENCIES

[12545] ● Deficiencies.—During the course of arguments this Court came across certain deficiencies which crept in the trial proceedings. One is that the deposition of Baburam, PW remained unsigned by him. How it happened is not explained by the counsel. A plea was made that the entire record purported to be the testimony of Baburam should be kept aside on account of that deficiency. Such a course will not be consistent with the principles of criminal justice. Therefore, this Court thinks it more expedient to remit the case to the Trial Court for filling up the said deficiency, for which Baburam has to be re-called and re-examined afresh. Balwinder Singh v. State of Punjab, 2004 SCC (Cri) 461 (461).

DEFILING OR INJURING PLACE OF WORSHIP
(Ss. 295, 296, IPC)

[12546] ● Defiling or injuring place of worship.—The factual matrix of this case may be stated in brief as it would be conducive to proper appreciation of the words "object held sacred by any class of persons". The first accused was the leader of Dravida Khazakam (a community of persons who profess to be religious reformers, one of whose creeds is to carry on propaganda against idol worship), and as such, he was out to "vilify a certain section of the Hindu Community and do propaganda by holding meetings and writing articles. Having announced in a public meeting that he would break the image of Ganesh, the accused bought a clay image from market and in public broke it. This clay image was not consecrated.

"In the first place whether any object is held sacred by any class of persons, must depend upon the evidence in the case, so also the effect of words" with the intention of thereby insulting the religion of any class of persons or with the knowledge that any class of persons is likely to consider such destruction damage or defilement as an insult to their religion. In this case, the facts alleged in the petition, do not appear to have been controverted, but the learned magistrate, as also the learned Sessions Judge and the learned Judge in the High Court, have thrown out the petition of complaint solely on the ground that the image of God Ganesa, treated by the respondents as alleged by the complainant, could not be said to be held sacred by any class of persons. In the instant [illegible] the insult alleged was by destruction of the image of God Ganesa. Apart from the question of evidence which had yet to be adduced, it is a well-known fact that the image of Lord GANESA or any objective representation of a similar kind, is held sacred by certain classes of Hindus, even though the image may not have been consecrated. The learned Judge in the Court below, has given much too restricted a meaning to the words "any object held sacred by any class of persons", by holding that only idols in temples or idols carried in processions on festival occasions, are meant to be included within those words. There are no such express words of limitation in Section 295, IPC and in our opinion the learned Judge has clearly misdirected himself in importing those words of limitation. Idols are only illustrative of those words. A sacred book, like the Bible or the Koran, or the Granth Saheb is clearly within the ambit of those general words. If the Courts below were right in their interpretation of the crucial words in Section 295, the burning or otherwise destroying or defiling such sacred books, will not come within the purview of the penal statute. In our opinion, placing such a restricted interpretation on the words of such general import, is against all established canons of construction. Any object however trivial or destitute of real value in itself, if regarded as sacred by any class of persons would come within the meaning of the penal section. Nor is it absolutely necessary that the object, in order to be held sacred, should have been actually worshipped. An object may be held sacred by a class of persons without being worshipped by them. Veerabhadran Chettiar v. Ramaswami Naicker, AIR 1958 SC 1032 : 1958 CrLJ 1565 : 1959 SCR 1211.

[12547] ● Object to be sacred actually worshipped.—Any object however trivial or destitute of real value in itself, if regarded as sacred by any class of persons would come within the meaning of Section 295, IPC nor is it absolutely necessary that the object in order to be held sacred, should have been actually worshipped. Veerabhadran Chettiar v. Ramaswami Naicker, AIR 1958 SC 1032 : 1958 CrLJ 1565.

[12548] ● Religion—Meaning.—Religion means (1) a system of beliefs or doctrines which are regarded by those who profess that religion as conducive to their spiritual well being; (2) a religion is not merely an opinion, doctrine or belief. It has its outward expression in acts as well; (3) religion need not be theistic; (4) "religious denomination" means a religious sect or body having a common faith and organisation and designated by a distinctive name. S.P. Mitfal v. Union of India, AIR 1983 SC 1 : (1983) 1 SCC 51 : (1983) 1 SCR 729.

DEFINITION

[12549] ● Definition.—While interpreting a definition, it has to be borne in mind that the interpretation placed on it should not only be not repugnant to the context, it should also be such as would aid the achievement of the purpose which is sought to be served by the Act. A construction which would defeat or was likely to defeat the purpose of the Act has to be ignored and not accepted. K.V. Muthu v. Angamuthu Ammal, AIR 1997 SC 626 (631) : (1997) 2 SCC 53 : (1997) 1 SCJ 48.

"DEFRAUD"

[12550] ● "Defraud".—The expression "defraud" involves two elements, namely, deceit and injury to the person deceived. Injury is something other than economic loss and it will include any harm whatever caused to any person in body, mind, reputation or such others. A benefit or advantage to the deceiver will almost always cause loss or detriment to the deceived. Where, therefore, a document is prepared with the intention to deceive and by means of deceit, an advantage is obtained, then there is a fraud and judged from this stand point, the preparation of a forged bail order by the utilisation of which the person concerned obtained an advantage of being released deceiving the Courts and the society at large cannot but be said to have made the document fraudulently, thereby attracting S. 466 of the IPC. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Ranjit Singh, AIR 1999 SC 1201 (1203) : (1999) 2 SCC 617 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 293 : 1999 CrLJ 1830 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 153 : JT 1999 (1) SC 626.

DELAY IN ARREST

[12551] ● Delay in arrest.—If really the name of the assailant was known, there was no reason for his being arrested several days after the occurrence on 5.4.1994. It is not disputed that the accused lived near the house of PW-3, and his house is also very near to the house of the deceased. His address known to all and in fact in the FIR itself his name and address had been disclosed. Despite this he was arrested 10 days later, and it appears from the deposition of the investigating officer that this delay was on account of the fact that the correct address of the appellant was not disclosed by the witness. This explanation is hardly convincing. Counsel for the appellant submitted that in fact even the statement of PW-3 may have been recorded much later but was shown to have been recorded on 26.3.1994. That is why the appellant was arrested many days after the arrest after the occurrence. It is not for the Court to speculate on this aspect of the matter, particularly when at that stage even PW-2 claimed to be an eye-witness, though he turned hostile at the trial. There is serious doubt about PW-3 in remaining silent for a long time, and his failure to disclose the facts to the persons who had gathered near the place where the lay injured, creates a serious doubt about the truthfulness of this witness. Joseph alias Jose v. State of Kerala, 2004 SCC (Cri) 93 (99).

DELAY IN FILING APPEAL AGAINST ACQUITTAL

[12552] ● Delay in filing appeal against acquittal.—The respondent was tried for an offence under Section 376, IPC on the allegation of having committed rape on a minor girl aged about 11 years. The appeal filed against acquittal by the State with a delay of 31 days was dismissed by the High Court on the ground of "inordinate delay". The delay in filing appeal against acquittal was only of 31 days. A perusal of the medical evidence as also the testimony of the prosecutrix, did warrant the High Court to examine the case on merits and not to dismiss it on the ground of delay of 31 days only. Keeping in view the unfortunate rise in crime against women and particularly minor children, the Courts owe an obligation to the society to examine such cases with utmost sensitivity. The order of the High Court dismissing the appeal against acquittal on the ground of inordinate delay cannot be sustained. Therefore this Court remands the matter to the High Court for a fresh disposal in accordance with law. State of Rajasthan v. Madan, 2004 SCC (Cri) 1191 (1192).

DELAY IN FILING COMPLAINT

[12553] ● Two days delay on lodging complaint explained. Where it was only after the effort of PW-1 and another person to get back money failed that PW-1 decided to file the complaint. The delay of two days in lodging the complaint was held properly explained. Rattan Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 1989 SC 1401 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 582 : 1989 CrLJ 1445.

[12554] ● Delay in FIR.—"The learned counsel for the appellants contended that the evidence of PW 1 who is the sole eye-witness in this case cannot be accepted and acted upon since his evidence is highly interested besides being highly artificial. .... As we have pointed out earlier that PW 1 is none other than the son-in-law of the deceased. After witnessing the occurrence he did not go to the villagers, but on the other hand, he went to his village which is said to be at the distance of four furlongs. He states that he informed only his mother-in law (PW-3). PW 1 came with the present version only on the next morning. The conduct of PW-1 in not reporting to any of the villagers about the occurrence throws a considerable doubt on the veracity of his evidence which is incredible. The report about the occurrence was given by a delay of 15 hours. Peddireddy Subbareddi v. State of A.P., AIR 1991 SC 1356 : 1991 CrLJ 1391.

[12555] ● Delay in FIR.—The fact that PW-15 Cheluvamma, the ace-witness of the prosecution, having not disclosed the information at the earliest opportunity to any one till November 10, 1978, though the alleged murder took place on the night of November 8, 1978 has created serious doubts about genuineness of the prosecution case. ...The conduct of PW-8 Madai, PW 14, Javariah and PW-25, Cheluvaraju is so unnatural that it would not be safe to place any reliance on their testimony. No explanation, much less a satisfactory one has been given by the prosecution for their long silence. State of Karnataka v. Venkatesh, AIR 1994 SC 575 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 329 : 1994 CrLJ 602 : (1992) 1 SCC (Supp) 539.

[12556] ● Delay in filing complaint.—The High Court has rightly observed that the private complaint was filed after a long lapse of time. If there was inaction to deal with the information lodged with the Police in October 1983, there was no reason for the complainant to wait for more than one year to approach the Court by making a private complaint. Though, delay per se may not affect the credibility of the complainant's version, each individual case has to be tested to see whether delay has been properly explained. Shakila Abdul Gafar Khan v. Vasant Raghunath Dhoble, AIR 2003 SC 4567 : (2003) 7 SCC 749 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 1918 (1931) : 2003 CrLJ 4548 : (2003) 4 Crimes 420.

[12557] ● Unexplained delay in filing complaint.—There was unexplained delay in filing the complaint inasmuch as according to the prosecution the incident in question took place at about 1.30 p.m. on 4.4.1980 and a complaint was lodged only at 3.15 a.m. on 5.4.1980. Though the distance was about 30 miles from the place of incident, the complainant had the facility of using the tractors available in the village and they did use the same for traveling to the Police Station. In such circumstances the unexplained long delay also created a doubt mind as to the genuineness of the prosecution case. The appellant was entitled to the benefit of doubt. Shankarlal v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 2004 SC 3559 : (2004) 10 SCC 632 : 2004 CrLJ 2874 (2876) : 2004 (3) Crimes 132 (SC).

[12560] ● Delay in FIR.—Merely because the informant and the father of the deceased did not choose to use a tractor to go to the police station, that cannot be a suspicious circumstance. It has only been brought on record that the informant owned a tractor. There is no evidence to show that the tractor was in usable condition. Even if it was in usable condition, the frame of mind of one who had lost his son and the other a close relative, using a tractor to cover a distance of 9 km at that point of time, has been lost sight of by the High Court. It is not unusual for a person to avail public transport facility to go to a police station. Much has been made of not lodging the case at the police post. An explanation has been offered as to why it has not been done. The High Court very lightly brushed it aside. Unfortunately, the High Court came to conclude on surmises and conjectures that the FIR was lodged after deliberation. There was no material to support such a conclusion. State of Punjab v. Phola Singh, 2004 SCC (Cri) 276 (281).

[12561] ● Delay in filing complaint.—There has been some delay in filing the complaint which has been explained by PW-1 mother. The fact that their father was out of station on the date of occurrence was not disputed. In such circumstances, since it is a minor who has been violated the possibility of there being hesitation on the part of mother to lodge a complaint cannot be overruled. Even otherwise the mere factum of delay in filing complaint in regard to an offence of this nature by itself would not be fatal so as to vitiate the prosecution case. The fact that the accused did not suffer any injury on his private part also will not be of much help to him because he was medically examined 4 days after the incident in question. For the reasons stated above we are satisfied that the High Court was in error in taking a view different from that of the Trial Court and acquitting the accused. State of Chhattisgarh v. Derha, (2004) 9 SCC 699 : 2004 CrLJ 2109 : JT 2004 (1) (Supp) SC 189 : (2004) 2 Crimes 446.

[12562] ● Delay in lodging FIR—Explanation for delay not raised before High Court—Effect.—It has been explained by the prosecution as to why there was some delay in lodging the FIR. It has been categorically stated that there was no bus available and, therefore, it could be only done when the bus was available. The question was not raised before the High Court and apart from that, explanation offered appears to be plausible, in the absence of any material to the contrary. Ram Bali v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 2004 SC 2329 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 2045 (2052) : 2004 CrLJ 2490 : JT 2004 (1) (Supp) SC 211 : (2004) 2 Crimes 493.

[12563] ● Delay in lodging FIR—Held explained.—The High Court has doubted veracity of the prosecution case on the ground that there was delay in lodging the first information report. In this regard, it may be stated that during night, the members of prosecution party could not have gone to the Police Station for lodging the first information report as during those days, terrorist activities in the State of Punjab were at its peak. In the first information report, it was specifically stated that the informant could not go to the Police Station to lodge the first information report during the night out of fear of the accused persons. That apart PW-2 has stated in his evidence that accused persons had given out threats to their lives in case the witnesses go to the Police Station for lodging the first information report. On the next morning, PW-2 went to Sarpanch at 5.00 a.m., and as it was raining, they started from the house of Sarpanch at 7.45 a.m. for lodging the first information report at the Police Station while on the way, they met PW-4, the officer-in-charge of the Police Station, who was on patrolling duty and recorded the statement of PW-2 at 9.00 a.m. on the basis of which formal first information report was drawn up at 9.40 a.m. Thus the Court finds was no inordinate delay in lodging the first information report inasmuch as the delay has been duly explained and the High Court was not justified in observing that there was inordinate delay in lodging the same. State of Punjab v. Mela Singh, AIR 2004 SC 257 (260) : (2003) 12 SCC 464 : 2004 CrLJ 368 : (2003) 4 Crimes 412.

[12564] ● Delay in lodging FIR in cases of offences against reputation of women.—It is seen that though there is some delay in lodging the FIR, it is but natural in a traditional bound society to avoid embarrassment, which is inevitable when reputation of a woman is concerned. Delay in every case cannot be a ground to arouse suspicion. It can only be so when the delay is unexplained. In the instant case, the delay has been properly explained. Further, PW-2 is an independent witness and a neighbour of both the accused-appellant and PW-1. There is no reason as to why he would falsely implicate the appellant. Vidyadharan v. State of Kerala, AIR 2004 SC 536 : (2004) 1 SCC 215 : (2004) 1 JCC 133 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 260 (265) : 2004 CrLJ 605.

[12565] ● Delay in lodging FIR.—In the instant case the informant instead of going to police station adopted a circuitous route for the reason that one of the accused was Sarpanch of the village where occurrence took place. Hence it was quite natural that the informant would not be approaching anybody in the said village or adjoining village risking his life. Held, there could be no delay if the FIR was lodged at 6.30 p.m.. State of Punjab v. Hardam Singh, AIR 2003 SC 4343 : (2003) 12 SCC 679 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 834 (838, 839).

[12566] ● Delay in lodging FIR—Place of terrorist activities in Punjab not accepted.—The High Court has observed that there was considerable delay in lodging the first information report. If really the occurrence had taken place as alleged, there was no reason for PW-4 to keep sitting in the village till 7.00 a.m. and only thereafter to start for the Police Station for lodging the report. The plea sought to be urged before this Court, that in those days the terrorists were active in the State of Punjab, is unacceptable in the facts of this case, because PW-4 knew that the assailants were not members of a terrorist group but were members of the family of his brother's wife. State of Punjab v. Ajaib Singh, AIR 2004 SC 2466 : (2005) 9 SCC 94 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 43 (50) : 2004 CrLJ 2547 : (2004) 2 Crimes 459.

[12567] ● Delay in lodging complaint—Unexplained.—The complaint attempted to explain the delay by stating that the matter was reported to the police but the police did not take any action. Such statement can hardly be taken to have explained the delay. It is the simplest of things to contend that the police, though report had been lodged with it, had not taken any steps. But it has to be established by calling for the necessary records from the police to substantiate that in fact a report with the police had been lodged and that the police failed to take up the case. Dilawar Singh v. State of Delhi, (2007) 12 SCC 641 : AIR 2007 SC 3234 : 2007 CrLJ 4709 (4712) : 2007 (3) Crimes 388 (SC).

DELAY IN IDENTIFICATION PARADE
§ (See also "IDENTIFICATION")

[12568] ● Delay in identification parade.—The appellants were arrested on 28th December, 1980 and they were put up for identification in a test identification parade on 4th February, 1981. This Court does not think that this delay can be said to be inordinate in the facts and circumstances of this case. Though it is desirable to hold the test identification parade at the earliest possible opportunity, no hard and fast rule can be laid down in this regard. If the delay is inordinate and there is evidence probabilising the possibility of the accused having been shown to the witnesses, the Court may not act on the basis of such evidence. Moreover, cases where the conviction is based not preferred solely on the basis of identification in Court, but on the basis of other corroborative evidence, such as recovery of looted articles stand on a different footing and the Court has to consider the evidence in its entirety. Lal Singh v. State of U.P., AIR 2004 SC 299 : 2004 CrLJ 378 : (2003) 4 Crimes 482 (SC).

DELAY IN RECORDING STATEMENT OF WITNESS

[12569] ● Delay in recording statement of witness.—In the instant case, the statement the sole eye-witness, aged 7 years, was recorded by the Investigating Officer for the first time three days after the occurrence and her statement was recorded by the Judicial Magistrate six days after the occurrence. The trial Court took the view that since she was under a shock she was not in a position to make a statement and, therefore, the statement was recorded later. Held, the reasoning of the trial Court could not be sustained, in view of the prosecution case that she regained consciousness on 30.8.1996 and thereafter she was fully conscious and also the medical certificate of her fitness. Jagjit Singh v. State of Punjab, 2005 SCC (Cri) 893 (903).

DELAY IN SUBMISSION OF FIR TO MAGISTRATE

§ (See also "FIR")

[12570] ● Delay in submission of FIR to magistrate.—So far as the delay in despatch of the FIR is concerned, it was noted by the High Court that the informant's Fardbayan was recorded at 10.00 a.m. on 22.1.1999. The inquest report was prepared on 22.1.1999 at 19.25 hours. The inquest report was prepared by Executive Magistrate and the case number is also mentioned. That being so, plea that the Fardbayan being ante-timed has not been established. Post-mortem was conducted on 22.1.1999 at 22.00 hours. Above being the position, there can be no grain of doubt that the Fardbayan was recorded on the date of occurrence and filed at the indicated time and the case had been instituted on the basis of the said Fardbayan. Finding recorded by the High Court that Fardbayan was not ante-timed amply supported by evidence on record and no adverse view as claimed by the accused-appellants can be taken. Anil Sharma v. State of Jharkhand, AIR 2004 SC 2294 : (2004) 5 SCC 679 : (2004) 2 JCC 1082 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 1706 (1713) : 2004 CrLJ 2527 : JT 2004 (1) (Supp) SC 559 : (2004) 2 Crimes 373.

[12571] ● Delay in sending complaint.—While it is true that Section 157, CrPC makes it obligatory on the officer in charge of the police station to send the information to the Magistrate's Court forthwith but that does not mean and imply to denounce and discard an otherwise positive and trustworthy evidence on record. The first complaint of missing person although was sent late, in fact, has not moved the investigating agency to real investigation except, informing various other police stations regarding disappearance of Madhu. The complaint which was taken note of was Exhibit P-1 which was sent in due time to the Magistrate. Unless it is found that the evidence led by the prosecution is not reliable, the delay in sending the first complaint would not lead to the inference that the complaint lodged of missing person contained some other facts that may have revealed some other story which is not consistent with the prosecution case. A.N. Venkatesh v. State of Karnataka, 2005 SCC (Cri) 1935 (1941-42).

[12572] ● Delay in despatching Special Report.—The special report dispatched on the night intervening 27.9.1986 and 28.9.1986 reached the Magistrate concerned on 8.10.1986. The Investigating Officer categorically stated that he was not in a position to give any explanation for it. The delay was held fatal. Balam Singh v. State of M.P., 2005 SCC (Cri) 861 (870).

[12573] ● Delay in dispatch of special report to Magistrate.—Information in regard to the incident was lodged on the same day at 8.20 pm. The occurrence had taken place at 4.00 pm on 10.10.1997 and therefore, there does not seem any delay in lodging FIR. Not only this, after FIR was lodged, investigation proceeded, the statement of the witnesses recorded the inquest report sent for post-mortem examination without delay. It is also on record that the special report was sent by post. In the background of the aforesaid facts, mere delay in receipt of Special Report, in no way causes doubt to the case of prosecution. Further more, none of the witnesses including the investigating officer have been cross-examined in this point. Therefore, the case of the prosecution cannot be rejected merely on the ground that there was delay in dispatch of the FIR. Dharamveer v. State of U.P., AIR 2010 SC 1378 : (2010) 4 SCC 469 : 2010 CrLJ 2393 (2397) : (2010) 2 Crimes 31.

DELAY IN TRIAL

[12574] ● Delay in trial.—The extremely excessive delay in the disposal of the case of the appellant would itself be sufficient for imposing a lesser sentence of imprisonment for life under S. 302, IPC. In this case the appellant was committed to trial by the Presidency Magistrate as early as on July 31, 1963, and he was convicted by the Trial Judge on September 4, 1964. It is now January 1971, and the appellant has been for more than six years under the fear of sentence of death. This must have caused him unimaginable mental agony. In our opinion it would be inhuman to make him suffer till the Government decides the matter in a mercy petition. We consider that this is now a fit case for awarding the sentence of life imprisonment. Vivian Rodrick v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1971 SC 1584 : (1971) 1 SCC 468 : 1971 SCC (Cri) 192 (195) : 1971 CrLJ 1171 : (1971) 3 SCR 546 : 1971 UJ (SC) 224 : 1971 CrAppR (SC) 135.

[12575] ● Undue delay in final disposal of criminal cases to defeat purpose of criminal justice.—Undue delay in the final disposal of criminal cases tends, to some extent, to defeat the very purpose of criminal justice. Speedy disposal of criminal cases for commission of offences promotes confidence of the society in the administration of criminal justice which is essential for sustaining the faith of the law abiding members of the society in the effectiveness of the rule of law. It also saves the accused from avoidable harassment inherent in unreasonably prolonged trials and appeal. Mahendra Singh v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1973 SC 2288 : (1974) 3 SCC 409 :

1973 SCC (Cri) 974 (976) : 1973 CrLJ 1450 : 1973 CrLR (SC) 470 : (1974) 1 SCR 62 : 1973 UJ (SC) 666.

[12576] ● Murder—Death sentence—Mitigating factor.—Doubtless, the appellant is under a sentence of death since his conviction on March 20, 1972 by the trial Court. But it is to be noted that after the dismissal of his appeal by the High Court on September 20, 1972, he did not for a period of more than 18 months move this Court. It was only after condonation of this delay that special leave to appeal under Art 136 was granted. In view of extremely heavy load of work with the High Court and this Court, the delay in hearing this appeal cannot be said to be extra-ordinary. Be that as it may, the value of such delay is a mitigating factor depends upon the features of a particular case. It cannot be divorced from the diabolical circumstances of the crime itself, which in the instant case fully justify the award of capital sentence. We, therefore uphold the award of capital sentence. Lajor Masih v. State of U.P., AIR 1976 SC 653 : (1976) 1 SCC 806 : 1976 SCC (Cri) 195 (198) : 1976 CrLJ 580.

[12577] ● Party seeking permission of Court to be represented by private person—Discretion of Court to grant permission.—A private person who is not an advocate has no right to barge into Court and claim to argue for a party. He must get prior permission from Court, for which the motion must come from the party himself. It is open to Court to grant or withhold permission in its discretion. The Court even after grant of permission may withdraw it halfway through if the representative proves himself to be reprehensible. The antecedents, the relationship, the reasons for requisitioning the service of the private person and a variety of other circumstances must be gathered before grant or refusal of the permission. Harishankar Rastogi v. Girdhari Sharma, AIR 1978 SC 1019 : (1977) 3 SCC 179 : 1978 CrLJ 778 : (1977) 2 SCR 511.

[12578] ● Appeal against conviction.—In the instant case the offence was committed in November, 1968 and the conviction by the trial Court in 1970. It will not be justified in sending back the appellants to jail. While, therefore, confirming the conviction of the appellants the period of imprisonment is reduced to the period already undergone and a fine of Rs. 300/- is imposed in addition to the fine of Rs. 200/- already imposed on them by the Courts below. Alam v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1980 SC 1657 : 1980 Supp SCC 694 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 624 (625) : 1980 CrLJ 1248.

[12579] ● Refusal to adjourn case for examination of witnesses of prosecution.—Refusal to adjourn the case for examination of witnesses of the prosecution and closing the prosecution case by the Sessions Judge as he made it clear on the earlier date of hearing, i.e., about one year before, that no further adjournment would be allowed. No witness was present on the adjourned date. The High Court observed that the prosecution took 4 years before the committing Court to examine 3 P.Ws and had taken 15 months to produce 14 witnesses. Order of the Sessions Judge cannot be questioned as wrong or unreasonable and the High Court was perfectly justified in affirming it. State (Delhi Admn.) v. Vishwanath Lugnani, AIR 1981 SC 1239 : 1981 CrLJ 745 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 470 : 1980 UJ (SC) 832 : 1980 CrAppR (SC) 343 : 1981 SCCrR 239 : (1981) 83 PunLR (D) 160.

[12580] ● Economic offences—Quashing of complaint on account of delay not called for.—In case of economic offences where the delay is on account of working of the judicial system due to ever-increasing workload, quashing of proceedings on account of delay is not called for. V.K. Agarwal v. Vasantraj Bhatia, AIR 1988 SC 1106 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 679 : 1988 CrLJ 1106 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 263 : 1988 (2) Crimes 6.

[12581] ● Delay of about 20 years for which Managing Director responsible.—In the instant case, the offence was committed between 1967 and 1969 which is some 20 years back. While we have no sympathy for the respondent No. 2 and we are clearly of the opinion that he has no equity in his favour and the delay after the complaint had been filed has been mostly on account of his mala fide move, we do not think it would be in the interest of justice to allow a prosecution to start 20 years after the offence has been committed. Keeping in view the background of the case, the manner in which the respondent 2 has behaved and the fact that he is squarely responsible for delaying the proceedings by retreating the same contention twice over. We are of the definite view that the respondent 2 should be made to suffer exemplary cost. We accordingly direct the proceedings to be closed on imposition of cost of Rs. 10,000=00. T.J. Stephen v. M/s. Parle Bottling Co. (P) Ltd., AIR 1988 SC 994 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 690 (693) : 1988 CrLJ 1095 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 231.

[12582] ● Rash and negligent driving—Delay of 9-1/2 years for taking cognizance.—In the instant case the offence is of rash and negligent driving. It is, as such, neither a grave and heinous offence nor an offence against the community as such though all criminal offences are crimes against society..... Having regard to the nature of the offence there is enormous delay in proceeding with the criminal prosecution by the appellant — 9-1/2 years for a trial for rash and negligent driving, is too long a time. Quick justice is a sine qua non of Art 21 of the constitution. Keeping a person in suspended animation for 9-1/2 years without any cause at all—and none was indicated before the learned Magistrate or before the High Court or before us — cannot be with the spirit of the procedure established by law. In view of the matter, it is just and fair and in accordance with equity to direct that the trial or prosecution of the appellant to proceed no further. Sriniwas Pal v. Union Territory of Arunachal Pradesh, AIR 1988 SC 1729 : (1988) 4 SCC 36 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 889 (894, 895) : 1988 CrLJ 1803 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 506 : 1988 (2) Crimes 950.

[12583] ● Criminal proceedings pending for more than 10 years.—Though a criminal prosecution is pending against the appellant but no effective progress have been made in the case except filing a challan. It appears to us that the state is not serious in pursuing the criminal proceedings and even otherwise more than 10 years have already elapsed since the alleged commission of the offence. It would be against the interest of justice to continue any criminal proceedings in the case. We therefore, direct to drop the criminal proceedings launched and pending against the appellant. Munshi Ram, Ram Niwas v. Collector, Food and Supplies Department, AIR 1993 SC 1203 : 1991 SCC (Cri) 1037 (1040) : JT 1991 (4) SC 151 : (1991) 2 SCC (Supp) 310.

[12584] ● Undue delay in trial on account of default of prosecution.—Unexplained delay in trial entirely on account of default by prosecution, defeats right of accused to speedy trial. Santosh De v. Archana Guha, AIR 1994 SC 1229 : 1994 Supp (3) SCC 735 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 194 : 1994 CrLJ 1975.

[12585] ● Pendency of criminal proceedings.—The very pendency of criminal proceedings for long periods by itself operates as an engine of oppression. Quite often, the private complainants institute these proceedings out of oblique motives. Even in case of offences punishable for seven years or less with or without fine the prosecutions are kept pending for years and years together in Criminal Courts. It appears essential to issue appropriate directions to protect and effectuate the right to life and liberty of the citizens guaranteed by Article 21 of the Constitution. It is also necessary to ensure that these criminal prosecutions do not operate as engines of oppression. Accordingly, the following directions are made:

(1) (a) Where the offences under Indian Penal Code or any other law for the time being in force for which the accused are charged before any Criminal Court are punishable with imprisonment not exceeding three years with or without fine and if trials for such offences are pending for one year or more and the concerned accused have not been released on bail but are in Jail for a period of six months or more, the concerned Criminal Court shall release the accused on bail or on personal bond to be executed by the accused and subject to such conditions, if any, as may be found necessary, in the light of Section 437 of the Cr.P.Code.

(b) Where the offences under Indian Penal Code or any other law for the time being in force for which the accused are charged before any Criminal Court are punishable with imprisonment not exceeding five years, with or without fine, and if the trials for such offences are pending for two years or more and the concerned accused have not been released on bail but are in Jail for a period of six months or more, the concerned Criminal Court shall release the accused on bail or on personal bond to be executed by the accused and subject to the imposing of suitable conditions, if any, in the light of Section 437, Cr.P.Code.

(c) Where the offences under Indian Penal Code or any other law for the time being in force for which the accused are charged before any Criminal Court are punishable with seven years or less, with or without fine, and if the trials for such offences are pending for two years or more and the concerned accused have not been released on bail but are in Jail for a period of one year or more, the concerned Criminal Court shall release the accused on bail or on personal bond to be executed by the accused and subject to imposing of suitable conditions, if any, in the light of Section 437, Cr.P.Code.

(2) (a) Where criminal proceedings are pending regarding traffic offences in any Criminal Court for more than two years on account of non serving summons to the accused or for any other reason whatsoever, the Court may discharge the accused and close the cases.

(b) Where the cases pending in Criminal Courts for more than two years under Indian Penal Code or any other law for the time being in force are compoundable with permission of the Court and if in such cases trial have still not commenced, the Criminal Court shall, after hearing the Public Prosecutor and other parties representing before it or their Advocates, discharge or acquit the accused, as the case may be, and close such cases.

(c) Where the cases pending in Criminal Courts under Indian Penal Code or any other law for the time being in force pertain to offences which are non-cognizable and bailable and if such pendency is for more than two years and if in such cases trials have still not commenced, the Criminal Court shall discharge or acquit the accused, as the case may be, and close such cases.

(d) Where the cases pending in Criminal Courts under Indian Penal Code or any other law for the time being in force are pending in connection with offences which are punishable with fine only and are not of recurring nature, and if such pendency is for more than one year and if in such cases trial have still not commenced, the Criminal Court shall discharge or acquit the accused, as the case may be, and close such cases.

(e) Where the cases pending in Criminal Courts under Indian Penal Code or any other law for the time being in force are punishable with imprisonment upto one year, with or without fine, and if such pendency is for more than one year and if in such cases trials have still not commenced, the Criminal Court shall discharge or acquit the accused, as the case may be, and close such cases.

(f) Where the cases pending in Criminal Courts under Indian Penal Code or any other law for the time being in force are punishable with imprisonment upto three years, with or without fine, and if such pendency is for more than two years and if in such cases trial have still not commenced, the Criminal Court shall discharge or acquit the accused, as the case may be, and close the cases.

(3) For the purpose of directions contained in Clauses (1) and (2) above, the period of pendency of criminal cases shall be calculated from the date the accused are summoned to appear in the Court.

(4) Directions (1) and (2) made hereinabove shall not apply to cases of offences involving (a) corruption, misappropriation of public funds, cheating, whether under the Indian Penal Code, Prevention of Corruption Act or any other statute; (b) smuggling, foreign exchange violation and offences under the Narcotics Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act; (c) Essential Commodities Act, Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, Acts dealing with environment or any other economic offences; (d) offences under Arms Act, Explosive Substances Act, Terrorist and Disruptive Activities Act; (e) offences relating to the Army, Navy and Air Force; (f) offences against public tranquility; (g) offences relating to public servants; (h) offences relating to coins and Government stamp; (i) offences relating to elections; (j) offences relating to giving false evidence and offences against public justice; (k) any other type of offences against the State; (l) offences under the taxing enactments and (m) offences of defamation as defined in Section 499, I.P.Code.

(5) The Criminal Courts shall try the offences mentioned in Para (4) above on a priority basis.

(6) These directions are applicable not only to the cases pending on this day but also to cases which may be instituted hereafter. As and when a particular case gets covered by one or the other direction mentioned in directions (1) and (2) read with direction (4) above, appropriate orders shall be passed by the concerned Court without any delay. Common Cause, a Registered Society v. Union of India,

AIR 1996 SC 1619 : (1996) 4 SCC 33 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 589.

[12586] ● Guidelines issued by Supreme Court in view of large pendency of cases.—In cases where the trial is for an offence punishable with imprisonment for a period not exceeding seven years, whether the accused is in jail or not, the Court shall close the prosecution evidence on completion of a period of two years from the date of recording the plea of the accused on the charges framed whether the prosecution has examined all the witnesses or not, within the said period and the Court can proceed to the next step provided by law for the trial of the case. (ii) In such cases as mentioned above, if the accused has been in jail for a period of not less than one half of the maximum period of punishment prescribed for the offence, the trial Court shall release the accused on bail forthwith on such conditions as it deems fit. (iii) If the offence under trial is punishable with imprisonment for a period exceeding 7 years, whether the accused is in jail or not, the Court shall close the prosecution evidence on completion of three years from the date of recording the plea of the accused on the charge framed, whether the prosecution has examined all the witnesses or not within the said period and the Court can proceed to the next step provided by law for the trial of the case, unless for very exceptional reasons to be recorded and in the interest of justice the Court considers it necessary to grant further time to the prosecution to adduce evidence beyond the aforesaid time limit. (iv) But if the inability for completing the prosecution within the aforesaid period is attributable to the conduct of the accused in protracting the trial, no Court is obliged to close the prosecution evidence within the aforesaid period in any of the cases covered by clauses (i) to (iii). (v) Where the trial has been stayed by orders of Court or by operation of law such time during which the stay was in force shall be excluded from the aforesaid period for closing prosecution evidence. The above directions will be in addition to and without prejudice to the directions issued by this Court in "Common Cause" v. Union of India, (1996) 4 SCC 33 : 1996 AIR SCW 2279 as modified by the same Bench through the order reported in "Common Cause" a Registered Society v. Union of India, (1996) 6 SCC 75 : (1997 AIR SCW 290). TO THE SAME EFFECT : Raj Deo Sharma v. State of Bihar, AIR 1998 SC 3281 : (1998) 7 SCC 507 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 1692 : 1998 CrLJ 4596 : 1998 (4) Crimes 53 : (1999) 1 SCJ 140.

[12587] ● Undue delay in culminating proceedings—Old ladies murdered in case—Proceedings quashed.—Undue delay in culminating the criminal proceedings is antithesis of the Constitutional protection enshrined in Article 21 of the Constitution. Court, when approached by accused to quash proceedings on the ground of delay, must consider each case on its own facts. Unfortunately, the delay has so permeated in our legal system that at all levels tardiness has become the leitmotif. Such a malady has been judicially reprobated and efforts have been made to curtail the delay which has developed as a systemic canker.

Appellants, divided the post FIR period of the present case into three different stages. First is the period from 1986 to 1990 which is claimed to be the period taken for investigation. Second is from 1990 to 1993, which is said to be the period taken for obtaining sanction of the Government for laying charge-sheet before the Court. Third is the period from 1994 till the date of filing of the writ petition in the High Court in 1997, during which the progress in the Trial Court was slower than creeping through the process and, consequently, no charge could be framed until the appellants filed the writ petition before the High Court.

The only offence alleged against the two senescent lady appellants is that they abetted the public servant to commit the offence under Section 13(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act. For two reasons, proceedings against them are liable to be quashed. First is, the materials are too insufficient to prove that those two old ladies intentionally abetted the public servant in acquiring assets which are disproportionate to his known sources of income. If that is the position, why should those two old ladies be compelled to embark upon a trial which, in all probabilities, cannot end in conviction against them, even assuming that the octogenarian ladies would be able to survive till the end of the trial. Second is, the trial is not likely to end within one or two years. Two lady octogenarians feel that there is not much time ahead of them to complete a trial which is yet to begin, and counting the number of years which the investigation consumed for finalising the charge-sheet, the trial would not be anything less than a long drawn out one.

It would be unfair and unreasonable to compel the two ladies, who by the advancement of old age would possibly have already crossed into geriatric stage, to stand the long trial having no reasonable prospect of ultimate conviction against them. Quash the criminal prosecution so far as those two ladies are concerned. Seeta Hemchandra Shashittal v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2001 SC 1246 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 787 : (2001) 4 SCC 525 : 2001 CrLJ 1242 : 2001 (1) Crimes 248.

[12588] ● Appellant already undergone 8 years R. 9—Interference by Supreme Court.—In a case where the accused-appellant had already undergone eight years', R. 9 out of the total sentence of 10 years R. 9 awarded to him, the Supreme Court directed that hearing of the appeal be expedited. Vijay Singh Chandubha Jadeja v. State of Gujarat, (2005) 12 SCC 574 : (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 634 (636).

[12589] ● Rate of interest—Interference by Supreme Court.—In the present case the accident took place in the year 1988. The Tribunal decided the claim petition on 1990 rewarding compensation along with interest at the rate of 12% per annum. The High Court maintained the rate of interest granted by the Tribunal. The only challenge of the Insurance Co. before the High Court was on the question of rate of interest. The Supreme Court held that "though the petitioner may have on point on the issue of rate of interest in view of the decision of this Court in Kaushnuma Begum v. New India Assurance Co. Ltd., (2001) 2 SCC 9 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 268, but having regard to the facts and circumstances of the case and that the accident took place seven years ago, we are not inclined to interfere with the impugned order in exercise of powers under Art. 136 of the Constitution." National Insurance Co. Ltd. v. Swaroop, AIR 2006 SC 2472 : (2005) 11 SCC 419 : (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 779 (780).

DELEGATION

[12590] ● Delegation.—Central Government's delegation of power is not unconstitutional: An order under Section 3 can be special as well as general and hence, Central Government or the authority to whom power is delegated can issue directions to a particular producer or dealer requiring any specific act to be done or forborne in regard to production, etc. Section 3(2) confers no further or other powers than what are conferred under sub-section (1). Santosh Kr. Jain v. State, AIR 1951 SC 201 : 1952 CrLJ 757 : 1951 SCR 303 : LLR 30 Pat 681 : 6 DLR SC 188 : 64 LW 513 : 1951 Al CrD 362 : 1951 Mad WN (Cri) 98.

[12591] ● Permission to construct Cinema in Greater Bombay granted by Commissioner of Police cancellation of by State Govt.—In the instant case, the action of the commissioner of Police in canceling the permission granted to the respondent for construction of cinema in Greater Bombay at the behest of the State Government was not upheld, as the concerned rules had conferred this power on the Commissioner because of which it was stated that the Commissioner was bound to bear his own independent and unfettered judgment and decide the matter for himself, instead of forwarding an order which another authority had purported to pass. Commissioner of Police v. Gadhandas Bhanji, AIR 1952 SC 16 : 1952 SCR 135 : 1951 SCJ 803.

[12592] ● Legislature not to delegate its function of laying down legislative policy.—The Legislature cannot delegate its function of laying down legislative policy in respect of a measure and its formulation as a rule of conduct. The Legislature must declare the policy of the law and the legal principles which are to control any given cases and must provide a standard to guide the officials or the body in power to execute the law. The essential legislative function consists in the determination or choice of the legislative policy and of formally exacting that policy into binding rule of conduct. The preamble and the body of the sections in the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act sufficiently formulate the legislative policy and the ambit and character of the Act, is such that the details of that policy can only be worked out by delegating them to a subordinate authority within the frame work of that policy. Section 3 of the Act, therefore, does not amount to delegation of legislative power outside the permissible limits. Case law referred. Hari Shankar Bagla v. State of M.P., AIR 1954 SC 465 : 1954 CrLJ 1322 : 1954 SCA 824 : (1955) 1 SCR 380.

[12593] ● Power conferred canalised by clear legislative policy validity.—Where the power conferred is canalised by clear legislative policy, validity of the provision cannot be challenged as excessive delegation. Union of India v. Bhanamal Gulzarimal Ltd., AIR 1960 SC 475 : 1960 CrLJ 664 : 1960 (2) SCR 627.

[12594] ● Detention under defence of India Act—Challenge to.—There is yet another ground on which the validity of the detention may be open to challenge. If a detenue contends that the operative provision of the law under which he is detained suffers from the vice of excessive delegation and is therefore, invalid, the plea thus raised by the detenue cannot at the threshold be said to be barred by the Presidential order. In terms it is not a plea which is relatable to the fundamental rights specified in the order. It is a plea which is independent of the said rights and its validity must be examined. The argument that in conferring power on the Central Government to make rules, the legislature has abdicated its essentially legislative function in favour of the Central Government is wholly tenable. What the legislature is prohibited from doing is to delegate its essentially legislative function and power. If it appears from the relevant provisions of the impugned statute that powers which have been delegated include powers which can legitimately be regarded as essentially legislative powers, then the legislation is bad and it introduces a serious infirmity in the Act itself. On the other hand, if the legislature lays down its legislative policy in clear and unambiguous terms and leaves it to the delegate to execute that policy by means of making appropriate rules, then such delegation is not impermissible. Makhan Singh Tarsikka v. State of Punjab, AIR 1964 SC 381 : (1964) 1 CrLJ 269 (288) : (1964) 4 SCR 797.

[12595] ● Section 3(2)—15(1) of Defence of India Act not suffers from excessive delegation.—In the present case, one has merely to read Section 3(1) Defence of India Act, 1962 and the detailed provisions contained in the several clauses of Section 3(2), Defence of India Act, 1962 to be satisfied that attack against the validity of the said section on the ground of excessive delegation is patently unsustainable. Not only is the legislative policy broadly indicated in the preamble to the Act, but the relevant provisions of the impugned section itself give such detailed and specific guidance to the rule-making authority. The Contention that Section 3(2) (15)(i) of the Act suffers from excessive delegation must be rejected. What we have said about this section applies with equal force to Section 40 of the said Act. Makhan Singh Tarsikka v. State of Punjab, AIR 1964 SC 381 : (1964) 1 CrLJ 269 (288) : (1964) 4 SCR 797.

[12596] ● Rule 30(1) of Defence of India Act—Valid.—Rule 30(1) of the Defence of India Rules must be held to be valid since it is consistent with the operative provisions of the Act and in making it, the Central Government has acted within its delegated authority. Makhan Singh Tarsikka v. State of Punjab, AIR 1964 SC 381 : (1964) 1 CrLJ 269 (288) : (1964) 4 SCR 797.

[12597] ● Section 40 of Defence of India Act confer authority to Central Govt. for delegation of its powers.—It is true that S. 40 of the Defence of India Act gives authority to the Central Government to delegate its powers under the Act or the Rules to the State Government and others. But no delegation under that section is required for the exercise of the power under R. 30 by the State Government, for R. 30 itself lays down that the power therein can be exercised by the Central Government or the State Government. No further delegation, therefore, was necessary in favour of the State Government in so far as the exercise of power under Rule 30 is concerned. Godavari Shamrao Parulekar v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1964 SC 1128 : (1964) 2 CrLJ 222 (229) : (1964) 6 SCR 446.

[12598] ● Power under Section 418(1) Delhi Municipal Corporation Act—Delegation of.—The power under Section 418(i) of the Delhi Municipal Corporation Act, 1957 can be delegated by the Commissioner. The section does not require the names of the particular officers in whose favour the delegation is made to be mentioned. What it requires is to specify the officers to whom the power is delegated. This only means that the designation of the officers to whom the power has been delegated need only be mentioned. We may add that Section 491 of the Delhi Corporation Act permits delegation to any municipal officer or employee, and therefore, specific individual authorisation is not necessary. Kanwar Singh v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1965 SC 871 : 1965 (2) CrLJ 1 : (1965) 1 SCR 7.

[12599] ● Delegation—Connotation.—In Huth v. Clarks (1890) 25 QBD 391, WELLS J. observed at p. 395 "Delegation" as the word is generally used, does not imply parting with powers by the person who grants the delegation, but points rather to the conferring of an authority to do things which otherwise that person would have to do himself." In our opinion in issuing the notification on the State Govt. has not denuded itself of the power to act under R. 30. Godawari S. Parulekar v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1966 SC 1404 : 1966 CrLJ 1067 (1089) : (1966) 3 SCR 314.

[12600] ● Equality of official status with delegate.—Mere equality of official status with a delegate cannot clothe the other officer with delegated powers. Rahubir Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 1974 SC 1516 : (1974) 4 SCC 560 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 596 (600) : 1974 CrLJ 1062 : 1974 CrLR (SC) 430.

[12601] ● Delegation of powers to inspector.—Section 491, Delhi Municipal Corporation Act, 1957 does not require the conferment of the Commissioner's power upon every inspector by name. It is enough if there is a general order, as there is in this case, indicating the class of officers to whom the Commissioner had delegated his powers under any section. Kesho Ram v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1974 SC 1158 : (1974) 4 SCC 509 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 545 (547) : 1974 CrLJ 814 : 1974 CrLR (SC) 439.

[12602] ● Ordinance made by President executive not legislative act.—By clause (a) of Art. 357(1), the Parliament can not only confer on the President the power of State Legislature to make laws but it can even authorise the President to delegate the power so conferred to any authority to be specified by him in that behalf. There cannot be the slightest doubt that not only the power exercised by the president under Article 357(1)(a) but even the power exercised by his delegate under that clause is legislative in character. It is, therefore, not true to say that under our Constitution, the exercise of Legislative power by the Legislature properly so-called is the only source of law. Ordinances issued by the President and Governors and the laws made by the President or his delegate under Art. 357(1)(a) partake fully of legislative character and are made in the exercise of legislative power, within the contemplation of the Constitution.

So it is wrong to say that an Ordinance made by the President is an executive and not a legislative act. A.K. Roy v. Union of India, AIR 1982 SC 710 (721) : (1982) 1 SCC 271 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 152 : 1982 CrLJ 340 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 176.

[12603] ● Section 20 of PFA Act not envisage further delegation of powers by person authorised by Central or State Govt.—The provision contained in Section 20(1) of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954. Act does not contemplate the institution of a prosecution by any person other than those designated. The terms of Section 20(1) do not envisage further delegation of powers by the person authorised, except that such prosecution may be instituted with the written consent of the Central Government or the State Government or the person authorised. The use of the negative words in Section 20(1) "no prosecution for an offence under this Act....... shall be instituted except by or with the written consent of " plainly make the requirements of the section imperative.

Where a power is given to do a certain thing in a certain way, the thing must be doe in that way or not at all. Other modes of performance are necessarily forbidden. The intention of the Legislature in enacting Section 20(1) was to confer a power on the authorities specified therein which power had to be exercised in the manner provided and not otherwise.

The use of words 'in this behalf' in Section 20(1) of the Act shows that the delegation of such power by the Central Government or the State Government by general or special order must be for a specific purpose, to authorise a designated person to institute such prosecutions on their behalf. The terms of Section 20(1) of the Act do not postulate further delegation by the person so authorised; he can only give his consent in writing when he is satisfied that a prima facie case exists in the facts of a particular case and record his reasons for the launching of such prosecution in the public interest. The maxim "delegatus non potest delegare" merely indicates that this is not normally allowable but the Legislature can always provide for sub-delegation of powers. The provision contained in Section 24(2)(e) enables the State Government to frame a rule for delegation of powers and functions under the Act but it clearly does not envisage any sub-delegation. That apart, a rule framed under Section 24(2)(e) can only provide for delegation of minor administrative functions e.g. appointment of Food Inspectors, Food (Health) Authority, etc. In the case of important executive functions like the one contained in Section 20(1) of the Act to authorise launching of prosecutions for an offence under the Act which is in the nature of a safeguard, the Courts may be disposed to construe general powers of delegation restrictively. A.K. Roy v. State of Punjab, AIR 1986 SC 2160 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 443 : 1986 CrLJ 2037 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 456.

[12604] ● State Govt.—Power of—Delegation to Commissioner of Police.—It is obvious from the language of Section 3(2) of the Act that the powers of the State Government under Section 3(1) of the Act can only be delegated to the Commissioner of Police "if the circumstances prevailing or likely to prevail" necessitate the issuing of such an order. The disjunctive word "or" in Section 3(2) of the Act signifies either of the two situations on the basis of which an order under Section 3(2) of the Act can be issued by the State Government. The satisfaction of the State Government for the exercise of the power under sub-section (2) of Section 3 of the Act may be based on circumstances prevailing on the date of the order or likely to prevail at a future date. The power can also be exercised by taking into consideration the circumstances prevailing on the date of the order as well as the circumstances likely to prevail in future. State of Tamil Nadu v. Vela alias Velangani alias Johney, Abdul Samad, AIR 1993 SC 1460 : (1993) 2 SCC 540 : 1993 CrLJ 1653 : 1993 (1) Crimes 1199.

[12605] ● Delegated powers to be exercised by persons on whom conferred.—The Courts are normally rigorous in requiring the power to be exercised by the persons or the bodies authorised by the statutes. It is essential that the delegated power should be exercised by the authority upon whom it is conferred and by no one else. At the same time in the present administrative set up extreme judicial version to delegation cannot be carried to an extreme. A public authority is at liberty to employ agents to exercise its powers. That is why in many statutes, delegation is authorised either expressly or impliedly. Due to the enormous rise in the nature of the activities to be handled by statutory authorities, the maxim delegatus non-potest delegare is not being applied specially when there is question of exercise of administrative discretionary power. By now it is almost settled that the legislature can permit any statutory authority to delegate its power to any other authority of course, after the policy, has been indicated in the statute itself within the frame work of which such delegate is to exercise the power. The real problem or the controversy arises when there is a sub-delegation. It is said that when Parliament has specifically appointed authority to discharge a function, it cannot be readily presumed that it had intended that is delegate should be free to empower another person or body to act in its place. Salini Silk Mills (P) Ltd. v. E.S.I. Corporation, (1994) 5 SCC 346 : (1995) 2 SLR 81 : 1994 (2) LLJ 1105 : JT 1994 (5) SC 11 : 1995 (2) SLR 81 : 1995 (1) SCJ 36.

[12606] ● Complaint under Section 20 of PFA Act—Institution of.—"A complaint under S. 20 of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954 could be instituted apart from Central or State Government, by a person authorised in that behalf. Such a person who is authorised to institute complaint could, "give his written consent for the prosecution by the Food Inspector", A.K. Roy, Chief Medical Officer, Chandigarh undisputedly, and as is clear from Notification No. 5210-UTF-4-67/9461 issued on 29th April, 1967 by the Chandigarh Administration in exercise of powers conferred by sub-section (1) of S. 20 of the Act was a person authorised to institute a complaint. Therefore, he could give his consent as well for launching of prosecution. In doing so he was neither delegating his power nor acting contrary to S. 20. He was acting within the scope of authority as a person authorised to institute complaint under S. 20(1) of the Act and has been placed at par with other authorities designated in the sub-section for purposes of granting consent." Food Inspector, Health Deptt., U.T. Chandigarh v. Krishna Dhaba, AIR 1994 SC 664 (665) : 1995 SCC (Cri) 172 : 1994 CrLJ 624.

[12607] ● Maxim "delegatus non-protest delegare"—Invocation of.—The maxim "delegatus non-protest delegare" was originally invoked in the context of delegation of judicial powers saying that in the entire process of adjudication, a judge must act personally except in so for as he is expressly absolved from his duty by a statute. The basic principle behind the aforesaid maxim is that "a discretion conferred by statute is prima facie intended to be exercised by the authority on which the statute has conferred it and by no other authority. This intention may, however, be negatived by any contrary indication found in the language, scope or object of the statute." Sahni Silk Mils (P) Ltd. v. ESI Corporation, (1994) 5 SCC 346 : 1994 SCC (L&S) 1096 : (1995) 2 SLR 81 : (1994) 2 LLJ 1105.

[12608] ● Recording of information under TADA—Grant of approval by DSP.—The case against the appellants originally was registered under the Arms Act. The DSP. did not give any prior approval on his own to record any information about the commission of an offence under TADA on the contrary he made a report to the Additional Chief Secretary and asked for permission to proceed under TADA. This is a case of power conferred upon one authority being really excused by another. If a statutory authority has been vested without jurisdiction he has to exercise it according to its own discretion. If the discretion is exercised under the direction or in compliance with some higher authorities instructions, then it will be a case of failure to exercise discretion altogether. In other words, the discretion vested in the DSP in this case by Section 20A(1), TADA Act, 1987 was not exercised at all by DSP. The present case was thus a clear case of exercise of power on the basis of external direction. Anirudh Singhji Karan Singhji Jadeja v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1995 SC 2390 (2393) : (1995) 5 SCC 302 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 902 : 1995 CrLJ 4154 : (1995) 3 Crimes 518.

[12609] ● Delegation of powers under Section 34 Industrial Disputes Act, 1947.—If the powers under Section 34 of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947 have been delegated under Section 39 of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, the delegatee can file the complaint himself or authorise someone else to file it. The words "or under the authority of" necessarily must be given due meaning and the meaning is that the appropriate Government may authorise someone other than itself, even a non-Government servant, to file a complaint under Section 34 of the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947. Raj Kumar Gupta v. Lt. Governor, Delhi, AIR 1997 SC 2680 : (1997) 1 SCC 556 : JT 1996 (10) SC 559.

[12610] ● Consent for prosecution under Section 7 of Explosive Substances Act, 1908.—In the instant case the consent for the prosecution of the respondent was granted by the Additional District Magistrate of the district concerned and, in this behalf, reliance was placed, on behalf of the appellant, upon a notification dated 24th

April, 1995 issued by the appellant whereunder it appointed the Joint Collector and Executive Magistrate as Additional District Magistrate for the District of Gwalior and directed that he should "exercise powers of District Magistrate conferred under the said Code (Criminal Procedure Code) or under any other law for the time being in force."

Power of giving consent rests with the Central Government. The Central Government has delegated it to the District Magistrate. It is not competent for the State Government to further delegate to the Additional District Magistrate a power of the Central Government which the Central Government has delegated to the District Magistrate. State of Madhya Pradesh v. Bhupendra Singh, AIR 2000 SC 679 : (2000) 1 SCC 555 : 2000 CrLJ 805 : JT 2000 (1) SC 82.

DELHI POLICE ACT

[12611] ● Delhi Police Act.—Therefore, Ss. 47 and 50 have to be read strictly. Any police apprehension is not enough. Some ground or other is not adequate. There must be a clear and present danger based upon credible material which makes the movements and acts of the person in question alarming or dangerous or fraught with violence. Likwise, there must be sufficient reason to believe that the person proceeded against is so desperate an dangerous that his mere presence in Delhi or any part thereof is hazardous to the community and its safety. We are clear that the easy possibility of abuse of this power to the detriment of the fundamental freedoms of the citizen persuades us to insist that a stringent test must be applied. We are further clear that natural justice must be fairly complied with and vague allegations and secret hearings are gross violations of Articles 14, 19 and 21 of the Constitution as expounded by this Court in Maneka Gandhi, (1978) 1 SCC 918 : AIR 1978 SC 597. Prem Chand v. Union of India, AIR 1981 SC 613 : (1981) 1 SCC 639 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 239 : 1981 CrLJ 5 : 1981 UJ 27.

[12612] ● Externment and surveillance—Vague allegations and secret hearing not permissible—Use of stock witnesses deprecated.—The Petitioner in the year 1965, when he was 25 year old was involved in a gambling case by the police and to mould him a permanent stock witness and lest he should be militant to defy them. Despite his hesitation and unwillingness he was forced to become a permanent pawn of the police. This is how, the petitioner landed himself in the web of the police, he had no alternative than to be like that as his livelihood was dependent upon the mercy and indulgence of the police. The version of the petitioner is that once he yielded to the pressure of the Police to give false testimony disclosing a rubberised conscience and unveracious readiness to forswear himself, there was escalation of demands upon him and he became a regular peddler of perjury "on police service. Indeed, counsel for the petitioner arranged that his client was a stockwitness because he had to keep the Police in good humour and obliged them with tailored testimony in around 3,000 cases because the alternative was police wrath. We are flabbergasted at this bizarre confession but to lend credence to his assertion counsel produced a few hundred summonses where the petitioner was cited as a witness. Were he not omnipresent how could he testify in so many cases save by a versatile genius for loyal unveracity? For sure, the consternation of the community at this flood of perjury will shake its faith in the veracity of Police investigation and the validity of the judicial verdict. We have no doubt that the petitioner, who has given particulars of a large number of cases where he had been cited as witness, is speaking the truth even assuming that 3,000 cases may be an exaggeration. In Justice, Justices and Justicing and likewise in the Police and Policing, the Peril to the judicial process is best left to imagination if professional perjurers like the self-confessed Paniwala are kept captive by the Police, to be pressed into service for proving "cases". Courts, trusting the Police may act on apparently veracious testimony and sentence people into prison. The community, satisfied with such convictions, may well believe that all is well with law and order. We condemn, in the strongest terms, the systematic pollution of the judicial process and the consequent threat to human rights of innocent persons. We hope that the higher authorities in the Department who, apparently, are not aware of the nefarious goings-on at the lesser levels will immediately take measures to stamp out this unscrupulous menace. Prem Chand v. Union of India, AIR 1981 SC 613 : (1981) 1 SCC 639 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 239 : 1981 UJ 27 : 1981 CrLJ 5.

[12613] ● Malicious prosecution suit against member of Delhi Police, Limitation.—Since the Act is a special law which prescribes a period of limitation different from the period prescribed in the Schedule to the Limitation Act for suits against persons governed by the Act in relation to matters covered by Section 140, by virtue of Section 29(2) of the Limitation Act, the period of limitation prescribed by Section 140 of the Act would be the period of limitation prescribed for such suits and not the period prescribed in the Schedule to the Limitation Act. This means that if the suit filed by the appellant falls within the ambit of Section 140 then the period of limitation for institution of the suit would be that prescribed in Section 140 and not the period prescribed in Article 74 of the Limitation Act. Having regard to the period laid down in this Court decisions on the present case falls within the ambit of Section 140 of the Act. What is alleged against respondents Nos. 3 and 4 by the appellant in the plaint is that respondent No. 4, who was in charge of Mayapuri police post had registered a false, vexatious and malicious report against the appellant, and respondent No. 3, who was Station House Officer, P.S. Naraina, had filed the challan in the Court against appellant and other accused on the basis of the said report ... Similarly in the present. It was the duty of respondent No. 4 being incharge of Police Post Mayapuri, to record the report and so also it was the duty of respondent No. 3 the SHO of P.S. Naraina to file the challan in Court. The acts complained thus had a reasonable connection and nexus with the duties attached to the offices held by respondents Nos. 3 and 4 The acts complained of were, therefore, done under the colour of office of the said respondents and fell within the ambit of Section 140(1) of the Act. It is not disputed that if Section 140(1) is found applicable to the suit filed by the appellant, as against the respondents, was barred by limitation having been filed after the expiry of three months and it could not be entertained against them. Sumer Chand v. Union of India, AIR 1993 SC 2579 : (1994) 1 SCC 64 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 99 : (1993) 2 UJ 599 : 1993 CrLJ 3531.

[12614] ● Externment order, Sections 47, 51, Delhi Police Act.—It is true that some material must exist but what is required is not an elaborate decision akin to a judgment. On the contrary the order directing externment should show existence of some material warranting an order of externment. While dealing with question mere repetition of the provision would not be sufficient. Reference to be made to some material on record and if that is done the requirements of law are met. It is not the sufficiency of material but the existence of material which is sine qua non.

The satisfaction of the authority can be interfered with if the satisfaction recorded is demonstratively perverse based on no evidence, misreading of evidence or which a reasonable man could not form or that the persons concerned was not given due opportunity resulting in prejudice. To that extent, objectivity is inbuilt in the subjective satisfaction of the authority.

The material justifying extrenment can also throw light on options to be exercised. If referring to the materials, the authority directing externment also indicates the option he thinks to be proper and appropriate it cannot be said to be vitiated even though there is no specific reference to the other options. It is a matter of legitimate inference that when considering materials to adjudicate on the question of desirability for externment, options are also considered and one of the three options can be adopted. There cannot be any hair-splitting in such matters. A little play in the joints is certainly permissible while dealing with such matters. All the relevant aspects were considered and High Court was justified in holding to the contrary and quashing the externment order. State of N.C.T. of Delhi v. Sanjeev, AIR 2005 SC 2080 : (2005) 5 SCC 181 : 2005 CrLJ 2179 (2186) : 2005 (2) Crimes 70.

[12615] ● Scope of Section 140, Delhi Police Act.—By jumping road divider and coming-face on the incoming traffic was the factor which had caused the accident and was clearly not a matter within the colour of duty. Therefore, the case was not covered by Section 140. Paul George v. State of NCT of Delhi, (2008) 4 SCC 185 : 2008 (2) SCC (Cri) 768 : JT 2008 (3) SC 545 : 2008 (4) SCR 1208.

[12616] ● "Under the colour of duty".—While on his way by Police vehicle for a task officially entrusted to him a Head Constable suddenly went over the road divider and hit the scooter resulting into death of one person, and injuries to the other. It was held that by virtue of Section 140, any action against a wrongful act by a police officer done under the colour of duty, has to be initiated within three months from the date of the act complained off and if this time limit is exceeded, it would bar the suit or prosecution. Paul George v. State of N.C.T. of Delhi, (2008) 4 SCC 185 : 2008 (2) SCC (Cri) 768 : 2008 (4) SCR 1208 : JT 2008 (3) 545.

SYNOPSIS

1. Section 1(2) 2581
2. Section 3 2582
3. Section 5 2584

Under Section 2 of the Act, the Central Government may constitute a special police force, called the Delhi Special Police Establishment, for investigation of certain offences or class of offences as notified under Section 3 of the Delhi Act. Under Section 4 of the Act the superintendence of the Delhi Special Police Establishment vests in the Central Government and administration of the Special Police Establishment vests in an officer appointed by the Central Government who exercises powers exercisable by an Inspector General of Police as the Central Government may specify. Under Section 5 the powers and the jurisdiction of the Establishment can be extended by the Central Government to other areas in a State although not a Union Territory. Once there is an extension of the powers and jurisdiction of the members of the Establishment, the members thereof while discharging such functions are deemed to be members of the police force of the area and are vested with the powers, functions and privileges and are subject to the liabilities of a police officer belonging to that force. The police officer also subject to the orders of the Central Government exercises the powers of the officer-in-charge of a police station in the extended area. Under Section 6 consent of the State Government is necessary to enable the officer of the Establishment to exercise powers and jurisdiction in any area in the State not being a Union territory or railway area. Investigation under the Delhi Act, is, therefore, a central investigation and the officers concerned are under the superintendence of the officer appointed by the Central Government. The superintendence of the Establishment is also under the Central Government. The Central Government, therefore, is concerned with the investigation of the cases by the Establishment and its ultimate result. It is in that back-ground that in 1955, Section 417 was amended by adding sub-section (2) to the section to provide for appeal against acquittal in cases investigated by the Establishment also on the direction of the Central Government. In view of the provisions of the Delhi Act it was necessary to introduce sub-section (2) in Section 417 so that this Central agency which is solely and intimately connected with the investigation of the specified offences may also approach the Central Government for direction to appeal in appropriate cases. This, however, does not bar the jurisdiction of the State Government also to direct presentation of appeals when it is moved by the Establishment. The Establishment can move either the Central Government or the State Government. It will be purely a matter of procedure whether it moves the State Government directly or through the Central Government or in a given case moves the Central Government alone. It will again be a matter of procedure when the Central Government decides to appeal it requests the State Government to do the needful through the Public Prosecutor appointed under the Code. The word 'also' in sub-section (2) of Section 417 is very significant. This word seems not to bar the jurisdiction of the State Government to direct the Public Prosecutor to present an appeal even in cases investigated by the Establishment. Sub-section (1) of Section 417 is in general terms and would take in its purview all types of cases since the expression used in that sub-section is "in any case". Khemraj v. State of M.P., AIR 1976 SC 173 : (1976) 1 SCC 385 : 1976 SCC (Cri) 3 : 1976 CrLJ 192 : 1976 CrLR (SC) 37 : 1976 UJ 74 : (1976) 2 SCR 753.

1. SECTION 1(2)

[12618] ● Section 1(2).—When the Extension Act was passed, Parliament had the competence to extend the impugned Act to the State of Jammu and Kashmir because the Delhi Special Police Establishment was a police force belonging to a Part 'C' State. The contention of the learned counsel that because Parliament could not extend the powers and jurisdiction of members of the Delhi Special Police Force after November 1, 1956, assuming it to be correct, does not invalidate the powers exercised earlier. When the Extension Act was passed there is no doubt that the Parliament had the power. The fact that the Parliament ceased to have power, as from November 1, 1956, does not make any difference. Although legislative power may not exist to legislate on the subject of existing laws executive power would be exercised under the laws saved by Article 277 and Article 372. No authority has been cited in support of the contention that executive power to execute a valid law ceases to exist if power to make that law has been transferred to another authority or ceases to exist.

The impugned legislation is a law with respect to entry 80, even if there is repugnancy it must override any laws repugnant thereto in Jammu and Kashmir, Article 246.

There is nothing is sub-section (2) of Section 1 which makes it obligatory that the notification should issue simultaneously with the date of the coming into force of the Act. On the contrary, notification must ordinarily issue earlier than the date of the coming into force of the Law. It seems to us clear that the notification could have been issued any time after the President had given his assent, and as soon as the notification was issued Section 2 came into effect and all the Acts and Ordinance mentioned in the Schedule, stood automatically extended and came into force. Ishwar Das Malhotra v. Union of India, AIR 1972 SC 1193 : (1972) 1 SCC 646 : 1972 SCC (Cri) 375 : 1972 CrLJ 751.

[12619] ● Scope of Section 2.—Section 2 empowers the Central Government to constitute a special force. Indisputably, the first respondent has been constituted in terms thereof. Sub-section (2) of Section 2 provides that subject to any orders which the Central Government may make in this behalf, members of the said police establishment shall have throughout any Union Territory in relation to the investigation of such offences and arrest of persons concerned in such offences, all the powers, duties, privileges and liabilities which police officers of that Union territory have in connection with the investigation of offences committed therein. The said Act indisputably applies in regard to charges of corruption made against the employees of Union of India. It is also not disputed that the C.B.I. Manual was made by the Central Government providing for detailed procedure as regards the mode and manner in which complaints against public servants are to be dealt with. Shashikant v. Central Bureau of Investigation, AIR 2007 SC 351 : (2007) 1 SCC 630 : JT 2006 (9) 603 : 2006 (11) Scale 272 : 2006 (8) Supreme 564.

[12620] ● Extradition Treaty.—Power is exercised by the CBI or a police officer to arrest a person, although no warrant is issued in terms of Section 4(1)(g) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It presupposes satisfaction of a Police officer to arrest a person, if he has been concerned in, or against whom a reasonable complaint has been made, or credible information has been received in, any act committed at any place out of India, which, if committed in India, would have been punishable as an offence, and for which he is, under any law relating to extradition or otherwise, liable to be apprehended or detained in India.

Any action taken by the Union of India through the Ministry of External Affairs or the C.B.I., on the request of INTERPOL, is Executive Power as contained in Article 73 of the Constitution. We have noticed hereto before the relevant entries in the Legislative List being Entry Nos. 8, 10 to 14 and 18 of List-1 of the Seventh Schedule of the Constitution. We may also notice that in regard to the matter relating to criminal law the Concurrent List provides therefor in Entry Nos. 1 and 2. Bhavesh Jayanti Lakhani v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 9 SCC 551 : JT 2009 (11) SC 279.

[12621] ● Section 3.—There can be no doubt that the overall administration of the said force, i.e. CBI vests in the Central Government, which also includes, by virtue of Section 3, the power of specify the offences or class of offences which are to be investigated by it. The general superintendence over the functioning of the Department and specification of the offences which are to be investigated by the agency is not the same as and would not include within it the control of the initiation and the actual process of investigation, i.e., direction. Once the CBI is empowered to investigate an offence generally by its specification under Section 3, the process of investigation, including its initiation, is to be governed by the statutory provisions which provide for the initiation and manner of investigation of the offence. This is not an area which can be included within the meaning of "superintendence" in Section 4(1). The word "superintendence" in Section 4(1) cannot be construed in a wider sense to permit supervision of the actual investigation of an offence by the CBI contrary to the manner provided by the statutory provisions. The broad proposition urged on behalf of the Union of India that it can issue any directive to the CBI to curtail or inhibit its jurisdiction to investigate an offence specified in the notification issued under Section 3 by a directive under Section 4(1) of the Act cannot be accepted. The jurisdiction of the CBI to investigate an offence is to be determined with reference to the notification issued under Section 3 and not by any separate order not having that character. There is no similarity between a mere executive order requiring prior permission or sanction for investigation of the offence and the sanction needed under the statute for prosecution. The requirement of sanction for prosecution being provided in the very statute which enacts the offence, the sanction for prosecution is a prerequisite for the Court to take congnisance of the offence. In the absence of any statutory requirement of prior permission or sanction for investigation, it cannot be imposed as a condition precedent for initiation of the investigation once jurisdiction is conferred on the CBI to investigate the offence by virtue of the notification under Section 3 of the Act. The word "superintendence" in Section 4(1) of the Act in the context must be construed in a manner consistent with the other provisions of the Act and the general statutory powers of investigation which govern investigation even by the CBI. The necessity of previous sanction for prosecution is provided in Section 6 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 (Section 19 of the 1988 Act) without which no Court can take cognizance of an offence punishable under Section 5 of that Act. There is no such previous sanction for investigation provided for either in the Prevention of Corruption Act or the Delhi Special Police Establishment Act or in any other statutory provision. The above is the only manner in which Section 4(1) of the Act can be harmonised with Section 3 and the other statutory provisions. The law does not classify offenders differently for treatment thereunder, including investigation of offences and prosecution for offences, according to their status in life. Every person accused of committing the same offence is to be dealt with in the same manner in accordance with law, which is equal in its application to everyone, The Single Directive is applicable only to certain persons above the specified level who are described as "decision making officers". The question is whether any distinction can be made for them for the purpose of investigation of an offence of which they are accused. Obviously, where the accusation of corruption is based on direct evidence and it does not require any inference to be drawn dependent on the decision making process, there is no rational basis to classify them differently. In other words, if the accusation be of bribery which is supported by direct evidence of acceptance of illegal gratification by them, including trap cases, it is obvious that no other factor is relevant and the level or status of the officer is irrelevant. It is for this reason that it was conceded that such cases, i.e. of bribery, including trap cases, are outside the scope of the Single Directive. There may be other cases where the accusation cannot be supported by direct evidence and is a matter of inference of corruption motive for the decision, with nothing to prove directly any illegal gain to the decision maker. Those are cases in which the inference drawn is that the decision must have been made for a corrupt motive because the decision would not have been reached otherwise by an officer at that level in the hierarchy. This is, therefore, an area where the opinion of persons with requisite expertise in decision making of that kind is relevant and, may be even decisive in reaching the conclusion whether the allegation requires any investigation to be made. In view of the fact that the CBI or the Police force does not have the expertise within its fold for the formation of the requisite opinion in such cases, the need for the inclusion of such a mechanism comprising of experts in the field as a part of the infrastructure of the CBI is obvious, to decide whether the accusation made discloses grounds for a reasonable suspension of the commission of an offence and it requires investigation. In the absence of any such mechanism within the infrastructure of the CBI, comprising of experts in the field who can evaluate the material for the decision to be made, introduction therein of a body of experts having expertise of the kind of business which requires the decision to be made, can be appreciated. But then, the final opinion is to be of the CBI with the aid of that advice and not that of anyone else. It would be more appropriate to have such a body within the infrastructure of the CBI itself.

The Single Directive cannot, therefore, be upheld as valid on the ground of it being permissible in exercise of the power of superintendence of the Central Government under Section 4(1) of the Act. The matter has now to be considered dehors the Single Directive. Vineet Narain v. Union of India, AIR 1998 SC 889 : (1998) 1 SCC 226 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 307 : 1998 CrLJ 1208 : (1998) 1 Crimes 12.

[12622] ● Statutory jurisdiction not to be subject to executive control.—Statutory jurisdiction cannot be subject to executive control. Once the jurisdiction is conferred on CBI under Section 3, of the Act, the investigating powers are governed by statutory provisions which cannot be curtailed by any executive directive. Vineet Narain v. Union of India, AIR 1998 SC 889 : (1998) 1 SCC 226 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 307 : 1998 CrLJ 1208 : (1998) 1 Crimes 12 : 1998 (1) SLT 518.

[12623] ● Power of CBI—CBI acting under Treaty.—CBI has different roles to play. When it acts as NCB, being a department of CBI, it acts under a Treaty. It acts in terms of the Constitution of the INTERPOL. It acts as a authority of the Central Government. By reason of such an act it does not carry out investigation, although it is entitled therefor. It functions as an NCB which is to give effect to the request received from INTERPOL and/or foreign country. When it does so, indisputably it has to apply its mind. It can take any action only because it is lawful to do so. It does not exercise absolute discretion. It has to act if a case therefor has been made out including the question as whether any extraditable offence has been made out. For the aforementioned purpose it does not Act as an agency within the four corners of the DSPE Act. It acts, it will be a repetition to state, has an authority of the Central Government. Bhavesh Jayanti Lakhani v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 9 SCC 551 : JT 2009 (11) SC 279

[12624] ● Authority for making reference for investigation to CBI.—It is, however, now beyond any controversy that the High Court and this Court also direct investigation by the CBI. Our attention has been drawn to the provisions of the CBI Manual, from a perusal whereof it appears that the Director, CBI exercises his power of superintendence in respect of the matters enumerated in Chapter VI of the CBI Manual which includes reference by the State and/or reference by the High Courts and this Court as also the registration thereof. The reference thereof may be received from the following:

"(a) Prime Minister of India

(b) Cabinet Ministers of Government of India/Chief Ministers of State Government or their equivalent

(c) The State Governments

(d) Supreme Court/ High Courts"

The CBI Manual having been framed by the Union of India, evidently, it has accepted that reference for investigation to the CBI may be made either by this Court or by the High Court. Nirmal Singh Kahlon v. State of Punjab, AIR 2009 SC 984 : (2009) 1 SCC 441 : 2009 CrLJ 958.

3. SECTION 5

[12625] ● Section 5.—There is no provision in law under which, while granting consent or extending the powers and jurisdiction of the Delhi Special Police Establishment to the specified state and to any specified case any reasons are required to be recorded on the face of notification. Central Bureau of Investigation v. Rajesh Gandhi, AIR 1997 SC 93 : (1996) 11 SCC 253 : 1997 SCC (Cri) 88 : 1997 CrLJ 63 : 1996 (4) Crimes 104.

[12626] ● Investigation by CBI in Fodder scam—Monitoring by High Court.—For the purpose of properly monitoring the case in terms of the order of this Court, keeping in view the nature of this proceeding and the manner in which the exercise is to be performed to ensure performance of its duty by the C.B.I. guidance through the counsel for the C.B.I. could have been given by the High Court without entering into the merits of any of the accusations. Union of India v. Sushil Kumar Modi, AIR 1997 SC 1672 : (1997) 4 SCC 770 : 1997 CrLJ 1168 : (1997) 2 Supreme 108.

[12627] ● In case of difference of opinion during investigation—Final decision not to be taken by Director CBI but by Attorney General.—In the case of difference of opinion at any stage during the investigation, the final decision is not to be taken by the Director, C.B.I. or any other officer but by the Attorney General on reference being made to him of the difference of opinion between the concerned officers. The High Court is only required to ensure that the Director, C.B.I. does not close any investigation based only upon his individual opinion if there be any difference of opinion between him and the concerned officers in the C.B.I. Such a matter is then required to be referred by the Director to the Attorney General for his opinion which would govern the further action to be taken therein. Union of India v. Sushil Kumar Modi, AIR 1997 SC 314 : (1996) 6 SCC 500 : 1997 CrLJ 1168 : JT 1996 (10) SC 23 : 1997 (1) UJ 331.

[12628] ● Personal presence of Director CBI in High Court required when essential.—"It is sufficient for us to observe that the High Court would take into account the fact that the personal presence of the Director C.B.I. in the High Court may be required only when it is essential for a purpose which cannot be served by the presence of the other officers of the C.B.I. who normally represent the C.B.I. at the hearing in the High Court. In view of the numerous cases pending in different High Courts, the Director, C.B.I. personally may not be left with sufficient time from his official duties to appear personally at the hearings of these matters in the High Courts. However, it is the duty of the Director, C.B.I. to ensure proper representation on his behalf in the High Court so that the High Court gets all the assistance needed at the hearings". Union of India v. Sushil Kumar Modi, AIR 1997 SC 314 : (1996) 6 SCC 500 : 1997 CrLJ 1168 (SC) : JT 1996 (10) SC 23.

[12629] ● Powers and jurisdiction of Central Government to extend jurisdiction of Special Police Establishment.—Section 5 of the Special Police Act empowers the Central Government to extend the powers and jurisdiction of the Special Police Establishment to any area in a State, not being a under territory for the investigation of any offences specified on the notification under Section 3. When, the Special Police Act itself provides that subject to the consent by the State, the CBI can take up investigation in relation to the crime which was otherwise within the jurisdiction of the State Police, the Court can also exercise its constitutional power of judicial review and direct the CBI to take up the investigation within the jurisdiction of the State. The power of the High Court under Art. 226 of the Constitution cannot be taken away, curtailed or diluted by Section 6 of the Delhi Special Police Act. Irrespective of there being any statutory provision acting as a restriction on the powers of the Courts, the restrictions imposed by Section 6 on the powers of union cannot be read as restriction on the powers of the constitutional Court. State of West Bengal v. Committee for Protection of Democratic Rights, West Bengal, AIR 2010 SC 1476 : (2010) 3 SCC 571.

[12630] ● Section 6.—As regards jurisdiction of the members of the Delhi Police Establishment, we do not think the procedure under Section 6 need be followed where this Court exercised jurisdiction under Art. 142 of the Constitution. Maniyeri Madhavan v. Sub Inspector of Police, AIR 1994 SC 1033 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 442 : 1994 CrLJ 3063 : 1993 (3) Crimes 550 (SC).

[12631] ● Supreme Court directing CBI to make investigation—Procedure under Section 6 of Delhi Special Police Establishment Act not followed.—Supreme Court has given careful consideration to the above submissions and thinks that it cannot come to the rescue of the police officer. Whether they are guilty or not of the offences for which they are charged is a matter to be established in a criminal trial. Therefore, it remains from making any observation. As regards jurisdiction of the members of the Delhi Special Police Establishment, Supreme Court thought the procedure under Section 6 need be followed where this Court exercised jurisdiction under Article 142 of the Constitution. The Supreme Court of India in their order dated 24-9-1992 has directed the Central Bureau of Investigation to Investigate the complaint of 'M', editor Sudinam Daily, Kannur against the attacks made on him and his property allegedly at the investigation of certain police officers of the State of Kerala and to submit a report within four months, hence this notification. All that Supreme Court has to do is merely recorded in the report and let the law take its course. The special leave petition was ordered on the above terms. Maniyari Madhavan v. Sub-Inspector of Police, AIR 1994 SC 1033 : 1994 (1) SCC 536 : JT 1996 (10) SC 23 : (1993) 3 Crimes 550.

[12632] ● Subsequent withdrawal of consent by State Govt. for further investigation by state Police—Permissibility.—To put it differently, if any further investigation is to be made it is the C.B.I. alone which can do so, for it was entrusted to investigate into the case by the State Government. Resultantly, the notification issued withdrawing the consent to enable the State Police to further investigate into the case is patently invalid and unsustainable in law. K. Chandrashekhar v. State of Kerala, AIR 1998 SC 2001 : (1998) 5 SCC 223 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 1291 : 1998 CrLJ 2897 (2905) : (1998) 2 Crimes 300.

[12633] ● "Further"—Meaning.—The question that falls for our determination is altogether different: and that when the investigation into an offence transferred and entrusted to C.B.I. for investigation pursuant to consent given under Section 6 of the Delhi Establishment Act, 1946 and the C.B.I. has not only started but completed the investigation armed with that consent and submitted its report under Section 173(2) of the Code of Criminal Procedure can the State Government withdraw its consent and, if so, what is the effect thereof. That the Government of Kerala was conscious of this position is evident from the fact that though initially it stated in the Explanatory Note of their notification dated June 27, 1996 (quoted earlier) that the consent was being withdrawn in public interest to order a 're-investigation' of the case by a special team of State police officer, in the amendatory notification (quoted earlier) it made it clear that they wanted a 'further investigation of the case' instead of ' re-investigation of the case'. The dictionary meaning of 'further' (when used as an adjective) is 'additional', more supplemental. 'Further' investigation therefore is the continuation of the earlier investigation and not a fresh investigation or reinvestigation to be started ab initio wiping out the earlier investigation altogether. In drawing this conclusion we have also drawn inspiration from the fact that sub-section (8) clearly envisages that on completion of further investigation the investigating agency has to forward to the Magistrate a 'further' report or reports— and not fresh report or reports—regarding the 'further' evidence obtained during such investigation. Once it is accepted—and it has got to be accepted in view of the judgment in Kazi Lhendup Dorji, (1994 AIR SCW 2190) (supra) that an investigation undertaken by CBI pursuant to a consent granted under Section 6 of the Act is to be completed, notwithstanding withdrawal of the consent, and that 'further investigation' is a continuation of such investigation which culminates in a further police report under sub-section (8) of Section 173, it necessarily means that withdrawal of consent in the instant case would not entitle the State police, to further investigate into the case. To put it differently, if any further investigation is to be made it is the C.B.I. alone which can do so, for it was entrusted to investigate into the case by the State Government. Resultantly, the notification issued withdrawing the consent to enable the State Police to further investigate into the case is patently invalid and unsustainable in law. In view of this finding of ours we need not go into the questions, whether Section 21 of the General Clauses Act applies to the consent given under Section 6 of the Act and whether consent given for investigating into Crime No. 246/94 was redundant in view of the general consent earlier given by the State of Kerala. Even if we were to hold that the State Government had the requisite power and authority to issue the impugned notification, still the same would be liable to be quashed on the ground of mala fide exercise of power. K. Chandrasekhar v. State of Kerala, AIR

1998 SC 2001 : (1998) 5 SCC 223 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 1291 : 1998 CrLJ 2897 : 1998 (2) Crimes 300.

[12634] ● Applicability and Scope of Act dismissed.—Section 2 of the Act empowers the Central Government to Constitute a special force. Indisputably, the first respondent has been constituted in terms thereof. Sub-section (2) of Section 2 provides that subject to any orders which the Central Government may make in this behalf, members of the said police establishment shall have throughout any Union Territory in relation to the investigation of such offences and arrest of persons concerned in such offences, all the powers and duties, duties, privileges and liabilities which police officers of that Union Territory have in connection with the investigation of offences committed therein. The said Act indisputably applies in regard to charges of corruption made against the employees of the Union of India. It is also not disputed that the CBI Manual was made by the Central Government providing for detailed procedure as regards the mode and manner in which complaints against public servants are to be dealt with. Sashi Kant v. Central Bureau of Investigation, AIR 2007 SC 351 : (2007) 1 SCC 630 : JT 2006 (9) SC 603 : (2006) 4 Crimes 318.

[12635] ● Section 6—Scope.—Section 6 is very important which requires consent of State Government for exercising powers and jurisdiction under the Act by Special Police Establishment to any area in a State not being Union Territory or Railway. M. Balakrishna Reddy v. Director, CBI, New Delhi, AIR 2008 SC 1754 : 2008 (4) SCC 409 : 2008 (2) SCC (Cri) 391 : 2008 (4) SCR 1154 : JT 2008 (4) 162.

[12636] ● Power and jurisdiction of Special Police Establishment in State—Consent of State Government.—"A closer scrutiny of the relevant provisions of the Delhi Act also add credence to the view which we are inclined to take Section 3 refers to 'notification' and requires the Central Government to issue notification specifying offences or class of offences to be investigated by Special Police Establishment. Section 5 uses the term 'order' and enables the Central Government to extend powers and jurisdiction of Special Police Establishment to other areas not covered by the Act. Section 6 which speaks of consent of State Government for the exercise of powers and jurisdiction of the Special Establishment neither refers to 'notification' nor 'order'. It merely requires consent of the State Government for the application of the Delhi Act. Parliament, in our considered opinion, advisedly and deliberately did not specify the mode, method or manner for granting consent though in two preceding sections such mode was provided. If it intended that such consent should be in a particular form, it would certainly have provided the form as it was aware of different forms of exercise of power. It, therefore, depends on the facts of each case whether the consent required by Section 6 of the Delhi Act has or has not been given by the State Government and no rule of universal application can be laid down.

On the facts stated hereinabove, there is no doubt that State of Madhya Pradesh has given consent as envisaged by Section 6 of the Delhi Act and prosecution instituted by CBI against the appellant cannot be said to be without jurisdiction. We see no infirmity in the order passed by the trial Court and confirmed by the High Court. The appeal, hence, deserves to be dismissed and we accordingly do so". M. Balakrishna Reddy v. Director, CBI, New Delhi, AIR 2008 SC 1754 : (2008) 4 SCC 409 : 2008 (2) SCC (Cri) 391 : 2008 (4) SCR 1154 : JT 2008 (4) 162.

[12637] ● Power of conducting investigation and lodging of FIR.—In terms of Section 3 of the Act, first information reports are required to be lodged. For the said purpose, the C.B.I. which has several branches all over India is an officer incharge of a police station within the meaning of Section 154 of the Code of Criminal procedure. The authority specified in the DSPE Act, namely the Superintendent of Police of C.B.I. is an officer entitled to carry out any investigation. Only when an investigation is carried out in relation to an offence which has been committed in a State and not in the Indian territory or within the territorial jurisdiction of the Central Government the consent of the State concerned is required to be obtained. Bhavesh Jayanti Lakhani v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 9 SCC 551 : JT 2009 (11) SC 279.

DEMEANOUR OF WITNESS

[12638] ● Demeanour of witness.—Few men are really good actors and there is a remarkable difference between the demeanour of a witness who is describing a scene or occurrence which he actually saw, and that of a witness who repeats from memory a story which has been taught to him. In the case of former, his eyes are lit with intelligence, his features are all in motion and his hands make unconscious indications. The latter stands motionless or is fidgety and restless, his features are impassive, the pupil of his eye is fixed, he gazes at empty space, he hurries on with his story lest he should lose the thread of it and is impatient of interruption occasionally as he forgets the cue, he thrusts out his tongue and hurriedly withdraws it and the apple in his throat rises and as suddenly falls. Field's Law of Evidence in Br. India, 8th Ed., P. XXXIII

[12639] ● Witness over-zealous on behalf of his party—When.—When we find a witness over-zealous on behalf of his party, exaggerating circumstances, answering without waiting to hear the question, forgetting facts where he would be open to contradiction, minutely remembering others, which he knows cannot be disputed, reluctant in giving adverse testimony, replying evasively or flippantly, pretending not to hear the question for the purpose of gaining time to consider the effect of his answer, affecting indifference or often avowing to God and protesting his honesty—we have indications, more or less conclusive of insincerity and falsehood. On the other hand, in the evidence of truthful witness there is calmness and simplicity, a naturalness of manner, an unaffected readiness and copiousness of detail, as well in one part of the narrative as another; and an evident disregard of either the facility or difficulty of vindication or detection. Taylor on Evidence, 8th Ed., Vol. I., S. 44, S. 52, See Field's Law of Evidence in Br. India 8th Ed. at Pp. XXXIII—XXXIV.

[12640] ● High Court powers with regard to interference with order of Sessions Court wide in appeal.—The powers of the High Court as regards interference with an order of the Sessions Court are wide in appeals from acquittal as in appeals from conviction, subject to the observance of the principle that great weight should be attached to the view taken by the trial Judge who had the advantage of hearing the witnesses and observing their demeanour. Wilayat Khan v. State of U.P., AIR 1953 SC 122 : 1953 CrLJ 62.

[12641] ● Remarks respecting demeanour of witnesses—Proper time for recording.—No doubt the omission to record remarks respecting the demeanour of the witness as provided in S. 363, CrPC by the trial Judge either during or at the close of the examination of the witness does not mean that the recording of the remarks about the demeanour by him latter in the judgment is not to be taken into consideration. The remarks made in the judgment will be given due weight by the Appellate Court in the appraisal of the witness. Ganeshbhai Shankarbhai v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1972 SC 1618 : (1972) 2 SCC 73 : 1972 SCC (Cri) 647 : 1972 CrLJ 1029 (1032).

[12642] ● Rape—Evidence and proof.—In the instant case the prosecutirx is a fully grown up lady and habituated to sexual intercourse and was pregnant. She was experienced inasmuch as she had acted a midwife. It is true that learned Sessions Judge was impressed with the demeanour of this witness, but that by itself is not sufficient to prove the case if the allegation of the prosecution suffers form inherent probabilities. Pratap Misra v. State of Orissa, AIR 1977 SC 1307 : (1977) 3 SCC 41 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 447 (454) : 1977 CrLJ 817 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 233.

DENIAL

[12643] ● Denial.—Where in a murder charge, the accused falsely denied several relevant facts which had been conclusively established the Court would be justified in drawing an adverse inference from this against the accused. Pershadi v. State of U.P., AIR 1957 SC 211 : 1957 CrLJ 328.

[12644] ● Execution of document—Denial.—"Under the proviso to S. 68, Evidence Act, the obligation to produce at least one attesting witness stands withdrawn if the execution of any such document, not being a will which is registered is not specifically denied. Therefore, everything hinges on the recording of this fact of such denial. If there is no specific denial, the proviso comes into play but if there is denial, the proviso will not apply" Rosammal Issetheenammal Fernandez v. Joosa Mariyan Fernandez, AIR 2000 SC 2857 (2859) : (2000) 7 SCC 189 : JT (2000) 9 SC 240 : (2000) 5 Scale 600 : (2000) 5 Supreme 565 : (2000) 6 SLT 270 : (2000) 8 SRJ 180.

DE NOVO TRIAL

[12645] ● De novo* trial.—From a comparative reading of sub-section (i) of Section 350, CrPC as it stood prior to its amendment in 1955 and as it stands since then with the change in its numeral and inclusion of the word "judge" therein we find that the discretion earlier given to the Presiding officer of the Court to act on the evidence recorded by his predecessor and partly recorded by him still remains. But so far as the other option is concerned, while earlier he could resummon the witnesses and recommence the enquiry or trial which necessarily mean a de novo trial—he can now only resummon a witness who has already been examined for further cross-examination and discharge him after such further examination, cross-examination and re-examination, if any. It is evident therefore that now the Magistrate or Judge can exercise his judicial discretion only for further examination of a witness already examined and not for fresh examination of witnesses for a fresh trial. Obviously, keeping in view the inevitable frequent changes in the office of the Magistrate and Judge and in order to provide a speedy trial, the Legislature has taken away the well established right of the accused to claim a de novo trial and that of the Court to so direct by express words of the amending statute of 1955.

Pyare Lal v. State of Punjab, AIR 1962 SC 690 : (1962) 1 CrLJ 688 : (1962) 2 SCJ 492 : (1962) 3 SCR 328 has no relevance as at that time S. 350 of the old CrPC was operating but now after the amendment the provisions have been changed. Ranbir Yadav v. State of Bihar, AIR 1995 SC 1219 (1226) : (1995) 4 SCC 392 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 728 : 1995 CrLJ 2665 : (1995) 2 Crimes 161.

[12646] ● Party to criminal proceedings if aggrieved must raise objection at earliest stage.—We are distressed to note that learned single judge was not told by the Government advocate the fall out of such a view, if taken by the single Judge, that it means that all the witnesses once examined in full should be called back again, and the whole chief examination, cross-examination or re-examination and questioning of the accused under Section 313 of the code, hearing arguments, then examination of defence witnesses further, again final arguments to be heard and preparation of judgment once again. The very object underlined in Section 465 of the code is that if on any technical ground any party to criminal proceedings is aggrieved he must raise the objection thereof at the earliest stage. If he did not raise it at the earliest stage, he cannot be heard on that aspect after the whole trial is over. State of H.P. v. Gita Ram, AIR 2000 SC 2940 : (2000) 7 SCC 452 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1390 : 2000 CrLJ 4039.

[12647] ● Reversal of finding sentence or order of trial Court—De novo trial.—A de novo trial should be the last resort and that too only when such a course becomes so desperately indispensable. It should be limited to the extreme exigency to avert "a failure of justice". Any omission or even the illegality in the procedure which does not affect the core of the case is not a ground for ordering a de novo trial. This is because the Appellate Court has plenary powers for re-evaluating or re-appraising the evidence and even to take additional evidence by the Appellate Court itself or to direct such additional evidence to be collected by the trial Court. But to replay the whole laborious exercise after erasing the bulky records relating to the earlier proceedings, by bringing down all the persons to the Court once again for repeating the whole depositions would be a sheer waste of time, energy and costs unless there is miscarriage of justice otherwise. Hence, the said course can be resorted to when it becomes unpreventable for the purpose of averting " a failure of justice". The superior Court which orders a de novo trial cannot afford to overlook the realities and the serious impact on the pending cases in trial Courts which are crammed with dockets, and how much that order would inflict hardship on many innocent persons who once took all the trouble to reach the Court and deposed their versions in the very same case. To them and the public the re-enactment of the whole labour might give the impression that law is more pedantic than pragmatic. Law in not an instrument to be used for inflicting sufferings on the people but for the process of justice dispensation. State of M.P. v. Bhooraji, AIR 2001 SC 3372 : (2001) 7 SCC 679 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 1373 (1379, 1380).

[12648] ● Conditions for invoking bar under S. 300, CrPC.—The essential conditions for invoking the bar under Section 300, CrPC are (i) the Court had requisite jurisdiction to take cognizance and tried the offence and (ii) the Court has recorded an order of conviction or acquittal, and such conviction/acquittal remains in force. State of Karnataka v. C. Nagarajaswamy, AIR 2005 SC 4308 : (2005) 8 SCC 370 : (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 47 (53) : 2005 CrLJ 4534 : 2005 (4) Crimes 160.

[12649] ● Applicability of S.300, IPC.—Even if a judgment of conviction or acquittal was recorded the same would not make any distinction for the purpose of invoking the provisions of Section 300, CrPC as, even then it would be held to have been rendered illegal and without jurisdiction. State of Karnataka v. C. Nagarajaswamy, AIR 2005 SC 4308 : (2005) 8 SCC 370 : (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 47 (55) : 2005 CrLJ 4534 : 2005 (4) Crimes 160.

[12650] ● Trial should be a search for truth.—Since the object is to mete out justice and to convict the guilty and protect the innocent, the trial should be a search for the truth and not about over technicalities, and must be conducted under such rules as will protect the innocent, and punish the guilty. The proof of charge which has to be beyond reasonable doubt must depend upon judicial evaluation of the totality of the evidence, oral and circumstantial, and not by an isolated scrutiny. Zahira Habibullah Sheikh v. State of Gujarat, AIR 2006 SC 1367 : (2006) 3 SCC 374 : (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 8 (p. 30) : 2006 CrLJ 1694 : 2006 (2) Crimes 36.

[12651] ● Failure to accord fair hearing.—Failure to accord fair hearing either to the accused or the prosecution violates even minimum standards of due process of law. It is inherent in the concept of due process of law, that condemnation should be rendered only after the trial in which the hearing is a real one, not sham or a mere farce and pretence. Since the fair hearing requires an opportunity to preserve the process, it may be vitiated and violated by an over hasty stage-managed, tailored and partisan trial. The fair trial for a criminal offence consists not only in technical observance of the frame, and forms of law, but also in recognition and just application of its principles in substance, to find out the truth and prevent miscarriage of justice. Zahira Habibullah Sheikh v. State of Gujarat, AIR 2006 SC 1367 : (2006) 3 SCC 374 : (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 8 (30) : 2006 CrLJ 1694 : 2006 (2) Crimes 36.

[12652] ● Importance of witness.—"Witnesses" as Bentham said : are the eyes and ears of justice. Hence, the importance and primacy of the quality of trial process. If the witness himself is incapacitated from acting as eyes and ears of justice, the trial gets putrefied and paralysed, and it no longer can constitute a fair trial. The incapacitation may be due to several factors, like the witness being not in a position for reasons beyond control to speak the truth in the Court or due to negligence or ignorance or some corrupt collusion. Time has become ripe to act on account of numerous experiences faced by the Courts on account of frequent turning of witnesses as hostile, either due to threats, coercion, lures and monetary considerations at the instance of those in power, their henchmen and hirelings, political clouts and patronage and innumerable other corrupt practices ingeniously adopted to smother and stifle the truth and realities coming out to surface rendering truth and justice, to become ultimate casualties. Broader public and societal interests require that the victims of the crime who are not ordinarily parties to prosecution and the interests of the State represented by their prosecuting agencies do not suffer even in slow process but irreversibly and irretrievably, which if allowed would undermine and destroy public confidence in the administration of justice, which may ultimately pave way for anarchy, oppression and injustice resulting in complete breakdown and collapse of the edifice of rule of law, enshrined and jealously guarded and protected by the Constitution. There comes the need for protecting the witness. Time has come when serious and undiluted thoughts are to be bestowed for protecting witnesses so that the ultimate truth is presented before the Court and justice triumphs and that the trial is not reduced to a mockery. Zahira Habibullah Sheikh v. State of Gujarat, AIR 2006 SC 1367 : (2006) 3 SCC 374 : (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 8 (p. 30) : 2006 CrLJ 1694 : 2006 (2) Crimes 36.

DEPENDENT

[12653] ● Dependent.—Section 27 of the Hindu Adoption and Maintenance Act, 1956 provides that the dependents claim for maintenance under the Act shall not be a charge on the estate of the deceased or any portion thereof, unless one has been created by the will of the deceased, by a decree of Court, by agreement between the dependent, and the owner of the estate or portion or otherwise. The word "dependent" is defined under Section 21 of the said Act to mean relatives of the deceased namely (1) his or her father (2) his or her mother (3) his widow, so long as she does not remarry. The word "dependent" does not include the wife whose husband is surviving. In any case, admittedly, no charge for maintenance was created in favour of the appellant on the properties which are forfeited under the Smugglers and Foreign Exchange Manipulators (Forfeiture of Property) Act, 1976. She has not suffered any legal grievance and has no legal peg for a justiciable claim to hang on. Shobha Suresh Jumani v. Appellate Tribunal, Forfeited Property, AIR 2001 SC 2288 (2292) : (2001) 5 SCC 755 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 1334.

DEPOMEDROL

[12654] ● Depomedrol.—It is a "long acting" steroid recommended for treatment of "chronic" clinical conditions like "asthma" or "arthritis" for its prolonged immunosuppressive action—Maximum recommended does of Depomedrol is 40-120 mg at 1-4 week intervals as clearly mentioned by the drug manufacturer, Pharmacia. Malay Kumar Ganguly v. Sukumar Mukherjee, AIR 2010 SC 1162 : (2009) 9 SCC 221 : 2009 (13) SCR 1 : JT 2009 (10) 256 : 2009 (10) Scale 675.

DEPORTATION

[12655] ● Deportation.—It appears that the State cannot directly deport the petitioner but has to refer the matter to the Central Government for making necessary arrangements and this has taken some time. But we are unable to hold that this delay in making arrangements affects the validity of the detention, though we trust that arrangements will be made very soon to deport him to Pakistan. Barkat Ali v. The State of Jammu and Kashmir, AIR 1971 SC 217 : (1970) 3 SCC 213 : 1971 SCC (Cri) 31 : 1971 CrLJ 267.

[12656] ● Citizenship—Determination of.—On principle it does not matter whether the question which can only be determined by the Central Government under Section 9 of the Citizenship Act arises in a civil suit or in a criminal prosecution. If the real question which arises for determination is whether a person, who was an Indian citizen when the Constitution came into force, had acquired the citizenship of another country or not during the specified period, the proper thing to do for a Court where the question arises is to refuse to adjudicate on that question. State of Gujarat v. Yakub Ibrahim, AIR 1974 SC 645 : (1974) 1 SCC 283 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 107 : 1974 CrLJ 597 : 1974 CrLR (SC) 63.

[12657] ● Deportation of aliens.—Having regard to the facts and circumstances of the case, particularly, having regard to the fact that the petitioner has entered this country legally upon the single entry permit issued to him, it is only fair that the competent authority must inform him the reasons for his deportation. If such a decision is taken, the petitioner must be given an opportunity to submit his representation against his proposed expulsion. The competent authority may thereafter consider his representation and pass appropriate order. As observed by this Court, this procedure may be departed from for compelling reasons of national security, etc. In the instant case, we have not so far noticed any fact which may provide a compelling reason for the State not to observe this procedure. Hasan Ali Raihany v. Union of India, AIR 2006 SC 1714 : (2006) 3 SCC 705 : (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 33 (35) : 2006 CrLJ 2106 : JT 2006 (3) SC 533.

DEPOSITION

[12658] ● Certificate of Committing Magistrate.—The certificate of the Committing Magistrate endorsed on the deposition sheet stated that the deposition was read out to the witness and that the witness admitted it to be correct. The Court is bound to accept this as correct under Section 80 of the Evidence Act. The burden is on the person seeking to displace the statuary presumption and if he chooses to rely on the testimony of a witness which the Court is not prepared to believe the matter ends there. The duty displacing the presumption has on the person who questions it. The Court is, of cause, bound to consider such evidence as is adduced but it is not found to believe such evidence nor is there any duty whatever on the Court to conduct an enquiry on its own. Bhagwan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1952 SC 214 : 1952 CrLJ 1131 : 1952 SCR 812.

[12659] ● Evidence of eye-witness recorded under Chapter XVIII of CrPC, 1898 cannot be treated as evidence under Section 288, CrPC, 1898.—The evidence of eye-witnesses duty recorded in the presence of the accused under Chapter XVIII of the Code of Criminal Procedure can be treated, in discretion of the Presiding Judge, as evidence in the case if such witness is produced and examined at the trial. In the instant case, the evidence of witness could not be recorded by the Sessions Judge because by that time he was dead. His evidence on the Committal Court as PW-4, however was treated as evidence though the High Court incorrectly thought that it could be so treated under Section 288 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Tarlok Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1974 SC 1797 : (1973) 2 SCC 458 : 1973 SCC (Cri) 872 (878) : 1974 CrLJ 1265.

[12660] ● Section 278—Object—Correction in recorded statement of witness.—The correction slip was not filed when the day to day evidence of PW-34 was recorded and read over to him. Nor it was filed on the last day or recording his evidence. It does not bear any signature or the date. The Trial Judge, however, thought it fit to correct typographical errors in the statement of PW-34 which he would have corrected even otherwise. He refused to make any correction or alter the substantive part of the evidence. Indeed, he was right in not tinkering with the substantive part of the evidence on the basis of an unsigned correction slip.

The object of Section 278, Cr.P.Code is two fold, firstly, to ensure that the evidence of the witness as recorded as accurate and secondly to give the witness concerned an opportunity to point out mistakes, if any. If the correction suggested by the witnesses is one which the Judge considers necessary he will make it at once as required by sub-section (1) but if the correction is such that the Judge does not consider necessary, sub-section (2) requires that a memorandum of the objection be made and the Judge add his remarks, if any, thereto. In the present case, the learned Trial Judge corrected all the typographical errors which he considered necessary but refused to carry out the substantive part of his deposition. The section is not intended to permit a witness to resile from his statement in the name of correction. The learned Trial Judge was justified in refusing to effect the change which he thought was intended to change the earlier version. Mr. Mohd. Umar v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1989 SC 1785 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 750 (754, 755) : 1989 CrLJ 2070.

DESCRIPTION/DETAILS OF INCIDENT

[12661] ● Description/Details of incident.—In the instant case, in the first information report the ull description of the appellant had been given by he complainant. The complainant also had an mple opportunity to see the appellant when they oth went in a taxi. It was never argued either efore the trial Court or before the High Court hat the appellant does not answer the description o be found in the first information report. All that as been suggested is that his height is given as 6 t 6 inches whereas in fact it was 5ft 6 inches. It eems to us that 6ft 6 inches was either a printing rror or was an error in writing when the first nformation report was recorded. A height of 6ft 6 nches is very unusual and ordinarily one does not ee many persons of that height in India. At any ate it was open to the appellant to invite the ttention of the trial Magistrate to this matter and hat had been done the trial Magistrate would ave examined the same and also made his comments on the question of height of the appellant. Bhopat Singh Kishan Singh v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1973 SC 446 : (1972) 3 SCC 367 : 972 SCC (Cri) 537 (539) : 1973 CrLJ 343.

12662] ● Recovery of churis from accused hop—Conviction.—The circle, at the least did ot bring to bear enough care in the discharge of is functions. The churis which were produced efore the Court are bronze-based but he wrote brass' for 'bronze'. Instead of mentioning in the eizure memo that 4 'churis' were seized. Both he learned counsel who are familiar with local onditions are agreed that in Bengal a distinction s made between 'churis' and 'bangles'. The explanation of the circle Inspector that he committed mistake in describing the articles may or may ot be true but the fact that he made a significant rror in a material part of the description of the rticles seized by him shows that no implicit eliance can be placed on his word. It also seem to s important that the 'churis' after seizure, were vrapped in a loose sheet of proper and were not ept under seal. Naba Kumar Das v. State of V.B., AIR 1974 SC 777 : (1974) 3 SCC 582 : 974 SCC (Cri) 60 (61) : 1974 CrLJ 512 : 1974 CrLR (SC) 3.

12663| ● Expression "specified description"* in Section 48(3) of Motor Vehicles Act 1939.—The expression "specified description" in Section 48(3) of the Vehicles Act, 1939 did not cover ccording to dictionaries, the year of manufacture f the vehicle. BLACK'S Law Dictionary on Description" shows the model of a vehicle is bviously a fact of its description. "Description" neans : (Black's Law Dictionary, p. 532). "A elineation or account of a particular subject by he recital of its characteristic accidents and qualities. So, dictionary versus dictionary leaves the matter at large, apart from the plain function of the Court to gather the meaning, not under the dictatorship of dictionaries but guided by the statutory purpose without being defected by Logomachic exercises, the mischief to be countered and the public interest to be advanced. A late model is a better safeguard and, more relevantly to the point, the year of the make and the particulars of the model are part of the description." Subhash Chandra v. State of U.P., AIR 1980 SC 800 : (1980) 2 SCC 324 (326) : (1980) 2 SCR 1024 : 1980 UJ 369.

[12664] ● Dacoity with murder—Appreciation of evidence.—In a case of dacoity with murder, none of the witnesses in their earlier statements or in oral evidence gave any description of the dacoits whom they have alleged to have identified in the dacoity nor did they give any identification marks, viz., stature of the accused or whether they were fat or thin or of a fair colour or of black colour. In the absence any such description, it will be impossible to convict any accused on the basis of a single identification, in which case the reasonable possibility of mistake in identification cannot be excluded. T.I. parade was held about 3-1/2 month after the dacoity. In view of such a long lapse of time, it is not possible for any human being to remember the features of the accused, and he is very likely to commit mistakes. Unless evidence is absolutely clear, it is unsafe to convict an accused for such a serious offence on the testimony of a single witness. Wakil Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 1981 SC 1392 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 634 : 1981 CrLJ 1014 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 319 : 1981 BBCJ (SC) 138 : 1981 CurLJ (Cri) 131 : 1981 BLJ 462 : 1981 CrAppR (SC) 301.

[12665] ● Accused—Identification of in identification parade.—It is seen from the evidence of PW-12 that the home guards did not give him the description of any of the culprits when he examined them and that he did not even ask them about it though it is stated in the report Ex Ka-1 that the home guards had seen the culprits thoroughly and identified them. If at the earliest opportunity the home guards did not mention any identifying features of the culprits when they were examined by PW-12, it is difficult for us to believe how PW-2 could have identified both the appellants nearly two months later on November 17, 1978. It has to be noted that the appellants have stated in the trial Court that they were shown to the witnesses before the identification parade was held. In these circumstances we are impressed with the evidence of PW 1 and 2. Manzoor v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1983 SC 295 : (1982) 2 SCC 72 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 356 (360) : 1983 CrLJ 441 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 134.

[12666] ● Victim giving no description of accused—Identification could hardly furnish any evidence.—In this case, the information who is victim of robbery, did not give the name of the present appellant or that of any of the accused. He did not also give some description of the present appellant who was supposed to be sitting next to him in the auto rickshaw and who thrust his hand in his pocket and removed Rs. 100/-. The total absence of any such description which would have provided, a yardstick to evaluate the identification of the present appellant, at a latter date by the victim would render his latter identification weak, but that was not the only error. The victim did not know the names of the persons who robbed him. In such a situation ordinarily after the accused were arrested, the test identification parade should have been held. But it was not held. It was only the victim when he came to give evidence in the Court and when the four accused were sitting in the Court that he identified them as the miscreants. Further, there was a lapse of 4 months from the date of offence to the date of giving evidence, during which period it was not possible to believe that the victim had no occasion to see the accused. Such identification in the circumstances of the case would hardly furnish any evidence against the present appellant. Mohd. Abdul Hafeez v. State of A.P., AIR 1983 SC 367 : (1983) 1 SCC 143 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 139 : 1983 CrLJ 689 : 1983 CrLR (SC) 26 : (1983) 1 Chand LR (Cri) 130 : 1983 IJR (Cri) 32 : 1983 UJ (SC) 145 : 1983 CrAppR (SC) 25 : 1983 (1) CrLC 274.

[12667] ● Multiple murder—Testimony of witnesses.—"PWs 1 and 6 have stated clearly that the women accused (13 to 15) were followed by the other accused and other accused and accused 16 shot Shital Das on his thigh and then rest of the accused dragged him out and attacked him with various weapons. When Kesho Bai attempted to run away she was also shot and then chased and killed in the hut of Karma Ram. As the accused had come in large body and attacked the victims in quick succession it will be futile to expect a vivid description of the details of attack on the victims. Moreover, the attack on Kesho Bai had taken place inside Karma Ram's hut and as such Pws 1 and 6 could not have known in what manner she was attacked by her pursuers". State of U.P. v. Ranjha Ram, AIR 1986 SC 1959 : (1986) 4 SCC 99 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 374 (379, 380) : 1986 CrLJ 1906 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 414.

[12668] ● Deceased fully conscious when she made statement to police.—The High Court has view Ex Ka with suspicion because of the detailed narration therein by Kishori of the motive for the occurrence and the manner in which the assailants had attacked her and as to how the witnesses had gained entry into the house. When the doctors say that Kishori could have retained her consciousness and been able to make a statement, there is no reason why the statement should be disbelieved merely because it contains the details of the motive for the attack and the manner in which the occurrence had taken place. State of U.P. v. Chet Ram, AIR 1989 SC 1543 : (1989) 2 SCC 425 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 388 (397) : 1989 CrLJ 1785 : 1989 CrLR (SC) 314 : (1989) 2 Crimes 13.

[12669] ● Description of accused established by eye-witnesses.—In the instant case there are clear and positive evidence by which it was established beyond all reasonable doubts that the thief who entered the house of Jaisingh and was locked from outside where the poor lady was staying is the accused/appellant. From the evidence of the eye-witnesses the description of the accused/appellant was clearly established and his wearing apparel also tallied with the first information report lodged with the Police before the accused/appellant was apprehended. There are positive evidences to the effect that the deceased, Mst. Kapothin, cried for help and shouted that she had been assaulted by the thief. Barring the said thief, there was no other person inside the room where the deceased must. Kapothin was staying. The deceased admittedly had suffered several burn injuries and a faggot with which the injuries were caused on the person of the deceased had also been found lying inside the room. There is no occasion to hold in the face of the case that an innocent person who had gone to case himself by the side of road was apprehended on a mistaken identity. There is evidence that the accused/appellant came out of the said room and when he was attempting to escape he was apprehended by the villagers. Chamardas v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1993 SC 332 (334) : 1993 SCC (Cri) 556 : 1993 CrLJ 167 : JT 1992 (6) SC 91 : (1992) 3 Crimes 623.

[12670] ● Person making dying declaration not required to make elaborate and exhaustive statement.—It is not the requirement of law that the person making the dying declaration should make an elaborate and exhaustive statement so as to cover each and every aspect of the incident and narrate the whole history of the case. The fact could not be lost sight of that according to the medical evidence the deceased—Nageswari had suffered 90 per cent burns and must have been under a severe stress and agony. According to the evidence on record she was talking in a low voice which indicated that she was able to speak with some difficulty and, therefore, it was not possible for her to make a very detailed statement covering the minutest details which could not be expected under the facts and circumstances of the present case. Charipalli Shankararao v. Public Prosecutor, High Court of Andhra Pradesh, Hyderabad, AIR 1995 SC 777 (781) : (1995) 4 (Supp) SCC 24 : (1996) SCC (Cri) 21 : (1995) 1 Crimes 393.

[12671] ● Murder—Testimony of eye-witness for offence under Section 302, IPC.—PW-1 was severely injured and he might not have been in mood to narrate the incident in great details and therefore, the High Court could not have expected of Pw 1 nor was it necessary to give the graphic details of roles played by each of the accused in the murder. While on this point it will be pertinent to refer to the statements made therein. After giving the background of the enmity between their family and that of the accused, PW 1 stated that on July 31, 1992 at or about 5.00 p.m., when he, his father and coolies were in their field, the six accused persons came there armed with knives and spears and suddenly attacked his father. A-1 hacked him with a knife on the head and A-2 with a spear on the neck and than the other accused assaulted him (the deceased) with knife and spears indiscriminately. This was followed by a statement as to the manner of assault on him by some of the accused. Lastly, he stated that PW-2 witnessed the incident and PW-4 had brought him to the hospital. It would thus be seen that all material facts relating to the incident find place in the FIR, and, therefore, the High Court was not at all justified in brushing aside the prosecution case regarding participation of A 3 to A 6 in the murder on the sole ground that the manner in which they actually assaulted the deceased was not mentioned therein. Absence of the names of A 3 and A 4 in the FIR should not also have been made one of the grounds to discard their evidence when it was specifically mentioned therein that coolies were working with them in their field at the time of the assault. Kovvuri Surya Bhaskara Reddy v. State of A.P., AIR 1998 SC 1570 (1573) : (1998) 9 SCC 504 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 1047 : 1998 CrLJ 1628 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 293.

DESERTER

[12672] ● Deserter.—"Desertion" as contemplated by Clause (a) of Section 10 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, means intentional permanent abandonment of one spouse by the other, without the other's consent and without reasonable cause. So far as the deserting spouse is concerned, there must be two essential conditions : (i) the factum of separation, and (ii) the intention to bring material life permanently to an end (animus deserendi). Similarly, two elements are essential, so far as the deserted spouse is concerned; firstly, absence of consent and, secondly, absence of conduct giving reasonable cause to the deserting spouse to form the necessary intention aforesaid. Desertion is a matter of inference to be drawn from the facts and circumstances of each case. Bipin Chandra Jai Singhbhai Shah v. Prabhavati, AIR 1957 SC 176 : 1956 SCR 838 : 1957 SCJ 144.

[12673] ● Gist of desertion existence of animus not to return ship.—The gist of desertion, therefore, is the existence of an animus not to return to the ship or, in other words, to go against the agreements under which the employment of seamen for sea voyages takes place. Ibrahim v. State of W.B., AIR 1968 SC 731 : 1968 CrLJ 874 : (1968) 1 SCWR 40 : 1968 MLJ (Cri) 482 : (1968) 2 SCJ 264 : (1968) 2 SCR 306.

[12674] ● "Desertion" and "absence without leave"—Distinction.—Sections 38 and 39 and Sections 104 and 105 of the Army Act, 1950 make a clear distinction between "desertion" and "absence without leave" and Section 106 prescribes the procedure to be followed, when a person absent without leave is deemed to be a deserter. Clearly every absence without leave is not treated as desertion but absence without leave may be deemed to be desertion of the procedure prescribed by Section 106 is followed since every desertion necessarily implies absence without leave the distinction between desertion and absence without leave must necessarily depend on the animus. If there is animus deserendi the absence is straightaway desertion. The Army Act, 1950 makes a pointed distinction between "Desertion" and "Absence without leave" simpliciter. Absence without leave may be desertion if accompanied by a necessary "animus deserendi" or deemed to be desertion if the Court of Inquiry makes the declaration of absence prescribed by S. 106 after following the procedure laid down and the person declared absent had neither surrendered nor been arrested. In the present case, the Military Authorities appear to have treated the Officer as a deserter and did not deem him to be a deserter. The apprehension roll as well as tentative charge-sheet issued to him treat him as a deserter. According to the authorities the Officer, when he failed to report as directed had no intention of rejoining duty, in other words he had the necessary "animus deserendi". This is what is said in the counter-affidavit. If the authorities thought that the Officer who was absent without leave had even then no intention of coming back to duty, then there was no question of observing the procedural requirements of S. 106, and then deeming him to be a deserter. It was within the competence of the authorities to prima facie decide whether the Officer when he absented himself did or did not intend to return to duty. Whether, in the instant case, the authorities were justified in concluding that Capt. Virendra Kumar had no intention of resuming duty, is not a matter upon which we are entitled to express any opinion. The position would be otherwise if the decision of the authorities could be shown to be mala fide. Vrendra Kumar v. Chairman, Disciplinary Committee, Bar Council of India, AIR 1986 SC 1060 : (1986) 2 SCC 217 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 149 (160, 162, 163) : 1986 CrLJ 848 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 131 : (1986) 2 Crimes 353.

DESIGNATED COURT

[12675] ● Designated Court.—Section 12 of the TADA Act, 1987 empowers the Designated Court to convict a person of any offence under any other law if he is found to have been guilty of the same during the course of a trial under that Act and to punish appropriately. Paras Ram v. State of Haryana, AIR 1993 SC 1212 (1214, 1215) : (1992) 4 SCC 662 : 1993 CrLJ 416 : 1993 CrLR (SC) 56.

[12676] ● Appointment of Judge or Additional Judge to—Designated Court.—"Observation of this Court with reference to clause (7) of the Special Courts Bill cannot be strictly applied to the situation of the continuance of a Judge of a Designated Court under Section 9(7) for the reason that the person who was to be nominated by the Central Government in consultation with the Chief Justice of India under clause (7) of the Special Courts Bill was a person who had held the office as a Judge of the High Court, that is to say the appointment was after the retirement. But in the present Act, the Judge is permitted to continue the same judicial service as a Judge or Additional Judge, as the case may be, on the attainment of superannuation. In other words, the Judge on the attainment of the age of superannuation does not retire. Therefore, we see no force in the above argument challenging the Constitutional validity of Section 9(7) by availing the observation in In re Special Courts Bill, (AIR 1979 SC 478). However, we would like to suggest that the Central Government and the State Government at the time of appointing a Judge or an Additional Judge to the Designated Court with the concurrence of the Chief Justice of the High Court concerned should keep in mind that the Judge designate has sufficient tenure of service even at the initial stage of appointment, so that no one may entertain any grievance for continuance of service of a Judge of the Designated Court after attainment of superannuation. Hence Section 9(7) does not offend any Constitutional provision. We uphold sub-section (7) of Section 9 of the TADA Act with a suggestion that the Central Government and the State Governments at the time of appointing a Judge or an Additional Judge to the Designated Court should keep in mind that the Judge designate has sufficient tenure of service even at the initial stage of appointment so that no one may entertain any grievance for continuance of service of a Judge of the Designated Court after attainment of superannuation". Kartar Singh v. State of Punjab, (1994) 3 SCC 569 : 1994 CrLJ 3139 (3189, 3190, 3229, 3230) : JT 1994 (2) SC 423 : 1994 (1) Crimes 1031.

[12677] ● Offence under TADA—Scope.—The words "any other offence under this Act or any rule made thereunder or under any other law" denote all offences other than those falling in the first category. The intention of the Parliament in conferring such a power on the designated Court is to prevent unmerited escape of offenders from the clutches of penal consequences even in cases where the Designated Court is satisfied during a valid trial that some other offence has been established beyond reasonable doubt. Once cognizance of any offence under TADA has been taken validly by the Designated Court with a proper sanction the Court is not disabled from convicting an accused for any other offence proved during the trial whether or not sanction has been accorded in respect of such other offence. The raison d' etre is that it is the Court of law which after a judicial scrutiny is satisfied on the materials placed before it that another offence has been made out and such satisfaction is of a higher calibre than the satisfaction of a sanctioning authority. The sanction envisaged in Section 20A is, of course, a curb imposed on the prosecution agency to approach the Designated Court with a case. But once such approach is validly made with the proper sanction then the Court gets a wider jurisdiction to deal with the offenders in respect of all offences made out in the trial. Kalpnath Rai v. State (through CBI), AIR 1998 SC 201 (209, 210) : 1998 SCC (Cri) 134 : 1998 CrLJ 369 : 1997 (4) Crimes 227.

[12678] ● Cognizance taken on defective sanction order.—Since for all purposes the designated Court is a Court of Session to which the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure come to aid, Section 465 of the code falling in chapter XXXV regarding irregular proceedings cures the defect. Lal Singh v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1999 SC 475 : (1998) 5 SCC 529 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 1360 (1361) : 1999 CrLJ 595.

DESUETUDE

[12679] ● Desuetude.—According to Craies Statute Law desuetude is a process by which an Act of Parliament may lose its force without express repeal. It does not, however, consist merely of obsolescence or disuse; there must also be a contrary practice which must be of some duration and general application.

Though in India the doctrine of desuetude does not appear to have been used so far to hold that any statute has stood repealed because of this process, there is no objection in principle to apply this doctrine to our statutes as well. This is for the reason that a citizen should know whether, despite a statute having been in disuse for long duration and instead of contrary practice being in use, he is still required to act as per the "dead letter". It would advance the cause of justice to accept the application of doctrine of desuetude in our country also. Our soil is ready to accept this principle; indeed there is need for its implantation because persons residing in free India, who have assured fundamental rights including what has been stated in Article 21, must be protected from their being, say, prosecuted and punished for violation of a law which has become "dead letter". A new path is, therefore, required to be laid and trodden. Municipal Corporation for City of Pune v. Bharat Forge Co. Ltd., AIR 1996 SC 2856 : (1995) 3 SCC 434.

DETAINING AUTHORITY
§ (See "DETENTION")

DETAINING MOTOR VEHICLE

[12680] ● Carrying passengers more than number specified in permit—No Power of Police Officer to detain Vehicle.—The Police Officer would be authorised to detain a vehicle, it he has reason to believe that the vehicle has been or is being used in contravention of any condition of such permit relating to the route on which or the area in which or the purpose for which the vehicle may be used. Reading the provisions (Sections 3, 39, 66 and 207 of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1988) as it is, the conclusion is irresistible that the condition of permit relating to the route on which or the area in which or the purpose for which the vehicle could be used if contravened, would only authorise the Police Officer to detain the vehicle and not each and every condition of permit on being violated or contravened, the Police Officer would be entitled to detain the vehicle. But carrying passengers more than the number specified in the permit will not be a violation of the purpose for which the permit is granted. The power, therefore, is required to be exercised with care and caution and the power has to be exercised only when the precondition for exercise of power is fully satisfied.

Held, carrying passengers beyond the number mentioned in Column 5, indicating the seating capacity, would be a violation of the conditions of permit relating to either the route or the area or the purpose for which the permit is granted. The detention of the vehicle has rightly been held to be unauthorised. State of Maharashtra v. Nanded Parphani Z.I. B.M. v. Operator Singh, AIR 2000 SC 725 : (2000) 2 SCC 69 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 318.

DETENTION
§ (See also "COFEPOSA ACT" AND "PREVENTIVE DETENTION")

[12681] ● Detention.—Even when the charge under Section 498 is based upon 'detention' there is no difference in principle, and it is immaterial whether the detention was against the woman's will or with her consent. The object of the section is to protect the rights of the husband and not those of the wife, and therefore it is not a good defence to the charge to say that, though the husband has been deprived of his rights, that deprivation is with the full consent or willing co-operation of the wife. 'Detention' in this context means keeping back the wife from her husband with the intention of illicit intercourse, even though such keeping back is with her full consent and co-operation. In other words, willingness of the wife, which is immaterial when considering a case falling under either of the first three categories mentioned under Section 498, is equally immaterial when dealing with a case falling under the last category of 'detention' mentioned in that section. There is a consensus of opinion among the various High Courts, as regards the construction of Section 498 so far as concerns the offence committed by "detaining'' the wife of another man, and it has been held that the gist of the offence lies in depriving the husband of his control over his wife, whether such deprivation is caused by use of physical force upon the wife or is brought about by any allurement or blandishment offered to her for the purpose of obtaining her assent to being kept back from her husband. Alamgir v. State of Bihar, AIR 1959 SC 436 : 1959 CrLJ 527 : 1959 SCJ 45.

[12682] ● Order of detention of person in Jail custody.—In the instant case the petitioner was detained by an order of the District Magistrate under the provisions of Preventive Detention Act.

1950. The order recited that the District Magistrate was satisfied that it was necessary to detain the petitioner with a view to prevent him from acting in a manner prejudicial to the maintenance of public order. The order was served on the petitioner on February 15, 1963, while he was in Jail custody as an undertrial prisoner in connection with a criminal case pending against him. The petitioner is ordered to be released on the ground that he was served with the order of detention while he was in jail custody. Rameshwar Shaw v. District Magistrate Burdwan, AIR 1964 SC 334 : 1964 (1) CrLJ 257 : (1964) 4 SCR 921.

[12683] ● Order of detention passed against person in Jail when.—Whether an order of detention could be passed against a person who was in detention or in jail will always have to be considered in the facts and circumstances of each case. Makhan Singh Tarsikka v. State of Punjab, AIR 1964 SC 1120 : 1964 (2) CrLJ 217 : (1964) 4 SCR 932 (937).

[12684] ● Detention order passed during pendency of habeas corpus.—The mere fact that the detention order is passed during the pendency of habeas corpus proceedings, cannot by itself lead to the conclusion that the order is vitiated by malice in law. It depends on the circumstances of the case. The detenus would have to prove not only that the detention order has been passed during the pendency of habeas corpus proceedings but also that there are facts showing malice. If the Government considers detention, which is the subject matter of challenge, to be invalid, there is no reason why it should not pass a valid order. In this case, three successive orders of release and then detention were passed, before the orders of release were actually carried out but those were held legal. Godawari Shamrao Parulekar v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1966 SC 1404 : 1966 CrLJ 1067 (1076) : (1966) 3 SCR 314.

[12685] ● Person in Jail Custody under detention order and criminal proceedings finding against him—When.—When a person is in jail custody and the criminal proceedings are pending against him, the appropriate authority might in a given case take the view that the criminal proceedings might end very soon and might terminate in his acquittal. In such a case, it would be open to the appropriate authority to make an order of detention, if the requisite conditions of the rule or the section was satisfied, and serve it on the person concerned even after he was acquitted in the said criminal proceedings. Gopi Ram v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1967 SC 241 : 1967 CrLJ 279.

[12686] ● Where accused illegally detained—Detention becomes lawful when subsequently arrested.—Even if the petitioner had been under illegal detention between January 10 to January 24, 1968—though we do not decide this point—the detention became lawful on January 24, 1968, when he was arrested by the civil Police and produced before the Magistrate on January 25, 1968. Saptawna v. State of Assam, AIR 1971 SC 813 : (1972) 4 SCC 45 : 1971 SCC (Cri) 247 (248) : 1971 CrLJ 679.

[12687] ● Order confirming detention—Limitation.—West Bengal Prevention of Violent Activities Act, 1970, Section 12.—The rule is well established that where a particular time is given from a certain date within which an act is to be done the day on that date is to be excluded. As a general rule the effect of defining the period of limitation such a day within which an act is to be done is to exclude the first day and to include the last day in computing the period of three months from the date of detention, which was February 5, 1971, before the expiration of which the order or decision for confirming the detention order and continuation of the detention thereunder had to be made, the date of the commencement of detention, namely. February 5, 1971 had to be excluded. So done, the order of confirmation was made before the expiration of the period of three months from the date of detention. Haru Das Gupta v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1972 SC 1293 : 1972 SCC (Cri) 368 (370) : (1972) 1 SCC 639 : 1972 CrLJ 872 : (1972) 3 SCR 329.

[12688] ● Judicial trial for punishing accused—Jurisdiction district from that of detention.—Judicial trial for punishing the accused for the commission of an offence is a jurisdiction distinct from that of detention under the Act which had in view the object of preventing the detenue from acting prejudicial to the security of the State and maintenance of public order. The fields of these two jurisdiction are not co-extensive nor are they alternatives. The grounds of detention relate to past act an which an opinion as to the likelihood of repetition of similar acts can be based. Mohd. Salim Khan v. C.C. Bose, 1972 SCC (Cri) 35. TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) Barjahar Gorey v. State of West Bengal, 1972 SCC (Cri) 888.

[12689] ● Whether act affects law and order or public order—Test.—Maintenance of Internal Security Act, 1971.—The question whether a man has only committed a breach of law and order or has acted in a manner likely to cause a disturbance of the public order, is a question of degree and extent of the reach of the act upon the society. Public order is what the french call "order publique" and is something more than ordinary maintenance of law and order. The test to be adopted in determining whether an act affects law and order or public order is : "Does it lead to disturbance of the current life of the community so as to amount to a disturbance of the public order or does it affect merely an individual leaving the tranquillity of the society undisturbed. Kanu Biswas v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1972 SC 1656 : (1972) 3 SCC 831 : 1973 SCC (Cri) 16 (19) : 1972 CrLJ 1006 : 1973 UJ (SC) 80.

[12690] ● Jurisdiction of preventive detention sometimes described as jurisdiction of suspicion.—If the grounds are relevant and germane to the object of the detaining Act then merely because the objectionable activities covered thereby also attracted the provisions of Chapter VIII, Criminal Procedure Code, the preventive detention cannot for that reason alone be considered to be mala fide provided the authority concerned is satisfied of the necessity of the detention as contemplated by the Act. The jurisdiction of preventive detention sometimes described as jurisdiction of suspicion depended on the subjective satisfaction of the detaining authority. If the detaining authority is of the opinion on grounds which are germane and relevant, then it is necessary to detain a person from acting prejudicially then it is not for this Court to consider objectively how imminent was the likelihood of the detenue indulging in those activities. Masood Alam v. Union of India, AIR 1973 SC 897 : (1973) 1 SCC 551 : 1973 SCC (Cri) 435 : 1973 CrLJ 627 : 1973 CrLR (SC) 173.

[12691] ● Past conduct activities and antecedents history taken into account in making detention order.—It is always the past conduct, activities and the antecedents history of a person which the detaining authority takes into account in making a detention order. No doubt, the past conduct, activities or antecedent history should always be proximate in point of time and should have a rational connection with the conclusion that the detention of the person is necessary but it is for the detaining authority who has to arrive at a subjective satisfaction in considering the past activities and coming to his conclusion if on the basis of those activities he is to be satisfied that the activities of the person concerned are such that he is likely to indulge in prejudicial activities necessitating his detention. Masood Alam v. Union of India, AIR 1973 SC 897 : (1973) 1 SCC 551 : 1973 SCC (Cri) 435 : 1973 CrLJ 627 : 1973 CrLR (SC) 173.

[12692] ● Earlier order of detention either revoked or expired when.—Where an earlier order of detention is either revoked or has expired, any subsequent detention order can be passed only on fresh facts arising after the expiry or revocation of the earlier order. Masood Alam v. Union of India, (1973) 1 SCC 551 : 1973 SCC (Cri) 435.

[12693] ● Theft of electric copper wires if relevant for making detention order under Section 3 of MIS Act.—Maintenance of Internal Security Act, 1971, Section 3.—The grounds or the basis of which the petitioner has been detained are clear, relevant and germane to the object and purpose for which preventive detention is authorised by the Act. The petitioner is stated to have committed theft of electric copper wires on January 6 and 12, 1972, when he was challenged by the inhabitants of the area, he and his associates hurled bombs towards them. The theft of electric wire totally disrupted electric supplies for several hours in the areas concerned. This conduct is very relevant for satisfying the authority concerned that it is prejudicial to maintenance of supplies and services essential to the community and if such authority considers it necessary on this ground to detain him with a view to preventing him from repeating such acts, then, the order of detention would indubitably and legitimately fall within the purview of Section 3 of the Act. The detention order is not open to challenge in these proceedings on the grounds averred in the writ petition. Mohd. Subrati v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1973 SC 207 : (1973) 3 SCC 256 : 1973 SCC (Cri) 245 (250, 251) : 1974 CrLJ 397 : 1973 CrLR (SC) 75.

[12694] ● Detenu's liability to be tried in criminal Court.—The fact the petitioner could be tried for the commission of offences disclosed on the ground is immaterial because his liability to be tried in a Court of law cannot debar the authority concerned from detaining him if his acts bring his case within the purview of Section 3 of the Act. The respective fields of operation of the law providing for trial and punishment for the commission of the offences and of Maintenance of Internal Security Act, 1971 are not co-extensive. One is meant to punish for past offence while the other is designed to prevent the person concerned from future mischief irrespective of his liability to be punished in a Court of law on the basis of the same facts. Indradeo Mahato v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1973 SC 1062 : (1974) 4 SCC 4 : 1973 SCC (Cri) 645 (649) : 1973 CrLJ 862 : 1973 CrLR (SC) 301.

[12695] ● Failure to mention period of detention in order of confirmation by Govt. no illegality.—S. 13 of the Maintenance of Internal Security Act, 1971, as amended by S. 6(d) of the Defence of India Act, 1971, provides that the maximum period for which any person may be detained shall be twelve months from the date of detention or until the expiry of Defence of India Act, 1971, whichever is latter. This statutory provision places an outside limit on the period of detention and the proviso to Section 13 leaves it open to the appropriate Government to revoke or modify the order of detention at any earlier time. It is, therefore, not possible to say that the failure to mention the period of detention in the order for confirmation constituted an illegality vitiating the order of detention. Habibullah Khan v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1974 SC 493 : (1974) 4 SCC 275 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 437 (439, 440) : 1974 CrLR (SC) 114 : 1974 CrLJ 461 : 1974 UJ (SC) 105.

[12696] ● Order of detention—When not bad in law.—Merely because the detaining authority had chosen to base the order of detention on the discharge of the petitioner by Court for want of evidence, it cannot be held that the order is bad in law. Golam Hussain alias Gama v. Commissioner of Police, AIR 1974 SC 1336 : (1974) 4 SCC 530 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 566 : (1974) 3 SCR 613.

[12697] ● Detention—Vague and uncertain ground supplied.—Constitution of India, Art. 22(5).—It is well-settled that in a case of preventive detention under the Act it is absolutely necessary to communicate the grounds of detention to the detenue in clear and unambiguous terms giving as such particulars as will facilitate making of an effective representation in order to satisfy the detaining authority that the order is unfounded or invalid. Ajit Kumar Kaviraj v. District Magistrate, Birbhum, AIR 1974 SC 1917 : (1975) 3 SCC 264 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 872 (873) : 1974 CrLJ 1304.

[12698] ● Power to detain and right to liberty to be balanced.—The jurisprudence dealing with the prohibitory detention or preventive detention is well settled and it can no longer be a valid contention that because the accused had been discharged in a criminal case, the ground of charge cannot be relied upon by the appropriate authority, passing an order of preventive detention. The former relates to the prohibitory branch of criminal law and relies on the past commission the latter to the preventive branch of social defence and protect the community for future injury. It is not possible to urge that simply because a man has been discharged in a criminal case those grounds cannot be grounds for preventive detention. But there must be live link between the grounds of criminal activities alleged by the detaining authority and the purpose of detention. This credible chain will be snapped if there is too long and unexplained an interval between the offending acts and the order of detention. There must be proximity, but no mechanical test of counting months of interval can be laid down—it depends on the nature of the acts alleged or relied, gravity of the situation and the reason for the delay. It is in that background only it can be said that casual connection is broken. The power to detain and right to liberty must be harmoniously balanced in the large interest of the community. Golam Hussain alias Gama v. Commissioner of Police, AIR 1974 SC 1336 : (1974) 4 SCC 530 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 566 : (1974) 3 SCR 613.

[12699] ● Detention order on cyclostyled sheet.—The mere fact that detention order was on cyclostyled sheet wherein necessary particulars were filled in ink would not go to show that the particulars in ink were filled subsequent to the signing of the detention order. Sk. Ibrahim v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1974 SC 736 : (1975) 3 SCC 13 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 709 (710) : 1974 CrLJ 657 : 1974 CrLR (SC) 101 : (1974) 2 SCR 803.

[12700] ● Detention for unlawful possession of Railway property.—The District Magistrate, in his counter affidavit says, that the goods which were recovered from the godown of the petitioner are of a special kind used exclusively by the Railways and are not available in the open market. The petitioner has produced stamped receipt in respect of the purchases made by him and those receipts show that even sales tax and surcharge on sales-tax was charged on the sale price. All that the District Magistrate says in regard to the receipt is that "The receipts which have been annexed to the writ petition would not be of any material assistance''. This statement makes no sense because the receipts constitute the very foundation of the petitioner's defence to the charge that he was in unlawful possession of railway property. On the material which was available to the detaining authority, it was impossible to arrive at the conclusion that the possession of the petitioner was unlawful. Srilal Shaw v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1975 SC 393 : (1975) 1 SCC 336 : 1975 SCC (Cri) 172 (174, 175) : 1975 CrLJ 423.

[12701] ● Detention order—Wagon breaking—No referring to any incident of.—In the particulars furnished to the petitioner it was mentioned that he had committed theft of an elective copper wire and of an aluminium conductor wire on April 16 and April 24, 1972. In the affidavit filed in this Court by the Deputy Secretary, Home (Special) Department Government of West Bengal, it in stated in paragraph 8, that the record showed that the petitioner was "a notorious, anti-social and criminal indulging in wagon breaking and theft of overhead electric copper wire''. The particulars furnished to the petitioner do not refer to any incident of wagon breaking and, therefore, the petitioner had no opportunity of making an effective representation to the Government. It is clear from the affidavit that the detaining authority was influenced by the consideration that the petitioner was concerned with incidents involving breaking of wagons. The order is also in violation of Art. 22(5) of the Constitution. Fogla & S.K. Jalil v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1975 SC 245 : (1974) 4 SCC 501 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 537 (538) : 1974 CrLJ 1252 : 1974 CrLR (SC) 383.

[12702] ● Petitioner when discharged in two criminal cases.—Solely or mainly because the petitioner has been discharged in two criminal cases he is not entitled to be enlarged from preventive captivity. Sadhu Ray v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1975 SC 919 : (1975) 1 SCC 660 : 1975 SCC (Cri) 296 (301) : 1975 CrLJ 785.

[12703] ● Order under Section 3(1)(a) MIS Act against undertrial prisoner in Jail Custody.—Section 3(1)(a) of the Maintenance of Internal Security Act, 1971 presuppose that on the date of the order of detention or in the near future the person sought to be detained has or will have freedom of action. If a person, therefore, is serving a long term of imprisonment or is in jail custody as an undertrial and there is no immediate or early prospect of his being released on bail or otherwise the authority cannot legitimately be satisfied on the basis of his past history or antecedents that he is likely to indulge in similar prejudicial activities after his release in the distant or indefinite future. Dulal Ray v. District Magistrate, Burdwan, AIR 1975 SC 1508 : (1975) 1 SCC 837 : 1975 SCC (Cri) 329 : 1975 CrLJ 1322 : 1975 CrLR (SC) 147.

[12704] ● Period of detention contemplated for set officer Section 428, CrPC.—It is true that S. 428 Cr.P. Code speaks of the "period of detention" undergone by an accused person but it expressly says that the detention mentioned refers to the detention during the investigation, enquiry or trial of the case in which the accused person has been convicted. The section makes it clear that the period of detention which it allows to be set off against the term of imprisonment imposed on the accused on conviction must be during the investigation, enquiry or trial in connection with the "same case'' in which he has been convicted. Govt. of Andhra Pradesh v. Anne Venkateswara Rao, AIR 1977 SC 1096 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 508 (513) : (1977) 3 SCC 298 : 1977 CrLJ 935 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 155 : (1977) 3 SCR 7 : 1977 Cr App R (SC) 193.

[12705] ● Section 428, CrPC provides only for set off.—S. 428 of the CrPC provides that the period of detention of an accused as an under-trial prisoner shall be set off against the term of imprisonment imposed on him on conviction. This section only provides for a "set-off'', it does not equate an "under-trial detention or remand detention with imprisonment on conviction''. The provision as to set-off expresses a legislative policy; this does not mean that it does away with the difference in the two kinds of detention and puts them on the same footing for all purposes. Govt. of Andhra Pradesh v. Anne Venkateswara Rao, AIR 1977 SC 1096 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 508 (512) : (1977) 3 SCC 298 : 1977 CrLJ 935 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 155 : (1977) 3 SCR 7 : 1977 Cr App R (SC) 193.

[12706] ● Representation not considered vitiates order of detention.—Representation made by the counsel on instructions from his client, namely, the detenu, was not considered by the Government at all. The High Court was in error in construing the representation made by the petitioner as being made not by him but by his counsel. It is manifest that the counsel had no personal matter and he was only advocating the cause of his client. In matters where the liberty of the subject is concerned and a highly cherished right is involved, the representations made by the detenu should be construed liberally and not technically so as to frustrate or defeat the concept of liberty engrained in Article 21. As the representation has not been considered at all by the Government which it was duty bound to consider, that by itself vitiates the order of detention. Balchand Chorasia v. Union of India, AIR 1978 SC 297 : (1978) 1 SCC 161 : 1978 SCC (Cri) 77 : 1978 CrLJ 159.

[12707] ● Subjective satisfaction of authority vitiated when.—It is well-settled that the subjective satisfaction requisite on the part of the detaining authority, the formation of which is a condition precedent to the passing of the detention order will get vitiated if material or vital facts which would have a bearing on the issue and would influence the mind of the detaining authority one way or the other are ignored or not considered by the detaining authority before issuing the detention order. Ashadevi v. K. Shivraj, AIR 1979 SC 447 : (1979) 1 SCC 222 : 1979 SCC (Cri)

[12708] ● Power to preventively detain person not to be exercised except in accordance with constitutional safeguards.—It is now settled law that the power to preventively detain a person cannot be exercised except in accordance with the constitutional safeguards provided in Cls. (4) and (5) of Art. 22 of the Constitution and if any order of detention is made in violation of such safeguards, it would be liable to be struck down as invalid. It is immaterial whether these constitutional safeguards are incorporated in the law authorising preventive detention, because even if they are not, they would be deemed to be part of the law as a super-imposition of the Constitution which is the supreme law of the land and they must be obeyed on pain of invalidation of the order of detention. Vimal Chand Jawantraj Jain v. Pradhan, AIR 1979 SC 1501 : (1979) 4 SCC 401 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 4 (7) : 1979 CrLJ 1131 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 647 : (1979) 3 SCR 1007 : 1979 UJ (SC) 814.

[12709] ● Detention Authority to communicate grounds on which order made.—When any person is detained in pursuance of an order made under any law providing for preventive detention, the authority making the order shall, as soon as may be, communicate to such person the "grounds'' on which the order has been made and shall afford him the earliest opportunity of making representation against the order. These procedural safeguards are ingrained in our system by political interpretation. Narendera Purshotam Umrao v. B.B. Gujral : Vijayaben Purshotam v. B.B. Gujral, AIR 1979 SC 420 : (1979) 2 SCC 637 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 557 (563) : 1979 CrLJ 469 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 50.

[12710] ● Purpose of detention under COFEPOSA Act not punitive.—COFEPOSA Act 1974.—The purpose of detention under the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, 1974 is not punitive but preventive. The purpose is to prevent organised activities and to conserve and augment foreign exchange. Bhawarlal Ganeshmalji v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1979 SC 541 : (1979) 1 SCC 465 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 318 (321) : 1979 CrLJ 462 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 380 : (1979) 2 SCR 633.

[12711] ● Detention of under trial for more than sentence period.—Constitution of India, Art. 21.—The under trial persons who are accused of multiple offences and who have already been in jail for the maximum term for which they could be sentenced on conviction, even if the sentence awarded to them were consecutive and not concurrent, should not be allowed to continue to remain in jail for a moment longer, since such continuance of detention would be already violative not only of a human dignity but also of their fundamental right under Art. 21 of the Constitution. It is therefore, directed that these undertrial prisoners be therefore forthwith. Hussainara Khatoon v. Home Secretary, State of Bihar, AIR 1979 SC 1819 (1819) : 1980 SCC (Cri) 57 : 1979 CrLJ 1134.

[12712] ● Power of Central Govt. to revoke order of detention.—"The power conferred on the Central Government by S. 11 of the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, 1974, is wide enough to enable the Central Government to revoke the detention order at any stage for the words used are a detention order may at any time be revoked or modified.'' The power of the Central Government to revoke the order of detention implies that the detenu can make a representation for exercise of that power. . . . In any event it is clear that a representation properly addressed by the detenu to the Central Government was not forwarded to the Central Government and as such no action had been taken up to date. It may be permissible for the Central Government to take reasonable time for disposing any revocation petition. But it would not be justified by ignoring the representation for revocation of the detention as a statutory duty is cast upon the Central Government. It is necessary that the Government should apply its mind and either revoke the order of detention or dismiss the petition, declining to order for revocation. Shyam Ambalal Siroya v. Union of India, AIR 1980 SC 789 : (1980) 2 SCC 346 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 447 (450) : 1980 CrLJ 555 : (1980) 2 SCR 1078 : 1980 UJ (SC) 372.

[12713] ● Detention of accused for six years—Release of.—Criminal Procedure Code, 1973, Section 167(2).—The accused were kept in custody for 6 years and the Magistrate concerned mechanically authorised repeated detentions unconscious of the provisions which obligated him to monitor the proceedings which warrant such detention. S. 167(2) empowers the Magistrate to authorise detention of an accused in such custody as he thinks fit for a term not exceeding 15 days in the whole. More importantly, there is a precious interdict protective of personal freedom which states that no Magistrate shall authorise detention of the accused person exceeding 90 days in grave cases and 60 days in lesser cases. The petitioners were ordered to be released forthwith. Mantoo Majumdar v. State of Bihar, AIR 1980 SC 847 : (1980) 2 SCC 406 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 504 : 1980 CrLJ 546 : 1980 Cr App R (SC) 117 : 1980 UJ (SC) 452 : 1980 BLJ 368.

[12714] ● Order to bind over—Condition precedent.—Criminal Procedure Code, 1973, Section 110.—There is not slightest doubt that expressions like by habit, "habitual", "desperate", "dangerous", "hazardous" cannot be flung in the face of a man with laxity of semantics. Thus Court must insist on specificity of facts and be satisfied that one swallow does not make a summer and a consistent course of conduct convincing enough to draw the rigorous inference that by confirmed habit, which is second nature, the counter-petitioner is sure to commit the offences mentioned if he is not kept captive. Preventive sections preventive if freedom, of uncautiously proved by indolent judicial processes, may do deeper injury. They will have the effect of detention of one who has not been held guilty of a crime and carry on with it judicial imprimatur, to boot. To call a man dangerous is itself dangerous; to call a man desperate it to affix a desperate adjective to stigmatise a person as hazardous to the community is itself a judicial hazard unless compulsive testimony carrying credence is abundantly available. A sociologist may pardonably take the view that it is the poor man, the man without political clout the person without economic stamina, who in practice gets caught in the coils of Section 110 of the Code, although we, as Court cannot subscribe to any such proposition on mere assertion without copious substantiation. Even so the Court cannot be unmindful of social realities and be careful to require strict proof when-personal liberty may possibly be the casualty. After all, the judicial process must not fail functionally as the Protector of personal liberty. Gopalanachari v. State of Kerala, AIR 1981 SC 674 : 1980 Supp SCC 649 : 1981 CrLJ 337 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 546 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 94.

[12715] ● Order of detention with grounds of detention—When served on detenu.—Conservation of foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, 1974, Section 3.—When an order of detention together with the grounds of detention is served on a detenu, the detenu may ask for particulars on which a ground is based if they are not already there. When a document contains what are called "grounds" which often consist of the background of a case, narration of facts and instances of the detenu's activities, the detenu is not entitled to know which part or parts of the 'grounds' was or were taken into consideration and which not. The Court may not take into consideration any reply given by the detaining authority to such an enquiry; for, the reply may be an afterthought. It will be for the Court to judge whether the facts narrated constitute a ground of detention or which facts might possibly enter and influence the detaining authority in coming to its subjective satisfaction. The information sought as per Clause (4) of the letter, namely, the provision under which the import of Palladium is prohibited is equally untenable. Whether or not the import of Palladium is prohibited or not is an information on a question of law and can be obtained from Statutes, Rules or Notifications. In our opinion, the Government is not under any liability to furnish the detenu with legal information available from legal literature. The liability of the detaining authority is only to comply with the requirement of sub-article (5) of Article 22 of the Constitution. The submission of learned counsel is that the detenu even did not know whether Palladium was a precious metal belonging to the platinum group and the Government's failure to furnish him with that 'information' prevented him from filing a proper representation. We are unable to accept this submission, inasmuch as the plea is not permissible on the ground of public policy, for, any detenu may plead that he does not know whether gold or silver is a precious metal. Hemlata Kantilal Shah v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1982 SC 8 (12) : 1982 SCC (Cri) 16 : 1982 CrLJ 150 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 644.

[12716] ● Documents relied on by authorities not furnished with grounds of detention.—COFEPOSA Act, 1974, S. 3.—Perusal of the grounds of detention would show that the pivotal ground on the basis of which the detenu was detained was the allegation that he smuggled out huge amount of silver from India to foreign countries. The documents regarding the facts mentioned in the grounds of detention referred to above and relied upon by the detaining authority were not admittedly furnished to the detenu at the time when the grounds were served on him or pari passu the same. On the other hand, these documents were supplied to him much later, i.e., on January 5, 1981. This infirmity, therefore, is clearly violative of the Constitutional safeguard enshrined in Art. 22(5) of the Constitution, as held by this Court in a series of cases. Mohd. Zakir v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1982 SC 696 : (1982) 3 SCC 216 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 695 (696) : 1982 CrLJ 611 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 568.

[12717] ● Copies of documents and material in support of grounds of detention not supplied alongwith grounds of detention.—It is true that under sub-s. (3) of S. 3 of the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, 1974 it is provided that for the purpose of Art. 22(5) of the Constitution, the communication to a person detained in pursuance of the detention order of the grounds on which the order has been made shall be made as soon as may be after the detention, but ordinarily not later than five days, and in exceptional circumstances and for reasons to be recorded in writing, not later than fifteen days, from the date of detention. This provision under which five days' period in normal circumstances and fifteen days' period in exceptional circumstances has been provided relates to the supply or communication of the grounds on which the order of detention has been made to the detenu. It has no reference to the documents and material on the basis of which the detention order has been made and it is quite clear that there is no reason why the documents and materials in support of the grounds on the basis of which the detention order has been made, the same being ex-hypothesis in existence at the time of the issuance of the detention order and framing of the grounds, should not be supplied to the detenu alongwith the grounds. Non-supply of such material and documents alongwith the grounds would clearly amount to a violation of the safeguard guaranteed under Art. 22(5) of the Constitution. Sunil Dutt v. Union of India, AIR 1982 SC 53 : (1982) 3 SCC 405 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 62 (64, 65) : 1982 CrLJ 193 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 535.

[12718] ● Acquittal of accused by High Court.—Criminal Procedure Code, 1973, S. 426.—The petitioner had been acquitted by the High Court before any of the orders of detention were made against him. There can be no question of the detention being considered as detention pursuant to conviction; nor can the detention be treated as that of an under-trial. It is only in circumstances where the prisoner would have unquestionably been in detention in connection with a criminal case if he had not preventively detained, his preventive detention might be reckoned as detention as an under-trial prisoner or detention pursuant to conviction, for the purposes of S. 428, CrPC. Champalal Poonjaji Shah v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1982 SC 791 : (1982) 1 SCC 507 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 265 (267) : 1982 CrLJ 612 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 61 : (1982) 3 SCR 61 : 1982 UJ (SC) 166.

[12719] ● Documents relied on by authorities not supplied with grounds of detention.—COFEPOSA Act, 1974, S. 3.—It is manifest that the question of demanding the documents is wholly irrelevant because it is the Constitutional mandate which requires the detaining authority to give the documents relied on or referred to in the order of detention pari passu the grounds of detention in order that the detenu may make an effective representation immediately instead of waiting for the documents to be supplied with. In the instant case, the detenu did make a representation promptly on Dec. 30, 1980 but was seriously handicapped in making an effective representation because the aforesaid documents which were of vital importance were not supplied to him. Mohd. Zakir v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1982 SC 696 : (1982) 3 SCC 216 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 695 (696) : 1982 CrLJ 611 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 568.

[12720] ● Detention not illegal.—COFEPOSA Act, 1974.—The passage of time from the date of initial apprehension of the detenu and the making of the order of detention was not occasioned by any laxity on the part of the agencies concerned, but was the result of a full and detailed consideration of the facts and circumstances of the case by the various departments involved. It cannot be held that there was any tardiness of any one or that the detention is in any manner illegal. Ashok Narain v. Union of India, AIR 1982 SC 1222 : (1982) 2 SCC 437 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 466 (467) : 1982 CrLJ 1729 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 285 : 1982 UJ (SC) 484.

[12721] ● Single solitary instance of attempt to export Indian currency to foreign countries.—It was contended for the detenue that a single solitary instance of attempt to export Indian currency to foreign countries in hardly sufficient to warrant an inference that the detenu will repeat his activity in future also and his detention may be necessary to prevent him from so doing in future. . . . An inference in each case will depend on the nature of the act and the attendant circumstances. In the present case, the detenue tried to export Indian currency to the tune of Rs. 2,88,900 to a foreign country in a planned and premeditated manner by clever concealment of it in several parts of his baggage. This fully justified the detaining authority in coming to the conclusion that he might repeat his illegal act in future also and that his detention was necessary to preventing him from repeating the same in future. His past act in the circumstances might be an index of his future conduct. Saraswathi Seshagiri v. State of Kerala, AIR 1982 SC 1165 : (1982) 2 SCC 310 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 423 (426) : 1982 CrLJ 1251 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 252 : 1982 UJ (SC) 389.

[12722] ● Non-application of mind of detaining authority.—In every infraction of law having a penal sanction by itself is a ground for detention danger looms large that the normal criminal trials, and criminal Courts set up for administering justice will be substituted by detention laws often described as lawless law. There is not the slightest suggestion that witnesses are not forthcoming in respect of the alleged infraction of law. Why the normal investigation was not pursued is a question difficult to answer. If in respect of the incident of January 10, 1981, a charge could have been laid under S. 307, IPC, on the face of it, a serious charge, the detenu as accused could have been arrested and if he moved for bail the same could have been legally resisted. The incident dated August 1, 1981 at best disclosed a threat and the offence could at best be one under Section 504 and 506, IPC. It is not made clear in the return why normal procedure of investigation, arrest and trial has not been found adequate to thwart the criminal activities of the detenue it is not for a moment suggested that power under the preventive detention law cannot be exercised where a criminal conduct which could not be easily prevented, checked or thwarted, would not provide a ground sufficient for detention under the preventive detention laws. But it is equally important to bear in mind that every minor infraction of law cannot be upgraded to the height of an activity prejudicial to the maintenance of public order. Non-application of the mind of the detaining authority becomes evident from the frivolity of grounds on which the detention order is founded. Jaya Mala v. Home Secretary, Government of Jammu & Kashmir, AIR 1982 SC 1297 : (1982) 2 SCC 538 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 502 (504) : 1982 CrLJ 1777 : 1982 UJ (SC) 859 : 1982 Cr App R (SC) 241 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 441.

[12723] ● Past conduct or antecedent history of person be taken into consideration in making detention order.—The past conduct or antecedent history of a person can appropriately be taken into account in making a detention order. It is indeed largely from prior events showing tendencies or inclinations of a person that an inference can be drawn whether he is likely in the future to act in a manner prejudicial to the maintenance of supplies and services essential to the community or his act of violation of foreign exchange regulations and his smuggling activities are likely to have deleterious effect on the national economy. Hemlata Kantilal Shah v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1982 SC 8 : (1981) 4 SCC 647 : (1981) 4 SCC 647 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 16 : 1982 CrLJ 148 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 587. TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) Saraswathi Seshagiri v. State of Kerala, AIR 1982 SC 1165 : (1982) 2 SCC 310 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 423 : 1982 CrLJ 1251 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 252 : 1982 UJ (SC) 389.

[12725] ● Preventive detention devised to afford protection to society.—Those who are responsible for the national security or for the maintenance of public order must be the sole Judges of what the national security or public order requires. Preventive detention is devised to afford protection to society. The object is not to punish a man for having done something but to intercept before he does and to prevent him from doing. Justification for such detention is suspicion or reasonable probability and not criminal conviction which can only be warranted by legal evidence. It follows that any preventive measures even if they involve some restraint or hardship upon individuals, do not partake in any way of the nature of punishment, but are taken by way of precaution to prevent mischief to the State. It is a matter of grave concern that in urbanised areas like cities and towns and particularly in the metropolitan city of Delhi the law and order situation is worsening everyday and the use of knives and fire-arms have given rise to a new violence. There is a constant struggle to control the criminal activities of the persons engaged in such organised crimes for the maintenance of public order. It is difficult to appreciate the argument that the detention here is with a view to punish the detenu for a series of crimes that he is alleged to have committed, but which the law enforcement agency is not able to substantiate. There is no reason why the executive cannot take recourse to its power of preventive detention in those cases where the Court is genuinely satisfied that no prosecution could possibly succeed against the detenu because he is a dangerous person who has overawed witnesses or against whom no one is prepared to depose. Ashok Kumar v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1982 SC 1143 : (1982) 2 SCC 403 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 451 (457, 458) : 1982 CrLJ 1191 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 289 : (1982) 3 SCR 707 : 1982 UJ (SC) 4845.

[12726] ● Person against whom detention order proposed to be made in Jail.—Undoubtedly, for a period of one month and 18 days the detenu was in jail, his bail application having been rejected nearly 25 days before the date of the impugned detention order. It is difficult to appreciate how the District Magistrate was subjectively satisfied that a detention order in respect of the detenu was necessary with a view to preventing him from acting in a manner prejudicial to the maintenance of public order. This aspect we have most meticulously examined in four decision of this Court, and therefore, we need not examine the same again. As early as in Rameshwar Shah v. D.M. Burdwan, AIR 1964 SC 334 : (1964) 4 SCR 921 : (1964) 1 CrLJ 257 and as late as in Vijay Kumar v. State of J&K, AIR 1982 SC 1023 : (1982) 2 SCC 43 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 348 : 1982 CrLJ 988, the two recent most decisions in Biru Mahto v. D.M. Dhanbad, AIR 1982 SC 1539 : (1982) 3 SCC 322 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 31 : 1982 CrLJ 2354 : (1982) 1 Crimes 57 and M. Satya Narayana v. State of A.P., AIR 1982 SC 1543 : (1982) 3 SCC 301 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 18 : 1982 CrLJ 2357 : (1983) 1 Crimes 267, it has been held that one can envisage a hypothetical case in which a preventive detention order may have to be made against a person already deprived of his personal liberty by being confined or detained in Jail but in such a situation the detaining authority must show awareness of this fact that the person against whom the detention order is proposed to be made is already in Jail and is incapable of acting in a manner prejudicial to the maintenance of public order and yet for the reason which may appeal to the District Magistrate on which his subjective satisfaction is grounded a preventive detention order is required to be made. It is further held that this awareness must appear either in the order or in the affidavit justifying the impugned detention order when challenged. Neither in the order nor in the affidavit we find even a whimper of this aspect, being present to the mind of the detaining authority while making the detention order. Devi Lal Mahto v. State of Bihar, AIR 1982 SC 1548 : (1982) 3 SCC 328 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 37 (39) : 1982 CrLJ 2363 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 485 : 1982 Cr App R (SC) 395 : (1983) 1 SCR 630 : 1983 UJ (SC) 894.

[12727] ● Detaining authority not chosen to file affidavit.—"In this case the District Magistrate, the detaining authority, has not chosen to file his affidavit. The affidavit in opposition is filed by a Sub-Inspector of Police. Would this imply that Sub-Inspector of Police had access to the file of the decision of the District Magistrate for making the detention order. . . We have serious apprehension as to whether the District Magistrate completely abdicated his functions in favour of the Sub-Inspector of Police. The file was not available to the Court. But number of inferences are permissible from the fact that the District Magistrate though a party did not file his affidavit justifying the order and left it to the Sub-Inspector of Police to fill in the bill. And the Sub-Inspector of Police does not say how he came to know about the subjective satisfaction of the District Magistrate. He does not say that he had access to the file or he is making the affidavit on the basis of the record maintained by the District Magistrate. Therefore, the inference is irresistible that at the behest of the Sub-Inspector of Police who appears to be the Investigating Officer in some criminal case in which each of the detenu is implicated, the District Magistrate completely abdicating his responsibilities, made the detention order. . .

If the District Magistrate is to act in the manner he has done in this case by completely abdicating his functions in favour of an officer of the level of a Sub-Inspector of Police, the safeguards noticed by this Court are likely to prove wholly illusory and the fundamental right of personal liberty will be exposed to serious jeopardy.'' Merugu Satyanarayana v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1982 SC 1543 : (1982) 3 SCC 301 : (1983) SCC (Cri) 18 (25, 26) : 1982 CrLJ 2357 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 488 : (1983) 1 SCR 635.

[12728] ● Mere service of grounds of detention not complaint.—It has undoubtedly been held by this Court in several cases, a mere service of the grounds of detention is not a compliance of the mandatory provisions of Art. 22(5) of the Constitution unless the grounds are accompanied with the documents which are referred to or relied on in the grounds of detention. In view of this serious lacuna, the continued detention of the petitioner becomes void. Ram Baochan Dubey v. State of Maharashtra, (1982) 3 SCC 383 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 59 (60) : 1983 CrLR (SC) 532 (2).

[12729] ● Grounds of detention identical.—The grounds of the detention in respect of the detenu-petitioner and his brother Dharamraj Raj, Ram Kedar Dubey were absolutely identical and the approving authority had before it the grounds in case of Dharam Ram Kedar Dubey in these circumstances, therefore it cannot be said that there was no application of mind by the approving authority to the grounds of detention on the basis of which the petitioner was detained because the identical grounds were undoubtedly considered by the approving authority. Ram Baochan Dubey v. State of Maharashtra, (1982) 3 SCC 383 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 59 (60) : 1983 CrLR (SC) 532 (2).

[12730] ● Right of detenu to be represented by friend.—The right of the detenu to be represented by a friend, who in truth and substance is not a legal practitioner, cannot be disputed and no reasons were given by the Board why it was denied to the petitioner. There is nothing to suggest that the petitioner wanted to be represented by any so called friend who in reality was a legal practitioner. The counsel for the respondent urged that the petitioner had not furnished the name of the friend so as to enable the Board to ascertain whether the friend was a lawyer or not but the Board could have asked the petitioner to do so. Abdul Zabbar v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1983 SC 505 : (1984) 1 SCC 443 : 1984 CrLJ 853 : 1984 CrLR (SC) 141.

[12731] ● Identical ground—No sufficient cause of detention.—If the detaining authority in the instant case were apprised that the Advisory Board had reported on examining, inter alia, an identical ground that there was no sufficient cause for detention of another person involved in the same transaction, it may not have passed the order of detention against the petitioner, which is based on similar facts. It is clear that Shamsi was detained for engaging in a smuggling activity arising out of the same incident and transaction which forms the subject-matter of ground 1 in the instant case. The opinion of the Advisory Board that there was no sufficient cause for Shamsi's detention may not have been binding on the detaining authority which ordered the detention of the petitioner but, it cannot be gainsaid that the fact that the Advisory Board had recorded such an opinion and identical facts involving a common ground was atleast a relevant circumstance which ought to have been placed before the detaining authority in this case. That ground is similar to one of the grounds on which Shamsi was detained, the transaction being one and the same as also the incident on which the two orders of detention are based. That is why the opinion of the Advisory Board in Shamsi's case becomes relevant in the petitioner's case. The failure of the State Government to place before the detaining authority in the instant case, the opinion which the Advisory Board had recorded in favour of a detenu who was detained partly on a ground relating to the same incident deprived the detaining authority of an opportunity to apply its mind to a piece of evidence which was relevant, if not binding. Mohd. Shakeel Wahid Ahmed v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1983 SC 541 : (1983) 2 SCC 392 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 509 (511, 512) : 1983 CrLJ 967 : 1983 CrLR (SC) 243 : (1983) 2 SCR 614 : (1983) 1 Crimes 1013.

[12732] ● Basis of order of preventive detention reasonable prognosis of future behaviour.—National Security Act, 1988, S. 3.—The basis of an order of preventive detention is the reasonable prognosis of the future behaviour of the person based upon his past conduct. It is open to the detaining authority to take note of the past conduct of detenu and apprehending repetition of such conduct in future an order of detention can be made with a view to preventing such action. District Magistrate, Now Gong v. Sarat Mudoi, AIR 1984 SC 43 : (1984) 1 SCC 25 : 1984 SCC (Cri) 21 (25) : 1983 CrLJ 1728 : 1983 CrLR (SC) 487 : (1983) 3 SCR 957.

[12733] ● Power of revocation statutory power.—The power of revocation conferred on the Central Government under Section 14 of the National Security Act, 1980 is a statutory power which may be exercised on information received by the Central Government from its own sources including that supplied by the State Government under sub-section (5) of Section (3) or from the detenu in the form of petition for representation. It is for the Central Government to decide whether or not it should revoke the order of detention in a particular case. In the present case, the detenue was not deprived of the right of making a representation to the detaining authority under Art. 22(5) of the Constitution read with Section 8(9) of the Act. Although the detenu had no right to simultaneously make a representation against the order of detention to the Central Government under Art. 22(5) and there was no duty cast on the State Government to forward the same to the Central Government, nevertheless the State Government forwarded the same forthwith. The Central Government duly considered that representation which in effect was nothing but a representation for revocation of the order of detention under S. 14 of the Act. That being so it was not obligatory on the part of the Central Government to consider a second representation for revocation under S. 14. We may profitably refer to Phillipa Anne Duke case 1982 SCC (Cri) 444 where some similar circumstances it was held that failure of the Central Government to consider a representation for revocation of an order of detention under S. 11(1)(b) of the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act handed over to the Prime Minister during her visit to England did not render the continued detention invalid. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Zavad Zama Khan, AIR 1984 SC 1095 : (1984) 3 SCC 505 : 1984 SCC (Cri) 425 (432) : 1984 CrLJ 922 : 1984 CrLR (SC) 280 : (1984) 3 SCR 789 : 1984 UJ (SC) 964 : (1984) 2 Crimes 1.

[12734] ● Duty of authority passing detention order.—This Court has observed in numerous cases that while passing orders of detention great care must be taken by the detaining authority. Preventive detention is a necessary evil but essentially an evil. Therefore, deprivation of personal liberty, if at all, has to be on the strict terms of the Constitution. Nothing less. State of Punjab v. Jagdev Singh Talwandi, AIR 1984 SC 444 : (1984) 1 SCC 596 : 1984 SCC (Cri) 135 (145) : 1984 CrLJ 177 : 1984 CrLR (SC) 409 : (1984) 2 SCR 50 : (1984) 1 Crimes 224.

[12735] ● Detenu not entitled to be informed of source of information.—The detenu is not entitled to be informed of the source of information received against him or the evidence which may have been collected against, as, for example, the evidence corroborating that the report of the CID is true and correct. State of Punjab v. Jagdev Singh Talwandi, AIR 1984 SC 444 : (1984) 1 SCC 596 : 1984 SCC (Cri) 135 (147) : 1984 CrLJ 177 : 1984 CrLR (SC) 409 : (1984) 1 Crimes 224.

[12736] ● Details of prejudicial activity given in ground of detention.—The detenu reminded the detaining authority that the CID report did not refer to any speech made by him in a shaheedi conference at a given time, on a given date at a given place at Baba Bakala and before a Sikh gathering numbering 2000/2200. The detaining could not have possibly replied to that question by saying merely that the detenue was right. The detenu was right only formally or technically. That is because, the CID report supplied to him alongwith the grounds of detention with the express stipulation that it formed "the base of the grounds of detention''. The grounds mention every one of the details which need have been mentioned. The CID report was furnished to the detenu as forming the source of information leading to the conclusion that he had made a speech which necessitated his detention in the interests of public order. In the circumstances, the grounds and the material furnished to the detenu have to be read together as if the material in the form of the CID report was a continuation of the grounds of detention. State of Punjab v. Jagdev Singh Talwandi, AIR 1984 SC 444 : (1984) 1 SCC 596 : 1984 SCC (Cri) 135 (142) : 1984 CrLJ 177 : 1984 CrLR (SC) 409 : (1984) 2 SCR 50 : (1984) 1 Crimes 224.

[12737] ● One of grounds mentioned in order old and stale.—The first ground mentioned in the order of detention was that the detenu alongwith the companion surrounded one Kanhiya Lal Sharma and had committed an offence under S. 307 of the IPC on or about 10th April, 1981. Apart from the fact that the ground was old and stale, it is irrelevant in as much as the detenu has been acquitted on 2nd February, 1984 whereas the detention order was passed on 29th February, 1984. The respondents in their counter do not dispute this position but state that the information had not reached the detaining or the recommending authority. In certain criminal charges mentioned in grounds numbers 2, 3, 4 and 5, there is no difficulty in arresting the detenu. The grounds mentioned therein are not of such magnitude as to amount to apprehend disturbance of public order, nor was there any evidence that for any conduct of the detenu public order was endangered, or there could be reasonable apprehension about it. Ajay Dixit v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1985 SC 18 : (1984) 4 SCC 400 : 1984 SCC (Cri) 625 (632, 633) : 1985 CrLJ 487 : 1984 CrLR (SC) 443 : (1985) 1 SCR 843 : (1984) 2 Crimes 766.

[12738] ● Grounds of detention stale and irrelevant—When.—When a challenge is made to a detention on the grounds that the stale and irrelevant grounds were the basis for the detention then the detenu is entitled to be released and to that extent the order is subject to judicial review not on the ground of sufficiency of the grounds nor the truth of the grounds but only about the relevancy of the grounds which would come under judicial scrutiny. Ajay Dixit v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1985 SC 18 : (1984) 4 SCC 400 : 1984 SCC (Cri) 625 (632) : 1985 CrLJ 487 : 1984 CrLR (SC) 443 : (1985) 1 SCR 843 : (1984) 2 Crimes 766.

[12739] ● Preventive detention not beyond judicial scrutiny.—Bihar control of crimes Act, 1981, Section 2(D)(1)(ii) and (iv) and 12.—Preventive detention is considered so treacherous and such an anathema to cruised thought and democratic polity that safeguards against undue exercise of the power to detain without trial, have been built into the constitution itself and incorporated as Fundamental Rights. There are two sentinels, one at either end. The legislature is required to make the law circumscribing the limits within which persons may be preventively detained and providing for the safeguards prescribed by the Constitution and the Courts are required to examine when demanded whether there has been any excessive detention that is whether the limits set by the Constitution and Legislature have been transgressed. Preventive detention is not beyond judicial scrutiny. While adequacy or sufficiency may not be a ground of challenge, relevancy and proximity are certainly grounds of challenge. Nor is it for the Court to put itself in the position of the detaining authority and to satisfy itself that the untested facts reveal a path of crime. Vijay Narain Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 1984 SC 1334 : (1984) 3 SCC 14 : 1984 SCC (Cri) 361 (366) : 1984 CrLJ 909 : 1984 CrLR (SC) 240 : (1984) 3 SCR 435 : (1984) 1 Crimes 914.

[12740] ● Failure to file affidavit by District Magistrate not to vitiate order of detention.—In the matters of routine nature, if indeed there are any matters of a routine nature in the field of detention, a counter-affidavit may be sworn by a person who derives bus knowledge from the record of the case. However, in sensitive matters of the present nature, the detaining authority ought to file his own affidavits in answer to the writ petition and place the relevant facts before the Court which the Court is legitimately entitled to know. In Shark Hany v. State of W.B., AIR 1974 SC 679 : 1974 CrLJ 606 this Court held that the failure to furnish the counter-affidavit of the District Magistrate who had passed the order of detention, was an impropriety though in most of the cases it may not be of much consequence, especially if there was no allegation of mala fides against the detaining authority.

In the present case too there are no allegations of mala fides against the District Magistrate and so, his failure to file a counter affidavit will not vitiate the order of detention. We cannot, however, leave this subject without emphasising once again the importance of the detaining authority filing his own affidavit in cases of the present nature. There are degrees of impropriety and the line which divides grave impropriety from illegality is too thin to draw and even more so to Judge. Conceivably, there can be cases in which such impropriety arising out of the failure of the detaining authority in filing his own affidavit may vitiate the order of detention. State of Punjab v. Jagdev Singh Talwandi, AIR 1984 SC 444 : (1984) 1 SCC 596 : 1984 SCC (Cri) 135 (148, 149) : 1984 CrLJ 177 : 1984 CrLR (SC) 409 : (1984) 1 Crimes 224.

[12741] ● Fresh order of detention under Section 11(2) of conservation of foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act.—Where an order is quashed by a Court in exercise of extra-ordinary jurisdiction, the power of making a fresh order under sub-section (2) of Section 11 as not available to be exercised. Ibrahim Bachn Bafan v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1985 SC 697 (700) : (1985) 2 SCC 24 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 149 : 1985 CrLJ 533 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 232 : 1985 (1) Crimes 602.

[12742] ● Words 'without prejudice'—Meaning.—The words without prejudice to the provision of S. 21 of the General Clauses Act, 1897'' used in S. 11(1) of the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, 1974 give expression to the legislative intention that without affecting that right which the authority making the order enjoys under S. 21 of the General Clauses Act, an order of detention is also available to be revoked or modified by authorities named in cls. (a) and (b) of S. 11(1) of the said Act. Power conferred under cls. (a) and (b) of S. 11(1) of the Act could not be exercised by the named authorities under S. 21 of the General Clauses Act as these authorities on whom such power has been conferred under the Act are different from those who made the orders. Therefore, conferment of such power was necessary as Parliament rightly found that S. 21 of the General Clauses Act was not adequate to meet the situation. Thus, while not affecting in any manner and expressly preserving the power under S. 21 of the General Clauses Act of the original authority making the order, power to revoke or modify has been conferred on the named authorities. Ibrahim Bachu Bafan v. State of Gujarat : Mithu Bawa Pandhiyar v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1985 SC 697 (699) : (1985) 2 SCC 24 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 149 : 1985 CrLJ 533 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 232 : (1985) 2 SCR 891 : (1985) 1 Crimes 602.

[12743] ● Detenu not entitled to disclosure of confidential source of information.—National Security Act, 1980, Section 10.—In order that personal freedom may not be curtailed beyond necessity and the administration may not make it an empty guarantee detailed provision were made in Art. 22 providing an effective procedure in the matter of making representation and scrutiny of the materials in the presence of the detenue and even hearing him, if he so desired by an independent Board with adequate judicial bias what that is so, the detenue is not entitled to a disclosure of the confidential source of information used in the grounds or utilised for the making of the order. What is necessary for the making of an effective representation is the disclosure of the material and not the source thereof. By indicating that the facts have been gathered from confidential reports, a suggestive disclosure of the source has also been made. State of Rajasthan v. Shamsher Singh, AIR 1985 SC 1082 (1085) : 1985 SCC (Cri) 421 : 1985 CrLJ 1348 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 270 : 1985 Cr App R (SC) 218 : (1985) 2 Crimes 242.

[12744] ● Detenu detained for being principal conspirator to smuggle hashish from Pakistan.—The detenu is one of the principle conspirators in the conspiracy to smuggle hashish into India from Pakistan and to smuggle it out of India. He is under detention from 23.3.84 under an order dated 11.1.84 by the Government of Maharashtra under S. 3(1) of the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, 1974. Anticipatory bail orders had been obtained by the detenue from the Punjab &

Haryana High Court which had been extended uptill 13.1.1984. There is no satisfactory material to hold that the detention authority was aware of the detenue having been granted anticipatory bail by the Punjab & Haryana High Court. In view of the above the detention order was not bad. Tusher Govindji Shah v. Union of India, AIR 1985 SC 511 (513) : (1985) 1 SCC 571 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 135 : 1985 CrLJ 793 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 143.

[12745] ● Detenu already in custody in connection with criminal case.—The liberty of a subject is a serious matter and it is not to be trifled with in casual, indifferent and routine manner. In the petition the detenue has given details of where he was taken and when. He has also referred to the circumstances that an application for bail was moved on his behalf on the 18th before the High Court and it was only thereafter that the order of detention was made. These facts have not been denied in the counter-affidavit filed by the respondents. There is nothing in record, either in the police dossier submitted to the DM for action or in any other document that the District Magistrate was aware that the petitioner was already in jail. There is nothing to indicate that the District Magistrate applied his mind to the question whether an order of detention under the Jammu & Kashmir Safety Act was necessary despite the fact that the petitioner was already in custody in connection with the criminal case. Jai Singh v. State of Jammu & Kashmir, AIR 1985 SC 764 (764) : (1985) 1 SCC 561 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 125 : 1985 CrLJ 527 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 140 : 1985 UJ (SC) 410.

[12746] ● Board to forward entire material before it alongwith its report to State Govt.—National Security Act, 1980, Section 11 and 12.—There is no dispute that the Board had not sent the entire record to the State Government under S. 11(2) of the National Security Act, 1980. The Board is required to submit its report and there is no obligation cast by the Act that the entire record of the Board should be placed before the State Government. It is, however, not disputed by learned Advocate General that the report of the Board is only a recommendation and the ultimate decision on the basis of the report as to what further action has to be taken is for the State Government to make S. 12 in its two sub-sections indicates two alternative courses open to the State Government on the basis of the report. If the Board is of the view that there is no sufficient cause for detention of the person, the appropriate Government is obliged to revoke the detention and release the detenue. On the other hand, where the Board is of the view that there is sufficient cause for the detention of the person, the appropriate Government may confirm the detention order and continue the detention. The two provisions have been expressed in different language. Where the report is against the detention no option is left to the State Government and a duty is cast on it to release the detenue. When the Board recommends that there is sufficient cause for detention, the State Government may confirm the detention or even revoke it. Since the final order has to be made by the State Government, we are inclined to agree with the submission that the entire record or at least all relevant materials should be available to the State Government when it proceeds to apply its mind to decide whether the detention should be continued or revoked. State of Rajasthan v. Shamsher Singh, AIR 1985 SC 1082 (1090) : 1985 SCC (Cri) 421 : 1985 CrLJ 1348 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 270 : (1985) 2 Crimes 242.

[12747] ● Appropriate Govt. to forward representation when received.—National Security Act, 1980, Section 10.—It is obligatory for the appropriate Government to forward the representation, when received to the Board without delay because unless on the basis of the representation the appropriate Government rescinds the order of detention, the representation is a document intended for the Board. Where the representation has been received the same should, as expeditiously as possible, reach the Board. In this case the State Government received the representation on August 30, 1984, and placed the same before the Board on September 6, 1984. Six clear days have intervened between the receipt of the representation by the Government and the placing thereof before the Board. Admittedly, if the representation had reached the Board by September 5, 1984, respondent would not be entitled to raise any objection. In the circumstances indicated it cannot be said to be non-compliance with Section 10 of the Act. State of Rajasthan v. Shamsher Singh, AIR 1985 SC 1082 (1087) : 1985 SCC (Cri) 421 : 1985 CrLJ 1348 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 270 : (1985) 2 Crimes 242.

[12748] ● No request by detenu for being represented by his friend.—In this case it is not the contention of the petitioner that the Advisory Board had the assistance of any lawyer or attorney when the matter of the detention of the detenue was examined and any request of the detenue for assistance by a lawyer was refused. There was no request at all by the detenue for assistance by friend who is not a lawyer when the matter of his detention came to be considered by the Advisory Board. In view of the above the detention is not bad. No principle of natural justice has been violated. Tushir Govendji Shah v. Union of India, AIR 1985 SC 511 (514) : (1985)

[12749] ● Grounds of detention verbatim reproduction of dossier submitted by senior Supdt. of Police.—The grounds of detention is a verbatim reproduction of the dossier submitted by the Senior Superintendent of Police, Udhampur to the District Magistrate requesting that a detention order may kindly be issued. At the top of the dossier, the name is mentioned as Sardar Ram Singh father's name is mentioned as Sardar Ram Singh and the address is given as village Bharakh, Tehsil Reasi. Thereafter it is recited "The subject is an important member of. . .'' Thereafter follow various allegation against Jai Singh paragraph by paragraph. In the grounds of detention, all that the District Magistrate has done is to change the first three words "the subject is'' into "you Jai Singh S/o. Ram Singh resident of village Bharakh, Tehsil Reasi.'' Thereafter word for word the Police dossier is repeated and the word "he'' wherever it occurs referring to Jai Singh in the dossier is changed into "you'' in the grounds of detention. We are afraid it is difficult to find greater proof of non-application of mind. Jai Singh v. State of Jammu & Kashmir, AIR 1985 SC 764 (764) : (1985) 1 SCC 561 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 125 : 1985 CrLJ 527 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 140 : 1985 UJ (SC) 410.

[12750] ● Non-application of mind by detaining authority to relevant material.—From what has been stated in the counter filed by the Union of India and the two counters filed by the State of Rajasthan it appears to be clear to us that the documents mentioned by the appellant in his petition were not placed before the detaining authority and, therefore, were not considered by the detaining authority. It is possible that they were placed before the screening Committee in the first instance, but that is immaterial. It was the detaining authority that had to consider the relevant material before taking a decision whether it was necessary to detain the appellant under the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, 1974. That was not done and there was, therefore, a clear non-application of mind by the detaining authority to relevant material. Sita Ram Somani v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1986 SC 1072 : (1986) 2 SCC 86 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 104 (107) : 1986 CrLJ 860 : (1986) CrLR (SC) 145 : (1986) 2 Crimes 233.

[12751] ● Detaining authority not sole Judge of what national security or public order requires.—It is well-settled that the detaining authority is not the sole Judge of what national security or public order requires. But neither is the Court the sole Judge of the position. When power is given to an authority to act on certain facts and if that authority acts on relevant facts and arrives at a decision which cannot be described as either irrational or unreasonable, in the sense that no person instructed in law could have reasonably taken that view, then the order is not bad and the Court cannot substitute its decision or opinion, in place of the decision of the authority concerned on the necessity of passing the order. Raj Kumar Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 1986 SC 2173 : (1986) 4 SCC 407 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 481 (487) : 1986 CrLJ 2042 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 462 : 1986 Cr App R (SC) 266.

[12752] ● Exact information received from intelligence source not made available to petitioner.—COFEPOSA 1974.—It may be that the exact information received from the intelligence source had not been made available to the petitioner or placed on record but sufficient material with reference to the intelligence report had been made available. In that view of the matter, there is no force in this submission. Asha Keshavrao Bhosale v. Union of India, AIR 1986 SC 283 (288) : (1985) 4 SCC 361 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 561 : 1986 CrLJ 177 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 4 : 1985 (2) Crimes 799.

[12753] ● Detenu under trial likely to get bail.—The order of detention was passed as the detaining authority was apprehensive that in case the detenu was released on bail he would again carry on his criminal activities in the area. If the apprehension of the detaining authority was true, the bail application had to be opposed and in case bail was granted, challenge against that order in the higher forum had to be raised. Merely on the ground that an accused in detention as an under-trial prisoner was likely to get bail, an order of detention under the National Security Act should not ordinarily be passed. In the circumstance, the order of detention not sustainable. Ramesh Yadav v. District Magistrate, AIR 1986 SC 315 (316) : (1985) 4 SCC 232 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 514 : 1986 CrLJ 312 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 451 : 1985 UJ (SC) 1045 : (1985) 2 Crimes 728.

[12754] ● Grounds served in English—Detenu pleading he only knew Gujarati.—COFEPOSA Act, 1974, Section 3(3).—In this case it is to be born in mind that the grounds were given on 25th June, 1984 following the search and seizure of gold biscuits from his room in the hotel in his presence and in the background of the mercy petition as we have indicated he was in constant touch with his daughter and sons and there is no evidence that these people did not know Hindi or English. Indeed they knew English as well as

Hindi. It is difficult to accept the position that in the peculiar facts of this case, the grounds were not communicated in the sense the grounds of detention were not conveyed to the detenue Venilal. Whether the grounds were communicated or not depends upon the facts and circumstances of each case. Prakash Chandra Mehta v. Commissioner and Secretary, Government of Kerala, AIR 1986 SC 687 (697) : 1985 SCC (Cri) 332 : 1986 CrLJ 786 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 301 : (1985) 3 SCR 697.

[12755] ● Provisions of Section 10 of National Security Act mandatory.—National Security Act, 1980, Section 10.—Section 10 of the National Security Act, 1980, are mandatory and non-compliance with or infraction thereof would certainly be fatal. S. 10 provides that the State Government has the obligation to cause the papers relating to detention to be placed, alongwith the representation, if made within three weeks from the date of detention before the Advisory Board. The requirement of Section 10, of the Act are mandatory and therefore the failure to place the representation before the Advisory Board within the time vitiates the detention. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Mahant Singh, AIR 1986 SC 207 : (1986) 4 SCC 624 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 56 (58) : 1986 CrLJ 22 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 20 : 1986 UJ (SC) 451 : 1985 (2) Crimes 969.

[12756] ● Solitary incidents—Petitioner indulging in smuggling of gold.—Having regard to the nature of the activity of smuggling, an inference could legitimately be drawn even from a single incident of smuggling that the petitioner was indulging in smuggling of gold. Moreover, the written statement given by the petitioner clearly indicated that the petitioner was engaged in the business of purchase and sale of foreign marked gold and that this incident in which he was caught was not a solitary incident. The facts stated by the petitioner in his written statement could legitimately give rise to the inference that the petitioner was a member of a smuggling syndicate and merely because only one incident of smuggling by the petitioner came to light it did not mean that this was the first and only occasion on which the petitioner had smuggle gold. Shiv Ratan Makim v. Union of India, AIR 1986 SC 610 : (1986) 1 SCC 404 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 74 (77, 78) : 1986 CrLJ 813 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 89 : (1986) 1 Crimes 465.

[12757] ● Detenu pleading that he understood Gujarati language—Feigning ignorance of English.—"The Constitution requires that the grounds must be communicated. Therefore, it must follow as an imperative that the grounds must be communicated in a language understood by the person concerned so that he can make effective representation. Here the definite case of the petitioner's father is that he does not understand English or Hindi or Malayalam and does understand only Gujarati language. The facts revealed that the detenue Venilal was constantly accompanied and was in the company of his daughter as well as son. Both of them knew English very well. The father signed documents in Gujarati which was written in English which is his mercy petition in which he completely accepted that guilt of the involvement in smuggling. . . There is no rule of law that common sense should be put in cold storage while considering Constitutional provisions for safeguards against misuse of powers by authorities though there Constitutional provisions should be strictly construed. Bearing this salutary principle in mind and having regard to the conduct of the detenue—Venilal Mehta specially in the mercy petition and other communication, the version of the detenu Venilal is feigning lack of any knowledge of English must be judged in the proper perspective. He was, however, in any event given by 30th June, 1984, the Hindi translation of the grounds of which he claimed ignorance. The gist of the annexures which were given in Malayalam language had been stated in the grounds. That he does not know anything except Gujarati is merely the ipse dixit of Venilal Mehta and is not the last word and the Court is not denuded of its powers to examine the truth. He goes to the extent that he signed the mercy petition not knowing the contents, not understanding the same merely because his wife sent it though he was sixty years old and was in the business and he was writing at a time when he was under arrest, his room had been searched, gold biscuits had been recovered from him. The detaining authority rightly came to the conclusion that he knew both Hindi and English. It has been stated so in the affidavit filed on behalf of the respondent. We are of the opinion that the detenue, Venilal Mehta was merely feigning ignorance of English. Prakash Chandra Mehta v. Commissioner and Secretary, Government of Kerala, AIR 1986 SC 687 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 332 : 1986 CrLJ 786 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 301 : 1985 Cr App R (SC) 266 : (1985) 3 SCR 697.

[12758] ● No indication that service of order of detention factor or question that detenu might be released or possibility of his release taken into consideration.—In this case there were grounds for the passing of the detention order but after that the detenu has surrendered for whatever reasons, therefore, the order of detention though justified when it was passed but at the time of the service of the order there was no proper consideration of the fact that the detenue was in custody or that there was any real danger of his release. Nor does it appear that before the service there was consideration of this aspect properly. In the facts and circumstances of this case, therefore, the continued detention of the detenu under the Act is not justified. It is well settled in our Constitutional frame work that the power of directing preventive detention given to the appropriate authorities must be exercised in exceptional cases as contemplated by the various provisions of the different statutes dealing with preventive detention and should be used with great deal of circumspection. There must be awareness of the facts necessitating preventive custody of a person for social defence. If a man in custody and there is no imminent possibility of his being released, the power of preventive detention should not be exercised. In the instant case, when the actual order of detention was served upon the detenue, the detenue was in Jail. There is no indication that this factor or the question that the said detenue might be released or that there was such a possibility of his release was taken into consideration, by the detaining authority properly and seriously before the service of the order. Binod Singh v. District Magistrate, Dhanbad, AIR 1986 SC 2090 : (1986) 4 SCC 416 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 490 (494, 495) : 1986 CrLJ 1959 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 451 : (1986) 3 SCR 905 : (1986) 3 Crimes 284.

[12759] ● Conduct of detenu prejudicial to maintenance of supplies and services essential to commodity.—In the instant case the conduct of the detenue was prejudicial to the maintenance of supplies and services essential to the community in general as contemplated by S. 3(2),of the National Security Act and not in any particular mode contemplated by Explanation of S. 3(1) of the Prevention of Black Marketing and Maintenance of Supplies of Essential Commodities Act, 1980 and as such is not excluded by the Explanation to sub-s. (2) of S. 3 of the Act. Detention under S. 3(2). National Security Act is sustainable. Suraj Pal Sahu v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1986 SC 2177 : (1986) 4 SCC 378 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 452 (463) : 1986 CrLJ 2047 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 462 : (1986) 3 SCR 837.

[12760] ● Proper opportunity to make representation given.—The documents relied on were duly supplied. From the records it is clear that proper opportunity to make a representation was given and the representation made to the Advisory Board was duly considered by the Advisory Board. Their recommendations were also duly considered by the State Government. In the premises there is no substance in the grievance that the procedural safeguards had not been followed. It further appears to us that there was rational subjective satisfaction arrived at bona fide on the basis of the materials available to the detaining authority and the materials had rational nexus with the purpose and object of the detention as contemplated by the Act. Suraj Pal Sahu v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1986 SC 2177 : (1986) 4 SCC 378 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 452 (474) : 1986 CrLJ 2047 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 462 : (1986) 3 SCR 837.

[12761] ● Preventive detention laws as to be applied with circumspection.—Preventive detention for the social protection of the community is a hard law but it is a necessary evil in the modern society and must be pragmatically continued, so that it works. But simply because it is an evil, it cannot be so interpreted as to be inoperative in any practical manner. Judged by all relevant standards, the impugned order of detention in the case of the petitioner cannot be said to be either illegal or beyond the authority of law. Raj Kumar Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 1986 SC 2173 : (1986) 4 SCC 407 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 481 (487, 489) : 1986 CrLJ 2042 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 462 : (1986) 3 SCR 913 : (1986) 2 UJ (SC) 614 : JT 1986 SC 555 : 1986 (3) Crimes 252.

[12762] ● Man found not guilty in criminal trial not determinative of factors alleged.—The fact that a man was found not guilty in a criminal trial would not be determinative of the factors alleged therein. All these factors must be objectively considered and if there are casual connections and if bona fide belief was formed then there was nothing to prevent from serving an order of preventive detention even against a person who was in Jail custody if there is imminent possibility of his being released and set at liberty if the detaining authority was duly satisfied. Suraj Pal Sahu v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1986 SC 2177 : (1986) 4 SCC 378 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 452 (474) : 1986 CrLJ 2047 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 462 : (1986) 3 SCR 837 : JT 1986 SC 538.

[12763] ● Unsuccessful judicial trial or proceeding not operate as bar to detention order.—Even unsuccessful judicial trial or proceeding would, not operate as a bar to a detention order or render it mala fide. If the failure of the criminal prosecution can be no bar to the making of an order of detention, a fortiori the mere fact that a criminal prosecution can be instituted cannot operate as a bar against the making of an order of detention. If an order of detention is made only in order to bypass a criminal prosecution which may be irksome because of the inconvenience of proving guilt in a Court of law, it would certainly be an abuse of power of preventive detention and the order of detention would be bad. But if the object of making the order of detention as to prevent the commission in future of activities injurious to the community, it would be a perfectly legitimate exercise of power to make the order of detention. The Court would have to consider all the facts and circumstances of the case in order to determine on which side of the line the order of detention falls. Shiv Ratan Makim v. Union of India, AIR 1986 SC 610 : (1986) 1 SCC 404 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 74 (79) : 1986 CrLJ 813 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 89 : (1986) 1 Crimes 465.

[12764] ● Petitioner caught in act of smuggling gold.—In this case the petitioner was caught in the act of smuggling gold and the circumstances in which the gold was being smuggled as also the facts set out in the written statement of the petitioner clearly indicate that the petitioner was engaged in the activity of smuggling gold and if that be so, it is not possible to say that the order of detention was passed by the second respondent with a view to subverting, supplanting or substituting the criminal law of the land. The order of detention was passed plainly and indubitably with a view to preventing the petitioner from continuing the activity of smuggling and it was therefore, a perfectly valid order of detention. Shiv Ratan Makim v. Union of India, AIR 1986 SC 610 : (1986) 1 SCC 404 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 74 (79, 80) : 1986 CrLJ 813 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 89 : (1986) 1 Crimes 465.

[12765] ● Detaining authority to take into consideration rational grounds.—Having regard to the purpose of the Act, the detaining authority must take into consideration rational grounds and that should be the basis for the horoscope for the future, so as to determine whether the person proposed to be detained comes within the mischief of the National Security Act, 1980. If the person is in detention or is under trial and his conviction is unlikely but his conduct comes within the mischief of the said Act then the authority is entitled to take a rational view of the matter. The grounds must be there. The decision must be bona fide. Suraj Pal Sahu v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1986 SC 2177 : (1986) 4 SCC 378 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 452 (473) : 1986 CrLJ 2047.

[12766] ● Speeches referred to in certain grounds for detention as part of continuous course of conduct.—The crux of allegation in grounds Nos. 1 and 2 was that he was a leader of Naya Sikkim Party, that as the leader of the party he had addressed public meetings at various places and times condemning the merger of Sikkim with India, pleaded for the establishment of Sikkim as it existed prior to merger and exhorted the people to fight against the Govt. of India to establish 'Sikkimese Sikkim'. The speeches referred to in ground No 1 are mentioned as a part of the continuous course of conduct brought out by the remaining grounds. Sonam Yongda (Ex-Captain) presently detained in Hazaribagh Central Jail, Bihar v. State of Sikkim, AIR 1986 SC 1736 : (1986) 3 SCC 594 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 341 (342) : 1986 CrLJ 1606 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 344.

[12767] ● Detaining authority jurisdiction to pass order during pendency of criminal case.—Unfortunately the High Court viewed at as a question of jurisdiction that is to say, the High Court thought that the detaining authority had jurisdiction to make the order of detention despite the retraction by the accused of his earlier confessional statement and the pendency of the criminal case against the appellant in which bail had been granted subject to condition. No one can dispute the right of the detaining authority to make an order of detention if on a consideration of the relevant material, the detaining authority came to the conclusion that it was necessary to detain the appellant. But the question was whether the detaining authority applied its mind to relevant considerations. If it did not, the appellant would be entitled to be released. Sita Ram Somani v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1986 SC 1072 : (1986) 2 SCC 86 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 104 (107) : 1986 CrLJ 860 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 145 : (1986) 2 Crimes 233 (SC).

[12768] ● Detenu under trial prisoner.—The detaining authority was not made aware at the time, the detention order was made that the detenu had moved applications for bail in the three pending cases and that he was enlarged on bail on January 13, 1986, January 14, 1986 and January 15, 1986. We have gave through the detention order carefully. There is absolutely no mention in the order about the fact that the petitioner was an under-trial prisoner, that he was arrested in connection with the three cases, that applications for bail were pending and that he was released on three successive days in the three cases. This indicates a total absence of application of mind on the part of detaining authority while passing the order of detention. In the result we set aside the judgment of the Bombay High Court under appeal, quash the order of detention. Anant Sakharam Raut v. State of Maharashtra : Leela Anant Raut v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1987 SC 137 : (1986) 4 SCC 771 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 535 (536) : 1987 CrLJ 323 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 549 : JT 1986 SC 847 : (1987) 1 SCR 221 : (1986) 3 Crimes 584.

[12769] ● Advisory Board referring to evidence to defence witnesses in report.—"We do not think it is incumbent upon the Advisory Board to refer in detail the evidence of defence witnesses in its report. It will not be unreasonable to presume that all the records including the deposition of the said defence witness were before the confirming authority. It will be mere surmise to hold that the confirming authority had not applied his mind to the deposition of the defence witness, even though such deposition has been referred to in the report of the Advisory Committee.'' Madhu Khanna v. Administrator, Union Territory of Delhi, AIR 1987 SC 48 : (1986) 4 SCC 240 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 426 (431) : 1987 CrLJ 318 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 401 : JT 1986 SC 401.

[12770] ● Detaining authority not filing affidavit.—In the instant case, the detaining authority, respondent No. 2, has not come forward to file an affidavit stating whether he has taken into consideration the fact that the appellant was already in judicial custody and on considering his past activities he was subjectively satisfied that if set free or released from Jail custody on bail, there was likelihood of the appellant indulging in criminal activities endangering public order. On the other hand, the Station Officer of the Police Station, Kydganj, Shri D.P. Ojha has filed a counter stating that the District Magistrate passed the impugned detention order when the appellant was already in Jail on the apprehension that the appellant is likely to be released on bail in the near future and if the appellant is bailed out, the public order will become worse. This clearly goes to show that the Sub-Inspector has arrogated to himself the knowledge about the subjective satisfaction of the District Magistrate on whom the power is conferred by the Act. The District Magistrate, the detaining authority in this case, has not chosen to file his affidavit. The affidavit in opposition filed by the Station Officer of Police implies that he has access to the file of the District Magistrate or he influenced the decision of the District Magistrate for making the detention order. Gulab Mehra v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1987 SC 2332 : (1987) 4 SCC 302 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 721 (735) : 1988 CrLJ 168 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 637 : JT 1987 (4) SC 559 : (1988) 1 SCR 126 : 1987 (3) Crimes 405.

[12771] ● No material to show that detenu would repeat misconduct.—While detaining under Section 3 National Security Act, there must be material to show that the detenue would act in the future to the prejudice of the maintenance of public order. Though the satisfaction of the District Magistrate is subjective in nature but even the subjective satisfaction must be based upon some pertinent material. Fazal Ghosi v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1987 SC 1877 : (1987) 3 SCC 502 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 596 (597) : 1987 CrLJ 1910 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 470 : JT 1987 (4) SC 22 : (1987) 3 SCR 471 : 1987 (2) Crimes 892.

[12772] ● Petition challenging preventive detention on ground of non-application of mind.—Mr. Jethmalani has rightly commented that when the allegation was that there was no application of mind in the making of the preventive detention, the return should have come either from the detaining authority or a person who was directly connected with the making of the order and not by Shri Tripathi who filed the affidavit on the basis of the record of the case. Tsering Dolkar (Mrs.) v. Administrator, Union Territory of Delhi, AIR 1987 SC 1192 : (1987) 2 SCC 69 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 275 (278) : 1987 CrLJ 988 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 265.

[12773] ● Detention order—Subjective satisfaction of detaining authority.—The subjective satisfaction of the detaining authority as regards the factual existence of the condition on which the order of detention can be made i.e. the ground of detention constitutes the foundation for exercise of the power and the civil Court cannot be invited to consider the propriety or sufficiency of the grounds. But it does not imply that the subjective satisfaction of the detaining authority is wholly immune from the power of judicial review. It inferentially follows that the subjective satisfaction being a condition precedent for the exercise of the power conferred on the executive, the Court can always examine whether the requisite satisfaction was arrived at by the authority; if it is not, the condition precedent to the exercise of the power would not be fulfilled and the exercise of the power would be bad. The simplest case is where the authority had not applied its mind at all; in such a case, the authority could not possibly be satisfied as regards the fact in respect of which it is required to be satisfied. Pushpadevi M. Jatia v. M.L. Wadhavan, Addl. Secretary, Government of India : Pushpadevi Jatia v. Union of India, AIR 1987 SC 1748 : (1987) 3 SCC 367 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 526 : 1987 CrLJ 1888.

[12774] ● Right to make representation guaranteed.—It goes without saying that the Constitutional right to make a representation guaranteed by the Art. 22(5) of the Constitution must be taken to include by necessary implication the Constitutional right to a proper consideration of the representation by the authority to whom it is made. The right of representation under Art. 22(5) is a valuable right and is not a mere formality. The representation made by the appellant addressed to the Chief Minister could not lie unattended to in the portals of the Secretariat while the Chief Minister was attending to other political affairs. Nor could the Government keep the representation in the archives of the Secretariat till the Advisory Board submitted its report. Mohinuddin v. District Magistrate, Beed, AIR 1987 SC 1977 : (1987) 4 SCC 58 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 674 (682) : 1987 CrLR (SC) 560 : (1987) 3 SCR 668 : JT 1987 (4) SC 173 : (1987) 3 Crimes 1.

[12775] ● Habeas corpus—Rule issued by Supreme Court or High Court proper person to file affidavit in return District Magistrate.—In return to a rule nisi issued by this Court or the High Court in a habeas corpus petition, the proper person to file the same is the District Magistrate who had passed the impugned order of detention and he must explain his subjective satisfaction and the grounds therefor, and if for some good reason the District Magistrate is not available, the affidavit must be sworn by some responsible officer like the Secretary or the Deputy Secretary to the Government in the Home Department who personally dealt with or processed the case in the Secretariat or submitted it to the Minister or other officer duly authorised under the Rules of Business framed by the Governor under Art. 166 of the Constitution to pass orders on behalf of the Government in such matters. Mohinuddin v. District Magistrate, Beed, AIR 1987 SC 1977 : (1987) 4 SCC 58 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 674 (679, 680) : 1987 CrLR (SC) 560 : JT 1987 (4) SC 173 : (1987) 3 SCR 668 : 1987 (3) Crimes 1.

[12776] ● Preventive detention—Grounds of—Variation between Tamil and English version.—The learned caused for the petitioner has contended that there is variation between Tamil and English version of the grounds of detention served on the petitioner. The order of detention in English states that the detention order has been passed to prevent the detenue from indulging in smuggling activities, while the grounds furnished to him in Tamil discloses that the detention order has been passed with a view to prevent him from transporting contraband goods. The English version would bring the ground under S. 3(1)(i) of the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, 1974 while the Tamil version would bring it under S. 3(1)(iii) of the Act. The detenue knows only Tamil. The alleged difference between the two versions is not consequential. The order of detention and grounds accompanied clearly spelt out why the detenue was being detained. We are not persuaded to hold that the two versions are so different as to cause any prejudice to the detenue. A. Alangarasamy v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1987 SC 1725 : (1987) 3 SCC 159 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 477 (478) : 1987 CrLJ 1887 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 305 : (1987) 2 UJ (SC) 115 : (1987) 2 Crimes 210.

[12777] ● No power of Court to substitute period of detention either by abridging or enlarging it.—This pertinent to observe that the Court has no power to substitute the period of detention either by abridging or enlarging it. The only power that is available to the Court is to quash the order in case it is found to be illegal. That being so, it would not be open to the Court to reduce the period of detention by admitting the detenue on parole. Poonam Lata v. M.L. Wadhawan, AIR 1987 SC 1383 : (1987) 3 SCC 347 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 506 (517) : 1987 CrLJ 1130 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 410 : JT 1987 (3) SC 204 : (1987) 2 SCR 1123.

[12778] ● Detention order—Computation of period.—COFEPOSA Act, 1974, Section 3(ii).—The objective underlying preventive detention cannot be achieved or fulfilled if the detenu is granted parole and brought out of detention. Even if any conditions are imposed with a view to restrict the movements of the detenue while on parole, the observance of those conditions can never lead to an equation of the period of parole with the period of detention. It will therefore, be futile to contend that the period of parole of a detenue has all the trapping of detention in prison and as such both the periods should find a natural merger and they stand denuded of their distinctive characteristics. Their plea for treating the period of parole on part of the detention has to necessarily fail. Pushpadevi M. Jatia v. M.L. Wadhvan, Addl. Secretary, Govt. of India : Pushpadevi Jatia v. Union of India, AIR 1987 SC 1748 : (1987) 3 SCC 367 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 526 (555) : 1987 CrLJ 1888 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 447 : JT 1987 (2) SC 296 : (1987) 3 SCR 46 : 1987 (2) Crimes 705.

[12779] ● Non-mention of representation in declaration mere omission.—COFEPOSA Act, Section 9(ii).—In the circumstances, even though the representation has not been referred to in the declaration, there is ample evidence to show that respondent 2 had considered the representation before he made the declaration. The non-mention of the representation in the declaration seems to be a mere omission. There is, therefore, no merit in the contention of the appellant. Madhu Khanna v. Administrator, Union Territory of Delhi, AIR 1987 SC 48 : (1986) 4 SCC 240 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 426 (428, 429) : 1987 CrLJ 318 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 401 : JT 1986 SC 401.

[12780] ● Period of parole to be excluded while computing period of detention.—The period during which the detenue is on parole cannot be said to be a period during which he has been held in custody pursuant to the order of his detention, for in such a case he was not in actual custody. The order of detention prescribes the place where the detenue is to be detained. Parole brings him out of confinement from that place. Poonam Lata v. M.L. Wadhawan, AIR 1987 SC 1383 : (1987) 3 SCC 347 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 506 (516) : 1987 CrLJ 1130 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 410 : JT 1987 (3) SC 204 : (1987) 2 SCR 1123.

[12781] ● Grounds of detention should be in language understood by detenu.—There can be no two opinions that the requirement of law within the provisions of Art. 22(5) of the Constitution is that the detenue has to be informed about the grounds of detention in a language which he understands. The fact that the detenu's wife knew the language in which the grounds were framed does not satisfy the legal requirement. It must be made clear that the law laid down by this Court clearly indicates that in the matter of preventive detention, the test is not one of prejudice but one of strict compliance with the provisions of the Act and when there is a failure to comply with those requirements it becomes difficult to sustain the order. Tsering Dolkar v. Administrator, Union Territory of Delhi, AIR 1987 SC 1192 : (1987) 2 SCC 69 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 275 (279, 280) : 1987 CrLJ 988 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 265 : (1987) 2 SCR 323.

[12782] ● Habeas corpus petition—Non-compliance of statutory requirement as to reference to Advisory Board.—In a habeas corpus proceeding, it is not a sufficient answer to say that the procedural requirements of the Constitution and the statute have been complied with before the date of hearing and, therefore, the detention should be upheld. The procedural requirements are the only safeguards available to a detenue since the Court is not expected to go behind the subjective satisfaction of the detaining authority. The procedural requirements are, therefore, to be strictly complied with if any value is to be attached to the liberty of the subject and the Constitutional rights guaranteed to him in that regard. If a reference to an Advisory Board is to be made within three weeks, it is no answer to say that the reference, though not made within three weeks, was made before the hearing of the case. If the report of the Advisory Board is to be obtained within three months, it is no answer to say that the report though not obtained within three months, was obtained before the hearing of the case. If the representation made by the detenue is required to be disposed of within a stipulated period, it is no answer to say that the representation, though not disposed of within three months, was disposed of before the hearing of the case. Abdul Latif Abdul Wahab Sheikh v. B.K. Jha, AIR 1987 SC 725 : (1987) 2 SCC 22 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 247 (248, 249) : 1987 CrLJ 700 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 289 : (1987) 2 SCR 203.

[12783] ● Release of detenu by Supreme Court on parole.—It is the appropriate Government and not the Court which deals with a case of temporary release of the detenue since the Act authorises the appropriate Government to make an order of temporary release, invariably the detenue must go to the appropriate Government first. It may be that in a given case the Court may be required to consider the propriety of an adverse order by the Government in exercise of the jurisdiction under Section 12 of COFEPOSA Act, 1974. Whether it be under Art. 226 or Art. 32 of the Constitution, the Court would have no jurisdiction under the Act or under the general principles of law or in exercise of extra-ordinary jurisdiction to deal with the duration of the period of detention. There is no scope for entertaining an application for parole by the Court straightaway. Poonam Lata v. M.L. Wadhwan, AIR 1987 SC 1383 : (1987) 3 SCC 347 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 506 (518) : 1987 CrLJ 1130.

[12784] ● Public order and law and order—Two different concepts.—The true distinction between the areas of 'public order' and 'law and order' has not in the nature of quality of the act, but in the degree and extent of its reach upon society. The distinction between the two concepts of 'law and order' and 'public order' is a fine one but this does not mean that there can be no overlapping. Acts similar in nature but committed on different contexts and circumstances might cause different reactions. In the final analysis, therefore one has to turn to the facts of each case to ascertain whether the matter relates to the larger circle or the smaller circle. An act which may not at all be objected to in certain situation is capable of totally disturbing the public tranquility. When communal tension is high, an indiscreet act of no significance is likely to disturb or dislocate the even tempo of the life of the community. An order of detention made in such a situation has to take notice of the potentiality of the act objected to. No hard and fast rule can really be evolved to deal with problems of human society. Every possible situation cannot be brought under water tight classifications and a set of tests to deal with them cannot be laid down. As and when an order of detention is questioned, it is for the Court to apply those well-known tests to find out whether the impugned activities upon which the order of detention is grounded go under the classification of public order or belong to the category of the law and order. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Hari Shankar Tewari, AIR 1987 SC 998 : (1987) 2 SCC 490 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 388 (393, 394, 395) : 1987 CrLJ 840 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 340 JT (1987) 1 SC 563 : (1987) 2 SCR 426 : (1987) 1 Crimes 729. To the same effect : (1) Kanu Biswas v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1972 SC 1656 : (1972) 3 SCC 831 : 1973 SCC (Cri) 16 : 1972 CrLJ 1006 : 1972 UJ (SC) 80; (2) Superintendent, Central Prison v. Ram Manohar Lohia, AIR 1960 SC 633 : 1960 CrLJ 1002 : (1960) 2 SCR 821; (3) Madhu Limaye v. Sub Divisional Magistrate, AIR 1971 SC 2486 : (1970) 3 SCC 746 : 1971 CrLJ 1720 : (1971) 2 SCR 711; (4) Pushkar Mukherjee v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1970 SC 852 : (1969) 1 SCC 10 : 1970 CrLJ 852 : (1969) 2 SCR 635; (5) Ram Ranjan Chatterjee v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1975 SC 609 : (1974) 4 SCC 143 : 1975 SCC (Cri) 400 : 1975 CrLJ 588 : 1975 CrLR (SC) 241 : 1975 UJ (SC) 398 : (1975) 3 SCR 301; (6) Kuso Sah v. State of Bihar, AIR 1974 SC 156 : (1974) 1 SCC 185 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 84 : 1975 CrLJ 543 : 1974 CrLR (SC) 777 : (1974) 2 SCR 195; (7) Ashok Kumar v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1982 SC 1143 : (1982) 2 SCC 403 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 451 : 1982 CrLJ 1191 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 289 : (1982) 3 SCR 707 : 1982 UJ (SC) 484; (8) Babul Mitra v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1973 SC 197 : (1973) 1 SCC 393 : 1973 SCC (Cri) 353 : 1974 CrLJ 395 : 1973 CrLR (SC) 107; (9) Ram Manohar Lohia v. State of Bihar, AIR 1966 SC 740 : 1966 CrLJ 608 : (1966) 1 SCR 709; (10) Arun Ghosh v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1970 SC 1228 : (1970) 1 SCC 98 : 1970 CrLJ 1136 : (1970) 3 SCR 288.

[12785] ● Preventive detention—Object and purpose of.—The entire scheme of preventive detention is based on the bounden duty of the State to safeguard the interests of the country and welfare of the people from the canker of anti-national activities by antisocial elements affecting the maintenance of public order or the economic welfare of the country. Placing the interests of the nation above the individual liberty of the anti-social and dangerous elements who constitute a grave menace to society by this unlawful acts, the preventive detention laws have been made for effectively keeping out of circulation the detenus during a prescribed period by means of preventive detention. Pushpadevi M. Jatia v. M.L. Wadhwan, Addl. Secretary Government of India and Pushpa Devi Jatia v. Union of India, (1987) 3 SCC 367 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 526 (555).

[12786] ● Objective approach necessary.—The High Court might have appraised itself of the judgment in Shamsher Singh's case, AIR 1985 SC 1082 and decided the matter after taking into account the law laid down therein. The approach has to be an objective approach taking into account all the relevant circumstances and considerations in order to strike a balance between the need to protect the community on the one hand and the need to preserve the liberty of a citizen. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Hari Singh Thakur, AIR 1987 SC 2080 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 44 : 1987 CrLJ 1923 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 76 : JT 1987 (2) SC 709.

[12787] ● Detention of person not to be for longer period than three months.—The mandate of Article 22(4) of the Constitution is that no law providing for preventive detention shall authorise the detention of a person for a longer period than three months unless an Advisory Board consisting of persons who are, or have been, or are qualified to be appointed as, Judges of a High Court, has reported before the expiration of the said period of three months that there is in its opinion sufficient cause for such detention. Section 10 of the Gujarat Prevention of Anti-social Activities Act, 1985 provides for the Constitution of an Advisory Board, Section 11 provides for reference to the Advisory Board and Section 12 prescribes the procedure to be followed by the Advisory Board. What is intriguing in the case is that, on the date when the detention order was made, there was no Advisory Board in existence to which a reference could be made under Section 11 and whose report of its opinion regarding sufficient cause for the detention was required to be obtained within three months of the detention under Article 22(4) of the Constitution. The period of three weeks stipulated by Section 11 of the Act expired on July 14, 1986. The petitioner was entitled to be released on July 14, 1986 as no reference had been made to the Advisory Board within the period contemplated by Section 11 of the Act. But he was not so released. This state of affairs continued till August 7, 1986 when the order of detention dated June 23, 1986 was revoked and a fresh order of detention was made on the same facts, on the same day. The Advisory Board was constituted on August 18, 1986. A reference to the Advisory Board was made on August 20, 1986. The Advisory Board made its report on September 26, 1986. The report of the Advisory Board was more than three months after the detention which commenced on the making of the order of detention, though it was within three months from the date of the second order of detention. Abdul Latif Abdul Wahab Sheikh v. B.K. Jha, AIR 1987 SC 725 : (1987) 2 SCC 22 :

1987 SCC (Cri) 244 (246, 247) : 1987 CrLJ 700 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 289 : (1987) 2 SCR 203.

[12788] ● Cross-examination of witnesses on behalf of detaining authority by detenu.—It is not stated in any judgment of this Court that the witnesses on behalf of the detenue produced in rebuttal of the allegation against him cannot be cross-examined. The witnesses on behalf of the detaining authority cannot be cross-examined by the detenue. Cross-examination of such witnesses has to be by the detaining authority and that right cannot be denied to them. Harbans Lal v. M.L. Wadhawan, AIR 1987 SC 217 : (1987) 1 SCC 151 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 47 (54) : 1987 CrLJ 324 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 23 : (1987) 1 Crimes 89 : (1987) 1 SCR 425.

[12789] ● Supplementing grounds of detention by affidavit.—It is well settled that the detaining authority cannot by an affidavit filed in Court supplement what is stated in the grounds of detention or add to it. Ramveer Jatav v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1987 SC 63 : (1986) 4 SCC 762 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 10 (13) : 1987 CrLJ 321 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 109.

[12790] ● Every piece of evidence not to be mentioned in grounds of reaction of detaining authority.—It is not necessary to mention in the grounds the reaction of the detaining authority in relation to every piece of evidence, separately. Besides, the recital in Annexure B that the detaining authority formed his opinion after consideration of the aforesaid document by itself clearly implied that he was not impressed by the statement therein. The detenue cannot, therefore, be heard to say that he was prejudiced in any manner. State of Gujarat v. Sunil Fulchand Shah, AIR 1988 SC 723 : (1988) 1 SCC 600 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 201 (205) : 1988 CrLJ 933 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 125 : JT 1988 (1) SC 274 : (1988) 2 SCR 903.

[12791] ● Absence of affidavit by detaining authority—When.—In a case where a point as to absence of affidavit by the detaining authority arises the detaining authority should personally affirm on oath the stand taken on his behalf, but it cannot be suggested as an inflexible rule applicable to all detention cases irrespective of the circumstances. In the present case, a further affidavit by Sri Pavitra Naryana Roy Chaudhary, Deputy Secretary, Home department (Special) of the State of Gujarat was filed stating that the Home Minister Sri Prabodh Ravel who was authorised under the Rules of Business framed under Article 166 of the Constitution to pass orders on behalf of the Government in detention matters had ceased to be a Minister before the filing of the affidavit in the High Court and he was, therefore, not available. Sri M.T. Parmar, the then Deputy Secretary, Home Department was fully conversant with the case and had filed his affidavit. The original file was produced before us to dispel any suspicion about the detaining authority having considered the document dated Oct. 3, 1984 and having felt satisfied that it was a proper case for detention of respondent. In this background we do not attach much importance. State of Gujarat v. Sunil Fulchand Shah, AIR 1988 SC 723 : (1988) 1 SCC 600 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 201 (204) : 1988 CrLJ 933 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 125 : JT 1988 (1) SC 274.

[12792] ● Non-production of relevant materials.—The non-production of relevant materials, i.e. the statement of the under-trial prisoners in their application in the Court that the detenues had been falsely implicated in the crime case No. 450 of 1985 under Section 307/34, IPC as mentioned in ground No. 3 and also the statement to that effect in the bail petition and the police report thereon, before the detaining authority for his consideration before passing the order of detention, renders the order of detention invalid and illegal. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Kamal Kishore Saini, AIR 1988 SC 208 : (1988) 1 SCC 287 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 107 (116) : 1988 CrLJ 405.

[12793] ● Siphoning of foreign exchange illegally.—The role of the petitioner has been detailed in the grounds showing how he got illegally siphoned the foreign exchange to the tune of about 2 crores of rupees out of the country. Besides the aforementioned Sita Ram Aggarwal and the petitioner's nephew Subhash Aggarwal, the other associates working in accordance with the direction of the petitioner are mentioned alongwith their activities. The grounds also referred to the statements made by Sita Ram Aggarwal which indicated that the petitioner was traveling by air under assumed names and has been dodging the authorities when they attempted to contact him, before he was apprehended in a Calcutta Hotel. It is further said that the petitioner's firm M/s. B.N. Corporation of Hong Kong received remittances through Bank worth Rs. 85-90 lacs during the year 1986 but did not supply or ship any goods for which the invoices were supposed to have been issued. Some of the documents are alleged to bear his signatures. The statements indicate that the offences, in respect of which the detenue is accused of, are in language of MUKHERJI J. in Suraj Pal Sahu v. State of Maharashtra, 1986 SCC (Cri) 514. "so interlinked and continuous in character and are of such nature" that they, fully justified the detention order. In the circumstances we do not doubt the satisfaction of the detaining authority. Bal Chand Bansal v. Union of India, AIR 1988 SC 1175 : (1988) 2 SCC 527 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 356 (359) : 1988 CrLJ 1092 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 256 : JT 1988 (2) SC 65 : (1988) 3 SCR 494 : (1988) 2 Crimes 1.

[12794] ● Right to move Court for bail.—Every citizen in this country has the right to have recourse to law. He has the right to move the Court for bail when he is arrested under the ordinary law of the land. If the State thinks that he does not deserve bail the State could oppose the grant of bail. He cannot, however, be interdicted from moving the Court for bail by clamping an order of detention. Not a bold statement that the person would repeat his criminal activities would be enough. There must also be credible information or cogent reasons apparent on the record that the detenue, if enlarged on bail, would act prejudicially to the interest of public order.

There was no material made apparent on record that the detenu, if released on bail, is likely to commit activities prejudicial to the maintenance of public order. The detention order appears to have been made merely on the ground that the detenu is trying to come out on bail and there is enough possibility of his being bailed out. We do not think that the order of the detention could be justified only on that basis. Shashi Aggarwal v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1988 SC 596 : (1988) 1 SCC 436 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 178 (181, 182) : 1988 CrLJ 839 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 184 : JT 1988 (1) SC 83 : (1988) 2 SCR 593 : (1988) 3 Crimes 184.

[12795] ● Abscondence—Proof of—Police Diary.—The search for the absconding persons was being continued for two months till the detenu was arrested as is fully supported by the case diary of latter dates. In the meantime two applications for anticipatory bail were filed one after the other on behalf of Madhava Rao before the Criminal Court and it is true that the orders passed thereon did not state that the accused was absconding, but for that reason the diary of various dates mentioning the fact cannot be ignored and it is not legitimate to claim that Madhava Rao was not absconding. K. Aruna Kumari v. Government of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1988 SC 227 : (1988) 1 SCC 296 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 116 (122) : 1988 CrLJ 411 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 7 : JT 1987 (5) SC 378 : (1988) 1 SCR 973 : (1987) 3 Crimes 741.

[12796] ● Law and order or public order—Incidents affecting even tempo of life of community affects public order.—In the instant case, the criminal acts referred to in ground No. 1 are to the effect that on June 4, 1985 at about 11 p.m. some persons informed the complainant that his brother has been shot by some persons and when complainant reached the spot he found his brother lying in the pool of blood and he had already died. This incident is confined to individual persons and it is private crime as distinct from public crime. It does not in any way affect the even tempo of the life of the community nor does it affect the peace and tranquility of people of that particular locality where the crime has been committed. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Kamal Kishore Saini, AIR 1988 SC 208 : (1988) 1 SCC 287 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 107 (115) : 1988 CrLJ 405 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 40 : JT 1987 (5) SC 285 : (1988) 1 SCR 859.

[12797] ● Warrant—Jail authorities to find out whether prisoner to be detained in Tihar Jail or Juvenile Jail.—On the basis of the age indicated in the warrant, it shall be the obligation of the Jail authorities to find out, so far as Delhi is concerned, whether the prisoner covered by the warrant should be detained in the Tihar Jail or in the Juvenile Jail. Sanjay Suri v. Delhi Administration, Delhi, AIR 1988 SC 414 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 348 (354) : 1988 CrLJ 705 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 16 : JT 1987 (5) SC 606 : (1988) 2 SCR 234 : (1988) 1 Crimes 189.

[12798] ● Assistance of friend to detenu—Meaning of word "friend".—The rule in A.K. Ray's case, 1982 SCC (Cri) 152 made it clear that the detenue was entitled to the assistance of a friend. The word 'friend' used there was obviously not intended to carry the meaning of the term in common parlance. One of the meanings of the word "friend", according to the Collins English Dictionary is "an ally in fight or cause; supporter". The term "friend" used in the Judgments of the Supreme Court was more in this sense than meaning "a person known well to another and regarded with liking, affection and loyalty". A person not being a friend in the normal sense could be picked up for rendering assistance within the frame of the law as settled by this Court. The Advisory Board has, of course, to be careful in permitting assistance of a friend in order to ensure due observance of the policy of law that a detenu is not entitled to representation through a lawyer. As has been indicated by this Court, what cannot be permitted directly should not be allowed to be done in an indirect way. Sundararajan, in this view of the matter, was perhaps a friend prepared to assist the detenu before the Advisory Board and the refusal of such assistance to the detenue was not justified. It is not for this Court to examine and assess what prejudice has been caused to the detenue on account of such denial. This Court has reiterated the position that matter relating to preventive detention are strict proceedings and warrant full compliance with the requirements of law. In view of the position of law and the facts of the case, we must hold that the refusal by the Advisory Board to permit the detenue to be assisted by Sundararajan as a friend was bad and continued detention of the detenue became vitiated. Johney D'Couto v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1988 SC 109 : (1988) 1 SCC 116 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 70 (75, 76) : 1988 CrLJ 178 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 36 : JT 1987 (5) SC 248 : (1988) 1 SCR 787 : (1987) 3 Crimes 894.

[12799] ● Grounds indicating that detaining authority conscious of fact that petitioner in Judicial custody.—COFEPOSA, Act, 1974, Section 3(1)—A perusal of the grounds clearly indicates that the detaining authority was conscious of the fact that the petitioner was in judicial custody and was apprehensive that he would be released on bail. Bal Chand Bansal v. Union of India, AIR 1988 SC 1175 : (1988) 2 SCC 527 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 356 (359) : 1988 CrLJ 1092 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 256 : JT 1988 (2) SC 65 : (1988) 3 SCR 494 : (1988) 2 Crimes 1.

[12800] ● Jail authorities not to accept warrant unless age of detenu shown.—"We call upon every Magistrate or the trial Judge authorised to issue warrants for detention of prisoners to ensure that every warrant authorising detention specifies the age of the person to be detained. Judicial mind must be applied in cases where there is doubt about the age-not necessarily by a trial—and every warrant must specify the age of the person to be detained. We call upon the authorities in the jails throughout India not to accept any warrant of detention as valid one unless the age of the detenue is shown therein." Sanjay Suri v. Delhi Administration, Delhi, AIR 1988 SC 414 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 348 (353) : 1988 CrLJ 705 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 16 : JT 1987 (5) SC 606 : (1988) 2 SCR 234 : (1988) 1 Crimes 189.

[12801] ● Non-mentioning of detenu's name in FIR.—It is relevant to mention that the names of the detenus were not mentioned in the FIR in respect of incident in ground No. 1 and the basis of their complicity came to be known only in the material found in the course of the investigation. The detenus were supplied only with the copy of the FIR and also extract of the charge-sheet and not the statement under Section 161 of the Code of Criminal Procedure : This rendered the detention bad. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Kamal Kishore Saini, AIR 1988 SC 208 : (1988) 1 SCC 287 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 107 (112) : 1988 CrLJ 405 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 40 : JT 1987 (5) SC 285 : (1988) 1 SCR 859.

[12803] ● Law and order and public order—Criminal act emanating from business rivalry between detenu and complainant.—In the instant case, the alleged act of assault by fire-arms is confined to the complainant Surya Kumar and not to others. It is an act infringing law and order and the reach and effect of the act is not so extensive as to affect considerable members of the society. In other words, this act does not disturb public tranquility nor does it create any terror or panic in the minds of the people of the locality nor does it affect in any manner even tempo of the life of the community. This criminal act emanates from business rivalry between the detenus and the complainant. Therefore, such an act cannot be the basis for subjective satisfaction of the detaining authority to pass an order of detention. On the ground that the impugned act purports to affect public order i.e. even tempo of the life of the community. Subash Bhandari v. District Magistrate, Lucknow, AIR 1988 SC 74 : (1987) 4 SCC 685 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 36 (41) : 1988 CrLJ 190 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 61 : JT 1987 (5) SC 277 : (1988) 1 SCR 773 : (1987) 3 Crimes 686.

[12804] ● Law and order or public order Firing in public street affecting even tempo of life of community.—So far as the second crime referred to in ground No. 2 is concerned it is to the effect that the accused chased Ram Kumar and fired twice or thrice and in consequence of it Ram Kumar fell dead on the spot and Nand Kishore and the rickshaw-puller sustained injuries. This firing was made in a public street during the day time. This incident does affect public order as its reach and impact is to disturb public tranquility and it affects the even tempo of the life of the people in the locality where the incident is alleged to have occurred. Therefore, the finding of the High Court with regard to this incident that it did not disturb in any way the public order is not legal and valid. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Kamal Kishore Saini, AIR 1988 SC 208 : (1988) 1 SCC 287 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 107 (115) : 1988 CrLJ 405 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 40 : JT 1987 (5) SC 285 : (1988) 1 SCR 859.

[12805] ● Firing in Court compound—Act purports to disturb even tempo of life of community.—As regards the incident preferred to in ground No. 3 that is the complaint regarding the firing by Kamal Kishore Saini, the detenu on Vijay Pratap Singh, an under-trial prisoner, in the Court compound while he was being taken back from the Court by the complainant and other Policemen on duty, it undoubtedly affects public order inasmuch as the firing of shot in the Court compound created panic and terror in the minds of persons present there and, thus, it affects the even tempo of the life of the community in that place. This incident certainly affects public order and not merely law and order inasmuch as the reach, effect and potentiality of the act purports to disturb the even tempo of the life of the community, i.e., the people of that area. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Kamal Kishore Saini, AIR 1988 SC 208 : (1988) 1 SCC 287 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 107 (116) : 1988 CrLJ 405 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 40 : JT 1987 (5) SC 285 : (1988) 1 SCR 859.

[12806] ● Defence already under detention—Awareness of earlier detention enough.—When a detenu is already under detention for an offence, whether bailable or non-bailable, the detaining authority will take into his consideration the fact of detention of the detenue and, there must be compelling reasons to justify his preventive detention in spite of the fact that he is already under detention on a charge of a criminal offence. There must be material for such compelling reasons and the material or compelling reasons must appear from the grounds of detention that will be communicated to the detenu. In other words, two facts must appear from the grounds of detention, namely, (1) awareness of the detaining authority of the fact that the detenu is already in detention and (2) there must be compelling reasons, justifying such detention, despite the fact that the detenu is already under detention. In the instant case, it has been already noticed that the detaining authority was aware of the fact that the appellant was arrested and produced before the Additional Metropolitan Magistrate, New Delhi. The grounds of detention also disclosed compelling reasons that the appellant should be preventively detained under the Act in spite of his detention on a charge under Section 135 of the Customs Act. It is not the case of the appellant that the grounds of detention do not disclose compelling reasons. All that has been urged on behalf of the appellant is that there has been non-application of mind by the detaining authority of the fact of detention of the appellant. We are however unable to accept the contention that there has been non-application of mind by the detaining authority to the relevant facts. The detaining authority, besides being aware of the fact that the appellant was already in detention, has taken into consideration the relevant facts before passing the impugned order of detention under the Act, which is apparent from the grounds of detention. In the circumstances, the contention that the impugned order of detention should be struck down on the ground of non-application of mind by the detaining authority, is rejected. Vijay Kumar v. Union of India, AIR 1988 SC 934 : (1988) 2 SCC 57 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 293 (301) : 1988 CrLJ 951 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 217 : JT 1988 (1) SC 448 : (1988) 3 Crimes 50 : (1988) 3 SCR 42.

[12807] ● Detenu's statement under Section 161, CrPC—Not to be brushed aside for purpose of preventive detention.—The detenu accepted the allegations against himself in his statement recorded under Section 161 of the CrPC. It is true that it may not be a legally recorded confession which can be used as substantive evidence against the accused in the criminal case, but it cannot be completely brushed aside on that ground for the purpose of his preventive detention. K.Aruna Kumari v. Government of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1988 SC 227 : (1988) 1 SCC 296 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 116 (124) : 1988 CrLJ 411 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 7 : JT 1987 (5) SC 378 : (1988) 1 SCR 973 : (1988) 1 UJ (SC) 103 : (1987) 3 Crimes 741.

[12808] ● Section 3 of National Security Act not preclude authority from making order of detention against person in Jail.—Section 3 of the National Security Act does not preclude the authority from making an order of detention against a person while he is in custody or in Jail, but the relevant facts in connection with the making of the order would make all the difference in every case. The validity of the order of detention has to be judged in every individual case on its own facts. There must be material apparently disclosed to the detaining authority in each case that the person against whom an order of preventive detention is being made is already under custody and yet for compelling reasons, his preventive detention is necessary. Shashi Aggarwal

v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1988 SC 596 : (1988) 1 SCC 436 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 178 (181) : 1988 CrLJ 839 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 184 : JT 1988 (1) SC 83 : (1988) 2 SCR 593 : (1988) 3 Crimes 184.

[12809] ● Subjecting satisfaction of authority—Court not to substitute its own opinion.—The subjective satisfaction of the detaining authority as regards the factual existence of the condition on which the order of detention can be made, namely, the grounds of detention constitute the foundation for the exercise of the power of detention and the Court cannot be invited to consider the property or sufficiency of the grounds on which the satisfaction of the detaining authority is based. Nor can the Court, on a review of the grounds substitute its own opinion for that of the authority. In the instant case the ground of detention is only one viz. the detenue was acting prejudicial to the maintenance of supplies of commodity, that is, levy cement, essential to the community by diverting it to the open market. The question whether the detenue was acting in a manner prejudicial to the maintenance of supplies essential to the life of the community is a matter of inference to be drawn from facts. It appears from the grounds, i.e. the facts set out that the detenu had made a statement admitting that he had diverted 600 bags of levy cement issued to him for use in the masonry ballast wall along the railway track and, therefore the District Magistrate was justified in coming to the conclusion that the detenu was acting in a manner prejudicial to the maintenance of supplies of the commodity essential to the community. K. Arun Kumari v. Government of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1988 SC 227 : (1988) 1 SCC 296 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 116 (125) : 1988 CrLJ 411.

[12810] ● Maintenance of public order.—It is true that the acts themselves, in relation to their effect on public order, which might otherwise be free from the vice of affecting public order might assume a sinister colour and significance from the circumstance under and the manner in which they are done. What might be an otherwise simple "law and order" situation might assume the gravity and mischief of a "public order" problem by reason alone of the manner or circumstances in which or the place at which it is carried out. These are graphically dealt with by HIDAYATULLAH J. in Ram Manohar Lohia v. State of Bihar, AIR 1966 SC 740. In the present case, the alleged attacks were directed against the same individual, a certain Anil Gautam, and, even according to the Police they constituted merely offences of a non-cognizable nature. In the facts of the case, it is difficult to impart to these acts, which were liable to be dealt with under the ordinary laws of the land a "public order" dimension within the meaning of and for purposes of the extraordinary law of preventive detention." Ayya alias Ayub v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1989 SC 364 : (1989) 1 SCC 374 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 153 (163) : 1989 CrLJ 991 : 1989 CrLR (SC) 668 : JT 1988 (4) SC 489 : 1989 UJ (SC) 157 : (1989) 1 Crimes 8.

[12811] ● Independent right of detenu to make representation under Article 22(5) of constitution.—The detenu has an independent constitutional right to make his representation under Article 22(5) of the Constitution of India. Correspondingly, there is a constitutional mandate commanding the concerned authority to whom the detenu forwards his representation questioning the correctness of the detention order clamped upon him and requesting for his release to consider the said representation within the reasonable dispatch and to dispose the same as expeditiously as possible. This Constitutional requirement must be satisfied with respect but if this Constitutional imperative is observed in breach, it would amount to negation of the Constitutional obligation rendering the continued detention Constitutionally impermissible and illegal, since such a breach would defeat the very concept of liberty—the highly cherished right—which is enshrined in Article 21 of the Constitution. True, there is no prescribed period either under the provisions of the Constitution or under the concerned detention law within which the detenu's activities requiring his preventive detention with a view to prevent him from acting in a manner prejudicial to the maintenance of the public order. The newspaper reports' indicating that the detenu was already in custody could at best be relevant only to show the fact that he was already in detention prior to the making of the detention order. This fact of the detenu's custody before the making of the order of detention on September 9, 1988 was known to the detaining authority and its effect is a separate point considered latter. The other contents of the newspaper report had no other relevance for this purpose. N. Meera Rani v. Government of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1989 SC 2027 : (1989) 4 SCC 418 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 732 (742) : 1989 CrLJ 2190 : (1989) 2 SCR 901.

[12812] ● Supply of copies of documents to detenu.—There is no dispute that all the documents which were considered by the detaining authority in reaching his subjective satisfaction and referred to in the grounds of detention have been furnished to the detenu. It is not necessary to furnish copies of all the documents including the bank pass books which are not material and relevant for reaching the subjective satisfaction of the detaining authority merely because they were mentioned in the Panchnama. Moreover, no application had been made before the detaining authority for giving the detenu the copies of the bank pass books necessary for making an effective representation against the order of detention. Haridas Amarchand Shah of Bombay v. K.L. Verma, AIR 1989 SC 497 : (1989) 1 SCC 250 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 111 (116) : 1989 CrLJ 983 : 1989 CrLR (SC) 136 : JT 1988 (4) SC 632 : (1989) 1 Crimes 647.

[12813] ● Representation of detenu pending before Advisory Board.—Even though a representation is pending before the Advisory Board, the writ petition under Article 32 of the Constitution is maintainable before this Court. Piyush Kantilal Mehta v. Commissioner of Police, Ahmedabad City, AIR 1989 SC 491 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 438 (442) : 1989 CrLJ 956 : 1989 CrLR (SC) 150 : JT 1988 (4) SC 708 : (1989) 1 Crimes 176.

[12814] ● Variation in condition of bail not relevant document.—Condition imposed by the Magistrate directing the detenue to appear before the office of the enforcement department every day between 11 am. to 2 pm. has been varied to the extent that the accused to attend Enforcement Department and when required". The order varying the condition of bail is not a relevant document and failure to produce the document before arriving at his subjective satisfaction had not vitiated the order. Haridas Amarchand Shah of Bombay v. K.L. Verma, AIR 1989 SC 497 : (1989) 1 SCC 250 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 111 (114) : 1989 CrLJ 983 : 1989 CrLR (SC) 136 : JT 1988 (4) SC 632 : (1989) 1 Crimes 647.

[12815] ● Detaining authority taking into consideration earlier detention and ground therefor.—An order of detention cannot be made after considering the previous grounds of detention when the same had been quashed by the Court, and if such previous grounds of detention are taken into consideration while forming the subjective satisfaction by the detaining authority in making a detention order, the order of detention will be vitiated. It is of no consequence if the further fresh facts disclosed in the grounds of the impugned detention order have been considered. In the present case, admittedly in the grounds of detention specific reference has been made to the earlier two orders of detention made in 1985 and 1986 against the petitioner. It is also evident that in the schedule of documents annexed to the grounds of detention not only the copies of the order of detention but also of the grounds of detention in the earlier detention cases have been given to the petitioner. It also appears from the statement made in the grounds of detention that the detaining authority took into consideration the previous grounds of detention as well as the orders made therein even though the same were nullified by the High Court as well as by the Advisory Body, presumably, for the purpose of showing that the detenu inspite of those earlier orders of detention was continuing in his bootlegging activities. It has been tried to be contended that though the earlier two detention orders have been mentioned in the grounds and the copy of the orders passed were supplied to the detenue, yet these were not at all considered by him. This submission cannot be sustained. Jahangirkhan Fazal Khan Pathan v. Police Commissioner, Ahmedabad, AIR 1989 SC 1812 : (1989) 3 SCC 590 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 664 (669) : 1989 CrLJ 2097 : 1989 CrLR (SC) 568 : JT 1989 (3) SC 183 : (1989) 3 SCR 583 : (1989) 3 Crimes 24.

[12816] ● Authority coming to conclusion petitioners dangerous persons—Extraneous matters considered.—It has been urged by the learned counsel for (Gujarat Prevention of Anti-Social Activities Act, 1985, Section 3(1)) the petitioners have been deprived of making effective and purposeful representations as envisaged under Article 22(5) of the Constitution of India to the authorities concerned, since the detaining authority for bringing them within the definition of Section 2(c) of the Gujarat Prevention of Anti-Social Activities Act has taken into consideration certain extraneous matters with which the petitioner have no connection whatsoever. This submission, in our view, cannot be easily brushed aside as having no force. Mehboob Khan Nawab Khan Pathan v. Police Commissioner, Ahmedabad, AIR 1989 SC 1803 : (1989) 3 SCC 568 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 655 (659) : 1989 CrLJ 2111 : 1989 CrLR (SC) 631 : JT 1989 (3) SC 168.

[12817] ● Detention order—Failure to take petitioner into custody.—"One other argument advanced before us was that even though the order of detention had been passed on April 5, 1988, no steps were taken to take the petitioner into custody till he surrendered himself in Court on July 4, 1988. This contention is on the face of it devoid of merit because it has been specifically stated in the counter-affidavits that the petitioner was absconding and, hence, proclamations were made under Sections 82 and 83, CrPC and it was only thereafter, that the petitioner had surrendered himself in Court. It is not, therefore, a case where the petitioner was freely moving about but no arrest was effected because his being at large was not considered a hazard to the maintenance of public order." Sharad Kumar Tyagi v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1989 SC 764 : (1989) 1 SCC 736 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 294 (315) : 1989 CrLJ 830 : 1989 CrLR (SC) 186 : JT 1989 (2) SC 21 (2) : (1989) 1 SCR 257 : 1989 UJ (SC) 432.

[12818] ● Detention order—Single instance supply justification for.—It is true that if the only ground or justification for the detention is the apprehension that the detenu was likely to be enlarged on bail, the detention might be rendered infirm. But where, as here, there are other grounds, the reference by detaining authority to the prospects of grant of bail could be no more than an emphasis or the imminence of the recurrence of the offensive activities of the detenu. Even a single instance of activity tending to harm "public order" might in the circumstances of its commission; reasonably supply justification for the satisfaction as to a legitimate apprehension of a future repetition of similar activity to the detriment of "public order". Ayya alias Ayub v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1989 SC 364 : (1989) 1 SCC 374 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 153 (162) : 1989 CrLJ 991.

[12819] ● Detention order could be passed even if prosecution fails.—Even if a prosecution against a person fails or bail is granted an order of detention could be passed drawing the satisfaction therefor from the facts and circumstances involved in the criminal proceedings. An offender might secure an acquittal by intimidating witnesses. It all depends upon the circumstances of each case. But it is necessary for the detaining authority to resist the temptation to prefer and substitute, as a matter of course the easy expedience of a preventive detention to the more cumbersome one of punitive detention. Ayya alias Ayub v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1989 SC 364 : (1989) 1 SCC 374 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 153 (162) : 1989 CrLJ 991.

[12820] ● Detention vitiated on ground of non application of mind if relevant piece of evidence not considered.—"What weight the contents and assertions in the telegram should carry is an altogether a different matter. It is not disputed that the telegram was not placed before and considered by the detaining authority. There would be vitiation of the detention on grounds of non-application of mind if a piece of evidence, which was relevant though not binding, had not been considered at all. If a piece of evidence which might reasonably have affected the decision whether or not to pass an order of detention is excluded from consideration, there would be a failure of application of mind which, in turn, vitiates the detention. The detaining authority might very well have come to the same conclusion after considering this material, but in the facts of the case the omission to consider the material assume materiality." Ayya alias Ayub v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1989 SC 364 : (1989) 1 SCC 374 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 153 (164) : 1989 CrLJ 991 : 1989 CrLR (SC) 668 : JT 1988 (4) SC 489 : 1989 UJ (SC) 157 : (1989) 1 Crimes 8.

[12821] ● Subjective satisfaction—Fact of acquittal in two cases.—The requisite subjective satisfaction, the formation of which is a condition precedent to passing of a detention order will get vitiated if material or vital facts which would have bearing on the issue and weighed the satisfaction of the detaining authority one way or the other and influenced his mind are either withheld or suppressed by the sponsoring authority or ignored and not considered by the detaining authority before issuing the detention order.

In the case on hand, at the time when the detaining authority passed the detention order the vital fact, namely, the acquittals of the detenu in case Nos. mentioned at S. Nos. 2 and 3 have not been brought to his notice and on the other hand they were withheld and the detaining authority was given to understand that the trial of those cases was pending. The result is that the non-placing of the material fact—namely, the acquittal of detenu in the above said two cases resulting in non-application of mind of detaining authority to the said fact has vitiated the requisite subjective satisfaction, rendering the impugned detention order invalid. Dharamdas Shamlal Agarwal v. Police Commissioner, AIR 1989 SC 1282 : (1989) 2 SCC 370 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 378 (385) : 1989 CrLJ 1130 : 1989 CrLR (SC) 433 : JT 1989 (1) SC 580 : (1989) 2 SCR 43 : (1989) 2 Crimes 53.

[12822] ● Public order—Activities prejudicial to.—"In the instant case the detaining authority in our opinion has failed to substantiate that the alleged anti-social activities of the petitioner adversely affect or are likely to affect adversely the maintenance of public order. It is true that some incidents of beating by the petitioner had taken place, as alleged by the witnesses. But, such incidents in our view do not have any bearing on the maintenance of public order. The petitioner may be punished for the alleged offences committed by him but, surely, the acts constituting the offences cannot be said to have affected the even tempo of the life of the community. It may be that the petitioner is a bootlegger within the meaning of Section 2(b) of the Gujarat Prevention of Anti-Social Activities Act but merely because he is a bootlegger he cannot be preventively detained under the provisions of the Act unless, as laid down in sub-section (4) of Section 3 of the Act, his activities as a bootlegger affect adversely or are likely to affect adversely the maintenance of public order…….in our opinion these offences or the allegations cannot be said to have created any feeling of insecurity or panic or terror among the members of the public of the area in question giving rise to the question of maintenance of public order. The order of detention cannot, therefore, be upheld. Piyush Kantilal Mehta v. Commissioner of Police, Ahmedabad City, AIR 1989 SC 491 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 438 (445, 446) : 1989 CrLJ 956 : 1989 CrLR (SC) 150 : JT 1988 (4) SC 703 : (1989) 1 Crimes 176.

[12823] ● Apprehension of communal riot—Subjective satisfaction of detaining authority.—A situation that emerged as a result of the incident, as stated in the said report, was grave and serious and prejudicially affected public order. It may be a solitary incident, but it gave rise to communal tension and there was apprehension of a communal riot as alleged in the report. The report in own opinion is a sufficient material for the subjective satisfaction of the detaining authority that there was disturbance of tranquillity and harmony of public life. The detaining authority had taken into consideration all the circumstances including the grave and serious situation that emerged as a result of the incident. In our opinion when an incident was such that it created communal tension and the authorities were apprehensive of the breaking of a communal riot, such incident in itself may be sufficient and may afford justification for the satisfaction of the detaining authority for the detention of the detenu in order to prevent him from indulging in such activity prejudicial to public order even though as submitted by the learned counsel there are no antecedent acts of similar nature or past history of commission of crime by the detenu. Bimla Rani v. Union of India, (1989) 4 SCC 509 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 756 (759, 760) : 1989 CrLR (SC) 770 : JT 1989 (3) SC 737 : (1989) 3 Crimes 578.

[12824] ● Detention order—Solitary offence committed by Police constable with assistance of member of public.—Ram Ratan Head Constable and Hawa Singh Constable in the Security Unit of Delhi Police, while on duty, together committed a cognizable offence under Section 392/34 of the IPC alongwith a member of the public. Immediately they were arrested and placed on suspension. The Court, however, released them on bail. While the case was under investigation, the Commissioner of Police, Delhi thought fit to detain them under the National Security Act. Subsequently, they have been summarily dismissed from service under Article 311(ii)(b) of the Constitution. It is an isolated criminal case with no sinister significance attached to it. The offence was committed by two misguided Policemen under the cover of darkness with the assistance of a member of the public. It was certainly suicidal to those two Police personnel. But it seems to have no connection whatsoever to disturb the public order having regard to the circumstances of the case. Angoori Devi for Ram Ratan v. Union of India, AIR 1989 SC 371 : (1989) 1 SCC 385 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 164 (166, 170, 171) : 1989 CrLJ 950 : 1989 CrLR (SC) 129 : JT 1988 (4) SC 587 : (1989) 1 Crimes 145.

[12825] ● Non-application of mind of detaining authority.—Gujarat Prevention of Anti-Social Activities Act, 1985, Section 3(1)—The detaining authority has not applied his mind properly confining his consideration only with reference to incidents mentioned in the grounds of detention, and has mechanically passed these orders taking into consideration various extraneous matters, namely, the incidents other than those shown in the grounds of detention—especially incidents under Sl. Nos. 5 and 6 of Annexure 'D' with which the detenus have no direct or indirect connection or participation. Mehboob Khan Nawab Khan Pathan v. Police Commissioner, Ahmedabad, AIR 1989 SC 1803 : (1989) 3 SCC 568 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 655 (659) : 1989 CrLJ 2111 : 1989 CrLR (SC) 631 : JT 1989 (3) SC 168.

[12826] ● Preventive Detention Activities concerning more than two Districts.—The petitioner had taken a revolver with him and threatened all the shop-keepers in the market of Sardhana that if anyone failed to pay "chauth" he would not be allowed to open his shop and he would have to face the consequences. On account of this threat the shop-owners downed the shutters of their shops and at that point of time H.C. Khajan Singh happened to reach the market. Seeing what was happening H.C. Khajan Singh attempted to apprehend the petitioner but he managed to escape on his motor-cycle after firing several shots in the air with his revolver. H.C. Khajan Singh had at once returned to the Station and made an entry in the general diary about this incident.

J&K Public Safety Act, 1978, Section 8(2)—Section 8(2) of J and K Public Safety Act, 1978 does not state that inter-district activities, the Divisional Commissioner alone is competent to pass an order of detention. Power to detain has been conferred on the Divisional Commissioner as well as the District Magistrate. There is, therefore, no substance in the contention that since the activities attributed to the detenue are concerned with two districts, Jammu and Kathua, the order of detention issued by the District Magistrate, Jammu is illegal and that it ought to have been issued by the Divisional Commissioner of the Division or by the State Government. Swaran Singh v. State of Jammu and Kashmir, AIR 1989 SC 188 : 1989 (1) Supp SCC 88 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 191 : 1989 CrLJ 792 : (1989) 1 Crimes 68.

[12827] ● Incident affecting tempo of life in market.—This incident cannot be considered as merely causing disturbance of the law and order situation but must be viewed as one affecting the even tempo of life in the market. The shop-keepers had closed their shops and they as well as the public in the market area would have felt terrified when they saw the petitioner moving with a revolver and demanding "chauth" payment from the shop-keepers. Viewed in the perspective of the decisions of this Court in State of Uttar Pradesh v. Hari Shankar Tewari, (1987) SCC (Cri) 388 and other cases, it cannot be said that the demands made and threats given by the petitioner to the contractors and shop-keepers as mentioned in the grounds would have its reach only to the limited extent of affecting the law and order situation and not go so far as to affect the maintenance of public order. Sharad Kumar Tyagi v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1989 SC 641 : (1989) 1 SCC 736 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 294 (300, 301) : 1989 CrLJ 830 : JT 1989 (2) SC 21 (2) : (1989) 1 SCR 257.

[12828] ● Grounds of detention vague—Order illegal and bad.—The averments that have been made in the grounds are vague and without any particulars as to at what place or when and to whom the detenu threatened with Rampuri knife and whom he has alleged to have beaten. These vague averments made in the grounds of detention are bad inasmuch as the detenu could not make an effective representation against the impugned order of detention. As such the detention order is illegal and bad. Jahangirkhan Fazal Khan Pathan v. Police Commissioner, Ahmedabad, AIR 1989 SC 1812 : (1989) 3 SCC 590 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 664 (670) : 1989 CrLJ 2097 : 1989 CrLR (SC) 568 : JT 1989 (3) SC 183 : (1989) 3 SCR 583 : (1989) 3 Crimes 24.

[12829] ● Failure of detenu to take friend with him.—From the materials on record, we are satisfied that the appellant was accorded permission to have the services of a friend and the radiogram sent by the Government was duly communicated to him but for some reason he had not availed the services of the friend. He did not also choose to represent to the Advisory Board that he was not given sufficient time to secure the services of a friend. The contention that in spite of the petitioner having specifically asked for the assistance of a friend at the time he was heard by the Advisory Board, he was denied the opportunity to have such assistance fails. Sharad Kumar Tyagi v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1989 SC 764 : (1989) 1 SCC 736 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 294 (315) : 1989 CrLJ 830.

[12830] ● Dangerous person.—For the purpose of determining the petitioner as a dangerous person, it is also very relevant to notice that Section 2(c) of the Gujarat Prevention of Anti-Social Activities Act, 1985 defines dangerous person as a person who habitually commits or attempts to commit offences punishable under Chapter XVI a Chapter XVII of the Indian Penal Code or any of the offences under Chapter V of the Arms Act. From the seven criminal cases two cases are of 1985 and 1986 which are not proximate to the date of the order of detention and so stale. Moreover the petitioner being acquitted the said cases could not be taken into consideration. Similarly case No. 3 also falls outside the purview of Section 2(c) of the said Act. Further case No. 122/86 can also not be considered as petitioner earned acquittal. Merely on consideration of the other three criminal cases which are under investigation and are yet to be decided the detaining authority can not come to his subjective satisfaction that the detenue was a dangerous person who habitually indulges in committing offence referred to in Section 2(c) of the PSA Act. The other averments made in the said grounds are absolutely vague inasmuch as no particulars as to which persons have been robbed or what offences have been committed by showing deadly weapons at what place have not been mentioned. There is also no mention when and where the detenue in a drunken condition demanded from whom nor it has been stated when the detenue threatened whom to murder by showing razor or Rampuri knife. There is no particular instance also as to which peace-loving citizens and in which area the petitioner has beaten in public believing that they are giving information of his criminal activities to the Police. In such circumstances it is not at all possible for the detenu to make a proper and effective representation. Abdul Razak Nanne Khan Pathan v. Police Commissioner, (1989) 4 SCC 43 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 679 : JT (1989) 3 SC 231 : (1989) 2 Scale 99.

[12831] ● Withholding of vital fact.—Withholding of the vital fact that the detenu has been acquitted in the criminal resulting in the non-application of the mind of the detaining authority to the said fact vitiates the impugned order Ramesh v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1989 SC 1881

[12832] ● Wide gap between Law and order and public order.—This Court has on several occasions indicated that there is a wide gap between law and order and public order. The criminal offence may relate to the field of law and order but such an offence would not necessarily give rise to a situation of public order. Depending upon peculiar situations an act which may otherwise have been overlooked as innocuous might constitute a problem of public order. Selling of liquor by the petitioner would certainly amount to an offence under the Prohibition Act but without something more would not give rise to a problem of public order. Similarly, commission of any other criminal offence—even assault or threat of assault—would not bring the matter within the ambit of public order……Four witnesses had deposed against the petitioner. Their statements were supplied to the petitioner without disclosing their names. It is the stand of the respondent that if the names were disclosed, the witnesses were likely to be bodily injured or even eliminated. There may be certain situations where the disclosure has to be withheld. The grounds provided by the detaining authority have clearly exhibited a sense of helplessness to meet the requirements of situation that however is a matter for the Legislature and the administration to consider but the Court has to zealously guard encroachments on the liberty of the citizen. Ahmed Hussain Shaikh Hussain v. Police Commissioner, Ahmedabad, AIR 1989 SC 2274 : (1989) 4 SCC 751 : 1990 SCC (Cri) 86 (92, 93) : 1989 CrLJ 2321 : 1990 CrLR (SC) 31 : 1990 UJ (SC) 151.

[12833] ● Activities—Prejudicial to maintenance of public order.—Gujarat Prevention of Anti-Social Activities Act, 1985, Section 4(3).—The materials available on record in the present case are not sufficient and adequate for holding that the alleged prejudicial activities of the detenu have either affected adversely or likely to affect adversely the maintenance of public order within the meaning of Section 4(3) of the Act and as such, the order is liable to be quashed. Piyush Kantilal Mehta v. Commissioner of Police, Ahmedabad City, AIR 1989 SC 491 : 1989 Supp (1) SCC 322 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 438 : 1989 CrLJ 956 : (1989) 1 Crimes 176, relied upon. TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) Omprakash v. Commissioner of Police, AIR 1990 SC 496 (499) : 1990 SCC (Cri) 198 : 1990 CrLJ 328 : 1990 CrLR (SC) 566 : JT 1989 (4) SC 177 : (1989) 2 UJ (SC) 733 : (1990) 1 Crimes 235.

[12834] ● Maximum period of detention twelve months.—Once the order of detention is confirmed by the State Government, maximum period for which or detenue shall be cannot exceed twelve months from the date of detention. The Act nowhere requires the detaining authority to specify the period for which the detenue is required to be detained. The expression "the State Government are satisfied that it is necessary so to do, they may, by order in writing direct that during such period as may be specified in the order" accruing in sub-section (2) of Section 3 of the above-said Act relates to the period for which the order of delegation issued by the State Government is to remain inforce and it has no relevance to the period of detention. In this connection we have scrutinized the Preventive/ Detention Act, 1950, the Maintenance of Internal Security Act, COFEPOSA Act, National Security Act, but in none of these Acts the detaining authority is required to specify the period of detention, while making the order of detention against a person. This Court has consistently taken the view that the order of detention is not rendered illegal merely because it does not specify the period of detention. T. Devaki v. Government of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1990 SC 1086 (1091) : (1990) 2 SCC 456 : 1990 SCC (Cri) 348 : 1990 CrLJ 1140 : 1990 CrLR (SC) 260 : JT 1990 (1) SC 444 : (1990) 2 Crimes 1.

[12835] ● Working knowledge of English enough for making representation.—A working knowledge of English enabling him to understand the grounds would be enough for making a representation. He could very well send his representation in the language known by him. Kubic Darusz v. Union of India, AIR 1990 SC 605 (611) : (1990) 1 SCC 568 : 1990 SCC (Cri) 227 : 1990 CrLJ 796.

[12836] ● Detention of foreign national.—There may be cases where while a citizen and resident of the country deserves preventive detention apart from criminal prosecution in case of Foreign national, not resident of the country, he may not be justifiably subjected to preventive detention in the event of which no international legal assistance is possible unlike in case of criminal prosecution and punishment. Kubic Darusz v. Union of India, AIR 1990 SC 605 (615) : (1990) 1 SCC 568 : 1990 SCC (Cri) 227 : 1990 CrLJ 796.

[12837] ● Representation—Delay in disposal of.—Tamil Nadu Prevention of Dangerous Activities of Bootleggers, Drug offenders, Forest offenders, Immoral Traffic offenders and Slum Grabbers Act, 1982.—In this case there were no laches or negligence on the part of the detaining authority or other authorities concerned in dealing with the representation of detenue. The time imperative can never be absolute or obsessive, and that the occasional observations made by this Court that each day's delay in dealing with the representation must be adequately explained are meant to emphasis the expedition with which the representation must be considered and not that it is a marginal formula, the slightest breach of which must result in the release of the detenu. In the instant case, the detaining authority has explained the delay in the disposal of the representation made by the detenue and accordingly the order of detention cannot be rendered invalid on that ground. Madan Lal Anand v. Union of India, AIR 1990 SC 176 : (1990) 1 SCC 81 : 1990 SCC (Cri) 51 (64) : 1990 CrLJ 659 : 1990 CrLR (SC) 69.

[12838] ● Detenu absconding.—Counsel for the petitioner submitted that in this case there was no material adduced on behalf of the Government indicating that the petitioner was "absconding". It was urged that there are no materials at all to indicate that the petitioner was evading arrest or was absconding. It was submitted that Section 7 of the National Security Act gave power to the authorities to take action in case the persons were absconding and in case the order of detention cannot be executed. It is stated that in this case no warrant under Section 7 of the Act has been issued in respect of his property or person. Hence, it was contended that the respondent was not justified in raising the plea that the petitioner was absconding. We are unable to accept this contention. Shafiq Ahmed v. District Magistrate, Meerut, AIR 1990 SC 220 (223) : (1989) 4 SCC 556 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 774 : 1990 CrLJ 573 : JT 1989 (3) SC 659.

[12839] ● Failure of authorities to take action under Section 7 of N.S. Act no ground that detention order bad.—National Security Act, 1980, Section 7—If in a situation the person concerned is not available or cannot be served then the mere fact that the action under Section 7 of the Act, has not been taken, would not be a ground to say that the detention order was bad. Failure to take action, even if there was no scope for action under Section 7 of the Act, would not be decisive or determinative of the question whether there was undue delay in serving the order of detention. Furthermore, in the facts of this case, as has been contended by the Government, the petitioner has no property, no property could be attached and as the Government's case is that he was not available for arrest, no order under Section 7 could have been possibly made. Shafiq Ahmed v. District Magistrate, Meerut, AIR 1990 SC 220 (223) : (1989) 4 SCC 556 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 774 : 1990 CrLJ 573 : JT 1989 (3) SC 659.

[12840] ● Order of detention to be based on material.—The Court has to ensure that the order of detention is based on materials before it. If it is found that the order passed by the detaining authority was on materials on record, the Court can examine the record only for the purpose of seeing whether the order of detention was based on no materials or whether the materials have rational nexus with satisfaction that public order was prejudiced. Beyond this, the Court is not concerned. Shafiq Ahmed v. District Magistrate, Meerut, AIR 1990 SC 220 (224) : (1989) 4 SCC 556 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 774 : 1990 CrLJ 573 : JT 1989 (3) SC 659.

[12841] ● Detention order—Preventing person from acting in manner prejudicial to maintenance of public order.—National Security Act, 1980, Section 3(2)—The detention under the Act, is for the purpose of preventing persons from acting in any manner prejudicial to the maintenance of public order. Sub-section (2) of the Section 3 of the Act authorises the Central Government or the State Government, if satisfied with respect to any person that with a view to preventing him from acting in any manner prejudicial to the security of the State, it is found necessary then the person can be detained. Hence there must be conduct relevant to the formation of the satisfaction having reasonable nexus with the actions of the petitioner which are prejudicial to the maintenance of public order. Shafiq Ahmed v. District Magistrate, Meerut, AIR 1990 SC 220 : (1989) 4 SCC 556 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 774 : 1990 CrLJ 573 : JT 1989 (3) SC 659.

[12842] ● Grounds of detention—Vagueness.—It was urged as to what the petitioner said to whom the rumour was spread as mentioned in ground No.1 and what "other provoking things" the petitioner is alleged to have said as alleged in the grounds mentioned before. It was urged, it is further not clear as to whom the petitioner wanted to teach a lesson. It has to be borne in mind that if more than one ground are stated in the grounds then the fact that one of the grounds is bad would not alter order of detention after the amendment of the Act in 1984 provided that the other grounds were valid. But apart from the same, it appears to us that none of grounds was vague.

The grounds must be understood in the light of the background and the context of the facts. It was quite clear what the detaining authority was trying to convey was that the petitioner stated things of the nature and it was to teach Hindu a lesson. Hence, it was meant to create communal tension. There is no irrelevancy or vagueness in the grounds. Shafiq Ahmad v. District Magistrate. Meerut, AIR 1990 SC 220 (224, 225) : (1989) 4 SCC 556 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 774 : 1990 CrLJ 573.

[12843] ● Invalidity of one or some of grounds of detention.—If more than one grounds are stated in the grounds then the fact that one of the grounds is bad, would not alter order of detention after the amendment of the National Security Act, 1980 in 1984 provided the other grounds were valid. Shafiq Ahmed v. District Magistrate, Meerut, AIR 1990 SC 220 : (1989) 4 SCC 556 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 774 : 1990 CrLJ 573 : JT 1989 (3) SC 659.

[12844] ● Detaining authority not taken into account possibility of detenu being released on bail.—"….the detaining authority though can take into account the possibility of the detenu being released on bail in the criminal proceedings, have to be satisfied, having regard to his past activities or by reasons of the credible information or cogent reasons, that if he is enlarged on bail, he would indulge in such criminal activities. In the present case, except the bald statement that the detenu would repeat his criminal activities after coming out of the Jail, there are no credible information or material or cogent reasons apparent on the record to warrant an inference that the detenu if enlarged on bail would indulge in such criminal activities which are prejudicial to the maintenance of essential services. There must be something more than what is found in the record here to come to the conclusion that this is not a case of solitary incident but a case of the detenu indulging in business of receiving stolen electric wires. On the other hand, it appears to us that the detention order has been made in order to supplant the criminal prosecution which is not permitted." Anand Prakash v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1990 SC 516 (521) : (1990) 1 SCC 291 : 1990 SCC (Cri) 96 : 1990 CrLR (SC) 94 : JT 1989 (4) SC 557 : (1990) 1 Crimes 265.

[12845] ● Detention order made to prevent detenu from indulging in unlawful activities.—National Security Act, 1980, Section 8—The order of detention was made under Section 8 of the National Security Act 1980 by the District Magistrate on the ground that with a view to prevent the detenue from indulging in unlawful activities which are prejudicial to the maintenance of essential services and supplies required for public life it was necessary to keep him under detention. It was contended on behalf of the detenu that he had no past criminal record. The present criminal case filed under Section 411, IPC is the first crime which had been alleged against him. In his statement Munshi Sharma the detenu.

The present criminal case filed under Section 411 of the IPC is the first crime which had been alleged against him. Munshi Sharma did not say that he purchased the stolen wire for the detenu or on the instructions of the detenu. In fact he did not even say that he is the servant or agent of the detenu. He had merely stated that 20 Kg. of melted wire recovered from him was purchased by him from Santosh and his brother Jagdish and that he had melted and sold the same to the detenu. After it is melted in the melted form it could not be distinguished from any other melted wire of legal origin. The statement also does not impute knowledge on the part of the detenu that the same was from stolen wires. In any case, it was impossible to say on the basis of this statement that the detenu was in league with other persons in the activity of stealing wire or purchasing of the same. In fact it is not known how from the melted wire weighing 20 Kg. the detaining authority or the investigating officer come to the conclusion that the gauge of the melted wire was found to be that of Government wire. Again only 20 Kg. was found in the factory and that too in the possession of Munshi Sharma though inside the factory. The statement of Munshi Sharma in the recovery memo and melted wire recovered from Sharma were the only material available before the detaining authority. In the light of the absence of past criminal history on the part of the detenu we have no doubt that the statement found in the recovery memo could not form basis of satisfaction for the detention. Anand Prakash v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1990 SC 516 (518, 519, 520) : (1990) 1 SCC 291 : 1990 SCC (Cri) 96 : 1990 CrLR (SC) 94 : JT 1989 (4) SC 557 : (1990) 1 Crimes 265.

[12846] ● Detention order made to supplement criminal prosecution not permitted.—The detaining authority though can take into account the possibility of the detenue being released on bail in the criminal proceedings, have to be satisfied, having regard to his past activities or by reason of the credible information or cogent reasons, that if he is enlarged on bail he would indulge in such criminal activities.

In the present case except the bald statement that the detenu would be criminal after coming out of the Jail, there are no credible information or material or cogent reasons apparent on the record to warrant an inference that the detenue if enlarged on bail would indulge in such criminal activities which are prejudicial to the maintenance of essential services. There must be something more than what is found in the record here to come to the conclusion that this is not a case of solitary incident but a case of the detenue indulging in business of receiving stolen electric wires. On the other hand it appears that the detention order has been made in order to supplant the criminal prosecution which is not permitted. Anand Prakash v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1990 SC 516 (521) : (1990) 1 SCC 291 : 1990 SCC (Cri) 96 : (1990) 1 Crimes 265.

[12847] ● Detenu abetting smuggling of goods and dealing with smuggled goods.—COFEPOSA, 1974, Section 2(e) and 3(1)—In Para. 47 of the grounds of detention, it has been stated by the detaining authority that the detenu has played a very active and major role for obtaining advance licences in the names of the said firms, importing the polyester filament yarn and polyester fibre, getting the same cleared from Bombay customs and also for selling it in the local market in India in violation of he conditions of the said Notification dated June 6, 1978 and also of the advance licences. The detenu has been abetting the smuggling of the goods and also has been dealing with smuggled goods otherwise than by engaging in transporting or concealing or keeping smuggled goods. It is strenuously urged on behalf of the appellant that as an abeyance order was passed against M/s. Expo International on March 27, 1985 before the expiry of six months from the date of first clearance of the goods imported by it on December 6, 1984, the said firm was prevented from complying with the condition of the advance licence, namely, that the readymade garments were to be manufactured out of the imported polyester filament yarn and polyester fibre and the resultant products were to be exported abroad within a period of six months from the date of the first clearance. It is submitted on behalf of the appellant that as the detenu was prevented from complying with the condition of the advance licence within six months of the first clearance by the issuance of an abeyance order by the Dy. Chief Controller Imports & Exports, the provision of Section 111(o) of the Customs Act was not violated, for the goods could not be confiscated and, accordingly, there was no question of smuggling within the meaning of Section 2(e) of the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, 1974 read with Section 2(39) of the Customs Act, 1962. It is urged that the detaining authority should have taken into consideration the above fact and should not have passed the impugned order of detention. We regret, we are unable to accept the argument. It is true that before the expiry of six months from the date of the fist clearance of the imported goods, an abeyance order was passed against M/s. Expo International. The question is whether by such abeyance order, the said firm or the detenu was prevented from manufacturing the readymade garments and exporting the same within six month from the date of the first clearance. In the grounds of detention, it has been clearly stated with all relevant particulars that the said firms had really no existence and they did not have any factory whatsoever or any manufacturing device for the purpose of manufacturing readymade garments. It is apparent from the grounds of detention and the counter-affidavit filed on behalf of the respondents that with a view to procuring the licences for the purpose of importation of the goods without payment of any duty and for selling the same in the market the said firms were created and/or set up by the detenus including the detenu-Madan Lal Anand. In these circumstances, no exception can be taken to the passing of the abeyance order against M/s. Expo International and, as it was more than certain that the imported goods would not and could not be utilised in accordance with the condition of the advance licence, the provision of Section 111(o) of the Customs Act, was violated on the very importation of the goods. There is, therefore, no substance in the contention made on behalf of the appellant that there was no smuggling in this case and, as such, the order of detention was not at all justified. The contention is rejected. Madan Lal Anand v. Union of India, AIR 1990 SC 176 : (1990) 1 SCC 81 : 1990 SCC (Cri) 51 (55, 56, 57) : 1990 CrLJ 659 : 1990 CrLR (SC) 69.

[12848] ● Grounds—Communication in language understood by detenu.—It is settled law that the communication of the grounds which is required by the earlier part of Cl. (5) of Article 22 of the Constitution is for the purpose of enabling the detenu to make a representation, the right to which is guaranteed by the latter part of the clause. A communication in this context must, therefore, mean imparting to the detenu sufficient and effective knowledge of the facts and circumstances on which the order of detention is passed, that is, of the prejudicial acts which the authorities attribute to him. Such a communication would be there when it is made in a language understood by the detenu as was held in Harikisan v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1962 SC 911. "Communicate" is a strong word. It requires that sufficient knowledge of the basic facts constituting the grounds should be imparted effectively and fully to the detenue in writing in a language which he understands, so as to enable him to make a purposeful and effective representation. If the grounds are only verbally explained to the detenu and nothing in writing is left with him in a language which he understands, then that purpose is not served, and the Constitutional mandate in Article 22(5) is infringed. Kubic Dariuze v. Union of India, AIR 1990 SC 605 (609) : (1990) 1 SCC 568 : 1990 SCC (Cri) 227 : 1990 CrLJ 796 : 1990 CrLR (SC) 178 : JT 1990 (1) SC 38 : (1990) 1 Crimes 397.

[12849] ● Detention order—Delay in passing of.—"In spite of the fact that the recovery statement itself was made as early as on 3-3-1989 no action was taken till 3-5-1989. Nothing more is stated in the detention order. The delay has also not been satisfactorily explained in the counter statement of the respondents. The ground instance, therefore, could not (be) a proximate cause for a sudden decision to take action under the National Security Act and this also vitiates the order." Anand Prakash v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1990 SC 516 (521) : (1990) 1 SCC 291 : 1990 SCC (Cri) 96 : 1990 CrLR (SC) 94 : JT 1989 (4) SC 557 : 1990 CrAppR (SC) 95 : (1990) 1 Crimes 263.

[12850] ● Non-application of mind by detaining authority in making detention order.—If the detaining authority was himself present and was an eye-witness to the occurrence on the basis of which detention order was made, it was imperative for the detaining authority to have honestly and bona fide formed the requisite opinion in making the order of detention on the basis of his own knowledge and perception instead of relying more on the version of the incident as placed before him by the sponsoring authority. In a case where the detaining authority may not be present at the place of the incident or the occurrence, he has to form 'the requisite opinion on the basis of materials placed before him by the sponsoring authority' but where the detaining authority was himself present at the scene of occurrence, he should have relied more on his own observation and knowledge than on the report of the sponsoring authority. In the instant case, the detaining authority though present at the scene of occurrence does not support the incident as presented to him by the sponsoring authority. In the circumstances we are of the opinion that there was non-application of mind by the detaining authority in making the impugned order of detention. T. Devaki v. Government of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1990 SC 1086 (1098) : (1990) 2 SCC 456 : 1990 SCC (Cri) 348 : 1990 CrLJ 1140 : 1990 CrLR (SC) 260 : JT 1990 (1) SC 444 : (1990) 1 SCR 836 : (1990) 2 Crimes 1.

[12851] ● Solitary assault on one individual hardly disturb public peace or place public order in jeopardy.—A Solitary assault on one individual can hardly be said to disturb public peace or place public order in jeopardy so much as to bring the case within the purview of the Act. Such a solitary incident can only raise a law and order problem and no more. Moreover, there is no material on record to show that the reach and potentiality of the aforesaid incident was so great as to disturb the normal life of the community in the locality or it disturbed general peace and tranquillity. T. Devaki v. Government of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1990 SC 1086 (1097) : (1990) 2 SCC 456 : 1990 SCC (Cri) 348 : 1990 CrLJ 1140 : 1990 CrLR (SC 260 : JT 1990 (1) SC 444 : (1990) 1 SCR 836 : (1990) 2 Crimes 1.

[12852] ● Failure to afford opportunity to detenu to appear and produce witnesses before Board.—National Security Act, 1980— Admittedly, the detenu was arrested on 28-5-1988. The total period for Advisory Board's report under Section 14(A)(2)(d)(i) of the national Security Act, 1987 was five months and three weeks. Reference to Advisory Board was made on 26-8-1988. so the period would expire on or about 19-11-1988. The Board fixed 12-11-1988 for its sitting. The detenu prayed for adjournment as because of frozen joint he was unable to perform ablution and tie his turban. Whether that was a lame excuse or not need not be decided. The fact remained that he was told of another sitting of the Board. Having a week in hand it would perhaps have been possible to hold another sitting of the Board and give the detenu an opportunity which, however, did not come. Of course, the decision was that of the Advisory Board and not of the State Government. There was a communication gap. It is true that the Advisory Board is not a judicial body. It is charged with the responsibility of advising the executive Government. But when it advises in favour of the detenu, namely, that there was no sufficient cause for detention, it would be binding upon the Government under Section 12(2) of the National Security act, 1980 to release the detenu forthwith. The detenu in this case did not have that opportunity to show that there was no sufficient cause for his detention. Expressing inability to appear once could not have been treated as the detenu's not desiring to be heard under Section 11(2) of the Act. In fact he desired to be heard and to produce his witnesses. The result was that despite the State Government's communication, he was deprived of this opportunity. It can be said that Article 22(4) provides that no law providing for preventive detention shall authorise the detention of a person for a longer period than three months unless the Advisory Board has reported within that period that there is in its opinion sufficient cause for such detention are therefore, mandatory a reference to a Board and for it to report on the sufficiency or otherwise of the detention which should be within three months from the date of detention. In this case, it is for this reason that after the Constitution every legislation dealing with preventive detention has made specific provision for confirmation and continuance of detention in view of the constitutional mandate in Article 22(4). In this case, Section 11 of the Act prescribes 5 months 3 weeks. If the report is submitted by the Advisory Board without hearing the detenue who desired to be heard it will be violative of Article 22 of the constitution and Section 10 and 11 of the said Act….. Failure to produce the detenu, unless it is for wilful it is for useful refusal of the detenu himself to appear will be equally violative of these provisions. State of Punjab v. Sukhpal Singh, AIR 1990 SC 231 (248) : (1990) 1 SCC 35 : 1990 SCC (Cri) 1 : 1990 CrLJ 584 : 1990 CrLR (SC) 129 : JT 1989 (4) SC 95 : (1989) 3 Crimes 742.

[12853] ● Detenu deprived of making effective and purposeful representation.—The appellant has expressed his grievance that he had been deprived of making an effective and purposeful representation since no particulars or details are given in documents I & II enclosed with the grounds of detention in regard to the alleged many cases/offences said to have been registered in various Police Stations against him and in regard to the allegations that he was a hardened criminal and had a gang often committing heinous crimes and that it had become the habit of the detenu to commit offences.

He had been deprived of making an effective and purposeful representation as envisaged under Article 22(5) of the Constitution of India. Vashisht Narain Karwaria v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1990 SC 1272 : (1990) 2 SCC 629 : 1990 SCC (Cri) 372 : 1990 CrLJ 1311 : 1990 CrLR (SC) 302 : JT 1990 (1) SC 566 : (1990) 2 SCR 212 : 1990 CrAppR (SC) 201.

[12854] ● Statement found in recovery memo whether forming basis of detention.—The present criminal case filed under Section 411 of the IPC is the first crime which had been alleged against him. Munshi Sharma did not say that he purchased the stolen wire for the detenu or on the instructions of the detenu. In fact he did not even say that he is the servant or agent of the detenu. He had merely stated that 20 Kg. of melted wire recovered from him was purchased by him from Santosh and his brother Jagdish and that he had melted and sold the same to the detenu. After it is melted in the melted form it could not be distinguished from any other melted wire of legal origin. The statement also does not impute knowledge on the part of the detenu that the same was from stolen wires. In any case, it was impossible to say on the basis of this statement that the detenu was in league with other persons in the activity of stealing wire or purchasing of the same. In fact it is not known how from the melted wire weighing 20 Kg. the detaining authority or the investigating officer come to the conclusion that the gauge of the melted wire was found to be that of Government wire. Again only 20 Kg. was found in the factory and that too in the possession of Munshi Sharma though inside the factory. The statement of Munshi Sharma in the recovery memo and melted wire recovered from Sharma were the only material available before the detaining authority. In the light of the absence of past criminal history on the part of the detenu we have no doubt that the statement found in the recovery memo could not form basis of satisfaction for the detention. Anand Prakash v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1990 SC 516 (518, 519, 520) : (1990) 1 SCC 291 : 1990 SCC (Cri) 96 : 1990 CrLR (SC) 94 : JT 1989 (4) SC 557 : (1990) 1 Crimes 265.

[12855] ● Subjective satisfaction.—The documents which have bearing on the subjective satisfaction of the detaining authority but not relied upon by him must be before the detaining authority at the time he passed the order of detention. In the instant case the detaining authority had placed reliance upon three civil miscellaneous applications filed in the said CR No. 3694 of 1985 and supplied to the detenues copies of the said three miscellaneous applications. There is, therefore, no substance in the contention that a copy of the civil petition should have also been supplied to him. Madan Lal Anand v. Union of India, AIR 1990 SC 176 : (1990) 1 SCC 81 : 1990 SCC (Cri) 51 (60) : 1990 CrLJ 659 : 1990 CrLR (SC) 69.

[12856] ● Detention order justified even inadmissible ground excluded.—In the instant case even assuming that the grounds relating to the confessional statement made by the detenue under Section 108 of the Customs Act was an inadmissible ground as the subsequent retraction of the confessional statement was not considered by the detaining authority, still then that would not make the detention order bad, for in the view of this Court such order of detention shall be deemed to have been made separately on each of such grounds. Therefore, even excluding the inadmissible ground, the order of detention can be justified

Madan Lal Anand v. Union of India, AIR 1990 SC 176 : (1990) 1 SCC 81 : 1990 SCC (Cri) 51 (60) : 1990 CrLJ 659 : 1990 CrLR (SC) 69.

[12857] ● Personal allegation of mala fide or bias where made by detenu against detaining authority.—Where a personal allegation of mala fide or bias has been made by the detenue against the detaining authority, the detaining authority, should himself swear the counter-affidavit. In the instant case no allegation of malice or dishonesty has been made in the petition personally against the Minister, it is not possible to say that his omission to file an affidavit in reply by itself would be any ground to sustain the allegation of mala fides or non-application of mind. Madan Lal Anand v. Union of India, AIR 1990 SC 176 : (1990) 1 SCC 81 : 1990 SCC (Cri) 51 (60) : 1990 CrLJ 659 : 1990 CrLR (SC) 69.

[12858] ● Computation of period of 12 days.—In our opinion sub-section (4) of Section 3 of National Security Act has given a clear indication as to the computation of twelve days. The period of twelve days had to be calculated "after" the making of the order of detention. Thus, it is apparent that the period of twelve days comes after the making of the order of detention. It is true that in sub-section (4), the officer making the order of detention shall forthwith report the fact to the State Government, but the word "forthwith" will not be taken into consideration for the purpose of computing the period of twelve days inasmuch as there is a clear indication that the said period shall be computed after the order is made. In other words, sub-section (4) itself excludes the day on which the order is made. Computation of twelve days including the day on which the detention order is made will be ignoring the direction of the Legislature, as given in sub-section (4) itself, that the said period of twelve days will commence after the making of the detention order. Jitender Tyagi v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1990 SC 487 (490) : (1989) 4 SCC 653 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 787 : 1990 CrLJ 322 : 1990 CrLR (SC) 144 : JT 1989 (4) SC 155 : (1990) 1 UJ (SC) 427.

[12859] ● Detention order suffering from vice of consideration of extraneous materials.—The averments made in the two letters the copies of which are furnished to the detenu alongwith grounds of detention unequivocally and clearly spell out that the detenu is a hardened criminal, having a gang under his control often committing heinous crimes, that many cases against the detenu are registered in various Police Stations and that he is in the habit of committing offences. No doubt, these averments are not made mention of in the grounds of detention. But can it be said that these materials placed before the authority might not have influenced the mind of the detaining authority in taking the decision detaining the detenue? The above averments which are extraneous touching the character of the detenu though not referred to in the grounds of detention, might have influenced the mind of the detaining authority to some extent one way or other in reaching the subjective satisfaction to take the decision of directing the detention of the detenu. Therefore it has to be held that the detention order is suffering from the vice of consideration of extraneous materials vitiating the validity of the order. Vashisht Narain Karwaria v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1990 SC 1272 (1274) : (1990) 2 SCC 629 : 1990 SCC (Cri) 372 : 1990 CrLJ 1311 : 1990 CrLR (SC) 302 : JT 1990 (1) SC 566 : (1990) 2 SCR 212.

[12860] ● Order of detention to be based on material before Court.—The Court has to ensure that the order of detention is based on materials before it. If it is found that the order passed by the detaining authority was on materials on record, the Court can examine the record only for the purpose of seeing whether the order of detention was based on no material or whether the materials have rational nexus with satisfaction that public order was prejudiced. Beyond this, the Court is not concerned. Shafiq Ahmed v. District Magistrate, Meerut, AIR 1990 SC 220 (224) : (1989) 4 SCC 556 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 774 : 1990 CrLJ 573 : JT 1989 (3) SC 659.

[12861] ● Detention not ordered on mere ground that detenu likely to be released on bail.—In the instant case the facts and circumstances of each case have to be taken into consideration in the context of considering the order of detention of detenue who is already in Jail. The detaining authority was not only aware that the detenu was in Jail but also noted the circumstances on the basis of which he was satisfied that the detenu was likely to come out on bail and continue to engage himself in the smuggling of goods. Therefore, the detention was not ordered on the mere ground that he is likely to be released on bail but on the ground that the detaining authority was satisfied that the detenu was likely to indulge in the same activities if released on bail. Sanjeev Kumar Aggarwal v. Union of India, AIR 1990 SC 1202 (1205) : (1990) 3 SCC 309 : 1990 SCC (Cri) 473 : 1990 CrLJ 1238 : 1990 CrLR (SC) 292 : JT 1990 (2) SC 62 : (1990) 2 SCR 318.

[12862] ● Person already in custody—Detention order against.—COFEPOSA, 1974, Section 3.—Even in the case of a person in custody detention order can validly be passed (1) if the authority passing the order is aware of the fact that he is actually in custody; (2) if he has reason to believe on the basis of reliable material placed before him (a) that there is a real possibility of his being released on bail and (b) that on being so released he would in all probability indulge in prejudicial activity and (3) if it is felt essential to detain him to prevent him from so doing—If the authority passes an order after recording his satisfaction in this behalf, such an order cannot be struck down on the ground that the proper cause for the authority was to oppose the bail and if bail is granted notwithstanding such opposition, to question it before a higher Court. Kamarunnisa v. Union of India, AIR 1991 SC 1640 : (1991) 1 SCC 128 : 1991 SCC (Cri) 88 (100) : 1991 CrLJ 2058 : 1990 CrLR (SC) 645.

[12863] ● Delay in service of detention order.— The facts of the case clearly show that the time taken in the service of the detention orders cannot be attributed to the lack of sense of urgency on the part of the authorities but it was to get the documents translated in Tamil language before they were supplied to the detenus. Under the circumstances we do not see any delay which would vitiate the detention order. Kamarunnisa v. Union of India, AIR 1991 SC 1640 (1645) : (1991) 1 SCC 128 : 1991 SCC (Cri) 88 : 1991 CrLJ 2058 : 1990 CrLR (SC) 645 : JT 1990 (4) SC 7 : (1991) 1 Crimes 131.

[12864] ● Expression "bailable" used in grounds of detention.—COFEPOSA, 1974, Section 3.—Having regard to the background in which the expression "bailable" is used in the grounds of detention and the bearing in mind the explanation, and the fact that in such cases, Courts normally grant bail, it cannot be said that the use of the said expression discloses non-application of mind. Kamarunnisa v. Union of India, AIR 1991 SC 1640 (1645) : (1991) 1 SCC 128 : 1991 SCC (Cri) 88 : 1991 CrLJ 2058 : 1990 CrLR (SC) 645 : JT 1990 (4) SC 7 : (1991) 1 Crimes 131.

[12865] ● Detenus found to have secreted diamonds in rectum and other cavities created in body.—COFEPOSA, 1974, Section 3.—The fact that one of the detenus secreted diamonds in two balloon rolls in his rectum speaks for itself. Similarly the fact that the other two detenues had created cavities for secreting as many as 100 capsules each in their bodies was indicative of the fact that this was a solitary instance. All the three detenus had prepared themselves for indulging in smuggling by creating cavities in their bodies after receiving training. These were not ordinary carriers. These were persons who had prepared themselves for a long term smuggling programme and, therefore, the officer passing the detention orders was justified in inferring that they would indulge in similar activity in future because they were otherwise incapable of earning such substantial amounts in ordinary life. Kamarunnisa v. Union of India, AIR 1991 SC 1640 (1646) : (1991) 1 SCC 128 : 1991 SCC (Cri) 88 : 1991 CrLJ 2058 : 1991 CrLR (SC) 645 : JT 1990 (4) SC 7 : (1991) 1 Crimes 131.

[12866] ● Subjective satisfaction vital documents not placed before detaining authority.—COFEPOSA Act, 1974 Section 3.—The failure to supply the bail application and the order refusing bail does not in any way prejudice the detenue from making representation particularly when he was fully aware of the contents of application made by himself and also the refusal order. However when they are not referred to or relied upon the non-supply does not affect the detention. Such of those documents which are not material and to which a casual and passing reference is made in the grounds need not be supplied. Abdul Sathar Ibrahim Manik v. Union of India, AIR 1991 SC 2261 (2266, 2271) : (1992) 1 SCC 1 : 1992 SCC (Cri) 1 : 1991 CrLJ 3291 : 1992 CrLR (SC) 21 : JT 1991 (4) SC 103.

[12867] ● Subjective satisfaction solitary incident.—COFEPOSA Act, 1974, Section 3.—It has been submitted/that there were no antecedents and this being the solitary incident the detention is invalid. It is again a question of satisfaction of the detaining authority on the basis of the material placed before it. Even a solitary incident which has been detected may speak volumes about the potentialities of the detenu and merely on the ground that there were no antecedents the detention order cannot be quashed. The authorities cannot and may not in every case salvage the antecedents. Abdul Sathar Ibrahim Manik v. Union of India, AIR 1991 SC 2261 (2265) : (1992) 1 SCC 1 : 1992 SCC (Cri) 1 : 1991 CrLJ 3291 : 1992 CrLR (SC) 21 : JT 1991 (4) SC 103 : (1991) 3 Crimes 475.

[12868] ● Preventive detention—Order of—Revocation of.—COFEPOSA Act, 1974, Section 11.—On a conjoint reading of Section 21 of the General Clauses Act and Section 11 of the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, 1974, it becomes clear that the power of revocation can be exercised by three authorities, namely, the officer of the state Government or the Central Government, the State Government as well as the Central Government. The power of revocation conferred by Section

8(f) on the appropriate Government is clearly independent of this power. It is, thus, clear that Section 8(f) of the Act satisfies the requirement of Article 22(4) whereas Section 11 of the Act satisfies the requirement of the latter part of the Article 22(5) of the Constitution. The statutory provisions, therefore, when read in the context of the relevant clauses of Article 22, make it clear that they are intended to satisfy the Constitutional requirements and provide for enforcement of the right conferred on the detenu to represent against his detention order. Viewed in this perspective, it cannot be said that the power conferred by Section 11 of the Act has no relation whatsoever with the Constitutional obligation cast by Article 22(5) of the Constitution. Amir Shad Khan v. L. Hmingliana, AIR 1991 SC 1983 (1988) : (1991) 4 SCC 39 : 1991 SCC (Cri) 946 : 1991 CrLJ 2713 : (1991) 3 Crimes 275.

[12869] ● Supply of copies of documents to detenu.—It is not sufficient to say that the detenus were not supplied the copies of the documents in time on demand but it must further be shown that the non supply has impaired the detenu's right to make an effective and purposeful representation. Demand of any or every document, however irrelevant it may be for the concerned detenu, merely on the ground that there is a reference thereto in the grounds of detention cannot vitiate an otherwise legal detention order. No hard and fast rule can be laid down in this behalf but what is essential is that the detenu must show that the failure to supply the documents before the meeting of the Advisory Board had impaired or prejudicial his right, however slight or insignificant it may be. In the present case, except stating that the documents were not supplied before the meeting of the Advisory Board, there is no pleading that it had resulted in the impairment of his right nor could Counsel for the petitioners point out any such prejudice. Kamarunnissa v. Union of India, AIR 1991 SC 1640 (1649) : (1991) 1 SCC 128 : 1991 SCC (Cri) 88 : 1991 CrLJ 2058 : 1991 CrLR (SC) 645 : JT 1990 (4) SC 7 : (1991) 1 Crimes 131.

[12870] ● Fact that detenu in custody—Facts to be satisfied.—Where the detenu was in custody at the time of passing an order of detention what is strictly required is whether the detaining authority was aware of the fact that the detenu was in custody and if so was there any material to show that there were compelling reasons to order detention in spite of his being in custody. These aspects assume importance because of the fact that a person who is already in custody is disabled from indulging in any prejudicial activities and as such the detention order may not normally be necessary. Therefore, the law requires that these two tests have to satisfied, in the case of such detention of a person in custody. Abdul Sathar Ibrahim Manik v. Union of India, AIR 1991 SC 2261 (2269) : (1992) 1 SCC 1 : 1992 SCC (Cri) 1 : 1991 CrLJ 3291 : 1992 CrLR (SC) 21 : JT 1991 (4) SC 103 : (1991) 3 Crimes 475.

[12871] ● Non-placement of retraction of confessional statement.—In fact there were two grounds but only one ground and the non-placement of the retraction of the confessional statement by the detenu before the detaining authority and non-consideration of the same while arriving at his subjective satisfaction in making the order of detention goes to the root of the order of detention and makes the order of detention invalid. K. Satyanarayan Subudhi v. Union of India, AIR 1991 SC 1375 (1376) : 1991 SCC (Cri) 1013 : 1991 CrLJ 1536 : 1991 CrLR (SC) 859 : (1991) 2 SCC (Supp) 153.

[12872] ● Live and proximate link between grounds of detention and purpose of detention snapped by delay.—COFEPOSA, 1974, Section 3, 7.—Incidentally, it may be mentioned that though the two gold pellets (the contrabands) were seized from the appellant on 12-11-1990, but the authorities concerned passed these orders only on 7-1-1991, i.e., nearly after two months. Under these circumstances the order of detention cannot be sustained since the "live and proximate link" between the grounds of detention and the purpose of detention is snapped on account of the undue and unreasonable delay in securing the appellant/ detenu and detaining him. K.P.M. Basheer v. State of Karnataka, AIR 1992 SC 1353 (1356) : (1992) 2 SCC 295 : 1992 SCC (Cri) 387 : 1992 CrLJ 1927 : JT 1992 (3) SC 610 : (1992) 1 Crimes 996.

[12873] ● Custody initially not to exceed period of fifteen days.—The Magistrate under Section 167(2) CrPC, 1973 can authorise the detention of the accused in such custody as he thinks fit but it should not exceed fifteen days on the whole. Therefore, the custody initially should not exceed fifteen days on the whole—The custody can be police custody or judicial custody as the Magistrate thinks fit. The words "such custody" and "for a term not exceeding fifteen days on the whole" are very significant. It is also well settled now that the period of fifteen days starts running as soon as the accused is produced before the Magistrate. Central Bureau of Investigation Special Investigation Cell I, New Delhi v. Anupam J. Kulkarni, AIR 1992 SC 1768 (1773) : (1992) 5

[12874] ● Remand of accused to police custody.—Taking the plain language into consideration particularly the words "otherwise than in the custody of the police beyond the period of fifteen days" in the proviso it has to be held that the custody after the expiry of first fifteen days can only be judicial custody during the rest of the period, of ninety days or sixty days and that police custody if found necessary can be ordered during the first period of fifteen days. Central Bureau of Investigation, Special Investigation Cell I, New Delhi v. Anupam J. Kulkarni, AIR 1992 SC 1768 (1776) : (1992) 5 SCC 141 : 1992 SCC (Cri) 554 : 1992 CrLJ 2768 : (1992) 2 Crimes 310.

[12875] ● Remand order under Section 309, CrPC—Can be judicial custody.—On a combined reading of Section 167(2) and 2 A of the CrPC 1973 it emerges that the Judicial Magistrate to whom the Executive Magistrate has forwarded the arrested person can order remand in such custody, namely, police custody or judicial custody under Section 167(2) of the rest of the fifteen days after deducting the period of detention ordered by the executive Magistrate. The detention, thereafter, could only be in judicial custody. Likewise the remand under Section 309, CrPC can be only to judicial custody in terms mentioned therein. This has been concluded by this Court and the language of the section also is clear. Section 309, CrPC comes into operation only after taking cognizance and not during the period of investigation and the remand under this provision can only be to judicial custody. Central Bureau of Investigation, Special Investigation Cell I, New Delhi v. Anupam J. Kulkarni, AIR 1992 SC 1768 (1777) : (1992) 5 SCC 141 : 1992 SCC (Cri) 554 : 1992 CrLJ 2768 : (1992) 2 Crimes 310.

[12876] ● Detention order passed after application of mind.—The non-furnishing of documents relating to Cr. No. 1026/1991 with which the detenu is not concerned, does not vitiate the order of detention passed against the detenu. The order of detention was passed by him only with reference to the activities of the detenu and his associates which were prejudicial to the maintenance of public order and the detenu and his associates were involved only in Cr No. 1027/1991. The order of detention was passed after application of mind. State of Tamil Nadu v. A. Vadivel alias Sundara Vadivel, AIR 1992 SC 2161 : 1992 CrLJ 3578.

[12877] ● Delay—Live and proximate link between grounds of detentions snapped in convicting detenu.—If there is unreasonable delay between the date of the order of detention and the date of arrest of the detenu, such delay unless satisfactorily explained throws a considerable doubt on the genuineness of the requisite subjective satisfaction of the detaining authority in passing the detention order and consequently render the detention order bad and invalid because the "live and proximate link" between the grounds of the detention is snapped in arresting the detenu. A question whether the delay is unreasonable and stands unexplained depends on the facts and circumstances of the case. P.U. Iqbal v. Union of India, AIR 1992 SC 1900 (1904) : (1992) 1 SCC 434 : 1992 SCC (Cri) 184 : 1992 CrLJ 2924 : (1992) 1 Crimes 166.

[12878] ● Activities of detenu not only bootlegging but also creating fear.—Maharashtra Prevention of Dangerous Activities of Slumlords, Bootleggers and Drug Offenders Act, 1981, Section 2(a) and 3(1).—The activities of the detenu were not 'Bootlegging' but went further to adversely affect the even tempo of the society by creating a feeling of insecurity among those who were likely to depose against him as also the law enforcement agencies. The fear Psychosis created by the detenu in the witnesses was aimed at letting crime go unpunished which has the potential of the society, and not merely some individual to suffer. The activities of the detenu, therefore, squarely fall within the seeming provision enacted in the explanation of Section 2(a) of the Act, and it, therefore, follows, as a logical consequence that the activities of the detenu were not merely prejudicial to the maintenance of "law and order" but were prejudicial to the maintenance of "public order". Harpreet Kaur Harvinder Singh Bedi v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1992 SC 979 : (1992) 2 SCC 77 : 1992 SCC (Cri) 370 (381) : 1992 CrLJ 769.

[12879] ● Law and order and Public order—Distinction between.—National Security Act, 1980, Section 3(2).—It is the potentiality of the act to disturb. The even tempo of life of the community taking the country as a whole or even a specified locality. The distinction between the areas of "law and order" and "public order" is one of degree and extent of the reach of the act in question on a society. It is the potentiality of the act to disturb the even tempo of life of the community which makes it prejudicial to the maintenance of the public order. If a contravention in its effect is confined only to a few individuals directly involved as distinct from a wide spectrum of public, it could raise the problem of law and order only. It is the length, magnitude and intensity of the terror wave unleashed by a particular eruption of disorder that helps distinguish it as an act affecting public order from that concerning "law and order" Victoria Fernandes v. Lalmal Sawma, AIR 1992 SC 687 : (1992) 2 SCC 97 : 1992 SCC (Cri) 271 (274, 275) : 1992 CrLJ 702 : (1992)1 Crimes 497.

[12881] ● Proviso to Section 3(2) of Maharashtra Prevention of Dangerous Activities of Slumlords Bootleggers and Drugs Offenders Act nothing to do with period of detention.—Maharashtra Prevention of Dangerous Activities of Slumlords, Bootleggers and Drugs Offenders Act, 1981, Section 2(a) and 3(1).—A main reading of Section 3 shows that the State Government under Section 3(1), if satisfied, with respect to any person that was a view to preventing him from acting in a manner prejudicial to the maintenance of 'public order', it is necessary so to do, make an order of detention against the person concerned. Sub-section (2) of Section 3 deals with the delegation of powers by the State Government and provides that if the State Government is satisfied, having regard to the circumstances prevailing in any area within the local limits of the jurisdiction of a District Magistrate or a Commissioner of Police, it is necessary to empower District Magistrate or the Commissioner of Police, as the case may be to exercise the powers of the State Government to order detention of a person as provided by sub-section (1), then the State Government may, by an order in writing direct that during such period as may be specified in the order, the District Magistrate or the Commissioner of Police may also if satisfied as provided in sub-section (1), exercise the powers of the State Government as conferred by sub-section (1) The proviso to sub-section (2), only lay down that the period of delegation of powers, specified in the order to be made by the State Government under sub-section 2, delegating to the District Magistrate or the Commissioner of Police the powers under sub-section (1) shall not in the first instance exceed three months. The proviso, therefor, has nothing to do with the period of detention of a detenu. The maximum period of detention is prescribed under Section 13 of the Act which lays down that a person may be detained in pursuance of any detention order made under the Act, which has been confirmed under Section 12 of the Act. Harpreet Kaur Harvinder Singh Bedi v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1992 SC 979 : 1992 SCC (Cri) 370 (382) : 1992 CrLJ 769 : 1992 CrLR (SC) 156 : 1992 (1) Crimes 589.

[12882] ● Preventive detention—Competent authority.—T.N. Prevention of Dangerous Activities of Bootleggers, Drugs Offenders, Forest Offenders Goonda's Immoral Traffic Offenders and Slum Grabbers Act, 1982.—Since on the date of the order (October 15, 1990) the Commissioner of Police had the powers to issue the detention orders by virtue of the earlier order dated July 17, 1990 which was operating and was to continue till October 17, 1990 the Government rightly made the order dated October 15, 1990 operative from October 18, 1990. The High Court was totally oblivious of the fact that de hors the Government order dated October 15, 1990, the Commissioner of Police had the powers to issue the detention orders by virtue of the earlier Government order which was to expire on October 17, 1990. Even otherwise, it was justified for the State Government to have applied its mind 2/3 days before the expiry of the order dated July 17, 1990 as to whether the power already given to the Commissioner of Police under Section 3(2) was to be extended or not. Under the circumstances, no fault can be found with the Government action in issuing the Government order on October 15, 1990 on the ground of "prevailing circumstances" and making it operative from October 18, 1990. The appeals were allowed. State of Tamil Nadu v. Vela alias Velangani alias Johney, Abdul Samad, AIR 1993 SC 1460 (1462) : (1993) 2 SCC 540 : 1993 SCC (Cri) 54 : 1993 CrLJ 1653 : JT 1993 (2) SC 369 : (1993) 1 Crimes 1199.

[12883] ● Preventive Detention—Such matter handled by persons fully trained.—Constitution of India, Article 22(5).—If the Government takes care that the detention cases arising under the preventive detention laws are handled by persons fully trained and having experience in such matters, the rights of the citizens can be safeguarded and the precious time of this Court can be saved. The detaining authorities are required to deal such cases with more care and circumspection. They should not leave such cases to be dealt with by lower officials and should keep a track on such cases from beginning to the end and also take care that the representations, if any, made by the detenus are also dealt with expeditiously without any delay. In matters where the detention orders are passed in relation to such persons who are already in Jail under some other laws, the detaining authorities should always apply their mind and show their awareness in this regard in the grounds of detention, the chances of release of such persons on bail and stating the necessity of keeping such persons in detention under the preventive detention laws. Birendra Kumar Rai v. Union of India, AIR 1993 SC 962 (968) : (1993) 1 SCC 272 : 1993 SCC (Cri) 324 : 1993 CrLJ 158 : JT 1992 (5) SC 264 : (1992) 3 Crimes 398.

[12884] ● Subjective satisfaction compelling necessity of issuing detention order.—Prevention of Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1988, Section 3.—The detaining authority was aware that a bail application had already been filed by the petitioner and the same was to come up for hearing on 7-12-1990 and in these circumstances the detaining authority was justified in recording the satisfaction of compelling necessity of issuing the detention order as it could not have been predicted with certainty that the petitioner would not be released on bail. Birendra Kumar Rai v. Union of India, AIR 1993 SC 962 (965) : (1993) 1 SCC 272 : 1993 SCC (Cri) 324 : 1993 CrLJ 158 : JT 1992 (5) SC 264 : (1992) 3 Crimes 398.

[12885] ● Telegram not authentic document.—Tamil Nadu prevention of Dangerous Activities of bootleggers, drug offenders, forest offenders, goondas, immoral Traffic offenders and slum grabbers Act, 1982, Section 3.—A telegram by itself is not an authentic document. It is like an unsigned/anonymous communication. Unless a telegram is confirmed by a subsequent signed application, representation or an affidavit, the contents of the telegrams have no authenticity at all and the same cannot be taken into consideration for assessing the value of the other authentic documents on the record. The detention orders were passed by the District Magistrate on the basis of the material placed before him by the police authorities. Any material received by District Magistrate in the shape of telegrams could not be taken into consideration by him in the absence of any subsequent communication confirming the same. We are, therefore, of the view that the orders of detention could not be challenged on the ground that some material contained in a telegram simpliciter was not taken into consideration by the detaining authority. The High Court was, therefore, not justified in quashing the detention orders on the ground discussed above. District Magistrate v. G. Jothisankar, AIR 1993 SC 2633 (2635) : 1994 (1) Supp SCC 59 : 1993 CrLJ 3677 : 1993 CrLR (SC) 501 : 1993(2) Crimes 1189.

[12886] ● Voluminous documentary evidence placed on record before detaining authority for passing order of detention.—Prevention of illicit traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act 1988, Section 3.—There was voluminous documentary evidence placed on record before the detaining authority for passing the order of detention. The voluminous record available with the detaining authority showed that the petitioner was engaged in illicit traffic in the purchase, sale, possession and abetting the export of narcotic drugs in the city of Varanasi which is an area highly vulnerable to such illicit traffic. There was enough material for the satisfaction of the detaining-authority that the petitioner and his family was engaged in the clandestine business of preparing and selling heroin for export from India. Birendra Kumar Rai v. Union of India, AIR 1993 SC 962 (965) : (1993) 1 SCC 272 : 1993 SCC (Cri) 324 : 1993 CrLJ 158 : JT 1992 (5) SC 264 : (1992) 3 Crimes 398.

[12887] ● To which competent authority representation to be made.—Unlike the provisions of Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention or Smuggling Activities Act, 1974, there is a provision in the National Security Act to the effect that the detention order will cease to remain in force for more than 12 days if in the meantime it is not approved by the State Government and therefore the authorities to whom the representation could be made would be the Central Government and the State Government, as the case may be, and not the detaining authority. Therefore, the detaining authority is not under an obligation to tell the detenue that he can make a representation to it also. Amin Mohammed Qureshi v. Commissioner of Police, Greater Bombay, AIR 1994 SC 1333 (1334) : (1994) 2 SCC 355 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 498 : 1994 CrLJ 2095 : 1994 CrLR (SC) 120 : JT 1994 (1) SC 484 : 1994 (1) Crimes 544.

[12888] ● Representation to appropriate authority—Delay in considering.—Gujarat Prevention of ante-Social activities Act, 1985, Section 3(2).—In the instant case the representation was received by the State Government on February 20, 1993, the State Government decided to keep it pending awaiting the opinion of the Board and on receipt of the report on March 23, 1993, considered the case and the representation was rejected on the even date, namely, March 23, 1993. In view of this consistent settled law, the action of the State Government in keeping the representation without being considered and disposed of expeditiously, awaiting the decision of the Board till March 23, 1993 and consideration of the representation thereafter and rejection are illegal. Navalshankar Ishwarlal Dave v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1994 SC 1496 (1505, 1506) : 1993 SCC (Cri) 1126

(1993) (Supp) (3) SCC 754 : 1994 CrLJ 2170 : 1993 CrLR (SC) 461 : JT 1993 (3) SC 421 : (1993) 2 Crimes 449.

[12889] ● Unexplained delay in disposing of representation.—There is no period prescribed in this behalf within which the representation should be dealt with but the requirement is that there should not be any indifference or callous attitude in considering the representation. Unexplained delay in disposing of the representation would be a breach of the constitutional mandate rendering the detention impermissible and illegal. Navalshankar Ishwarlal Dave v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1994 SC 1496 (1505) : (1993) Supp (3) SCC 754 : 1994 CrLJ 2170 : 1993 CrLR (SC) 461 : (1993) 2 Crimes 449.

[12890] ● Three detention orders made against same person.—COFEPOSA Act, 1974, Section 5A.—"Now take a case where three orders of detention are made against the same person under the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, 1974. Each of the orders is based upon only one ground which is supplied to the detenu. It is found that the ground of detention in support of two of such orders is either vague or irrelevant. But the ground in support of the third order is relevant, definite and proximate. In such a case, while the first two orders would be quashed, the third order would stand. This is precisely what the first part (the main part) of S. 5-A seeks to do. Where the order of detention is based on more than one ground, the section creates a legal fiction, viz. it must be deemed that there are as many orders of detention as there are grounds which means that each of such orders is an independent order. The second part of it is merely clarificatory and explanatory, which is evident from the fact that it begins with the word "accordingly"—apart from the fact that it is joined to the first part by the word "and". In such a situation, we are unable to see how can the section be characterised as inconsistent with Art. 22(5). Had there been no first part, and had the section consisted only of the second part, one can understand the contention that the section is in the teeth of Art. 22(5) as interpreted by this Court. It is difficult to conceive any inconsistency or conflict between Art. 22(5) and the first—the main part of S. 5-A. The Parliament is competent to create a legal fiction and it did so in this case. Art. 22(5) does not in terms or otherwise prohibit making of more than one order simultaneously against the same person, on different grounds. No decision saying so has been brought to our notice. Be that as it may, we do not see why the Parliament is not competent to say, by creating a legal fiction, that where an order of detention is made on more than one ground, it must be deemed that there are as many orders of detention as there are grounds. If this creation of a legal fiction is competent, then no question of any inconsistency between the section and Art. 22(5) can arise." Attorney General for India v. Amratlal Prajivandas, AIR 1994 SC 2179 (2207, 2208) : (1994) 5 SCC 54 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 1325 : JT 1994 (3) SC 583.

[12891] ● Person detained to be informed of his right to make representation.—Having regard to the provisions of Art. 22(5) of the Constitution and the provisions of the COFEPOSA Act and the PITNDPS Act, the question posed is thus answered : Where the detention order has been made under S. 3 of the COFEPOSA Act and the PITNDPS Act by an Officer specially empowered for that purpose either by the Central Government or the State Government, the person detained has a right to make a representation to the said Officer and the said Officer is obliged to consider the said representation and the failure on his part to do so results in denial of the right conferred on the person detained to make a representation against the order of detention. This right of the detenu is in addition to his right to make the representation to the State Government and the Central Government where the detention order has been made by an Officer specially authorised by a State Government and the Central Government where the detention order has been made by an Officer specially empowered by the Central Government, and to have the same duly considered. This right to make a representation necessarily implies that the person detained must be informed of his right to make a representation to the authority that has made the order of detention at the time when he is served with the grounds of detention so as to enable him to make such a representation and the failure to do so results in denial of the right of the person detained to make a representation. Kamlesh Kumar Ishwardas Patel v. Union of India, (1995) 4 SCC 51 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 643 : (1995) 3 SCJ 683 : (1995) 4 Crimes 484.

[12892] ● Detenu not informed of his constitutional right to make representation to specified officer.—It is seen that the detenu was informed on 20.4.1992 that he was at liberty to make a representation to the State Government, Central Government and to the Advisory Board. It was asserted that he made a representation through the prison authorities to the Government of Andhra Pradesh. In other words, from these facts, it would be clear that the detenu was not informed of his Constitutional right to make a representation to the specified Officer for reconsideration of his detention. In view of law laid down by this Court the failure on the part of the specified Officer to inform the detenu that he has a Constitutional right to make a representation to the specified Officer against the order of detention, violates Art. 22(5) of the Constitution. The order of detention gets vitiated. Nutan J. Patel v. S.V. Prasad, (1996) 2 SCC 315 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 269 (270-271) : (1995) 4 Crimes 767 (2) : (1996) 1 SCJ 184.

[12893] ● Communication of grounds of detention.—The requirement of the supply of the grounds, as soon as may be, indicates that normally the detenue is entitled to be communicated with the grounds of detention within five days. With a view to tide over unavoidable circumstances due to which the detaining authority could not have the grounds of detention supplied, the statute engrafted a leverage and dictated him to record the reasons therefor in writing and the administration should supply the grounds of detention, before the expiry of ten days. So the delay should be exceptional and those exceptional circumstances are required to be recorded in writing what in mandatory in the supply of grounds of detention before expiry of ten days but after the expiry of five days. It is well settled legal position that the phrase "as soon as may be" means within a reasonable despatch when there is no avoidable delay. What is avoidable delay in always a question of fact. State of Rajasthan v. Talib Khan, AIR 1997 SC 1559 : (1996) 11 SCC 393 : 1997 SCC (Cri) 29 (33, 34) : 1997 CrLJ 408 : 1997 CrLR (SC) 572 : JT 1996 (10) SC 471.

[12894] ● Exceptional circumstances due to which grounds of detention not supplied.—National Security Act, 1990, Section 8(1).—The exceptional circumstances are those due to which the grounds and the documents could not be supplied to the detenu and the same were recorded in writing in the record of the detaining authority. If the appropriate Government or the Advisory Board or the Court are not satisfied with the recorded exceptional circumstances due to which the grounds of detention could not be supplied, after 5 days but before the expiry of 10 days, that may be one of the circumstances which the appropriate Government or Advisory Board or the Court may consider whether the detention order is vitiated or is an infraction of Art. 22(5) of the Constitution. But since the Act does not envisage communication of the exceptional circumstances and the reasons recorded for non-supply of the grounds, the ground of non-communication or their non-supply by itself is not sufficient to hold that the order of detention is in violation of Art. 22(5) of the Constitution. State of Rajasthan v. Talib Khan, AIR 1997 SC 1559 : (1996) 11 SCC 393 : 1997 SCC (Cri) 29 : 1997 CrLJ 408 : 1997 CrLR (SC) 572 : JT 1996 (10) SC 471.

[12895] ● Delay in disposing of representation unexplained.—In this case the representation was received on 28-10-1998, comments of Sponsoring Authority were called for on 29-10-1998 which were received on 10-11-1998. From the records we find that the order for calling for comments of the Sponsoring Authority was not passed by any of the Officers empowered by the above orders of Minister dated 7-7-1995. Therefore, we hold that the representation was dealt with in a routine manner and there was no application of mind by the competent officer as to whether it was necessary to call for comments of the Sponsoring Authority. In other words, this delay from 28-10-98 to 10-11-98 being uncalled for has to be regarded as unreasonable and, therefore, in view of ratio laid down in Veermathi Selvam 1998 SCC (Cri) 1359 fatal. R. Paulsamy v. Union of India, AIR 1999 SC 2004 : (1999) 4 SCC 415 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 549 (551) : 1999 CrLJ 2897 : 1999 (3) Crimes 50 (SC) : (1999) 5 Supreme 332.

[12896] ● Delay in passing detention order.—COFEPOSA Act, 1974, Section 3.—The order of detention has been passed as the detenue was found to be smuggling 23 gold biscuits weighing 2679.5 grams into India on 8-12-1997. The detenu admitted his guilt on 8-12-1997 itself and again on 19-12-1997 when his further statement was recorded. The contention raised by the learned Counsel for the petitioner is that even then, the order of extention came to be passed as late as on 23-11-1998, that is, after 11 months and 15 days. It was further submitted by him that the satisfaction of the detaining authority regarding the need to immediately detain him with a view to prevent him from continuing the prejudicial activity was not genuine. He further submitted that because of this defect, the order of detention stands vitiated. The State Government in its counter has stated that the show cause notice was issued to the detenue under the Customs Act on 4-5-1998 and the adjudication proceedings were over on 9-1-1998. The State Government, therefore, did not proceed with the proposal till then and took up the proposal for consideration only thereafter. The order of the Ministry of Law in that behalf was obtained on 2-11-1998 and the grounds of detention were framed on 18-11-1998 and the order of detention was passed on 23-11-1998. No other explanation has been given by the State Government for not passing the detention order earlier. The State Government has not explained why it thought it necessary to wait till the adjudication proceedings before the Customs authorities were over since that was not necessary for exercising the power under the COFEPOSA Act. In absence of any satisfactory explanation as to why the State Government did not exercise the power earlier, it has to be held that delay in passing the order of detention was unreasonable. It will also have to be held that the explanation of the detaining authority as regards immediate need of detaining the detenu was not genuine. Ahmed Mohaindeen Zabbar v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 1999 SC 2141 (2141, 2142) : (1999) 4 SCC 417 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 552 : 1999 CrLJ 3488 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 315.

[12897] ● Representation before appropriate Govt. authority—Delay in considering.—As 3rd, 4th and 5th of September, 1999 were Government holidays, the representation would have possibly reached the Department either on 2nd evening or on the 6th of September. If that be so, the question is whether placing the said representation before the COFEPOSA unit on 9-9-1999 can be treating as unreasonably delayed Learned counsel pointed out the practicalities involved in shifting and sorting various mails which would have heaped up in the Department by 6-9-1999 on account of the preceding Government holidays for a continuous three day's period. He submitted that it is enough that somebody in the Department would see the outer cover of representation.

Every mail should have been opened, read and found out as to which Department it should be placed and only after such sorting process is made the representation could be sent to the appropriate section. We are inclined to accept the explanation for the intervening period between 6th and 9th September. Rajappa Neelkantan v. State of Tamil Nadu, (2000) 7 SCC 144 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1300 : (2000) 5 SLT 261 : (2000) 2 Scale 642.

[12898] ● Question of severability of grounds.—Section 5A of the COFEPOSA Act, 1974 applies where the decision is based on more than one ground, not where it is based on a single ground. In the instant case the different members of the ground of detention are only paragraphs narrating the facts with the details of document which is being relied on but factually, the detention order is based on one ground which is revealed by ground (1) (XVI) of the grounds of detention. Thus on the facts of this case, Section 5-A has no application in the present case. A. Sowkath Ali v. Union of India, AIR 2000 SC 2662 : (2000) 7 SCC 148 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1304 (1317, 1318) : (2000) CrLJ 3691 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 568.

[12899] ● Court to examine whether grounds disclosed relevant to object of preventive detention.—The Court can only examine the grounds disclosed by the Government in order to see whether they are relevant to the object which the legislation has in view, that is to prevent the detenue from engaging in smuggling activities. The said satisfaction is subjective in nature and such a satisfaction if based or relevant grounds cannot be stated to be invalid.

The concerned authorities have to take note of the various facts including the fact that this was a solitary incident in the case of the detenue and that he had been granted bail earlier in respect of which the application for cancellation of the same was made but was rejected by the Court. In this case, there has been due application of mind by the authority concerned to that aspect of the matter. Union of India v. Arvind Shergill, AIR 2000 SC 2924 : (2000) 7 SCC 601 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1422 (1426) : 2000 CrLR (SC) 756.

[12900] ● Representation dealt with utmost expedition.—It has been clearly indicated in counter affidavit as to how detenue's representation has been dealt with from day-to day till it was finally disposed of. Taking into account the fact that holidays intervened in between and the manner in which the representation has been dealt with by the authority concerned, we must hold that the representation has been dealt with utmost expedition and there has been no delay in the manner of disposal of the representation. Kantilal Hirji Shah v. State of Tamil Nadu, (2000) 7 SCC 606 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1427 (1431) : 2000 CrLJ 261 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 728 : JT 2000 (7) SC 478.

[12901] ● Detention order—Revocation of.—COFEPOSA Act, 1974, Section 3.—In the instant case the husband of the respondent evaded arrest as is obvious and obtained an interim order from the High Court which was in force till the disposal of the writ petition and thereafter on quashing the detention, the question of detention did not arise now. Therefore we do not think that it would be appropriate to state that merely by passage of time the nexus between the object for which the husband of the respondent is sought to be detained and the circumstances in which he was ordered to be detained, has snapped. However, we make it clear that if those circumstances did not exist, then it would be appropriate for the Government to revoke the order of detention and, if still certain circumstances as apprehended in the order of detention exist, it will be open to the Government to enforce the same. Union of India v. Arvind Shergill, AIR 2000 SC 2924 : (2000) 7 SCC 601 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1422 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 756.

[12902] ● Parole—Grant of to detenu.—COFEPOSA Act, 1974, Section 12(1) and 12(ia).—The Court, cannot, generally speaking, exercise the power to grant temporary release to detenues on parole, in cases covered by COFEPOSA Act during the period an order of detention is in force because of the express prohibition contained in sub-section (6) of S. 12. The bar of judicial intervention to direct temporary release of a detenu would not, however, effect the jurisdiction of the High Courts under Art. 226 of the Constitution or of this Court under Arts. 32, 136 or Art. 142 of the Constitution to direct the temporary release of the detenu, where request of the detenu to be released on parole for a specified reason and/or for a specified period, has been, in the opinion of the Court, unjustifiably refused or where in the interest of justice such an order of temporary release is required to be made. That jurisdiction, however, has to be sparingly exercised by the Court and even when it is exercised, it is appropriate that the Court leaves it to the administrative or Jail authorities to prescribe the conditions and terms on which parole is to be availed of by the detenu. Sunil Fulchand Shah v. Union of India, AIR 2000 SC 1023 : (2000) 3 SCC 409 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 659 (683) : 2000 CrLJ 1444 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 281 : JT 2000 (2) SC 230.

[12903] ● Documents to be placed before detaining authority.—There can be no doubt it was not necessary, while considering the case of the petitioner-detenu, to place all or any of the documents which are relevant and are relied on in the proceedings of a co-accused, but where the sponsoring authority opts out of his own volition to place any document of the other co-detenu, not merely as a narration of fact but reiterating in details the confession made by him, then it cannot be said that it would not prejudice the case of the detenu. If this has been done, it was incumbent for the sponsoring authority to have placed their retraction also. If the sponsoring authority would not have placed this then possibly no legal grievance could have been made by the detenue. But Once the sponsoring authority have chosen to place the confessional statement, then it was incumbent on it to place the retraction also made by them. In our opinion its non-placement affects the subjective satisfaction of the detaining authority. This Court has time and again laid down that the sponsoring authority should place all the relevant documents before the detaining authority. It should not withhold any such document based on its own opinion. All documents, which are relevant, which have bearing on the issue, which are likely to affect the mind of the detaining authority, should be placed before him. Of course a document which has no link with the issue cannot be construed as relevant so far as the submission that detaining authority in both being the same, presumption should be drawn that it was aware of the retraction and its non-placement would not affect its subjective satisfaction cannot be accepted, specially, firstly where the difference between the two orders being more than five months and secondly such a conjectural possibility should not be drawn in a preventive detention case. It is difficult for any authority to remember each and every document which were on the file of the other co-detenu before passing the detention order. It would be too dangerous a proposition to accept to infer that he would have known it, specially when there is a gap of more than five months and where no such affidavit is filed by he detaining authority. A Sowkath Ali v. Union of India, AIR 2000 SC 2662 : (2000) 7 SCC 148 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1304 (1313, 1314) : 2000 CrLJ 3691 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 568.

[12904] ● Preventive detention—Public order.—Maharashtra Prevention of Dangerous Activities of Slumlords, Bootleggers, drug offenders and Dangerous Persons Act 1981, Section 3.—In the instant case the appellant extorted money from businessmen and also gave threats to the people at the public place and thereby undoubtedly affected the even tempo of life of the society, therefore, such activities cannot be said to be a mere disturbance of law and order. The activities of the detenu disturbed the public order. Hasan Khan v. R. H. Mendnoca, AIR 2000 SC 1146 : (2000) 3 SCC 511 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 708 (711) : 2000 CrLJ 1729 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 361.

[12905] ● Preventive detention—Activities of appellant disturbed life of people in area.—It has been urged in this case that the criminal proceedings which were started on the complaint of H.C. Gupta was under Sections 341, 323, 334, 504, 506 II and 34, IPC and all these sections were bailable and in fact bail was granted, and, therefore, this Act cannot be said to disturb public order. From the grounds of detention we find that when H.C. Gupta and his brother sought for help, none came forward to their help out of fear of the appellant and this fact would show that the activities of the appellant disturbed the life of the people of that area. Hasan Khan v. R.H. Mendnoca, AIR 2000 SC 1146 : (2000) 3 SCC 511 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 708 (710, 711) : 2000 CrLJ 1729 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 361.

[12906] ● Detention order—Delay in passing of.—Gujarat Prevention of Anti. Social Activities Act, 1985, Section 3(2).—"We find that the inquiry was completed during the last part of February at the level of Deputy Commissioner of Police and the final order was passed on 12-4-

1999. It cannot be said that there was undue delay and action was being taken in a routine manner, as after completion of inquiry the matter had to be examined at various levels and finally the orders were passed by the Commissioner." Hasan Khan v. R.H. Mendnoca, AIR 2000 SC 1146 : (2000) 3 SCC 511 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 708 (711) : 2000 CrLJ 1729 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 361.

[12907] ● Detaining—Authority basing his subjective satisfaction on series of contemporaneous incidents.—Maharashtra Prevention of Dangerous Activities of slumlords, bootleggers and drug-offenders Act, 1981, Section 3.—From the grounds of detention and papers enclosed with it is clear that the detaining authority based his subjective satisfaction on a series of contemporaneous incidents in which the detenu was involved. The satisfaction was not based on a single or stray incident. In the in-camera statements, separate incidents of criminal activities of the detenu were stated. The assertions are not assailed as untrue nor can they be said to be irrelevant for the purpose of the order. On such materials on record, it cannot be said that there was no basis for the detaining authority to feel satisfied that the detenu was either himself or as a member or leader of a gang, habitually committed or attempted to commit or abetted the commission of any of the offences stated in S. 2(b-1). Therefore, the contention raised on behalf of the petitioner that the conclusion arrived at by the detaining authority that the detenu was a "dangerous person" within the meaning of S. 2(b-1) was vitiated, cannot be accepted. Phulwari Jagdamba Prasad Pathak v. R.H. Mendnoca, AIR 2000 SC 2527 : (2000) 6 SCC 751 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1263 (1270) : 2000 CrLJ 3944 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 557.

[12908] ● Preventive detention—Materials relied on be true and reasonable nexus with purpose.—Preventive detention measure is harsh, but it becomes necessary in the larger interest of society. It is in the nature of a precautionary measure taken for preservation of public order. The power is to be used with caution and circumspection. For the purpose of exercise of the power, it is not necessary to prove to the hilt that the person concerned had committed any of the offences as stated in the Act. It is sufficient if from the material available on record the detaining authority could reasonably feel satisfied about the necessity for detention of the person concerned in order to prevent him from indulging in activities prejudicial to the maintenance of public order. In the absence of any provision specifying the type of material which may or may not be taken into consideration by the detaining authority and keeping in view the purpose the Statute is intended to achieve, the power vested in the detaining authority should not be unduly restricted. It is neither possible nor advisable to catalogue the types of materials which can form the basis of a detention order under the Act. That will depend on the facts and situation of a case. However, the facts stated in the materials relied upon should be true and should have a reasonable nexus with the purpose for which the order is passed. Phulwari Jagdamba Prasad Pathak v. R.H. Mendonca, AIR 2000 SC 2527 : (2000) 6 SCC 751 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1263 (1269, 1270) : 2000 CrLJ 3944 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 557.

[12909] ● "Likelihood to be released on bail" different from "likelihood of his moving an application for bail".—There must be cogent materials before the officer passing the detention order that the detenu is likely to be released on bail. The inference must be drawn from the available material on record and must not be the ipse dixit of the officer passing the order of detention. Before passing the detention order the authority concerned must satisfy himself of the likelihood of the petitioner being released on bail. The likelihood of his moving an application for bail is not a sufficient compliance with the requirements. The reasoning that there is "likelihood to be released on bail" is different from "likelihood of his moving an application for bail". Amritlal v. Union Government, AIR 2000 SC 3675 : (2001) 1 SCC 341 : 2001 CrLJ 474 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 147 (149, 150) : 2001 CrLR (SC) 201.

[12910] ● Prayer for being temporarily released to be disposed of within reasonable time.—Andhra Pradesh Prevention of Dangerous Activities of Bootleggers, Dacoits, drug offenders, goondas Immoral, Traffic Offenders and Land Grabbers Act, 1986, Section 15.—The power under Section 15 of the Act is the power of the Government to release a detenue for any specified period with such conditions to be specified in the order of release and such a prayer by no stretch of imagination can be said to be a representation against the order of detention within he meaning of Article 22(5) of the Constitution. That Being the position question of infraction of Art. 22(5) does not arise if the prayer of the detenu for being temporarily released, is not disposed of immediately and there is some delay in the disposal of the said prayer. Of course, such a prayer for being temporarily released, should be disposed of within a reasonable time but delay on the part of the authority in considering the prayer for temporary release under S. 15 of the Andhra Pradesh Prevention of Dangerous Activities of Bootleggers, Dacoits, Drug Offenders, Goondas, Immoral Traffic Offenders and Land Grabbers Act, 1986 cannot be held to be an infraction of the Constitutional right guaranteed to a detenu under Art. 22(5). The High Court committed serious error in setting aside the order of detention, merely because there had been delay in disposing of the application for temporary release. District Collector v. Shaik Hasmath Beebi, AIR 2001 SC 1681 : (2001) 5 SCC 401 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 903 : 2001 CrLJ 2193 : JT 2001 (5) SC 67.

[12911] ● Delay in passing or executing detention order.—The order of detention having been made as early as on 9-6-1998 and the same not having been effected till today, it is certainly necessary for the authorities concerned in the Government to apply mind as to whether detention of the respondent is still necessary or not and take appropriate steps either in giving effect to the order of detention or to revoke the same. In addition we may also notice that the order made by us will not prejudice the interest of the respondent that in the event the said order of detention is given effect to it is open to the respondent to raise all grounds as are permissible in law notwithstanding what we have observed in the course of order. Union of India v. Muneesh Suneja, AIR 2001 SC 854 : (2001) 3 SCC 92 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 433 (436) : 2001 CrLR (SC) 208 : JT 2001 (2) 2001 SC 416 : 2001 (1) Crimes 255.

[12912] ● Detention order—Delay in making.—In the instant case the appellant was arrested on 8-11-1996 and the detention order was passed after nearly 5 months, i.e., on 15-4-1997. In our view, this contention is rightly rejected by the High Court as the detaining authority has sufficiently explained the reasons for the said delay. The explanation given for the delay is also mentioned in para 4(c) of the counter-affidavit filed on behalf of the Union of India. Rajan Worlikar v. State of Karnataka, AIR 2001 SC 2303 : (2001) 5 SCC 295 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 883 (887) : 2001 CrLJ 2599 : JT 2001 (1) (Supp) SC 428.

[12913] ● Detenu apprised of his right to make representation to appropriate Govt.—COFEPOSA Act, 1974, Section 8(e) and (f).—The detenu in this case was apprised of his right to make representation to the appropriate Government/authorities against his order of detention as mandated in Art. 22(5) of the Constitution. Despite knowledge, the detenu did not avail of the opportunity. Instead of making a representation to the appropriate Government or the confirming authority, the detenu chose to address a representation to the Advisory Board alone even without a request to send its copy to the authorities concerned under the Act. In the absence of representation or the knowledge of the representation having been made by the detenu, the appropriate Government was justified in confirming the order of detention on perusal of record and documents excluding the representation made by the detenu to the Advisory Board. For this alleged failure of the appropriate Government, the order of detention of the appropriate Government is neither rendered unconstitutional nor illegal. R. Keshava v. M.B. Prakash, AIR 2001 SC 301 : (2001) 2 SCC 145 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 289 (298) : 2001 CrLR (SC) 110 : JT 2001 (1) SC 183.

[12914] ● Detention order clearly setting out that complainant threatened.—The detention order clearly sets out that the respondent alonwith Thiruvengadam, Parthasarathy and Kandan got down from the Tata Sumo car and that all of them were armed with knives. The detention order clearly sets out that the complainant was threatened. The detention order sets out that these persons terrorised everyone at the spot and one of them picked up a soda bottle from the nearby shop and hurled the same against the public. The detention order sets out that the normalcy of the area was completely dislocated as terror and panic had been created at the spot. We fail to see what further and better particulars could have been given in the detention order. However, the detention order was of 1999. The same had been quashed by the High Court in April 2000. The period of detention is over. In our view this is not a case where the detenue should be made to surrender to undergo the remaining period of detention. State of Tamil Nadu v. Baskar, AIR 2001 SC 1543 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 424 (425, 426) : 2001 CrLJ 1258 : 2001 CrLR (SC) 229 : JT 2001 (3) SC 47 : 2001 (1) Crimes 299.

[12915] ● Detention order not referring to four occurrences in four different places but only mentioning name of section.—Undoubtedly, in the affidavit filed by the sponsoring authority, reliance has been placed on six cases. However, the detaining authority has not placed reliance on six cases. This itself shows that the detaining authority has applied its mind and not gone just by what was stated by the sponsoring authority. A careful reading shows that the detention order does not refer to four occurrences in four different places, but is only mentioning that an offence had taken place in Sobanapuram section, Koppampatti beat, Manamalai forest and at Anaikkal road. Had the High Court applied its mind properly, it would have realised that there were no four occurrences in four different places. In one view there has been total non-application of mind on the part of the High Court. The impugned order of the High Court cannot be sustained and it is hereby set aside. State of Tamil Nadu v. Balasubramaniam, AIR 2001 SC 1201 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 437 (438, 439) : 2001 CrLJ 1257 : 2001 CrLR (SC) 227 : JT 2001 (3) SC 93.

[12916] ● Detaining authority different from Additional Chief Secretary.—Undoubtedly the order of detention shows that the additional Chief Secretary and Principal Secretary to the Government, Home and Transport Department is specially empowered under Section 3(1) of the PITNDPS Act, 1988. However, that by itself does not mean that the order of detention has been passed by him in his capacity as a specially empowered officer. If "specially empowered officer" has exercised his power conferred upon him under Section 3(1) of the PITNDPS Act, he would not have stated that it was by order and in the name of the Governor. The beginning of the order also would not be "Government of Karnataka" but it would be in his name. Further, the grounds of detention also make it clear that the order was passed by the Government of Karnataka. Therefore, it cannot be said that the appellants were not communicated that they were having right of making representation to the State Government. The grounds specifically provide that they have right to make representation to the detaining authority, Central Government and PITNDPS Officers' Board. Ground 31 further clarifies that if any representation is made to the "detaining authority" then it be addressed to the undersigned, namely, "the Additional Chief Secretary and Principal Secretary to the Government". This also makes it clear that the detaining authority is different from the Additional Chief Secretary. Rajan Worlekar v. State of Karnataka, AIR 2001 SC 2303 : (2001) 5 SCC 295 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 883 (886, 887) : 2001 CrLJ 2589.

[12917] ● Subjective satisfaction of detaining authority—Not to be interfered with on in depth examination.—National Security Act, 1980, Section 3(2).—Solitary commission of a heinous crime in given circumstances may disturb entire public order and may justify detention order. Subjective satisfaction of the detaining authority in issuing detention order cannot be interfered with on in in-depth examination of the statements of the witnesses recorded under Section 161, CrPC and other particulars. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Saleem, 2001 (3) Crimes 165 (SC) : (2001) 4 Supreme 437.

[12918] ● Delay either in passing order or execution thereof not fatal except.—COFEPOSA Act, 1974, Section 3.—Mere delay either in passing the order or execution thereof is not fatal except where the same stands un-explained. In the given circumstances of the case and if there are good reasons for delay in passing the order or in not giving effect to it, the same could be explained and those are not such grounds which could be made the basis for quashing the order of detention at a pre-detention stage. Union of India v. Muneesh Suneja, AIR 2001 SC 854 : (2001) 3 SCC 92 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 433 (436) : 2001 CrLR (SC) 208 : JT 2001 (2) SC 416 : 2001 (1) Crimes 255.

[12919] ● Period of detention over—Not a case where detenu made to surrender.—"The detention order was of 1999. The same had been quashed by the High Court in March 2000. The period of detention is over. In our view it is not a case where the detenue should be made to surrender to undergo the remaining period of detention." State of Tamil Naidu v. Glory, AIR 2001 SC 1368 : (2001) 3 SCC 748 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 628 (630) : 2001 CrLJ 1684 : 2001 CrLR (SC) 359 : 2001 2 Crimes 105.

[12920] ● State Govt. to peruse report of Advisory Board alongwith other records while confirming order of detention.—COFEPOSA Act, 1974, Section 8 and 11.—The State Government while confirming the order of detention has to peruse the report of the Advisory Board alongwith other records, if any, in its possession, and cannot determine the legality of the procedure adopted by the Advisory Board. Under Cl. (f) of S. 8 of the Act, the Government is not bound by the report of the Advisory Board and in every case where the Advisory Board reports that there is, in its opinion, sufficient cause for the detention of a person, may confirm the detention order. The word "may" used in this clause does not cast duty upon the appropriate Government to necessarily accept the opinion for further detention. However, where the Board reports that there is, in its opinion, no sufficient cause for the detention of the person concerned, the appropriate Government has no option but to revoke the detention order and cause the person to be released forthwith. When the report of the Advisory Board opining that there exists sufficient cause for detention of a person, is not binding upon the appropriate Government, there is no infirmity in its order passed without consideration of the proceedings of the Advisory Board. The obligation of the appropriate Government is restricted to the extent of examining the report conveying the opinion of the Board regarding further detention of the detenu. R. Keshava v. M.B. Prakash, AIR 2001 SC 301 : (2001) 2 SCC 145 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 289 (290) : 2001 CrLR (SC) 110 : JT 2001 (1) SC 183.

[12921] ● Subjective satisfaction arrived by detaining authority on consideration of all rele- vant materials.—The subjective satisfaction arrived at by the detaining authority in the case is based on consideration of all the relevant materials placed before it by the sponsoring authority. It is not the case of the appellant that the sponsoring authority did not place before the detaining authority any marterial in its possession which is relevant and material for the purpose and such material, if considered by the detaining authority, might have resulted in taking a different view in the matter. All that is contended on behalf of the detenue is that the detaining authority should have taken further steps before being satisfied that a case for detention under the COFEPOSA Act has been made out against the detenu. Whether the detention order suffers from non-application of mind by the detaining authority is not a matter to be examined according to any strait-jacket formula or set principles. It depends on the facts and circumstances of the case, the nature of the activities alleged against the detenue, the materials collected in support of such allegations, the propensity and potentiality of the detenu in indulging in such activities, etc. The Act does not lay down any set parameters for arriving at the subjective satisfaction by the detaining authority. Keeping in view the purpose for which the enactment is made and the purpose it is intended to achieve, the Parliament in its wisdom, had not laid down any set standards for the detaining authority to decided whether an order of detention should be passed against a person. The matter is left to he subjective satisfaction of the competent authority. Gurdev Singh v. UOI, AIR 2002 SC 10 : (2002) 1 SCC 545 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 191 : JT 2001 (9) SC 374 : 2002 (1) Crimes 115 : 2001 (8) Supreme 121.

[12922] ● Detention solitary ground—Smuggling—Meaning of.—The stand of the department is that whether there can be detention on a solitary instance would depend on the facts and circumstances of each case, on the magnitude of the case and other attendant circumstances. In the present case, it is stated that detenu's passport disclosed that he had made several trips abroad and he was not a man of such affluence as to make so many trips out of the country unless they be in the context of his business activities. Therefore, considering the number of trips he had made out of the country, the volume of goods seized now and the prima facie misdeclaration of value, an inference can be drawn that the detenu was a part of bigger network in bringing the goods for commercial distribution inside the country by avoiding the payment of duty. In this background, absence of passport will not be a handicap to the detenue for his activities in the present case in which the fact situation is different from the one available in Rajesh Gulati's case. Nor can we confine the meaning of the word 'smuggling' only to going out of country and coming back with goods which are contraband or to evade duty but may encourage such activities as well by dealing in such goods. Sitthi Zuraina Begum v. Union of India, AIR 2003 SC 323 : (2002) 10 SCC 448 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 1463 : (2003) 1 Crimes 163 : (2002) 8 Supreme 403.

[12923] ● Delay not inordinate in considering representation of detenu.—Considering the volume of petitions received in the President's Secretariat and the fact that the petitions received in regional languages have to be translated and thereafter forwarded to the concerned Ministry, and in the present case it took about 20 days to complete the process which in the circumstances of the case cannot be taken to be excessive so as to term the delay as inordinate in considering the representation of the detenu. When the said representation had been received from the President's Secretariat steps were taken to get the comments from the sponsoring authority on 26.6.2002 and the same was disposed of on 28.6.2002 itself. Considering the totality of the circumstances, we are of the view that the Ministry of Finance has explained the delay of 20 days in considering the representation. Sitthi Zuraina Begum v. Union of India, AIR 2003 SC 323 : (2002) 10 SCC 448 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 1463 (1466) : (2003) 1 Crimes 163 : (2002) 8 Supreme 403.

[12924] ● Detention under preventive detention not punitive.—Detention under the preventive detention laws is not punitive but is essentially a precautionary measure intended to prevent and intercept a person before he commits an infractive act which he had done earlier. A detenu is therefore not entitled to set off as provided under Section 428 of the CrPC, 1973 for the period of detention under the COFE POSA, 1974. Maliyakkal Abdul Azeez v. Assistant Collector, Kerala, AIR 2003 SC 928 : (2003) 2 SCC 439 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 551 : 2003 CrLJ 1215.

[12925] ● Solitary instance of robbery as mentioned in grounds of detention not relevant for sustaining order of—Preventive detention.—In Prevention and Dangerous Activities of Bootlegger, Drug Offender, Goondas Immoral Traffic Offenders and Slumgrabbeas Act, Section 3.—In the present case, the three alleged incidents to which the Commissioner of Police has referred to are thefts arising under Section 379, IPC and, therefore, there is only a solitary instance wherein the detenu is alleged to have robbed in a public place one Kumar. Therefore, there is no material on record to show that the reach and potentiality of the single incident of robbery was so great as to disturb the even tempo or normal life of the community in the locality or disturb general peace and tranquillity or create a sense of alarm and insecurity in the locality. Though in the grounds of detention the detaining authority had stated that by committing this offence in public the detenue created a sense of alarm, scare and a feeling of insecurity in the minds of the public of the area and thereby acted in a manner prejudicial to the maintenance of public order which affected even tempo of life of the community, but citation of these words in the order of detention is more in the nature of a ritual rather than with any significance to the content of the matter. Thus, a solitary instance of robbery as mentioned in the grounds of detention is not relevant for sustaining the order or detention for the purpose of preventing the petitioner from acting in a manner prejudicial to the maintenance of public order. This ground is enough to quash the order of detention made by the respondents. Darpan Kumar Sharma v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 2003 SC 971 : (2003) 2 SCC 313 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 537 : 2003 CrLJ 1222 : (2003) 1 Crimes 446 (SC).

[12926] ● Detenu not producing witness for examination.—The detenu did not produce any witness for examination and even did not state before the Advisory Board that he wanted to examine the witness or that the witness was present. When the detenu did not produce any witness for examination, there was no necessity for the Advisory Board to require the detenu to produce witnesses. State of Maharashtra v. Ramchandra Rammilan Mishra alias Pandey, (2004) 4 SCC 509 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 1329 (1331-32) : 2004 CrLJ 1823 : JT 2004 (2) (Supp) SC 402 : (2004) 2 Crimes 338.

[12928] ● Writ petition for quashing detention order.—A writ petition for quashing the detention order is not maintainable before the order of detention was served and the detenu was taken into custody.—Union of India v. Vidya Bagaria, AIR 2004 SC 2220 : (2004) 5 SCC 577 : 2004 CrLJ 2480 (2481) : 2004 (2) Crimes 362.

[12929] ● Preventive detention—Fresh order.—(J&K Public Safety Act, 1978, S. 13) "Though, in the affidavit filed by the State, it has been stated that the contents of the warrants and grounds of detention were served read over and explained to the detenu and he was informed about his right to make a representation against the detention, if he so desired, there is no material placed on record to substantiate this stand. It is stated in the affidavit that the detenu refused to receive copy of the detention order and also refused to put his signatures on the documents. The least the State could have done is to file an affidavit of the person who wanted to serve the relevant documents and an endorsement to the effect that there was refusal. Even the name of the official has not been indicated in the affidavit. That would have been sufficient to comply with the requirements of Section 13 of the Act.

Though a prayer for extension of time is made to file the details, we find that the currency of the detention order is expiring on 6-11-2004. Therefore, we do not accept the prayer for extension of time. Learned counsel for the State submitted that there is no bar on a fresh order of detention being passed." State Legal Aid Committee v. State of J&K, 2005 SCC (Cri) 1299 (1309).

[12930] ● Detenu evading execution of detention order.—Where the detenu evades the execution of the detention order, it would not be a case of unexplained delays in execution of detention order.—Mukesh Tikaji Bora v. Union of India, (2007) 9 SCC 28 : (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 439 : (2007) 2 Crimes 236.

1. A.P. PREVENTION OF DANGEROUS ACTIVITIES OF BOOT-LEGGERS, DACOITS, DRUG OFFENDERS, GOONDAS, IMMORAL TRAFFIC OFFENDERS AND LAND GRABBERS ACT, 1986, S. 3

[12931] ● A.P. Prevention of Dangerous Activities of Boot-leggers, Dacoits, Drug Offenders, Goondas, Immoral Traffic Offenders and Land Grabbers Act, 1986, S. 3.—The grievance of the State Government in the instant appeal was that the High Court erred in quashing the detention order on the ground that some of the instances relied upon by the detaining authority being state, the entire detention order become invalid. The Supreme Court held as under :

> "So far as this grievance of the appellant State is concerned the same is since addressed to by us in our judgment in the case of

Collector & District Magistrate v. Sangala Kondamma, (2005) 3 SCC 666 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 885 wherein we have held: (SCC p. 669, para 10)

> "Thus, if the facts placed before the detaining authority are proximate to each other and the last of the facts mentioned is proximate to the order of detention then the earlier incidents cannot be treated as stale and detention order cannot be set aside."

The principle extracted hereinabove from the case Collector & District Magistrate, (2005) 3 SCC 666 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 885 applies to the facts of this case also.

In the above case of Collector & District Magistrate even though we held that the order of the High Court was unsustainable, we did not interfere with the same for reasons mentioned therein. In the normal course, the very same reasons would have been sufficient to dispose of this appeal also without interfering with the order of the High Court. District Collector, Ananthapur v. V. Laxmanna, 2005 SCC (Cri) 882 (883).

[12932] ● Preventive detention opportunity to make representation.—If the detention is on the ground that the detenu is indulging in manufacture or transport or sale of arrack then that by itself would not become an activity prejudicial to the maintenance of public order because the same can be effectively dealt with under the provisions of the Excise Act but if the arrack sold by the detenu is dangerous to public health then under the Act, it becomes an activity prejudicial to the maintenance of public order, therefore, it becomes necessary for the detaining authority to be satisfied on material available to it that the arrack dealt with by the detenu is an arrack which is dangerous to public health to attract the provisions of the Act and if the detaining authority is satisfied that such material exists either in the form of report of the Chemical Examiner or otherwise, copy of such material should also be given to the detenu to afford him an opportunity to make an effective representation. District Collector, Ananthapur v. V. Laxmanna, AIR 2005 SC 2802 : (2005) 3 SCC 663 : 2005 SCC (Cri) 882 (884) : 2005 CrLJ 2150 : (2005) 2 Crimes 31.

[12933] ● Preventive detention—Past incidents.—It is necessary for the authority proposing the detention of a person under the Act to produce such material which shows the continuous previous illegal activities of the proposed detenu which would satisfy the detaining authority of the need for detaining such a person. In other words, the material produced by the authority proposing the detention should form a chain of incidents last of which will have to be proximate to the date of proposed detention while other acts must be proximate to each other. Thus, if the facts placed before the detaining authority are proximate to each other and the last of the facts mentioned is proximate to the order of detention then the early incidents cannot be treated as stale and detention order. Collector and District Magistrate, W.G. District, Eluru, A.P., 2005 SCC (Cri) 885 (888).

[12934] ● Preventive detention—Last incident proximate to order of detention.—In the instant case between the period from 01, 2001 and 25.10.2002 the detenue was involved in five incidents of bootlegging which were reasonably proximate to each other and the last of the incidents being proximate to the order of detention, the Supreme Court held that the High Court was not justified in treating the two incidents of 17.1.2000 and 10.1.2001 as state by taking them in isolation. The Supreme Court further observed as under at pp. 888 and 889 [of SCC (Cri)]:

> "In our opinion, the Court should have considered the proximity of the incidents between themselves which indicates the possibility of the proposed detenu continuing to indulge in the illegal activities which requires his preventive detention. In the present case, as noticed above, the five incidents recorded in the order of detention being proximate enough to each other show the continuity of the acts of the detenu. In such a fact situation, we think the High Court erred in coming to the conclusion that two of the five grounds being not proximate to the order of detention, the order of detention was based on stale grounds. While it can be stated that the incidents of 17-1-2000 and 10-1-2001 could not by themselves have been sufficient grounds to detain the detenu but would certainly become a relevant material along with the other three grounds dated 3-2-2002, 6-10-2002 and 25-10-2002 to come to the conclusion that there is a need for detaining the detenu to prevent him from indulging similar activities in the future.

While we uphold the validity of the order of detention passed by the detaining authority by disagreeing with the finding of the High Court, however, on facts of this case, we notice that the detenu was taken into custody on 15-1-2003 and was released from detention pursuant to the order of the High Court on 28-4-2003 and at this distance of time the appellants have no fresh material to show before us that his further detention is necessary. Therefore, we think there is no need to rearrest the detenu to serve out the balance period of detention." Collector and District

Magistrate v. Sangala Kondamma, 2005 SCC (Cri) 885.

2. TAMIL NADU PREVENTION OF DANGEROUS ACTIVITIES OF BATTLEGGERS, DRUG OFFENDERS, FOREST OFFENDERS, GOONDAS IMMORAL TRAFFIC OFFENDERS AND SLUM-GRABBERS ACT, 1982

[12935] ● Tamil Nadu Prevention of Dangerous Activities of Battleggers, Drug Offenders, Forest Offenders, Goondas Immoral Traffic Offenders and Slum-Grabbers Act, 1982.—The counter-affidavit filed by the District Magistrate also reveals that there was no confessional statement by the detenu either admitting the guilt or leading to the recovery of incriminating objects used in the crime. If that be the case the statement in the detention order cannot be correct. Making of confession by the detenu is evidently one of the crucial factors that was taken into account by the detaining authority. Once that fact is found to be non-existent, the satisfaction of the District Magistrate under the provisions of the aforesaid Act is vitiated. This ground is sufficient to quash the detention order. Accordingly, the appeal is allowed and the appellant shall be set at liberty forthwith unless required in any other case. Elasu Glias Elavarasam v. District Collector and D.M., T.N., 2005 SCC (Cri) 1495 (1496).

3. COFEPOSA, 1974, S. 3(1); FOREIGN TRADE (DEVELOPMENT AND REGULATION) ACT, 1992, S. 11(1)

[12936] ● COFEPOSA, 1974, S. 3(1); Foreign Trade (Development and Regulation) Act, 1992, S. 11(1).—The detenu has a right to be supplied with the material documents on which reliance is placed by the detaining authority for passing the detention order but the detention order will not be vitiated, if the document although referred to in the order is not supplied which is not relied upon by the detaining authority for forming of its opinion or was made the basis for passing the order of detention. The crux of the matter lies in whether the detenu's right to make a representation against the order of detention is hampered by non-supply of the particular document. J. Abdul Hakeem v. State of T.N., 2005 SCC (Cri) 1601 (1604).

[12937] ● Preventive detention—Grounds of detention.—"In the present case although the detaining authority in the grounds of detention had referred to the passports and the entries made therein for the foreign trips made by the detenu but that cannot be said to have been relied upon by he detaining authority for passing the detention order. The appellant detenu has admitted in his statement dated 17-7-2004 which was in his own handwriting, that he had an old passport under which he travelled 23 times to Sri Lanka out of which 10 visits were made to Hong Kong via Sri Lanka; that he had travelled once to Singapore and under the current passport he had travelled 4 times to Hong Kong via Sri Lanka. It is this statement of the appellant detent made before the Authorities on 17-7-2004 which was the basis for passing of the detention order and reference of the two passports containing entries of the foreign visits by the detenu is only a passing reference. The passport entries are not made the basis of detention order. The basis is admission of the foreign visits made by the detenu in his statement. We fail to understand as to how non-supply of copies of the passports of the appellant detenu prejudicially affect his right to make a proper representation against the order of detention. The non-supply of copies of the passports will not have the effect of vitiating the detention order." J. Abdul Hakeem v. State of T.N., 2005 SCC (Cri) 1601 (1604-05).

[12938] ● Retracted confession.—If the confession was retracted and the same was not placed before the detaining authority, that is a valid ground to set aside the detention order. The respondent authority should have placed all documents and relevant facts to the notice of the detaining authority and failure to do so would vitiate the detention order. Hence, we set aside the detention order and the appellant is directed to be released forthwith; if not required in any other matter. Rakesh Kumar Meglani v. Union of India, 2005 SCC (Cri) 1616 (1617).

DETENUE

DETERRENT PUNISHMENT—PURPOSE

[12939] ● Deterrent punishment—Purpose.—Punishment in criminal cases is both punitive and reformative. The purpose is that the person found guilty of committing the offence is made to realise his fault and is deterred from repeating such acts in future. The reformative aspect is meant to enable the person concerned to relent and repent for his action and make himself acceptable to the society as a useful social being. In determining the question of proper punishment in a criminal case, the Court has to weigh the degree of culpability of the accused, its effect on others and the desirability of showing any leniency in the matter of punishment in the case. An act of balancing is, what is needed in such a case; a balance between the interest of the individual and the concern of the society, weighing the one against the other. Imposing a hard punishment on the accused serves a limited purpose but at the same time, it is to be kept in mind that relevance of deterrent punishment in matters of serious crimes affecting society should not be undermined. Within the parameters of the law, an attempt has to be made to afford an opportunity to the individual to reform himself and lead life of a normal, useful member of society and make his contribution in that regard. Denying such opportunity to a person who had been found to have committed offence in the facts and circumstances placed on record, would only have a hardening attitude towards his fellow beings and towards society at large. Such a situation has to be avoided, again within the permissible limits of law. After giving our anxious consideration to the question of reduction of sentence as urged on behalf of the appellant and objected to on behalf of the respondent, we have come to the conclusion that some consideration should be shown to the appellant in the matter. In coming to this conclusion we have taken into account the facts he has spent long period more than thirteen years in jail, that, he was a young man of 21 years when he fired three shots injuring six person on the birth anniversary of Mahatma Gandhi at Rajghat when President, Prime Minister and other V.I.Ps. were to visit the Samadhi of Mahatma Gandhi, that the situation then prevailing in the State of Punjab was surcharged with acts of terrorism and several misguided young men were drawn into the movement, that in the meantime the movement has subsided and it could be reasonably taken that the State is free from the menace of terrorism. In taking the decision to show some consideration to the appellant in the matter of punishment, we have reposed confidence in goodness of human character which is a part of the personality of every human being. We hope and believe that our confidence will not be belied in the case of the appellant. In the facts and circumstances of the case and the changed social environment which has taken place in the meantime, it is our considered view that the sentence of life imprisonment should be modified to the period already undergone (about 13 years, 7 months). Karamjit Singh v. State (Delhi Admn.), AIR 2000 SC 3467 (3468, 3469) : (2000) 9 SCC 161 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1193 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 435.

DIARY
§ (See "CASE DIARY")

DIET MONEY
§ (SEE "EXPENSES OF WITNESS")

[12940] ● Proper diet money to witness.—The High Court have to be vigilant in the matter of diet money to witnesses. Proper diet money must be paid immediately to the witness not only when he is examined but for every adjourned hearing and even sent to him and should not be left to be harassed by the subordinate staff. Swaran Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 2000 SC 2017 : (2000) 5 SCC 668 : 2000 CrLJ 2780 : (2000) 3 Crimes 12.

DIFFERENCE OF OPINION BETWEEN TWO JUDGES

[12941] ● Difference of opinion between two judges.—Where a case is referred to a third Judge under S. 392, CrPC, such Judge is not only entitled to decide on what points he shall hear the arguments, if any, but also his decision will be final and the judgment in the appeal will follow his decision. Precisely for the said reason, it has been held by the Allahabad High Court that if one of the Judges, who had given a different opinion ceases to be Judge, the Judgement may be pronounced by another bench of the High Court, the reason being that the ultimate decision in the appeal is to abide by the decision of the third Judge and pronouncement of the decision in conformity with the decision of the third Judge is only a formality. Balku v. Emperor, AIR 1948 All 237.

[12942] ● Section 429, CrPC 1895—Applicability of.—The section is not applicable to cases where the difference is as regards the correctness or otherwise of earlier Division bench decision of the same Court. Parmatha Nath Talukdar v. Saroj Ranjan Sarkar, AIR 1962 SC 876 : 1962 (1) CrLJ 770 : 1962 Supp (2) SCR 297 : (1964) 1 SCJ 455.

[12943] ● Third Judge to consider opinion of his two colleagues and then give his own opinion.—For all practical purposes the third judge must consider the opinions of his two colleagues and then give his own opinion but to equate the requirements with appeals against acquittals is not justified by provisions of Section 392 or by principle or by precedent. Dharma Singh v. State Uttar Pradesh, 1964 (1) CrLJ 78 : (1965) 2 SCJ 202 : 1962 Supp (3) SCR 769.

[12944] ● Third Judge free to decide appeal.—Where the third judge did not consider it necessary to decide a particular point on which there had been difference of opinion between the two judges, but simply indicated that if at all it was necessary for him to come to decision on the point he agreed with all that had been said about by one of the two judges such decision was in conformity with law. The third judge is free to decide the appeal in the matter he thinks fit. Babu v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1965 SC 1467 : (1965) 2 CrLJ 539 : (1965) 2 SCR 771.

[12945] ● Criminal law not to be used for wrecking private vengeance.—"In a Case which had proceeded on a police report a private party has no locus standi. No doubt, the terms of Section 435 are very wide and he can even take up the matter suo motu. The criminal law is not to be used as an instrument of wrecking private vengeance by an aggrieved party against the person who according to the party, had caused injury to it. Barring a few exceptions in criminal matters the party who is treated as the aggrieved party is the set which is the custodian of the social interests of the community at large and so it is for the State to take all the steps necessary for bringing the person who had acted against the social interests of the community to book." Thakur Ram v. State of Bihar, AIR 1966 SC 911 : 1966 CrLJ 700 : (1966) 2 SCR 740.

[12946] ● Third Judge—Power of.—The third judge can or will deal with the whole Case. Hethubha v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1970 SC 1266 : (1970) 1 SCC 720 : 1970 SCC (Cri) 280 : 1970 CrLJ 1138.

[12947] ● Third Judge to deal with matter in dispute.—The third judge to whom the case is referred can deal only matter in dispute and cannot reopen entire case. Hethubha v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1970 SC 1266 : (1970) 1 SCC 720 : 1970 SCC (Cri) 280. TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) Union of India v. Ananti Padmanabiah, AIR 1971 SC 1836 : (1971) 3 SCC 278 : 1971 SCC (Cri) 535; (2) Bhagat Ram v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1972 SC 1502 : (1972) 2 SCC 466 : 1972 SCC (Cri) 751.

[12948] ● Third Judge to decide on what points to hear arguments.—This section contemplates that it is for the third judge to decide on what points he shall hear arguments. This postulates that the third Judge is completely free in resolving the difference as he thinks fit. Union of India v. B.N. Ananti Padmanabiah, AIR 1971 SC 1836 : (1971) 3 SCC 278 : 1971 SCC (Cri) 535 : 971 CrLJ 1287. TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) Getgybga v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1970 SC 1266 : (1970) 1 SCC 720 : 1970 SCC (Cri) 280 : 1970 CrLJ 1138; (2) Babu v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1965 SC 1467 : 1965 CrLJ 539 : (1965) 2 SCR 771; (3) State of Andhra Pradesh v. P.T. Appaiah, AIR 1981 SC 365 : (1980) 4 SCC 316 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 960 : 1980 CrLJ 1410.

[12949] ● Difference between two Judges composing Court of appeal.—Even in a case when both the judges has held that the accused was guilty but there was difference of opinion as to the nature of offence committed by the accused, it is often to the third judge to decide appeal by holding that the accused was not guilty by considering the case on merit. State of AP. v. PT. Appaiah, AIR 1981 SC 365 : (1980) 4 SCC 316 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 960 : 1980 CrLJ 1410.

[12950] ● Difference of opinion amongst Judges of Division Bench.—When there is a difference of opinion amongst Judges of Division bench and their opinions were laid before a third judge, the order of Division bench becomes non est and the opinion of third Judge is the final order. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Dan Singh, AIR 1997 SC 1654 : (1997) 3 SCC 747 : 1997 SCC (Cri) 469 : 1997 CrLJ 1150 : (1997) 1 Crimes 121.

[12951] ● On difference of opinion between two Judges matter be referred to third Judge.—S. 392, CrPC clearly contemplates that on a difference of opinion between the two Judges of the Division Bench, the matter is to be referred to the third Judge for his opinion so that the appeal is finally disposed of on the basis of such opinion of the third Judge. In the scheme of Section 392, CrPC the view that the third judge, as a rule of prudence or on the question of judicial etiquette, will lean in favour of acquittal of the accused cannot be sustained. Tanviben Pankaj Kumar Divetia v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1997 SC 2193 : (1997) 7 SCC 156 : 1997 SCC (Cri) 1004 (1009) : 1997 CrLJ 2535 : 1997 CrLR (SC) 572 : JT 1997 (5) SC 233.

[12952] ● Third Judge to examine independently entire case.—"Statement of law is now quite explicit. It is the third judge whose opinion matters; against the judgment that follows therefrom that an appeal lies to this Court by way of special leave petition under Article 136 of the Constitution or under Article 134 of the Constitution or under Section 379 of the Code. The third judge is therefor, required to examine whole of the Case independently and it cannot be said that he is bound by that part of the two opinions of the two judges comprising the Division bench where there is no difference. As a matter of fact third judge is not bound by any such opinion of the Division bench. He is not hearing the matter as if he is sitting in a three judge bench where the opinion of majority would prevail." Sajjan Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1998 SC 2756 : (1999) 1 SCC 315 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 44 : 1998 CrLJ 4073 (SC).

DIGESTIVE SYSTEM

[12953] ● Determination of time of death.—A mixed diet of animal and vegetable foods, normally taken by Europeans, takes 4 to 5 hours for complete digestion while a vegetable diet, containing mostly farinaceous food usually consumed by Indian does not leave the stomach completely within 6 to 7 hours after its ingestion. Indeed, the stomachic contents cannot determine with precision the time of death "inasmuch as the power of digestibility may remain in abeyance for a long time in states of profound shock and coma". "It must also be remembered that the process of digestion in normal healthy persons may continue for a time after death". The Court must not abandon a scientific attitude to medical science, if it is not to be guilty of judicial superstition. To impute exactitude to a medical statement oblivious to the variables noticed by the experts and changes in dietary habits is to be unfair to the science. Shivaji Sahebrao Bobade v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1973 SC 2622 : (1973) 2 SCC 793 : 1973 SCC (Cri) 1033 (1042, 1043) : 1973 CrLJ 1783.

[12954] ● Process of digestion varies from individual to individual.—When doctor, PW-9 stated that digestion begins in 1 or 1½ hours he did not clarify as to what was the extent of the undigested food in the stomach of the deceased. The process of digestion depends upon the digestive power of an individual and varies from an individual to an individual. It also depends upon the type and amount of food taken. The period of digestion is different for different types of food. Some food articles like mutton, chicken etc. would take more time for being digested as compared to vegetarian food. Mani Ram v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1993 SC 2453 : 1993 SCC (Cri) 853 (857) : 1993 CrLJ 2530 : 1993 (1) Crimes 1144.

[12955] ● Medical opinion—Value.—Medical opinion is merely based on the purported opinion expressed by an author. Hypothetical answers given to hypothetical questions, a mere hypothetical and abstract opinions by test book writers, on accused facts, cannot dilute evidentiary value of ocular evidence if it is credible and cogent. The time taken normally for digesting of food would also depend upon the quality and quantity of food as well, besides others. It is required to be factually proved as to the quantum of food that was taken, atmosphere conditions and such other relevant factors to throw doubt about the correctness of time of occurrence, as stated by the witnesses. Only when the ocular evidence is wholly inconsistent with the medical evidence, the Court has to consider the effect thereof. Ram Bali v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 2004 SC 2329 : (2004) 10 SCC 598 : 2004 CrLJ 2490 (2492) : 2004 (2) Crimes 493.

[12956] ● Medical science not so perfect to determine exact time of death.—In Pathipati Venkaiah v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1985 SC 1715, it has been observed that Medical science is not yet so perfect as to determine the exact time of death nor can the same be determined in a computerized or mathematical fashion so as to be accurate to the last second. The state of the contents of the stomach found at the time of medical examination is not a safeguide for determining the time of occurrence because that would be a matter of speculation, in the absence of reliable evidence on the question as to when exactly the deceased had his last meal and what that meal consisted of. In Nihal Singh and others v. State of Punjab (AIR 1965 SC 26), it was indicated that the time required for digestion may depend upon the nature of the food. The time also varies according to the digestive capacity. The process of digestion is not uniform and varies from individual to individual and the health of a person at a particular time and so many other varying factors. Ram Bali v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 2004 SC 2329 : (2004) 10 SCC 598 : 2004 CrLJ 2490 (2492) : 2004 (2) Crimes 493.

[12957] ● No direct evidence as to whether deceased had taken food in morning.—Another contention urged by the appellant's counsel is that the post-mortem showed that the stomach of the deceased was empty. According to the learned counsel, PW-1 and the deceased had left the house in the morning and they must have taken food and that the prosecution story must be false, for the reason that the incident must have taken place somewhere during the night and that is why the postmortem evidence is to the effect that the stomach of the deceased was empty. There is no direct evidence as to whether the deceased had taken any food in the morning. The counsel for the appellants pointed to the statement given by the Investigating Officer during the cross-examination in which he had admitted that the father-in-law had stated to him that the deceased had taken breakfast in the morning and thereafter left the house. The father-in-law of the deceased was not examined as a witness. Therefore, the statement given by the Investigating Officer must have been based on the statement of the father-in-law of the deceased recorded under Section 161 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The statement given by the Investigating Officer regarding this fact is not directly admissible in law. In the absence of any evidence to the effect as to whether the deceased had taken food or not before leaving the house on 12.10.79, the findings of the doctor to the effect that the stomach of the deceased was empty are of no consequence. Ram Kishan v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 2004 SC 4678 : 2004 CrLJ 4236 (4238) : 2004 (3) Crimes 397.

[12958] ● Time of death can be ascertained to some extent from contents of stomach.—According to Modi, the time of death can be ascertained to some extent from the contents of the stomach, bladder and the intestines and rate of emptying of stomach varies in healthy persons which is dependent on the consistency of food; motility of the stomach; osmotic pressure of the stomach contents; quantity of food in the duodenum; surroundings in which food is taken, emotional; and residual variations. The learned author opined thus that the time varies in a man from 2.5-6 hours. The aforesaid opinion of the learned author in his famous treatise has been noticed by this Court which approval in the case of Suresh Chandra Bahri v. State of Bihar, 1995 Suppl (1) SCC 80, at page 131 para 88, wherein it was observed that as the deceased was a young boy of 12 years, his power of digestion must be assumed to be quick and strong, therefore, if the stomach at the time of postmortem was found to be empty, it was but natural.

In the present case, it is the prosecution case and evidence that at 7.30 in the morning when other members of prosecution party were warming up near the fire and milching the cow, three deceased persons were cutting the fodder for being given to the cattle in the morning and the possibility of their taking the breakfast around 5.30 in the morning before starting the work is but natural and as Rakesh alias Chhotey, ages 23 years, was a healthy young boy at the prime of his youth might have digested the food within two hours as his power of digestion must be quick and strong due to which stomach was found empty. Thus, the finding of the doctor in the postmortem report that the stomach of Rakesh alias Chhotey was found empty at the time of postmortem examination was but natural and cannot create any doubt in relation to the veracity of the prosecution case that occurrence had taken place at 7.30 a.m. on 20th December, 1977 and consequently, the High Court was not justified in throwing out the prosecution case and rejecting ocular version of the occurrence disclosed by the witnesses, more so when the medical evidence supports the prosecution case of assault by different weapons. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Sheo Sanchi, AIR 2004 SC 4974 : (2004) 12 SCC 347 : 2004 CrLJ 4650 (4653) : (2004) 4 Crimes 163.

DIRECTING PROSECUTION
(Ss. 340, 343, 195, CrPC, 1973)
§ (See also "COGNIZANCE")

[12960] ● Directing prosecution.—At the preliminary inquiry the Court should not express its opinion on merit. M.S. Sheriff v. State of Madras, AIR 1954 SC 397 : 1954 CrLJ 1019 : 1954 SCR 1144.

[12961] ● Pronouncement of definitive judgment essential sine qua non of Court.—The pronouncement of a definitive judgment is considered the essential sine qua non of a Court and unless and until a binding or authoritative judgment can be pronounced by a person or a body of persons it cannot be a Court. Brijanandan Singh v. Jyoti Narayan, AIR 1956 SC66 : 1956 CrLJ 156 : (1955) 2 SCR 955.

[12962] ● Subordination—Meaning.—Subordination has special meaning under Section 195(3). Kuldip Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1956 SC 391 : 1956 CrLJ 781 : 1956 SCJ 387 . 1956 SCR 191.

[12963] ● Section 476, CrPC 1898 not preclude officer presiding over Court from himself preferring complaint.—Any Court can make complaint under this section. This section does not preclude the officer presiding over Court from himself preferring a complaint and the jurisdiction of the Magistrate before whom the complaint is laid is not taken away by that section. Virendar Kumar Satyawadi v. State of Punjab, AIR 1956 SC 153 : 1956 CrLJ 326 : 1956 SCJ 138 : (1955) 2 SCR 1013.

[12964] ● Court not to make complaint covered by Section 476, CrPC 1898 under inherent jurisdiction.—Court cannot make a complaint in cases not covered by the section under its inherent jurisdiction. Virender Kumar Satyawadi v. State of Punjab, AIR 1956 SC 153 : 1956 CrLJ 326 : (1955) 2 SCR 1013.

[12965] ● Returning officer deciding on validity of nomination paper not Court for purpose of Section 195(1)(b), CrPC.—When a question arises as to whether an authority created by an Act is a Court as distinguished from a quasi-judicial tribunal, what has to be decided is whether having regard to the provisions of the Act, it possesses all the attributes of a Court. the Returning Officer deciding on the validity of a nomination paper is not a Court for the purpose of Section 195(1)(b), CrPC and the result is that even as regards the charge under Section 193, the order of the Magistrate was not appealable, as the offence was not committed in or in relation to any proceeding in a Court. Virendar Kumar Satywadi v. State of Punjab, AIR 1956 SC 153 : 1956 CrLJ 326 : 1956 SCJ 138 : (1955) 2 SCR 1013.

[12966] ● Court can file complaint in respect of offences mentioned in Section 195(1)(b), CrPC.—A Court can file a complaint in respect of an offence mentioned in clause (b) of Section 195(1) only when it is committed in or in relation to proceedings before a Court. Virender Kumar Satyawadi v. State of Punjab, AIR 1956 SC 153 : 1956 CrLJ 326 : 1956 SCJ 138 : (1955) 2 SCR 1013.

[12967] ● Sales Tax Officers instrumentalities of State.—Sales Tax Officers are the instrumentalities of the State for the collection of certain taxes. Under the Sales Tax Act and the Rules made thereunder they have duties assigned to them for the imposition and collection of taxes and in the process they have to perform many duties which are administrative duties. Merely because these instrumentalities of the State employed for the purpose of taxation have, in the discharge of their duties, to perform certain quasi-judicial functions, they are not converted thereby into Courts. They remain the instrumentalities of the State and are within the definition of "State" in Article 12. No. doubt, they have certain powers which are similar to the powers exercised by Courts, but that would not make them "Court" as understood in Section 195 of the Code. Under the Sales Tax Act, a Sales Tax Officer is only an assessing authority and the scheme of the Act shows that the sales Tax Officer cannot be equated with a Court. In 1923, Section 195(2) was amended and by the amendment the word "includes" was substituted for the word "means". The amendment was no doubt intended to enlarge the definition of "Court" so as to include all Civil, Revenue and Criminal Courts. But it cannot be said that a Sales Tax Officer is a Revenue Court, or that by the said amendment the definition of the words "Revenue Court" was enlarged so as to include officers whose function mainly is assessment and collection of taxes. When a question arises as to whether an authority created under any special Act is a "Court" or a "quasi-judicial tribunal", the test for determining that question is whether having regard to all the provisions of the Act that authority is charged with a duty to decide disputes and declare the rights of the parties in a definitive judgment. It is only when the authority is charged with such duty that it could be said that it possesses the attributes of a Court. The mere fact that an administrative authority is vested with what have been called "the trappings of a Court" would not make that authority a Court. merely because a duty is cast on the executive or authority to conform to the norms of judicial procedure in performing some acts in its exercise of its executive power would not make it a "Court". A Sales Tax Officer is not a Court within the meaning of Section 195, CrPC and therefore a complaint by a Sales Tax Officer is not necessary for prosecuting any person for an offence under the Sales Tax Act, or the Penal Code committed in or in relation to a proceeding before such officer. Jagannath Prasad v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1963 SC 416 : 1963 (1) CrLJ 330 : (1963) 2 SCJ 120 : (1963) 1 SCA 248 : 1963 SCD 167 : (1963) 2 SCR 850 : 1963 ALJ 1 : ILR (1963) 1 All 147 : 1963 MLJ (Cri) 338 : 1963 AnWR (HC) 152 : 1963ACrR 99 : (1963) 1 ALT 194 : (1963) 14 STC 536.

[12968] ● For offence of forgery—Complaint under Section 195(1), CrPC required.—Under Section 195(1)(c), CrPC 1973 a complaint by the Court is required when the prosecution is for the offence of forgery or using a forged document as genuine, when "such document" is produced or given in evidence in any proceeding in that Court. It is clear that it is only when the forged document itself is produced in Court that a complaint by the Court is required. Where what is produced before the Court is not the forged document itself but only a copy thereof Section 195(1)(c) does not apply and a complaint by the Court is not necessary. Therefore, even if the Settlement Officer under the Act is assumed to be a Court within the meaning of Section 195(1)(c), a complaint by him was not necessary in the present case because what was produced before him was not the forged original verified claim itself, but only a copy therof. Buphu Ram v. State of Rajasthan, 1963 (2) CrLJ 698 : (1963) 3 SCR 376.

[12969] ● Section 340, CrPC general provision.—Whereas Section 340, CrPC, 1973 is a general provision dealing with the procedure to be followed in respect of variety of offences affecting the administration of justice in so for as certain offences falling under Sections 193 to 195, and Section 471, IPC are concerned. The Court before which the person has appeared as a witness and which disposed of the case can alone make a complaint. Shabir Hussain Bholu v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1963 SC 816 : 1963 (1) CrLJ 803 (807) : (1964) 1 SCJ 609 : 1963 Supp (1) SCR 501.

[12970] ● Court can act suo motu.—The Court can act on an application made to it or suo motu. Shabir Hussain Bholu v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1963 SC 816 : 1963 (1) CrLJ 803 (807) : 1963 Supp (1) SCR 501 : (1964) 1 SCR 609.

[12971] ● Proceeding against person using false document.—For taking proceeding against a person who is found to have used a false document dishonestly or fraudulently in any judicial proceedings resort may only be had to this section. Babu Lal v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1964 SC 725 : 1964 (1) CrLJ 555 (558) : (1964) 4 SCR 957 : (1964) 2 SCJ 424.

[12972] ● Prosecution of accused under Section 476, CrPC.—The prosecution of the accused under provisions of Section 476, CrPC by the Magistrate after the conclusion of the trial is legally valid. Kuppa Govindan v. M.S.P. Rajesh, AIR 1966 SC 1863 : 1966 CrLJ 1503 : (1967) 1 SCJ 454 : (1967) 1 SCA 643 : 1996 Supp SCR 3873.

[12973] ● Expert examined in Sessions Trial—His credentials challenged.—The offences of forgery of a document as described in Section 463, IPC and of using such forged documents if produced or given in evidence by a person other than a party to the proceeding in a Court, do not require a complaint in writing of the Court concerned, but prosecution in respect of offences under Sections 193 to 196, 199 and 200 (among others) committed in a judicial proceeding by a person (whether a party or not) requires a complaint in writing of the Court before which the offence is committed or of some other Court to which such Court is subordinate. It is this difference which has apparently induced the selection of Sections 465/471 rather than Sections 193/196 of the Indian Penal Code. The former sections do not require a complaint by the Court but the latter sections do and this was the main point of controversy before us. The broad distinction between offences under the two groups is this. Sections 465 deals with the offence of forgery by the making of a false document and Section 471 with the offence of using forged document dishonestly or fraudulently. Section 193 deals with the giving or fabricating of false evidence and Section 196 with corruptly using evidence known to be false. The gist of the offence in the first group is the making of a false document and the gist of the offences in the second group is the procuring of false circumstances or the making of a document containing a false statement so that a judicial officer may form a wrong opinion in a judicial proceeding on the faith requires of the false evidence. Another important difference is that whereas Section 471 requires a user to be either fraudulent, dishonest or both, the provision of Section 196 is satisfied if the user is corrupt. The Penal Code defines the expressions fraudulently and dishonestly but not the expressions corruptly.

If Dr. Dutt fabricated the false diploma, he made a document containing a false statement intending that it may appear in evidence and so appearing in evidence may cause any person who is to form an opinion upon it to entertain an erroneous opinion touching on a point material to the result of a judicial proceeding. Dr. Dutt, as alleged, was falsely posing as an expert and was deposing about matters which were material to the result of the trial. He had a document to support his claim, should occasion arise. He produced the document, when asked to do so, intending that the presiding Judge may form an erroneous opinion about Dr. Dutt and the relevancy of his evidence. The case was thus covered by Section 192. When Dr. Dutt deposed let us assume, falsely, about his training, he committed an offence under Section 193. Again when Dr. Dutt used the diploma as genuine his conduct was corrupt, whether or not it was dishonest or fraudulent.

It would thus be seen that the action of Dr. Dutt was covered by sections 192 and 196 of the Penal Code. If Dr. Dutt gave a false evidence in Court or if he fabricated false evidence the offence under Section 193 was clearly committed. If he used fabricated evidence an offence under Section 196 was committed by him. These offences would have required a complaint in writing of the Sessions Judge before cognisance could be taken. The word ‘dishonestly’ is defined by Section 24 of the Penal Code. A person who does anything with the intention of causing wrongful gain to one person or wrongful loss to another person, is said to do that thing ‘dishonestly’. Dr. Dutt’s conduct involved neither a gain to any person nor loss to another. He was asked to produce the diploma in Court and he did. It is a matter of some doubt whether he can be said to have used the diploma because he did not voluntarily bring the diploma to Court. There is authority to show that such a user is not contemplated by Section 471 of the Indian Penal Code. (See Asst. S.J. North Arcot v. Ramammul, ILR 36 Mad 387 and Ma Ain Lon v. Ma on Nu, AIR 1925 Rang 191). Even if one were to hold that he did use the document as genuine his intention in producing it was to support his statement and not to cause a wrongful gain to himself or to cause a wrongful loss to another, hence this part of the section does not apply to the case. The next question was whether his conduct can be said to be fraudulent. The word "fraudulently" is defined by Section 25 of the Penal Code. A person is said to do a thing fraudulently if he does that thing with an intent to defraud but not otherwise. The last three words "but not otherwise" clearly indicate that the intent must be an "intent to defraud". For the present it is sufficient to say that the words "with intent to defraud" in the section indicate not a bare intent to deceive but an intent to cause a person to act or omit to act, to his disadvantage, as a result of deception played upon him. This is the most extensive meaning that may be given to the expression " with intent do defraud" in our Penal Code and the words "but not otherwise" clearly show that the words "intent to defraud" are not synonymous with the word "intent to deceive" and required some action resulting in some disadvantage which but for the deception, the person deceived would have avoided. We are therefore, satisfied that Dr. Dutt's conduct did not come within Section 471. On the other hand, it falls within purview of Section 196 which casts its net wider in the interest of the purity of administration of justice. It may be noted that an offence under Section 196 of the Penal Code is far more serious offence than the offence under Section 465/471. S. Dutt (Dr.) v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1966 SC 523 : 1966 CrLJ 459 : (1966) 1 SCR 493.

[12974] ● Order directing filing of complaint.—An order directing filing of a complaint under this section is a final order. Mohan Lal, Magan Lal Thakkar v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1968 SC 733 : 1968 CrLJ 876 : (1968) 2 SCR 685 : 1967 CAR 183.

[12975] ● Order directing filing of complaint and deciding that prima facie case therefor inquiry.—An order directing the filing of a complaint and deciding that there is a prima facie case for an inquiry into an offence is not a final order. It is merely a preliminary step in the prosecution and therefore, an interlocutory order. Mohan Lal Magan Lal Thakkar v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1968 SC 733 : 1968 CrLJ 876 (883).

[12976] ● Section 35, CrPC applies to all Magistrate.—Section 559 of the old Code (Section 35 now) applies to all Magistrates and there is no reason why the plain terms of the section should be cut down to limit it to Magistrates whose Courts are permanent. Section 559(2) has not the effect of limiting Section 559(1) and Section 559(2) applies when there is a doubt as to who the successor is and that doubt can be resolved in the manner laid down in that subsection. It does not mean that until a successor is determined under Section 559(2), there is no successor for the purposes of Section 559(1). Ajaib Singh v. Joginder Singh, AIR 1968 SC 1422 : 1969 CrLJ 4 : (1968) 2 SCJ 948 : 1969 MLJ (Cri) 72 : 1969 ACrR 154 : 1969 AWR (HC) 223 : 70 PunLR 1131 : (1968) 2 UmNP 836.

[12977] ● Forged entries by Lekhpals and Ahlmad.—In this appeal the prosecution case, was that one Nankoo sold his half share of lands to Kamla Prasad Singh and some others. Kamla Prasad Singh filed a complaint that one Harinath Singh in conspiracy with two Lekhpals got certain forged entries made in the Khasra after the sale in favour of Kamla Prasad and applied for the correction of Jamabandi. The ahlmad in conspiracy with Harinath Singh ante-dated the said application to make it appear that it was made prior to the sale deed and to shield the Lekhpals. The application was entered in the register of Jamabandis although the case bearing that number was a later one. It was contended in the High Court under Section 561-A, CrPC (Section 482 now), that the offence if any was one under Section 193, IPC, and that Section 195, CrPC, barred the private complaint. The High Court upheld the said objection. Hence this appeal. It would appear that the alleged offence committed by the Ahlmad was clearly in or in relation to a proceeding in Court. In fact he made an incorrect entry about a case actually in Court with the intention that the date of the institution of the proceeding might be taken to be an earlier date. Section 192, IPC, completely covered the case against Ahmad and also Harinath Singh the alleged abettor, and punishable under Section 193, IPC, which was one of the sections mentioned in Section 195(1)(b), CrPC. Hence the private complaint was therefore incompetent. But the case under Section 218, IPC, was not barred under Section 195, CrPC. Kamla Prasad Singh v. Harinath Singh, AIR 1968 SC 19 : 1968 CrLJ 86 : 1968) 1 SCJ 507 : 1968 SCD 93.

[12978] ● Complaint by informant before Magistrate.—Once a complaint filed by the informant is being proceeded with which is based on the same facts and allegations on which the first information was registered, it is not open to a Magistrate to take cognizance of any offence alleged to have been committed under Section 211, IPC unless there has been proper compliance with the provisions of Section 195(1)(b) of the CrPC. It will lead to very anomalous results if any other view is accepted, e.g., if the complaint is ultimately dismissed and the Magistrate refused to lodge a complaint under Section 195(1)(b) its provisions will be defeated or circumvented if the police can move the Magistrate to take cognizance on a police report of an offence under Section 211, IPC. As regards an offence under Section 182, IPC, that offence is distinct from the one under Section 211, IPC, though the latter is more serious and may include the offence under the former section. The Magistrate can take cognizance of an offence under Section 182 on a complaint in writing of the police officer by virtue of the provisions contained in Section 195(1)(a), CrPC, but it would virtually lead to the circumvention of the provisions of Section 195(1)(b) if the proceedings under Section 182 can continue where the offence disclosed is covered by Section 211, IPC, and a complaint is pending which has been filed by the informant on the same facts and allegations as were contained in his FIR. On a parity of reasoning with regard to an offence under Section 211 of the Penal Code, no cognizance can be taken by the Magistrate for the alleged offence under Section 193, IPC, which is one of the sections mentioned in Section 195(1)(b). State of Punjab v. Brij Lal, AIR 1969 SC 355 : 1969 CrLJ 645 : (1969) 1 SCJ 383 : (1969) 1 SCR 853.

[12979] ● Prohibition contained in Section 195(1)(b) and (c), CrPC confined to those cases in which offences specified.—The offences about which the Court alone, to the exclusion of the aggrieved private parties, is clothed with the right to complain, may, be appropriately considered to be only those offences committed by a party to a proceeding in that Court, the commission of which has a reasonably close nexus with the proceedings in that Court so that it can, without embarking upon a completely independent and fresh inquiry, satisfactorily consider by reference principally to its records the expediency of prosecuting the delinquent party. The purpose and object of the Legislature in creating the bar against cognizance of private complaints in regard to the offences mentioned in Section 195(1)(b) and (c) is both to save the accused person from vexatious or baseless prosecution inspired by feelings of vindictiveness on the part of the private complainants to harass their opponents and also to avoid confusion which is likely to arise on account of conflicts between findings of the Court in which forged documents are produced or false evidence is led and the conclusions of the Criminal Courts dealing with the private complaint. It is for this reason that the Legislature has entrusted the Court, whose proceedings had been the target of the offence of perjury, to consider the expediency in the larger public interest, of a criminal trial of the guilty party. Patel Laljibhai v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1971 SC 1935 : 1971 SCC 376 : 1971 SCC (Cri) 548 : 1971 CrLJ 1437 : 1971 SCD 663 : 1971 Supp SCR 834.

[12980] ● Bar on filing complaint.—Section 195 creates a bar on the filing of a complaint by all and sundry and Section 340 removes the bar by conferring jurisdiction on the Court to file the complaint. It prescribes the procedure to be followed in the case of complaints by Court in respect of offences mentioned in clause (b) of Section 195 sub-section (1). Govinda Mehta v. State of Bihar, AIR 1971 SC 1708 : (1971) 3 SCC 329 : 1971 SCC (Cri) 608 : 1971 CrLJ 1266 : 1971 Supp SCR 777.

[12981] ● Before sanctioning prosecution for perjury Court to be satisfied about prima facie case of deliberate falsehood.—Though giving of false evidence and filing false affidavits in an evil which must be effectively curbed with a strong hand but to start prosecution for perjury too readily and too frequently without due care and caution and on inconclusive and doubtful material defeats it very purpose. Prosecution should be ordered when it is considered expedient in the interest of justice to punish the delinquent and not merely because there is some inaccuracy in the statement which may be innocent or immaterial. There must be prima facie case of deliberate false-hood on a matter of substance and the Court should be satisfied that there is reasonable foundation for the charge. Chajoo Ram v. Radhey Shyam, AIR 1971 SC 1367 : (1971) 1 SCC 774 : 1971 SCC (Cri) 331 : 1971 CrLJ 1096 : 1971 SCD 1084 : 1971 Supp SCR 172.

[12982] ● Document production of in Court when.—Magistrate ordering investigation on receipt of a report of cognizable offence without himself taking cognizance, and the accused producing a document before police in course of investigation, it cannot be said that the document was produced in Court. Nirmaljit Singh v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1972 SC 2639 (1973) 3 SCC 753 : 1973 CrLR (SC) 237 : (1973) 2 SCR 66.

[12983] ● Words "to have been committed by party to any proceeding in any Court" in Section 195(1)(c), CrPC—Meaning.—The words "to have been committed by a party to any proceeding in any Court" in Section 195(1)(c) mean that the offence should be alleged to have been committed by the party to the proceeding in his character as such party, that is, after having become a party to the proceeding. Where the accused put forward an unknown lady to personate one lady and two of the accused identified that lady as the person impersonated before the sub-registrar in the Registration Office knowing that she was not in fact that particular lady, and after thus securing a sale deed the other accused filed an application before the Tahsildar for mutation of revenue entries in his favour and in those proceedings he used the said forged sale deed as genuine knowing it to be forged. On receipt of notice, the lady impersonated resisted the application by denying having ever sold the plot in question or having ever executed and got registered the alleged sale deed. Thereafter she filed a complaint against the appellants under Sections 465, 468 and 471, IPC. They were acquitted by the Sessions Court and upon appeal the High Court convicted them under Section 465, read with Section 109, IPC. It was contended in the Supreme Court that even a prosecution for an offence under Section 465, IPC, required complaint by the Revenue Court concerned as such an offence was covered by Section 195(1)(c), CrPC. The contention was not correct. The prohibition contained in Section 195(1)(c) should be confined only to those cases in which the offences specified therein were committed by a party to the proceeding in the character as such party. Otherwise, documents forged long before the commencement of a proceeding in which they might happen to be actually used or produced in evidence, years later by some other party would also be subject to Sections 195 and 476, CrPC. Raghunath v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1973 SC 1100 : (1973) 1 SCC 564 : 1973 SCC (Cri) 448 : 1973 CrLJ 858.

[12984] ● Power of Court to direct prosecution for giving false evidence.—Every incorrect or false statement does not make it incumbent on the Court to order prosecution. The Court has to exercise judicial discretion in the light of all the relevant circumstances when it determines the question of expediency. The Court orders prosecution in the larger interest of the administration of justice and not to vindictiveness or to serve the ends of private party. Too frequent prosecutions for such offences tend to defeat its very object. Santokh Singh v. Izhar Hussain, AIR 1973 SC 2190 : (1973) 2 SCC 406 : 1973 CrLJ 1176 (SC) : 1973 SCD 611.

[12985] ● Power to make order of complaint—Exercise of.—The power to make order of complaint may be exercised either by the trial Court or in case trial fails to exercise this power by the Supreme Court to which the trial Court is subordinate. Santokh Singh v. Izhar Hussain, AIR 1973 SC 2190 : (1973) 2 SCC 406 : 1975 SCC (Cri) 182 : 1973 CrLJ 1176 : 1973 SCD 611.

[12986] ● Complainant forging will.—The complainant alleged that the appellants forged the will of one Kharturam, produced it before the Patwari and used it as a piece of evidence in support of their title to a land. The Tehsildar directed that entries be made in the Record of Rights in the names of the appellants on the strength of that will. It was difficult on those facts to invoke the application of Section 195(1)(c) of the Code. In order to attract that provision, the offence should be alleged to have been committed by the party to the proceeding in his character as such party, i.e., after having become a party to the proceeding. The forgery was therefore alleged to have been committed by the appellants not after they became parties to the mutation proceedings but prior to the commencement of those proceedings. The section could therefore have no application at least in regard to the offences under Sections 464, 467 and 468, IPC. Different considerations might, perhaps, arise in regard to the offence under Section 471, IPC, for the allegations might reasonably be susceptible of the construction that the offence of using a forged document as genuine punishable under Section 471 was committed by the appellants in their capacity as parties to a mutation proceeding. But the further question would be whether the will was produced or given in evidence in any "Court", within the meaning of clause (c) if the complainant succeeded in proving the other offences, it would be academic to consider whether the Magistrate could take cognizance for the offence under Section 471 because it was hardly likely that a separate sentence would be imposed for that offence, and on the other hand, if the charge with regard to the other offences failed, the one in regard to Section 471 would necessarily fail in the light of facts stated in the complaint. Mohan Lal v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1974 SC 299 : (1974) 3 SCC 628 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 118 : 1974 CrLJ 350.

[12987] ● Section 195(1)(c), CrPC—Applicability.—The inhibition in Section 195(1)(c) applies only where a person is being tried for an offence falling under Section 463 or punishable under Sections 471, 475 or 476. Hence so far as the offence under Sections 418 and 477-A are concerned, they are plainly not covered by Section 195(1)(c). The trial of the respondent for those two offences cannot be said to be vitiated on the ground of absence of a complaint in writing by the Company Judge. The words in Section 195(1)(c) clearly mean that the offence should be alleged to have been committed by the party to the proceeding in his character as such party, that is, after having become a party to the proceeding. A reading of Sections 195(1)(c), 476 and 476-A of the Code (Sections 195(1)(b)(ii), 340(ii) & 341(1) of the new Code) together would indicate beyond doubt that the Legislature could not have intended to extend the prohibition contained in Section 195(1)(c) to offences mentioned therein when committed by a party to the proceeding prior to his becoming such party. In that view, since the offence charged against the respondent is one alleged to have been committed by him before he became a party to the proceeding before the Company Judge. Section 195(1)(c) has no application. Further neither of the two forged bills is produced or given in evidence in the proceeding before the Company Judge. They are taken possession of by the Special Officer along with other records and nobody produced them in evidence before the Company Judge. On that ground also the section is not attracted. The High Court is therefore entitled to proceed with the trial of the respondent for an offence under Section 471 without any complaint in writing from the Company Judge. Legal Rembrr., Government of West Bengal v. Haridas, AIR 1976 SC 2225 : (1976) 1 SCC 555 : 1976 SCC (Cri) 67 : 1976 CrLJ 1732 : 1976 CrLR (SC) 67 : (1976) 1 SCWR 113 : 1976 SCCrR 104 : (1976) 2 SCR 933 : 1976 UJ (SC) 133 : 1976 CrAppR (SC) 114.

[12988] ● Complaint in respect of offence under Section 193, IPC—Habeas Corpus petition.—Complaint in respect of an offence under Section 193, IPC, after making an enquiry under Section 340(1), CrPC, 1973, was filed. The complaint was an offshoot of a habeas corpus application filed before the High Court of Kerala. An order of the High Court made under subsection (1) or sub-section (2) of Section 340 is specifically excluded for the purpose of appeal to the superior Court under Section 341(1) of the new CrPC. This, therefore, is a new restriction in the way of the appellant in approaching the Supreme Court under Article 136. Whether suo motu or on an application by a party under Section 340(1) of the Code, a Court having been already seized of a matter may be tentatively of opinion that further action against some party or witness may be necessary in the interests of justice. In a proceeding under Section 340(1), The reasons recorded in the principal case, in which a false statement has been made, have a great bearing and indeed action is taken having regard to the over-all opinion formed by the Court in the earlier proceedings. At an inquiry held by the Court under Section 340(1), irrespective of the result of the main case, the only question is whether a prima facie case is made out which, if unrebutted, may have a reasonable likelihood to establish the specified offence and whether it is also expedient in the interests of justice to take such action. The party may choose to place all its materials before the Court at that stage, but if it does not, it will not be estopped from doing so later in the trial, in case prosecution is sanctioned by the Court. An enquiry, when made, under Section 340(1), CrPC, is really in the nature of affording a locus paenitentiae to a person and if at that stage the Court chooses to take action, it does not mean that he will not have full and adequate opportunity in due course of the process of justice to establish his innocence. It is well settled that the Supreme Court under Article 136 would come to the aid of a party when any gross injustice is manifestly committed by a Court whose order gives rise to the cause for grievance before it. Even when two views are possible in the matter it will not be expedient in the interests of justice to interfere with the order of the High Court unless the Supreme Court is absolutely certain that the two pre-conditions which are necessary for laying a complaint after an enquiry under Section 340 are completely absent. There is no need to interfere with the order of the High Court to scotch the complaint against the appellant at the threshold. K. Karunakaran v. T.V. Eachara Warrier, AIR 1978 SC 290 : (1978) 1 SCC 18 : 1978 SCC (Cri) 32 : 1978 CrLJ 339 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 521 : (1978) 1 SCWR 1 : 1978 SCCrR 38 : (1978) 1 SCJ 355 : (1978) 2 SCR 209 : 1977 CrAppR (SC) 411 : 1978 CurLJ (Cri) 10 : 1978 MLJ (Cri) 237 : 1978 Chand LR (Cri) (SC) 206 : 1977 KLT 981.

[12990] ● Offence under Section 211, IPC when committed.—T filed a report against P and others at the police station. Warrants were issued for the arrest of the accused who surrendered before the Court of the Sub-Divisional Judicial Magistrate and he released them on bail. Police referred the report of T as false and the Magistrate agreeing with the police report passed an order discharging the accused. Thereafter P filed a complaint before the same Magistrate accusing T of the commission of offences under Sections 211 and 182, IPC, by reason of the latter having lodged with the police the false complaint. T appeared in Court in response to a summons issued only in respect of an offence under Section 211. T filed a petition to the High Court of Calcutta praying for quashing of proceedings against him before the SDJM inasmuch as the latter was debarred from taking cognizance of the offence under Section 211 in the absence of a complaint in writing of the SDJM himself in view of the provisions of Section 195(1)(b), CrPC. The complaint against T was in respect of an offence alleged to have been committed in relation to a proceeding in Court and the SDJM acted in contravention of the bar contained in clause (b) of Section 195(1) in taking cognizance of the said complaint, as there was no complaint in writing either of the SDJM or of a superior Court. A Magistrate while passing an order releasing an accused person on bail or discharging him in pursuance of a report submitted by the police to the effect that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the charge, acts judicially and therefore is a Court within the meaning of that term as used in clause (b) of sub-section (1) of Section 195 of the Code. Kamalapati v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1979 SC 777 : 1979 CrLJ 679 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 128 : 1977 SCCrR 165 : (1979 2 SCR 717 : 1979 CrAppR (SC) 175 : 1979 CurLJ (Cri) 56 : 1979 ACrC 49 : 1979 BBCJ (SC) 25.

[12991] ● Offence of criminal conspiracy committed during preparation of paper book for appeal to Supreme Court.—The appellant entered into a conspiracy and tampered with the evidence of one of the defence witnesses which is a record of the Court. The appellant was a party to a proceeding in the High Court when the appeal was heard but the document complained of as having been tampered with, i.e., the evidence of the defence witness was not produced or given in evidence in the appeal before the High Court. The alleged tampering was after the hearing of the appeal was concluded. No doubt, the tampering was in a proceeding in relation to the preparation of the record. Requirements of Section 195(1)(c) having not been satisfied a complaint by the Court in writing is not necessary. Equally, under Section 195(4) relating to criminal conspiracy to commit offence, a complaint by the Court is not necessary. Therefore, Section 196-A(2) is attracted and a complaint by the State Government or the Chief Presidency Magistrate or a District Magistrate empowered in this behalf by the State Government in writing consenting to the initiation of the proceedings for an offence under Section 120-B, IPC, is necessary. As in this case no such order consenting to the initiation of proceedings was passed, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to take cognizance of the offence against the appellant. Judgment of the M.P. High Court was reversed and the order of committal passed by the Magistrate was quashed. S.L. Goswami v. Madhya Pradesh High Court, AIR 1979 SC 437 : (1979 1 SCC 373 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 311 : 1979 CrLJ 193 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 371.

[12992] ● Bail proceedings part of subsequent proceeding commencing on presentation of challan.—Bail proceedings took place before Magistrate D and subsequent proceedings before Magistrate K commencing with presentation of chalan by Police for prosecution of one DK. Both proceedings are parts of or stages of the same integral whole. DK was released on a bail application accompanied by an affidavit purported to have been sworn by one GRT as a surety. As the accused failed to appear, NBW was issued against him and notice to the surety. Surety appeared and filed a reply in writing contending that he never stood as surety, did not make any affidavit or sign on any application, affidavit or bail bond, that he was a literate while those documents bore thumb-impressions of the surety. After enquiry, the respondent and others were committed for trial and two of the accused convicted under Sections 419, 465 and 471, IPC, etc. The High Court on appeal held that the complete proceedings before the committing Magistrate were without jurisdiction and quashed the convictions. Bail proceedings and subsequent trial proceedings before the Magistrate were part of entire judicial process and as such the offences relating to the surety bond were committed "in or in relation to" the proceedings before Magistrate K for the purpose of taking action under Section 476 of the Code. The High Court erred that the Magistrate was not competent to hold a preliminary enquiry under Section 476, CrPC and /or to make a complaint for prosecution of the respondents in respect of the offences for which they were convicted. Appeal was allowed and case sent back to the High Court for decision afresh. State of Maharashtra v. S.K. Bannu, AIR 1981 SC 22 : (1980) 4 SCC 286 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 951 : 1980 CrLJ 1280 : 1980 CrLR (SC) 638 : 1980 CrAppR (SC) 385 : 1981 MLJ (Cri) 166 : (1981) 1 SCJ 244 : 1981 SCCrR 173 : (1981) 1 SCR 694.

[12993] ● Offence under Section 193, IPC of filing false affidavit.—Offence under Section 193, IPC, was alleged for filling false affidavit before the Rent Control Officer. Rent Control Officer shall be deemed to be a civil Court within the meaning of Sections 345 & 346, CrPC, 1973 and in view of Section 34(2) of the U.P. Urban Buildings (Regulation of Letting, Rent & Eviction) Act, 1972 shall be a civil Court for purposes of Section 193, IPC. Complaint by the Court in writing is a pre-condition under Section 195(1)(b)(i) for taking cognizance of such offence by any criminal Court. If the same is not satisfied, the Court has no jurisdiction to take cognizance. 1981 ACrR 98 reversed. Chandrapal Singh v. Maharaj Singh, AIR 1982 SC 1238 : (1982) 1 SCC 466 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 249 : 1982 CrLJ 1731 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 126 : 1982 ALJ 507 : 1982 AWC 251 : 1982 CrAppR (SC) 65.

[12994] ● Section 341(2), CrPC bars revision against appellate decision refusing to file complaint.—Section 341(2) specifically bars any revision against any appellate decision refusing to file complaint. But the High Court may, in exercise of inherent jurisdiction examine the appellate decision. Lalit Mohan v. Benayendra, AIR 1982 SC 785 : (1982) 3 SCC 219 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 697 : 1982 CrLJ 625.

[12995] ● Commission of Enquiry.—Commission of Enquiry appointed under Section 3(1), Commission of Enquiry Act in not a Court for the purpose of Section 195, CrPC. Baliram Waman v. Justice B. Lention, AIR 1988 SC 2267 : (1988) 4 SCC 419 : 1989 CrLJ 306 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 697 : 1988 (3) Crimes 655.

[12996] ● Accused not filing original partnership deed but copy of forged deed.—Where the accused did not file the original partnership deed but filed a copy of the forged deed in the suit in the civil Court and obtained a temporary injunction on the strength of its copy, the defendant filed a police report against the accused alleging that they had committed offences punishable under Sections 465, 468, 471, 474, 120-B and 420, IPC, and a challan was filed before the Magistrate who framed charges against the accused only under Sections 465, 468, 120-B and 420, IPC, but refrained from training any charge under Sections 471 and 474, IPC, holding that he could not take cognizance under those sections in the absence of a complaint from the civil Court. The State preferred a revision against the Magistrate's order but the same was upheld by the Additional Sessions Judge. The de facto complainant moved the High Court under Section 482, CrPC, who reversed the decision holding that as the document was not forged during the period it was in Court custody the bar of Section 195(1)(b)(ii) of the Code was not attracted and directing the Magistrate to frame fresh charges. Thereupon the appellants challenged the order before the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court held that Section 195 of the Code was attracted when such offence was alleged to have been committed in respect of "a document produced or given in evidence in a proceeding in any Court", and accordingly held that since the document alleged to have been forged was not in the present case produced in the Court, the provisions of Section 195(1)(b)(ii) had no application and confirmed the High Court's direction, but on a different ground as indicated. Sushil Kumar v. State of Haryana, AIR 1988 SC 419 : 1987 Supp SCC 654 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 136 : 1988 CrLJ 427 : (1988) 1 SCJ 28.

[12997] ● Words "in or in relation to a proceeding in the Court".—The words "in or in relation to a proceeding in the Court" show that the Court which can take action under this section is only the Court operating within the definition of Section 195(3) before which or in relation to whose proceeding the offence has been committed. There is a word of caution inbuilt in that provision itself that the action to be taken should be expedient in the interest of justice. Therefore, it is incumbent that the power given by this Section 340, CrPC 1973 should be used with utmost care and after due consideration. The mere fact that the deponent has made contradictory statements at two different stages in a judicial proceeding is not by itself always sufficient to justify a prosecution for perjury under Section 193, IPC but it must be established that the deponent has intentionally given a false statement in any stage of the "judicial proceeding" or fabricated false evidence for the purpose of being used in any stage of judicial proceeding further, such a prosecution for perjury should be taken only if it is expedient in the interest of justice. K.T.M.S. Mohd. v. Union of India, AIR 1992 SC 1831 (1840, 1841) : (1992) 3 SCC 178 : 1992 SCC (Cri) 572 : 1992 CrLJ 2781 : (1992) 2 Crimes 314.

[12998] ● Direction issued by District and Sessions Judge to Rent Control officer to file complaint.—A direction issued by the District and Sessions Judge to the Rent Control Officer to file complaint cannot be treated as a complaint. Surendra Gupta v. Bhagwan Devi, AIR 1996 SC 509 : (1994) 4 SCC 1318 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 657.

[12999] ● Forged document produced in evidence.—For taking cognizance of an offence, the document, the foundation for forgery, if produced before the Court or given in evidence, the bar of taking, cognizance under Section 195(1)(b)(ii) gets attracted and the criminal Court is prohibited from taking cognizance of offence unless a complaint in writing is filed as per the procedure prescribed under Section 340 of the Code by or on behalf of the Court. The object thereby is to pressure purity of the administration of justice and to allow the parties to adduce evidence in proof of certain documents without being compelled or intimidated to proceed with the judicial process. The bar of Section 195 is to take cognizance of the offence covered thereunder—where the cognizance has already been taken before filing of the document on of the civil Court and the original has not been filed before cognizance was taken, the Magistrate is at liberty to proceed with the trial of the Criminal case. Surjit Singh v. Balbir Singh, AIR 1996 SC 1992 : (1996) 3 SCC 533 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 521 : 1996 CrLJ 2304.

[13000] ● Notice under Section 340, CrPC to Police Officers for prosecution under Section 194, 195, IPC for fabricating record and putting up false case.—Notice under Section 340, CrPC, 1973 to Police Officers for prosecution under Sections 194, 195, IPC for fabricating record and putting if false case were issued by the Court. The case is based on Section 161 statements recorded during the investigation. Admittedly no evidence has been recorded. The Court should not come to the conclusion on the 161 statements which are not evidence. It can be used at the trial only for contradictions or omissions when the witness was examined. Nor it could be contradicted by looking at the physical feature of the witnesses even before they are examined. It would appear that the learned Sessions Judge had overstepped his jurisdiction in recording a finding, while looking at the physical features of the accused. Under there circumstances it is held that in view of the finding recorded by the Sessions Judge of fabrication of the recorded and the case is false one, issuance of notice under Section 340, CrPC is wholly unjustified. Omkar Namdeo Jadhao v. Second Additional Sessions Judge, Buldana, AIR 1997 SC 331 : 1997 AIR SCW 88 : (1996) 7 SCC 498 : 1997 CrLJ 369 : (1996) 1 Crimes 20.

[13001] ● Complaint for offence under Section 195(1)(b), CrPC without adopting procedural requirement.—Complaint by Court for offence under Section 195(1)(b) without adopting procedural requirement not maintainable and scope of preliminary enquiry envisaged under Section 340(1), CrPC being that offence should have been committed during time when document was in custody of Court. Sachida Nand Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 1998 SC 1121 : (1998) 2 SCC 493 : 1998 CrLJ 1565 : JT 1998 (1) SC 370 : 1998 (3) SLT 90 (SC) : 1998 (1) Crimes 142 (SC) : 1998 (1) CCR 297 (SC) : 1998 (1) Supreme 419.

[13002] ● Bar in Section 195(1)(b)(ii), CrPC not applicable to forgery.—Bar contained in Section 195(1)(b)(ii), CrPC not applicable to case where forgery of document was committed before document was produced in Court. Sachida Nand Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 1998 SC 1121 : (1998) 2 SCC 493 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 660 : 1998 CrLJ 1565 : (1998) 1 Crimes 142 : 1998 (3) SLT 90.

[13003] ● Need for amendment to clause (b) of Section 340(3), CrPC to eliminate perjury.—A trial judge knows that the witness is telling a lie and is going back on his previous statement, yet he does not wish to punish him or even file a complaint against him. He is required to sign the complaint himself which deters him from filing the complaint perhaps law needs amendment to clause (b) of Section 340(3), CrPC in this respect as the High Court can direct any officer to file a complaint to get rid of the civil of perjury, the Court should resort to the use of the provisions of law as contained in Chapter XXVI of the Code. Swarn Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 2000 SC 2017 : (2000) 5 SCC 668 : 2000 CrLJ 2780 : (2000) 3 Crimes 12.

[13004] ● Determination of legislative intent.—The clear language of Section 195(3) of the Code of CrPC unmistakably depict the restrictive intent of the Legislature and if the intent was otherwise to include arbitral Tribunal within the fold of Section 195(3) of the Code, that is to say if the Legislature wanted to confer such a status there was no difficulty as such in incorporating thereunder a provision as is contained in a Debt Recovery Act (vide Section 22); Income Tax Act (vide Section 136); Moter vehicles Act (vide Section 169(2)); Administrative Tribunals Act (vide Section 22(3)); Consumers Protection Act; M.R.T. P. Act and Companies Act etc. etc. Since there statutes have definitely included and declared the Tribunal being ascribed to be a Court within the meaning of Section 195 of the CrPC. The inclusion of explanatory provision by way of sub-section (3) makes the situation abundantly clear. Manohar Lal v. Vinesh Anand, AIR 2001 SC 1820 : (2001) 5 SCC 407 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 1322 : 2001 CrLJ 2044 : (2001) 3 Supreme 279 : (2001) 2 Crimes 202.

[13005] ● Interpretation of word "Court".—The body of sub-section (1)(b) of Section 195, CrPC refers to the expression 'Court' and the same stands explained in sub-section (3)—"Court" may be interpreted in a narrow context but with the inclusion of sub-section (3)—Widest possible connotation is to be made available provided, however, the statute declares it to be so The language "if declared by that Act" seems to be very significant. A plain look thus at the provisions depict that inclusion of sub-section (3) under Section 195, CrPC cannot but be taken to be an extraordinary provision. The body of Section 195(1)(b) refers to the expression 'Court' and the same stands thus explained in sub-section (3). The restriction imposed is easily ascertained by reason of the inclusion of the words 'if declared by that Act to be a Court for the purposes of this section'—the user of the words seem to be very significant. By the very inclusion of sub-section (3) and the language, the intent of the Legislature cannot thus, be far to seek. It is connotative of a definite meaning. Manohar Lal v. Vinesh Anand, AIR 2001 SC 1820 : (2001) 5 SCC 407 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 1322 : 2001 CrLJ 2044 : (2001) 3 Supreme 279 : (2001) 2 Crimes 202.

[13006] ● Arbitrator not Court within meaning of Section 195, CrPC.—An arbitrator is not a 'Court' within the meaning of Section 195, CrPC, as such the provisions of Section 340, CrPC 1973 do not apply to proceedings before an arbitrator. Manohar Lal v. Vinesh Anand, AIR 2001 SC 1820 : (2001) 5 SCC 407 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 1322 : 2001 CrLJ 2044 : 2001 (2) Crimes 202 (212).

[13007] ● Complaint by Court.—In view of the language used in Section 340, CrPC the Court is not bound to make a complaint regarding commission of an offence referred to in Section 195(1)(b), as the section is conditioned by the words "Court is of opinion that it is expedient in the interests of justice." This shows that such a course will be adopted only if the interest of justice requires and not in every case. Before filing of the complaint, the Court may hold a preliminary enquiry and record a finding to the effect that it is expedient in the interests of justice that enquiry should be made into any of the offences referred to in Section 195(1)(b). This expediency will normally be judged by the Court by weighing not the magnitude of injury suffered by the person affected by such forgery or forged document, but having regard to the effect or impact such commission of offence has upon administration of justice. It is possible that such forged document or forgery may cause a very serious or substantial injury to a person in the sense that it may deprive him of a very valuable property or status or the like, but such document may be just a piece of evidence produced or given in evidence in Court, where voluminous evidence may have been adduced and the effect of such piece of evidence on the broad concept of administration of justice may be minimal. In such circumstances, the Court may not consider it expedient in the interest of justice to make a complaint. The broad view of clause (b)(ii), as canvassed by learned counsel for the appellants, would render the victim of such forgery or forged document remediless. Any interpretation which leads to a situation where a victim of a crime is rendered remediless, has to be discarded. Iqbal Singh Marwah v. Meenakshi Marwah, 2005 SCC (Cri) 1101 (1116).

[13008] ● Procedure for complaint by Court.—The provisions of Sections 340, 341 and 343(2), CrPC show that in reality, the procedure prescribed for filing a complaint by the Court is such that it may not fructify in the actual trial of the offender for an unusually long period. Delay in prosecution of a guilty person comes to his advantage as witnesses become reluctant to give evidence and the evidence gets lost. This important consideration dissuades us from accepting the broad interpretation sought to be placed upon clause (b)(ii). Iqbal Singh Marwah v. Meenakshi Marwah, 2005 SCC (Cri) 1101 (1117).

[13010] ● Complaint by Court, judicial notice.—Judicial notice can be taken of the fact that the Courts are normally reluctant to direct filing of a criminal complaint and such a course is rarely adopted. It will not be fair and proper to give an interpretation which leads to a situation where a person alleged to have committed an offence of the type enumerated in clause (b)(ii) is either not placed for trial on account of non-filing of a complaint or if a complaint is filed, the same does not come to its logical end. Judging from such an angle will be in consonance with the principle that an unworkable or impracticable result should be avoided.

Therefore, in order that a victim of a crime of forgery, namely the person aggrieved is able to exercise his height conferred by law to initiate prosecution of the offender, it is necessary to place a restrictive interpretation on clause (b)(ii). Iqbal Singh Marwah v. Meenakshi Marwah, 2005 SCC (Cri) 1101 (1117).

[13011] ● Penal statute interpretation.—That apart, the section which we are required to interpret is not a penal provision but is part of a procedural law, namely, the Code of Criminal Procedure which elaborately gives the procedure for trial of criminal cases. The provision only creates a bar against taking cognizance of an offence in certain specified situations except upon complaint by Court. A penal statute is one upon which an action for penalties can be brought by a public officer or by a person aggrieved and a penal Act in its wider sense includes every statute creating an offence against the State, whatever is the character of the penalty for the offence. The principle that a penal statute should be strictly construed, as projected by the learned counsel for the appellants can, therefore, have no application here. Iqbal Singh Marwah v. Meenakshi Marwah, 2005 SCC (Cri) 1101 (1119).

[13012] ● Section 195, CrPC recognizes administrative discipline.—Section 195, CrPC does not recognize administrative discipline, it recognizes judicial discipline with regard to the right of the higher authority to exercise appellate powers. The expression "ordinarily" may mean "normally" but the said expression must be understood in the context in which it has been used. "Ordinarily" may not mean "solely" or "in the name" and thus, if under no circumstances an appeal would be to the Principal District Judge, the Court would not be subordinate to it. When in common parlance the expression "ordinarily" is used there may be no option. There may be cases where an exception can be made out. It is never used in reference to a case where there is no exception. It never means "primarily". State of Andhra Pradesh v. Sarma Rao, AIR 2007 SC 137 : (2007) 2 SCC 159 : 2007 CrLJ 289 : JT 2006 (9) 620 : (2007) 2 Crimes 127.

[13013] ● Section 195, (1)(b)(ii)—Scope.—Clause (1)(b)(ii) of Section 195, CrPC contemplates a situation where offences enumerated therein are committed with respect to a document subsequent to its production or giving in evidence in a proceeding in any Court. Mahesh Chand Sharma v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 2010 SC 812 : (2009) 15 SCC 519 : 2009 (4) Crimes 22 (SC) : JT 2009 (12) SC 56 : 2009 (3) SCR 922.

[13014] ● Section 340, CrPC—Requirement.—The provisions of Section 340 can be invoked only when it is established that offence of forgery had already been committed. Mahesh Chand Sharma v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 2010 SC 812 : (2009) 15 SCC 519 : 2009 (3) SCR 922 : 2009 (4) Crimes 22 (SC) : JT 2009 (12) SC 56.

[13015] ● Power of Court—When can be exercised.—The power under Section 390, CrPC read with Section 195, IPC can be exercised only where someone fabricates false evidence on gives a false evidence. By no stretch of imagination, a party giving an answer to a question put under Order 10, Rule 2 of the Code. When not under oath and not being examined as a witness can attract Section 195, IPC and consequently cannot attract Section 195(1)(b) and Section 340 of CrPC. Kapil Corepacks (Pvt.) Ltd. v. Harbans Lal, AIR 2010 SC 2809 (2818) : (2010) 8 SCC 452.

DISAPPEARANCE OF EVIDENCE (S. 201, IPC)

[13016] ● Disappearance of evidence.—In a case in which the accused is charged only of the offence of murder under Section 302, Penal Code, and no alternative charge under Section 201 for the disposal of the dead body of the murdered person has been framed, if the charge of murder fails, it is permissible under Section 237, CrPC to record a conviction against the accused under Section 201, provided that, on the facts of the case, it is proved that the death of the deceased was brought about by a crime and that the accused was associated in the disposal of the dead body. Similarly, if in such a case the Sessions Court has convicted the accused on the charge of murder under Section 302, and that conviction is set aside on appeal, it is open to the High Court or the Supreme Court to convict the accused under Section 201, if it finds, that an offence under that Section has been established by the evidence in the case, even though there is no charge against him under that section. Section 237, CrPC completely covers such a case. Kashmira Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1952 SC 159 : 1952 CrLJ 839 : 1952 SCJ 201 : 1952 SCA 474 : 1952 MWN 402 : 1952 (1) MLJ 754 : 1952 MWN (Cri) 106 : 1952 SCR 526 : 1952 AWR (Sup) 64.

[13017] ● Evidence of offence—Circumstantial evidence.—In order to establish a charge under Section 201, it is essential to prove all the following facts, namely, (a) that an offence has been committed, (b) that the accused knew or had reason to believe that an offence has been committed, (c) that the accused intended to screen the offender, whether that offender be himself or another person, and (d) that the accused has disposed of or concealed that dead body with such intention. Palvinder Kaur v. State of Punjab, AIR 1952 SC 354 : 1953 CrLJ 154 : 1952 SCJ 545 : 1953 SCR 94.

[13018] ● Case resting purely upon circumstantial evidence.—In a case resting purely upon circumstantial evidence, the evidence must establish beyond doubt that the dead man died of an offence and not of natural death. Mere suspicion, however strong, that he died of an offence is not enough, because suspicion, however strong, cannot take the place of proof. It is not open to the Court to build up a theory by taking for granted essential ingredients of an offence which are missing, but which are necessary to make that theory complete. Therefore, if in a case in which the accused is charged under Section 201, the only evidence on record is that he took part in the disposal of the dead body, such evidence in itself is not enough to sustain a conviction, because the other ingredients of the offence have remained unproved, namely that the deceased died of an offence and that the accused knew that he so died. Palvinder Kaur v. State of Punjab, AIR 1952 SC 354 : 1953 CrLJ 154 : 1952 SCJ 545 : 1953 SCR 94.

[13019] ● Medical evidence failing to establish that deceased died of poison.—In the present case the accused was the wife of the deceased and the prosecution case was, that deceased was administered potassium cyanide by the accused and one M with whom she had a liaison, and that the two disposed of the dead body by putting it in a trunk and throwing it in a well. It is essential for the prosecution to prove affirmatively that the deceased died of poison which was administered to him by some person, and that, the accused took part in the concealment and disposal of the dead body, knowing or having reason to believe, that the death of the deceased was so caused. The medical evidence having failed to establish that the deceased died of any poison, the cause of death remained unproved. That being so, the charge under Section 201 must be held to have failed. Palvinder Kaur v. State of Punjab, AIR 1952 SC 354 : 1953 CrLJ 154 : 1952 SCJ 545 : 1953 SCR 94.

[13020] ● Acquittal of main offence no legal impediment to accused conviction under Section 201, IPC.—Acquittal of the main offence is no legal impediment to the accused's conviction under Section 201, IPC. Ranchhod v. State, AIR 1953 SC 131 : 1953 CrLJ 668 : 1953 SCR 546 : 1953 SCJ 144.

[13021] ● Section 201, IPC not restricted to case of person—Screening another offender by destroying evidence.—Section 201 is not restricted to the case of a person who screens another offender by destroying the evidence of an offence, and can be applied even to a person who screens the commission of an offence by himself. In a case in which the Court considers it prudent to err on the safe side and gives an accused the benefit of doubt as to the principal offence, it is perfectly legal to convict him under Section 201, provided there is clear and satisfactory evidence that an offence was committed and he caused evidence of its commission to disappear. In such a case if an accused is charged with murder under Section 302, and that charge fails, it is perfectly open to the Court to convict him under Section 201, even though no charge under that section had been framed against the accused. Such a conviction is warranted by the provisions of Section 237, CrPC. In the present case the accused K was charged with abetment of murder under Section 302/114, Penal Code. The prosecution case was that one night when the accused and the deceased, who was her husband, were sleeping side by side on the open roof of their haveli, the deceased was attacked with a sword and killed by R the paramour of the accused, with her assistance. Hearing the shouts of the deceased a servant woman woke up and saw R going down the ladder. Other servants came up and when they questioned the accused she said that some dacoits had come and had killed her husband and had robbed her of her ornaments. When told that it was R who was seen running away, the accused denied that it was R. On this evidence the accused was acquitted in the trial Court of the offence of abetment under Section 302/114, but was convicted under Section 201. On appeal, the Judicial Commissioner convicted her under Section 302/114, after setting aside the conviction under Section 201. The acquittal on the charge under Section 302/114 is not an impediment to a conviction under Section 201, and there is no legal bar to the restoration of the original conviction under that section. There is no doubt, that by rotating out an elaborate story of dacoity and by denying that it was R who was seen running away she had given false information respecting the offence, and was guilty under Section 201. Conviction under Section 302/114 is set aside and the original conviction under Section 201 is restored. Kalawati v. State of Himachal

[13022] ● Medical evidence inconclusive that deceased not with his death as a result of violence.—In the present case, it was established against the accused, that a man had come, to his house at his request and that, after some days his dead body was found buried in his house. The medical evidence was inconclusive and it was not proved that the deceased had met his death as a result of any violence. There was no evidence at all to show the manner in which death had been caused. The accused was charged and convicted under Section 302, though the plea of the accused was that, he and the deceased had been heavily drinking together at his house that night and that the deceased suddenly collapsed, probably as a result of the effect of alcoholism on his lungs, and that he, the accused, became panicky and lost his mind and in fright buried the dead body in a room on the upper storey of his house. On these facts the Court held that the charge under Section 302 had not been proved beyond doubt, and acquitted the accused on the charge. The question then arose, whether he could at least be convicted under Section 201. In view of the fact, that it is not proved beyond doubt, that death of the deceased is result the of an offence, and there is a possibility that he died a natural death as a result of heavy drinking of raw alcohol, as pleaded by the accused, and that, the accused has been given the benefit of doubt and had been acquitted on the charge under Section 302, it has to be held, that he cannot be convicted even under Section 201, even though the dead body has been discovered from his house, and he has admitted that it is he who had concealed it after the deceased has died in his presence. State Government of Madhya Pradesh v. Ramkrishna Ganpatrao Limsey, AIR 1954 SC 20 : 1954 CrLJ 244.

[13023] ● Disappearance of evidence of murder.—The accused in the present case were convicted by the High Court under Section 201 of the Penal Code on the following facts—

1. that a mother and her child, K and M who were seen in their house in a village on a particular day till the evening, were never seen thereafter by any one and their dead bodies were never found;
2. that the same evening, three gun-shots were heard by persons in the village as coming from the house in which they were residing at that time;
3. that the same night, R, the husband of the woman, and his two servants M and U were seen by several witnesses in different villages passing in a jeep after their sudden departure from the house, and no explanation was offered by any of the three accused for this sudden departure from the house;
4. that the back curtains of the jeep were seen by witnesses to be drawn;
5. that R had falsely stated during his examination in the Court, that he had left the village on the previous day, and not on the day in question;
6. that the mother of R and one D were residing in the same house, but neither of them had made any attempt to search for K and M who had suddenly disappeared from the house, and had not made any report to the police about their disappearance. Not only that, but when the Chowkidar of the village went to D and asked him to give something in writing so that he could make a report at the police station, D refused and forbade him to make a report immediately;
7. that on search of the house, the police found blood-stained earth at several places in the room upstairs and other places;
8. that all the accused had absconded, and none of them could be traced by the police for over a fortnight, till they surrendered at distant places;
9. that the jeep in which R, M and U had travelled from the village belonged to R, that this jeep could never be traced by the police and when R was called upon to produce it, he had not done so, nor was its disappearance explained by R at any time.

Relying on these circumstances the trial Court had convicted the accused under Section 201 of the Penal Code for causing disappearance of the evidence of murder, and on appeal the High Court had upheld the conviction. Hence this appeal.

These circumstances are not sufficient to establish that the appellants had removed or concealed the dead bodies of K and M and it must be held, that the offence under Section 201 has not been established against the appellants. Raghav Prapanna Tripathi v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1963 SC 74 : 1963(1) CrLJ 70 (1963) 3 SCR 239.

[13024] ● Circumstantial evidence—Accused removed and concealed dead bodies.—The facts on the present case were as follows : On April 5, 1961, there were in the house of D, the following persons, R, R's wife K and their child M, D the owner of the house, J the mother of R, and two servants of R, M and U. It was established that K and M were seen in the house of D by the villagers till the evening of April 5 and that thereafter K and M had not been seen by any one and their dead bodies were never found. The villagers had heard that evening three gun shots as coming from the house in which K and M were seen some time before that. R and the two servants M and U were seen that night in a jeep belonging to R in different villages on the road to Lucknow. But on April 6, both D and R's mother J were in the house but neither of them had made any attempt to search for K and M who had vanished from the house and had not made any report about it to the police. There was also evidence to show that blood inside and outside the living rooms in the house had been washed, and also several samples of blood stained plaster pieces had been collected by the police. There was also evidence that both D and J had absconded two days after the incident when the matter was reported to the police. On these facts D and J, along with R, M and U were convicted by the trial Court of the offence under Section 201 of the Penal Code, and on appeal the High Court confirmed the conviction. R was further convicted under Section 302 for the murders of his wife and child. In the appeals by D and J the Court unanimously held, that the offence under Section 201 had not been proved. There was no such circumstantial evidence as would establish that the appellants had removed and concealed the dead bodies. The fact D and J were in the house and must have known of the removal of the dead bodies, if that was of fact, would not by itself establish that they assisted in the removal. Therefore, no offence under Section 201 had been established against them. Raghav Prapanna Tripathi v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1963 SC 74 : 1963(1) CrLJ 70 : (1963) 3 SCR 239.

[13025] ● Interpretation "knowing or having reason to believe" in first para and "knows and believes" is second para.—Section 201 is somewhat clumsily drafted, but we think that the expression "knowing or having reason to believe" in the first paragraph and the expression "knows or believes" in the second paragraph are used in the same sense. Take the case of an accused who has reason to believe, that an offence has been committed. If the other conditions of the first paragraph are satisfied, he is guilty of an offence under Section 201. If it be supposed that the word "believes" was used in a sense different from the expression "having reason to believe", it would be necessary for the purpose of inflicting punishment upon the accused to prove that he "believes" in addition to "having reason to believe". We cannot impute to the legislature an intention that an accused who is found guilty of the offence under the first paragraph should escape punishment under the succeeding paragraph, unless some additional fact or state of mind is proved. The first paragraph of Section 201 lays down the essential ingredients of the offence under Section 201. It must be proved firstly that an offence has been committed. Secondly, the accused must know or have reason to believe that the offence has been committed. Thirdly, the accused must either cause any evidence of the commission of that offence to disappear or give any information respecting the offence which he knows or believes to be false. Fourthly, the accused must have acted with the intention of screening the offender from legal punishment. By the second, third and fourth paragraphs, the measure of the punishment is made to depend upon the gravity of the offence. The word "offence" wherever used in the first, second, third and fourth paragraphs means some real offence, which, in fact, has been committed and not some offence which the accused imagines has been committed. Roshan Lal v. State of Punjab, AIR 1965 SC 1413 : 1965 (2) CrLJ 426 : (1965) 2 SCA 447 : (1965) 2 SCR 316.

[13026] ● Punishment depends on gravity of offence committed.—The punishment depends upon the gravity of the offence which was committed and which the accused knew or had reason to believe to have been committed. If an accused on seeing blood marks on the ground made as a result of an offence punishable under Section 323, erases the blood marks with the intention of screening the offender whom he erroneously believes to have committed the offence of murder, he could be convicted only on the footing that an offence under Section 323 was committed and that he acted with the intention of screening such an offender believing that such an offence was committed, and he may be punished accordingly under the fourth paragraph with imprisonment extending to three months, but he could not be convicted on the basis of his having screened a murderer merely, because he wrongly imagined, that an offence of murder had been committed. If the contention of the State were to be accepted, the erroneous belief or delusion of the accused would furnish the measure of punishment, and he would be punishable under the second paragraph with imprisonment extending to seven years. It is difficult to impute, such an intention to the legislature, and to hold that the minor offence under Section 201 of screening an offender is punishable more severely than the main offence committed by the main offender. It does not, in our opinion, stand to reason that Section 201 provides for punishing a minor offence more severely than the principal offence. Roshan Lal v. State of Punjab, AIR 1965 SC 1413 : 1965 (2) CrLJ 426 : (1965) 2 SCA 447 : (1965) 1 SCJ 233 : (1965) 2 SCR 316.

[13027] ● Disappearance of evidence in respect of two offences committed by same act.—It is contended by the respondent that the appellants having caused the evidence of the two offences under Sections 339 and 348 to disappear, committed two separate offences under Section 201 and are punishable accordingly. Taking a strict view of the matter, it must be said that by the same act the appellants committed two offences under Section 201. The case is not covered either by Section 71 of the Indian Penal Code or by Section 26 of the General Clauses Act, and the punishment for the two offences cannot be limited under those sections. But, normally, no Court should award two separate punishments for the same act constituting two offences under Section 201. The appropriate sentence under Section 201 for causing the evidence of the offence under Section 330 to disappear should be passed, and no separate sentence need be passed under Section 201 for causing the evidence of the offence under Section 348 to disappear. The maximum sentence for the offence under Section 330 is imprisonment for seven years, and under Para 4 to Section 201, the appellants are liable to be sentenced to a maximum of one-fourth of seven years imprisonment. The facts of the case call for the maximum sentence. In the result, the appeal is allowed in part, and the sentence passed on the appellants for the offence under Section 201 is reduced to rigorous imprisonment for one year and nine months. In other respects, the judgment under appeal is affirmed. Roshan Lal v. State of Punjab, AIR 1965 SC 1413 : 1965 (2) CrLJ 426 : (1965) 2 SCA 447 : (1965) 2 SCR 316.

[13028] ● What prosecution has to prove.—To establish the charge under Section 201 the prosecution must first prove that an offence had been committed, not merely a suspicion that it might have been committed, and that the accused knowing or having reason to believe that such an offence had been committed, and with the intent to screen the offender from legal punishment, had caused the evidence thereafter to disappear. The proof of the commission of an offence is an essential requisite for bringing home the offence under Section 201, IPC. Suleman Rahiman v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1968 SC 829 : 1968 CrLJ 1013 : (1968) 2 SCR 515 : (1968) 2 SCWR 66 : (1968) 2 SCJ 364 : 1968 SCD 581 : 1968 MahLJ 413 : 1968 MPLJ 361 : 70 BomLR 536 : (1968) 2 ALT 60 : 1968 MLJ (Cri) 556 : 1968 MLW (Cri) 113 : 1968 AWR (HC) 651 : 1968 ACrR 427.

[13029] ● No person other than accused anxious to bury body.—No person other than the accused would be anxious to bury the body. They had been last seen with the deceased by many witnesses. In order to avoid suspicion falling upon them they would be keen to get rid of the body, even if the deceased was not murdered by them. That they buried it in their own field further shows their complicity. Burying in somebody else's field might have been dangerous. Further, the accused denied the whole prosecution story. This again leads some assurance that they were denying the facts in order to conceal their participation in the crime. Ram Dahin Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1971 SC 2013 : (1971) 3 SCC 898 : 1972 SCC (Cri) 146 : 1971 CrLJ 1451.

[13030] ● False evidence to screen offender—Benefit of doubt.—In this appeal by special leave, Shamim Rahmani was convicted under Section 302, IPC, by the trial Court and confirmed by the High Court. Her brother was alleged, to have lodged, a false information at the police station, in connection with the said murder with the intention of screening his sister from legal punishment. He was convicted under Section 201, IPC and the same was confirmed by the High Court. The question for consideration is whether the requirements of Section 201 has been fulfilled against him. The evidence available is what Amir Ahmad was told by Kalika. He had not stated, that he had seen Shamim firing at the Doctor. Amir Ahmad could neither know nor could have reason to believe, that Shamim had committed the murder of the doctor. More facts were yet to be known. He did nothing wrong in rushing to the police station and giving the barest information in writing. The facts that his sister Shamim took out the gun, that a shot was fired, that the bullet hit the doctor and that he had fallen and was bleeding were all true. Amir Ahmad might not be sure, whether the doctor was dead or alive. It was not obligatory on his part or necessary for him to probe the matter any further at the spot before rushing to the police station. He might have known or might have reason to believe, that an offence of murder had been committed by his sister Shamim. But the other possibility that he might not have known or might not have reason to believe, he might have only expected that the offence of murder had been committed by Shamim, could not be ruled out. That being so, benefit of doubt should go to the appellant. Shamim Rahmani v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1975 SC 1883 : (1975) 4 SCC 652

[13031] ● Possibility of death being as a result of suicide by drowning.—The facts that the stomach was not filled with water and bloated and no froth was coming out of the mouth of the deceased are important symptoms which go a long way to exclude the possibility of the death being as a result of suicide by drowning. Medical jurists have warned that in the case of a dead body found floating in water, the medical man from a mere observance of the external condition of the body, should not jump to the conclusion that the death was from drowning. Only internal examination of the body can reveal symptoms which may indicate with certainty as to whether the death was from drowning or from unlawful violence before the body was immersed in water. K. Purnachandra Rao v. Public Prosecutor, Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1975 SC 1925 : (1975) 2 SCC 570 : 1975 SCC (Cri) 678 : 1975 CrLJ 1671.

Whether the circumstantial evidence in a particular case is sufficient and safe enough to warrant a finding that an offence has been committed is a question which belongs to the realm of facts and not of law. So is the question, whether the accused knows or had reasons to believe that such an offence has been committed. It further depends upon a state of man's mind. In this case, A-2 was a Police Officer and as such was expected to discharge the duties entrusted to him by law with fidelity and accuracy. He was required to ascertain, the cause of the death and to investigate the circumstances and the manner in which it was brought about. But he flagrantly abused the trust reposed in him by law. He intentionally fabricated false pleas, laid false trails, drew many a red herring across the net, smothered the truth, burked the inquest, falsified official records and short-circuited the procedural safeguards. In short, he did everything against public justice which was penalised by Section 201, IPC. The other circumstantial evidence apart, the serious of these designed acts of omission and commission on the part of A-2, were eloquent enough to indicate that A-2 certainly knew or had reason to believe that K's death was homicidal. A-1 was a friend of A-2. A-1 abetted A-2 and was a guilty partner in the commission of the offence under Section 201, IPC A-1 facilitated and intentionally aided A-2 in the preparation of the false and the forged record. Their conviction under Section 201/34 and 201 respectively is correct. K. Purnachandra Rao v. Public Prosecutor, Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1975 SC 1925 : (1975) 2 SCC 570 : 1975 SCC (Cri) 678 : 1975 CrLJ 1671.

[13033] ● Accused knowing how dead body of deceased carried for disposal.—Where there was sufficient evidence to show that the accused knew as to how the dead body of the deceased was carried for disposal by other accused and that she refrained from informing the police about the disappearance of the deceased, she was held guilty under Section 201. Suryamani Dei v. State of Orissa, AIR 1979 SC 1534 : 1980 Supp SCC 767 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 497 : 1979 CrLJ 959 : 1980 UJ 440.

[13035] ● Recovery of dead body at instance of accused testified to by two witnesses.—The appellant was convicted under Sections 302 r/w Sections 34 and 364 and 201 by the trial Court. As the approver was improving his story from time to time in order to give support to the prosecution case and not because it was the truth, his story cannot be accepted as trustworthy even in regard to the appellant who must also be treated at par with his two co-accused who were acquitted by the trial Court. As regards the offence under Section 201, it is established against him by reason of the approver's deposition coupled with the very reliable material in proof of the recovery of the dead body at the instance of the appellant which was testified to by two witnesses who were believed by the two Courts below and for good reasons. Baldev Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1979 SC 1280 : (1979) 4 SCC 145 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 929 : 1979 CrLJ 871.

[13036] ● Merely because accused are brothers—Cannot be presumed that they had knowledge of murder of deceased.—Appellants are stated to have carried the dead body of the deceased lady to the cremation ground for cremation. There is absolutely no direct evidence to show, that either of the appellants was present at the time when the beating was given to her by her husband. There is no circumstantial evidence to show, that she was killed by her husband in the presence of, or to the knowledge of the appellants. They were not even residing in the house of the deceased's husband but they were living in the same village. From that alone, the Sessions Judge drew the inference that the appellants must be presumed to have the knowledge that the deceased did not die a natural death. High Court agreed with the said finding. There is absolutely no evidence to prove that any of the appellants had either any knowledge or reason to believe that any offence was committed in respect of the deceased. Merely because they are brothers, it cannot be presumed as a matter of legal proof that they must be deemed to have the knowledge of the murder of the deceased by her husband. There must be direct and legal evidence to prove the charge under Section 201 which is wholly wanting in the present case. Decision of the Allahabad High Court was reversed. Nathu v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1979 SC 1245 : (1979) 3 SCC 574 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 733 : 1979 CrLJ 1066.

[13037] ● Offence under Section 201, IPC—Evidence—Proof.—The appellant's car was used by the other accused to remove the dead body of the deceased murdered by them. The car was brought back to the appellant's bungalow where it was washed. It was not alleged that the appellant was in any manner concerned as an abettor or accomplice in the murder or participated or abetted the removal and disposal of the dead body. Only allegation is that five days after murder, he got his car washed at the petrol bunk. Not an iota of material was placed on the record to furnish the basis even for a grave suspicion that by getting the car washed on the fifth day the appellant caused any blood or other evidence relating to murder to disappear. Presence of blood stains on the car on the fifth day stood by the prosecution's own assertion that the actual murderer had got the blood on the car washed on the day of murder itself. Mere washing of car by the appellant could not, by any stretch of imagination, be prima facie evidence of the factual ingredients of an offence under Section 201, IPC. The impugned order of the Sessions Judge being based on no evidential material whatever, was manifestly illegal. Charge framed is quashed. Judgment of Rajasthan High Court dismissing the appellant's application under Section 482, CrPC, was reversed. Mohan Singh v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1980 SC 1560 : (1979) 4 SCC 11 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 882 : 1980 CrLJ 1098 : (1980) 1 SCR 148 : 1979 CrAppR (SC) 260 : 1980 Chand CrC 154 (SC).

[13038] ● Complaint not mentioning single word as to what existing evidence destroyed.—In the instant case the complaint did not mention a single word as to what existing evidence was destroyed by the accused individually or conjointly in respect of an offence which was already committed with the intention of screening the offender. Unfortunately, the Chief Judicial Magistrate appeared not even to have read the complaint. Otherwise there was not one word as to what offence which he found appeared to have been committed in respect of which the evidence was destroyed or in respect of which a false information was given. Therefore, on the averments of the complainants himself in the complaint to no Court could have taken cognizance of an offence under Section 201, IPC. The complaint, therefore, in respect of an the offence under Section 201, IPC, was liable to be quashed on ground that there was not even the slightest allegation to constitute an offence except mentioning number of the sections of the IPC. Chandra Pal Singh v. Maharaj Singh, AIR 1982 SC 1238 : 1982 CrLJ 1731 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 126 : 1982 UJ (SC) 517.

[13039] ● Certain averments in affidavit before Rent Control Officer false.—In a complaint under Section 199, IPC, affidavits were filed before the Rent Control Officer. Certain averments therein were alleged to be false though no specific averment is singled out for this purpose in the complaint. Statement alleged to be false has to be set out and its alleged falsity with reference to the truth found in some document has to be referred to pointing out that the two situations cannot co-exist, both being attributable to the same person and, therefore, one to his knowledge must be false. Acceptance or rejection of evidence by itself is not a sufficient yardstick to dub the one rejected as false. Day in and day out in Courts averment made by one set of witnesses are accepted and the counter-averments are rejected if complaints are to be filed in such cases it would be an abuse of process of Court. High Court erred in declining to exercise its power under Section 482, CrPC Complaint ought not to have been taken cognizance of by the Magistrate. Order of the High Courts was set aside. Chandra Pal Singh v. Maharaj Singh, AIR 1982 SC 1238 : (1982) 1 SCC 466 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 249 : 1982 CrLJ 1731 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 126 : 1982 ALJ 507 : 1982 AWC 251 : 1982 Cr AppR (SC) 65 : 1982 ACrR 170 : 1982 (2) Chand LR (Cri) 46 (SC) : 1982 UJ (SC) 517 : 1982 All Rent Cas 348 : (1982) 2 SCWR 61 : (1982) 14 Lawyer 47 : (1982) 2 APLJ (SC) 34 : (1982) 2 Ren CJ 479.

[13040] ● Two dead bodies not found—Disposed of by accused.—Two bodies out of the deceased three persons were not found. It was under shadow of doubt that some of the accused had disposed of their dead bodies. Their conviction is correct. Fazal Ali v. State of Bihar, (1985) 2 Crimes 456 (SC).

[13041] ● Dead bodies not found—Disposed of.—There is no evidence that the two dead bodies were ever found and which seem to have been disposed of by some of the accused and, therefore, Court affirm the conviction of all the appellants under Section 201/149 of the Indian Penal Code and sentence them to five years rigorous imprisonment. Both the sentences, under Section 326/149 and under Section 201/149, IPC shall run concurrently. Dhanna Chaudhary v. State of Bihar, AIR 1985 SC 1688 : (1985) 3 SCC 680 : 1985 CrLJ 1864 : (1985) 2 Crimes 456.

[13043] ● Cash and ornaments of deceased recovered from possession of accused.—Cash and ornaments of deceased recovered from possession of accused. Such recovery on its pleading of ornaments to pawn broker not proved. No independent corroboration. Held, prosecution failed to prove the charge under Sections 201 and 404 and hence conviction of accused not sustainable. Mallah Seetharamaiah v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1989 SC 421 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 177 : 1989 CrLJ 968 (SC) : (1989) 2 SCJ 403.

[13044] ● Accused causing death of deceased and throwing parts of body at different places.—There are number of impelling circumstances attending this case leading to an irresistible and inescapable conclusion that it was the appellant and the appellant alone who caused the death of the deceased Ravindra in a very ghastly manner by cutting him into pieces and throwing his various parts of body at different parts of the city, Bhatapara and there cannot be any dispute that this cold-blooded murder is diabolical in conception and extremely cruel in execution. The evaluation of the findings of the High Court does not suffer from any illegality, or manifest error or perversity nor it has overlooked or wrongly discarded any vital piece of evidence. Hence, the findings of facts recorded by the Court below do not call for any interference. Ashok Kumar Chatterjee v. State of Madhya Pradesh, 1989 SCC (Cri) 565 : (1989) 2 SCJ 454 (464) : (1989) 1 Crimes 905.

[13045] ● Disappearance of evidence by scrapping out blood stained earth and burning dead body.—The accused persons were charged for committing murder of the victim and thereafter causing disappearance of evidence by scrapping out the blood stained earth and burning the dead body. But, the serologist failed to give opinion from the recovered bones, as to the age, sex and origin of the victim. The other evidence about the burning of dead body was not reliable. Mere evidence that after murder the accused were travelling in the vehicle which was going towards river was not sufficient to prove the offence. Conviction under Section 201, IPC set aside. Bhupendra Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1991 SC 1083 : (1991) 2 SCC 750 : 1991 SCC (Cri) 571 : 1991 CrLJ 1337 (SC) : JT 1991 (1) SC 625 : 1991 (2) Crimes 221.

[13046] ● Two death certificates— Issued.—In this case the accused was alleged to have issued two false death certificates—Ex. P. 7 and Ex. P. 33. A perusal of Ex P-7 would show that the same does not disclose the cause of death and this certificate was given in the presence of PW-11, a Police Officer, the contents of which would show that there was a doubt about the cause of death thereby suggesting that it could be an unnatural death in which case the police had to take action and it was the duty of the husband also to inform the Police. If, as found by both the Courts below, Ex P-7 was given earlier, then we are unable to see as to how the accused gave Ex P-33, giving the cause of death. In any event there is no material whatsoever to show that Ex. P-33, which according to the prosecution was issued to facilitate the cremation, was used. The fact remains that the dead body was sent for regular post-mortem and a case of murder was also registered against the husband of the deceased. In such an event, we fail to see as to how even assuming that Ex P-33 was issued by the appellant, it would amount to an attempt to commit an offence under S. 201, IPC. There is marked difference between preparation and attempt and in this case it is highly doubtful whether the appellant attempted to commit an offence under S. 201, IPC. According to prosecution and as held by both the Courts show, the appellant issued Ex P-7 in the first instance and the contents of Ex P-7 do not in any manner indicate that he intended to facilitate the cremation by issuing such a certificate. On the other hand, the contents of Ex P-7 which was issued in the presence of the Police Officer, had in one sense paved the way for further investigation regarding the cause of death. In such a situation merely because Ex P-33 was seized from the house of husband of deceased the same would not fully incriminate the appellant for an offence under S. 201 read with S. 511, IPC. At any rate, a reasonable doubt arises about the guilt of the appellant particularly in view of the fact that there is absolutely no material to show whether anybody had seen Ex P-33 earlier and whether there was any attempt to put the same to use for facilitating the cremation. The conviction and sentence awarded to the accused are set aside. Balai Chandra Biswas v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1994 SC 914 (915-916) : (1994) 1 SCC 423 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 536 : 1994 CrLJ 1035.

[13047] ● Knowledge of offence and intention of disappearing of evidence essential ingredients.—Knowledge of offence and intention of disappearing evidence are essential ingredients. Circumstantial evidence relied upon by prosecution not connecting appellants with offence under Section 201. No finding to the effect that deceased had been murdered either by appellants or by one whom appellants know. Even no finding of lower Courts to the effect that all those persons who gave bath to dead body or went with dead body to cremate it, did so to disappear evidence of murder offence. Held, charge under Section 201 not established. Hanuman v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1994 SC 1307 : 1994 Supp (2) 39 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 693 : 1994 CrLJ 2092.

[13048] ● False evidence not to be basis of conviction.—Mere false evidence given by the accused cannot be made basis for his conviction. Prosecution has to prove its own case. Bhalinder Singh v. State of Punjab, (1994) 1 SCC 726 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 462 : (1994) 1 Crimes 294 (SC) : 1994 JIC 153 : (1994) 1 SCR 26.

[13049] ● Dead body of deceased buried in house of accused.—While deceased had illicit relations with wife of accused and also with wife of accused's brother—Present accused being wife of main accused responsible for murder. Though dead body was found buried in house of accused, yet there is no evidence to connect present accused with offence of concealment. Both present accused and main accused were living in same house. Hence, present accused can not be convicted on basis of assumption and thus entitled to benefit of doubt. Sardar Singh v. State (Delhi Admin.), 1994 (1) East CrC 101 (SC).

[13050] ● Conviction when based on evidence of child.—When conviction is based on evidence of a child aged 5 years, a daughter of deceased and there are apparent traces of tutoring the child, accused acquitted from charge of murder. Arbind Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 1994 SC 1068 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 1418 : 1994 CrLJ 1227 : 1994 (1) East CrC 525 : 1994 (2) East CrC 519.

[13051] ● Issuance of false certificate to facilitate cremation.—Offence of attempt to cause disappearance of evidence was committed by issuing false death certificate to facilitate cremation. Accused being a doctor, issued alleged death certificate. There is no evidence showing that such false certificate was used for facilitating cremation or issued earlier. Where even at this it may be assumed that false certificate had been issued by accused, there is no evidence to show that it was attempted to cause its disappearance. Thus, no offence under Section 201 is made out against the accused person. Balai Chandra Biswas v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1994 SC 914 : (1994) 1 SCC 423 : 1994 CrLJ 1035 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 536 : (1994) 1 UJ 540.

[13052] ● Appellant admitting administering cyanide to children.—Appellant admitted that he administered cyanide to his children as he was financially crippled. Administering of cyanide corroborated by doctor. His statement very frank and straight-forward, held, conviction sustainable, however sentence of death reduced to imprisonment for life. Janki Dass v. State (Delhi Admn.), AIR 1995 SC 1002 : 1994 Supp (3) SCC 143 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 1673 : 1995 CrLJ 1464 : 1994 (3) Crimes 375.

[13053] ● Dead body of deceased found burried in house of accused.—Wife of the accused had illicit relations with deceased. Dead body of the deceased was found from a five feet deep pit in the room of the accused's house. It may be convict that the process of digging a grave and then erasing the traces etc. may not have been done by the accused alone but there is not an iota of evidence on the record not even a whisper to the effect that it was the wife of the accused who helped him in concealing a causing the evidence of the commission of the offence to disappear. Simply because she is the wife of the accused and as such supposed to be living in the same house, it cannot be assumed that she was guilty of the offence under Sections 201/34, IPC. Sardarsingh v. State, Delhi Administration, AIR 1996 SC 1696 : 1993 Supp (2) SCC 393 : 1993 CrLJ 1489 : 1993 (2) Crimes 13 (SC) : (1993) (1) CCR 79 (SC).

[13054] ● Accused killing four persons and setting bodies on fire.—Accused persons firing shots and killing four persons and setting bodies on fire. Recovery of charred skeleton of deceased persons at instance of accused. FIR containing details of incident, testimony of eye-witness natural, truthful and corroborative. No infirmity nor contradiction in material particulars, held conviction upheld. Vijay Singh v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1996 SC 3016 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 745 : 1996 CrLJ 1993 (SC) : (1996) 3 Supreme 20 : (1996) 1 Crimes 191.

[13055] ● Dowry death—Deceased cremated without waiting for anyone from parents side.—The deceased was cremated on the land adjoining the house of her in-laws without waiting for anyone from her parents side to come and attend the funeral. In fact : (1) it was ensured that none from her parents family would reach accused hence until after the dead body was cremated. (2) The cremation did not take place at the usual cremation ground but in the field close to in lower house. (3) Deliberate attempt was made to prevent anyone from parents side to reach in-laws house for cremation, and (4) No report of her unnatural death was made at the Police station. As accused was present at the time of cremation and the servants who burnt the body were under his control and can be said to have acted on his instructions, his conviction under Section 201 of the Penal Code was held proper. Rajeshwari Devi v. State of Uttar Pradesh, (1996) 5 SCC 121 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 887 : (1996) 3 Supreme 586 : (1996) 2 CCR 142.

[13056] ● Murder—Accused alongwith main accused carrying dead body towards river and throwing same in river.—In the instant case to prove the charge under Section 201/34, IPC the prosecution mainly relied upon the evidence of PW-15 who was the resident of another village and was posted as an operator in the irrigation department. He knew accused No. 1 as he used to go to his house very often. In the night of occurrence when he had gone for answering the natures call near the bundh of the river, he saw four persons carrying the dead body on a cot. It was a moon-lit night and on flashing the torch he identified accused No. 1 and his brother. When he asked them whose dead body it was, they told him that it was of some woman. They then threw the dead body into the river. The investigating officer, admittedly did not record his statement under Section 161, CrPC and for that purpose the protest petition was filed by the informant against the investigating agency. After having gone through the judgments of the Courts below as well as his evidence, the evidence as far as the incident of carrying the dead body towards the river and thereafter throwing the same into the river is acceptable and therefore, the conviction of accused No. 1 under Section 201/34, IPC is confirmed. Mahesh Mahto v. State of Bihar, AIR 1997 SC 3567 : 1997 SCC (Cri) 1134 : 1997 CrLJ 4402 : 1997 (3) Crimes 237 : (1997) 3 CCR 120.

[13057] ● Cremation of dead body—No material to indicate that other persons aware that any offence committed.—It is not uncommon in villages that the villagers come forward and take active steps in cremating a dead person. In the absence of any positive material to show that the other accused persons were aware of any offence having been committed, their act in cremating the dead body cannot amount to an offence under Section 201. Gati Behura v. State of Orissa, 1997 CrLJ 4331 : 1997 CrLR (SC) 4331.

[13058] ● Conspiracy—Evidence of eye-witness—Trustworthy and credible.—Conspiracy and in pursuance causing disappearance of corpse of murdered deceased. Prosecution has examined three eye witnesses who had been with the investigating party in respect of a theft. Deceased was the alleged accused in that case of theft who had succumbed to injuries inflicted during interrogation. Corpse of deceased could not be recovered but evidence of eye witnesses is consistent in establishing the hatching of conspiracy & throwing of corpse into the river. Court found that evidence of all the three eye witness trustworthy & credible—Conviction of appellant under Sections 201/120B confirmed. Ram Singh v. State of Himachal Pradesh, 1997 CrLJ 1829 : 1997 (1) Crimes 205 (SC) : JT 1997 (3) SC 9 : (1997) 2 Supreme 479 : (1997) 3 SCJ 128.

[13059] ● Disappearance of dead body clandestinely.—PW-1 & PW-2 testified that they without loss of time contacted the SP Mandi and narrated the incident. They gave all details how the injuries were caused to deceased 'S' and on his death how the dead body came to be disposed of. Lower Courts below accepted their evidence as trustworthy and credible and Court finds no reason to take different view in that behalf. PW-10 testified that appellants & other four co-convicts had talked to each other & had decided to cause disappearance of the dead body in a clandestine manner. In view of the matter Court held that prosecution has established the conspiracy that appellant hatched with the other four accused to cause disappearance of dead body of deceased. Ram Singh v. State of Himachal Pradesh, (1997) CrLJ 1829 : 1997 (1) Crimes 205 (SC) : JT 1997 (3) SC 9 : (1997) 2 Supreme 479 : (1997) 3 SCJ 128.

[13060] ● Causing disappearance of evidence—Proof.—It is established that when Sapna PW-2 informed that Sanjiv Kumar is in her house with blood stained clothes Kamlesh was perturbed and by the time Chanchal and Sapna proceeded towards the house of Sapna they met Kamlesh on the way who was returning from the direction of the house of Sapna and requested Sapna to come back so that Kamlesh can give clothes for Sanjiv Kumar which he could change in the house of Sapna. It is also established that she handed over a set of clothes for Sanjiv Kumar which PW-2 Sapna carried. The further circumstance which is established from the prosecution evidence is that when the police with other witnesses knocked the door of Kamlesh who was found in a very perturbed condition and initially resisted the entry of police into her house even though the police said her house would be searched. Ultimately the blood stained clothes of accused Sanjiv Kumar were recovered from the bath room of her house which had been soaked with water in a bath tub. These two circumstances fully established the charge under Section 201, IPC, so far as accused Kamlesh is concerned. Sanjiv Kumar v. State of Himachal Pradesh, AIR 1999 SC 782 (787) : (1999) 2 SCC 288 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 127 : 1999 CrLJ 1138.

[13061] ● Ingredients of offence under Section 201, IPC.—The ingredients of offence under Section 201 are : (i) that an offence has been committed, (ii) that the accused knew or had reason to believe the commission of such an offence, (iii) that with such knowledge or belief he (a) caused any evidence of the commission of that offence to disappear, or (b) gave any information relating to that offence which he then knew or believed to be false, (iv) that he did so as aforesaid with the intention of screening the offender from legal punishment. Vijaya alias Baby v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2003 SC 3787 : (2003) 8 SCC 296 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 1999 : 2003 CrLJ 4318 : (2003) Crimes 360.

[13062] ● Dead bodies carried in gunny bags.—For the conviction under Section 201, IPC, it has been established beyond even a shadow of doubt that dead bodies were carried in a gunny bag. It was discovered on the basis of the discovery statement made by accused in terms of Section 27 of the Indian Evidence Act, which is also relevant. Shankar Narayan Bhadolkar v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2004 SC 1966 : (2004) 2 JCC 1028 : 2004 CrLJ 1778 : JT 2004 (3) SC 211 : (2004) 1 CCR 412.

[13063] ● Ingredients of offence under Section 201, IPC.—Ingredients to attract the application of provisions of Section 201, IPC.—(1) That an offence has been committed;

(2) that the accused knew or had reason to believe the commission of such offence;

(3) with such knowledge or belief he—

(a) caused any evidence of the commission of that offence to disappear, or

(b) gave any information respecting that offence which he then knew or believed to be false.

(4) that he did as aforesaid, with the intention of screening the offender from legal punishment;

(5) if the charge be of an aggravated form, as in the present case, it must be proved further that the offence in respect of which the accused did as in (3) and (4) was punishable with death, or with imprisonment for life or imprisonment extending to ten year. Budhan Singh v. State of Bihar, (2006) 4 SCC 740 : (2006) (2) SCC (Cri) 402 : 2006 CrLJ 2451 (2453, 2454) : 2006 (4) Scale 570 : 2006 (4) Supreme 75 : 2006 (3) SLT 574 : 2006 (5) SCJ 90 : 2006 (2) Crimes 188 (SC).

[13064] ● Sentence.—Having regard to the fact that all the appellants are above 70 years of age and further more in view of the fact that as they were not corrected with the first part of the occurrence, the Supreme Court held that interest of justice would be subserved if they were sentenced to the period already undergone by them. Budhan Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 2006 SC 1959 : (2006) 4 SCC 740 : 2006 (2) SCC (Cri) 402 : 2006 CrLJ 2451 (2455) : 2006 (2) Crimes 188.

[13065] ● Ingredients of offence under Section 201, IPC.—Ingredients required to be established for attracting the provisions of Section 201, IPC are: (i) committal of an offence; (ii) person charged with the offence under Section 201 must have the knowledge or reason to believe that an offence has been committed; (iii) person charged with the said offence should have caused disappearance of evidence and (iv) the act should have been done with the intention of screening the offender from legal punishment or with that intention he should have given information respecting the offence, which he knew or believed to be false.

It is plain that the interest to screen the offender committing an offence must be the primary and sole aim of the accused. In order to bring home an offence under Section 201, IPC, a mere suspicion is not sufficient. There must be on record cogent evidence to prove that the accused knew or had information sufficient to lead him to believe that the offence had been committed and that accused had caused the evidence to disappear in order to screen the offender, known or unknown. Sukhram v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2007 SC 3050 : 2007 (3) SCC (Cri) 426 : 2007 CrLJ 4327 (4331) : 2007 (3) Crimes 354.

[13066] ● Knowledge of offence.—Mere presence at the place of occurrence, of A-2 who happened to be the father-in-law of M who was alleged to have caused death of deceased along with his son, was held not sufficient to draw presumption as to knowledge of the offence. Except the testimony of PW-12 there was no evidence, or circumstances attributing A-2 the knowledge of commission of offence Prosecution failed to establish that the conduct of the A-2, both at the time of occurrence and immediately thereafter was consistent with the hypothesis of his guilt. The judgment of the High Court convicting A-2 under Sections 201 and 302 was set aside. Sukhram v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2007 SC 3050 : 2007 (3) SCC (Cri) 426 : 2007 CrLJ 4327 : 2007 (3) Crimes 354 (SC).

[13067] ● Accused allegedly throwing body of deceased to Fire—High Court holding that no offence was established.—In the instant case, it was alleged that accused had thrown the body of deceased in the fire. The High Court held that no offence had been committed and therefore, Section 201 was not applicable. In view of the High Courts finding that no role was played was by the accused offence, the Supreme Court held that High Courts order was justified and warranted no interference. Section 201, IPC was not applicable. State of Karnataka v. Madesha, (2007) 7 SCC 35 : 2007 (3) SCC (Cri) 292 : 2007 (3) Crimes 298 (SC).

[13068] ● Applicability of Section 201, IPC.—Even if the main offence is not established, Section 201, IPC would be applicable. Where, 'there is' no evidence on record to attribute knowledge of commission of offence to accused, Section 201, IPC cannot apply. State of Karnataka v. Madesha, (2007) 7 SCC 35 : 2007 (3) SCC (Cri) 292 : 2007 (3) Crimes 298 (SC).

[13069] ● Circumstantial evidence—Causing death of wife by throttling her neck.—The scene of observation report (Ex. P-9) prepared by the investigating officer show that the house of the accused is located in the middle of other houses. In view of the medical evidence and in conjunction with the other circumstances, particularly the undisputed fact that at or about the time of Vanga Vimala's death, no third person excepting the accused and the deceased, was present in the house, it will inescapably lead to the conclusion that within all human probability, it was the accused-appellant and none else, who had murdered the deceased by strangulating her to death. We have already noted that the accused alone was inside the house along with his wife, namely, the deceased. As rightly pointed out by the prosecution, it is not the case of the accused that any other person was residing with them in the same house particularly on the fateful day. Further, as rightly pointed out, there was no explanation from the accused as to when he left the house and came to know about the hanging of the dead body and it would be right in arriving at a conclusion that he alone was responsible for the commission of the offence. If we consider all the above mentioned material circumstances coupled with the medical evidence, it is safe to conclude that the death of the deceased was on account of strangulation. As rightly pointed out, there was no possibility of any other person committing the offence and the accused alone was responsible for the commission of the offence. In such circumstances, we agree with the contention of the State counsel that the prosecution placed sufficient evidence to establish the guilt of the accused beyond reasonable doubt. As observed by the High Court, the trial Court acquitted the accused only on the simple ground that the doctor, who conducted post-mortem examination, did not offer cause of death in his preliminary report, forgetting that in the final report particularly after receipt of FSI, report, the very same doctor has opined that the death was due to "Asphysixi due to throttling". In the light of the materials available, the conclusion of the trial Judge cannot be accepted and the High Court taking into consideration the totality of the circumstances and the entire materials was right in accepting the case of the prosecution and found the accused guilty. Vanga Sriniwas v. Public Prosecutor, High Court of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2008 SC 88 : 2007 (3) SCC (Cri) 627 : 2007 (9) SCR 1028 : 2007 (11) Scale 150 : 2007 (4) Crimes 6 (SC).

[13070] ● Murder by poisoning.—So far as the purchase of rat-killer poison and the gunny bag was concerned there was no evidence to show that either the rat-killer poison the gunny bag was purchased prior to the date of occurrence. The body of the deceased was found in a decomposed state. The Doctor who conducted the post-mortem categorically stated that in view of the decomposed state of dead body, it was not possible to say whether any rat killing poison was used. The only other circumstance was purported discovery of the dead body at the instance of accused respondent. The accused were convicted by the trial Court for offences punishable under Section 302, IPC read with Section 34, IPC. They were also connected under Section 201 read with Section 34, IPC. The High Court found that the discovery of dead body was not proved. The High Courts' judgment acquitting the accused was not interfered with by the Supreme Court. State of Maharashtra v. Arjun, AIR 2009 SC 733 (734) : (2008) 17 SCC 53 : (2009) 1 Crimes 120 : JT 2009 (12) SC 632.

[13071] ● Causing disappearance of evidence.—In the instant case, it was incumbent upon the accused persons to firstly inform the police about the unnatural death of deceased. They did not do so, on the other hand even after her death, they did not inform either the police or even the relatives like her father etc. though they could have done so. Instead they hurriedly conducted the funeral thereby causing destruction of evidence. The conviction recorded under Section 201, IPC was held proper. Dasrath v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2010 SC 2592 (2596) : 2010 CrLJ 4382.

[13072] ● Discharge of accused.—Accused A, B and C were charged before a Magistrate at Mangalore under Section 302, Penal Code, on the ground that they, along with D, not then traced, murdered one X. The Magistrate committed them to the Sessions Court for trial. D was arrested latter at Bombay, his full confession narrating all the facts of the case was duly recorded by a Magistrate at Bombay, and then he was sent to Mangalore. It was decided to make him an approver and on his admitting that his confession was true and voluntary the District Magistrate, Mangalore, granted him pardon and recorded his statement as an approver. But no formal order was passed discharging him as an accused. Thereafter D was examined by the committing Magistrate as a supplementary witness under Section 219, Criminal Procedure Code, in the presence of the accused, and thereafter the accused were further examined under Section 342 of the Code. Thereafter at the trial before the Sessions Court D resiled from his statement made before the committing Magistrate, and therefore, that statement was brought on record under Section 288 of the Code. The Sessions Judge found that the statement was corroborated by other evidence, and relying upon it convicted the accused. The High Court upheld the conviction. (i) It must be presumed that at the very time when the District Magistrate granted pardon to D, he was discharged as an accused, and that thereafter he ceased to be an accused and was eligible as a witness. Therefore his evidence as an approver taken by the committing Magistrate and brought on record as substantive evidence by the Sessions Court was legally admissible. (ii) The contention that after a committal order is made, the only Court which can grant pardon is the Sessions Court, is not acceptable. By Section 338 of the Code power is no doubt given to the Sessions Court to tender pardon. But that Section does not mean that the power conferred on the committing Magistrate or the District Magistrate under Section 337(1) to tender pardon 'at any stage of the inquiry or trial' is taken away by Section 338. The present case was covered by Section 337(1) and the tender of pardon by the District Magistrate was perfectly legal and valid. Peiris A.J. v. State of Madras, AIR 1954 SC 616 : 1954 CrLJ 1638.

[13073] ● Power of Magistrate to discharge person after he has been charged.—Magistrate cannot order discharge of a person after he has been charged. He must acquit the accused if otherwise justified on the merits of the case. Harihar v. State of W. Bengal, AIR 1954 SC 266 : 1954 CrLJ 724 (2). TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) Ratilal Mithani v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1979 SC 94 : (1979) 2 SCC 179 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 405 : 1979 CrLJ 41 : 1979 Cr App R (SC) 1 : 1979 SCR 99.

[13074] ● Discharge under Section 251A(2), CrPC, 1898—Magistrate can still proceed for offence triable as summons case.—When a Magistrate takes cognizance of a case under Section 190(1)(b) on a police report, the cognizance so taken is in respect of every offence disclosed in that report, whether it is triable as a warrant-case or as a summons-case, and only in respect of offences enumerated in the report; in other words, the cognizance taken is of the whole case and not only of a particular part of it. Thereafter when the stage under sub-sections (2) and (3) of Section 251-A has been reached, it is quite clear from the language of these sub-sections that in deciding what action should be taken, the Magistrate has to form an opinion whether or not there is ground for presuming that the accused has committed an offence triable under Chapter XXI (now XIX). Therefore, when an order of discharge is made in the exercise of the powers under Section 251-A(2), the discharge is not in respect of all the offences which the facts mentioned in the police report make out, but only in respect of such of the offences mentioned in the report as are triable under Chapter XXI. In such a case, if the facts mentioned in the charge-sheet constitute, not only one or more offences triable under Chapter XXI as warrant-cases, but also one or more other offences ordinarily triable under Chapter XX as summons-cases, the order of discharge, which is only in respect of the former class of cases, does not affect in any way the position as regards offences triable under Chapter XX as to which also charges are contained in the police report, and the Magistrate has power to proceed with the trial in respect of such other offences. The facts stated in the police report on which cognizance was taken by the Magistrate necessarily constituted only not an offence under Section 332 of which the accused was discharged, but also the minor offence under Section 323; when the Magistrate took cognizance he did so in respect of both these offences, and not only in respect of the offence under Section 332. Consequently, even after the accused was discharged of the offence under Section 332, the minor offence under Section 323 of which also he had taken cognizance remained for trial, and the Magistrate was right in proceeding with the trial in respect of that offence after following the procedure under Chapter XX of the Code. Conviction was upheld and the appeal was dismissed. Pramatha Nath Mukherjee v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1960 SC 810 : 1960 CrLJ 1165 : 1960 SCJ 926 : (1960) 2 SCA 200.

[13075] ● Magistrate can discharge or commit accused on basis of documents reformed to in Section 173, CrPC.—(1) In a proceeding instituted on a police report, the Magistrate is bound to take evidence of only such eye-witnesses as are actually produced by the prosecution in Court, (2) the Magistrate, if he is of opinion that it is in the interest of justice to take evidence, whether of eye-witnesses or others, has a duty to do so. (3) If the Magistrate is not of that opinion and if the prosecution has not examined any eye-witnesses, he has jurisdiction to discharge or commit the accused to Sessions on the basis of the documents referred to in Section 173 of the Code. (4) The discretion of the Magistrate under sub-section (4) is a judicial discretion and, therefore, in appropriate cases the order of discharge or committal, as the case may be, is liable to be set aside by a superior Court. Shri Ram v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1961 SC 674 : 1961 (1) CrLJ 760 : 1961 (2) SCR 890 : (1961) 1 SCJ 677.

[13076] ● Expression "groundless" occurring in Section 239, CrPC—Meaning of.—The expression "groundless" occurring in Section 239 means that no reasonable person can come to the conclusion that there was any ground whatsoever to sustain the charge against the accused. Magistrate cannot disbelieve evidence at the stage of considering whether he should discharge the accused by elaborate and painstaking examination of the evidence. Order of discharge after such elaborate examination is in excess of jurisdiction and is liable to be quashed. Bapat Gope v. State of Bihar, AIR 1962 SC 1195 : (1962) 2 CrLJ 276 : 1962 Supp (2) SCR 948.

[13077] ● Power under Section 437, CrPC—Can be exercised even in absence of express order of discharge.—Where on a certain state of facts the accused is alleged by the prosecution to have committed an offence exclusively triable by a Court of Session but the Magistrate is of the opinion that the offence disclosed is only an offence which he is himself competent to try and either acquits or convicts him there is an end of the matter in so far as the very set of facts are concerned. The facts may disclose really a very grave offence such as say one under Section 302, IPC, but the Magistrate thinks that the offence falls under Section 304-A which he can try and after trying the accused either convicts or acquits him. In either case the result would be that the appropriate Court will be prevented from trying the accused for the grave offence which those very facts disclose. It is to obviate such a consequence and to prevent inferior Courts from clutching at jurisdiction that the provisions of Section 437, CrPC have been enacted. To say that they can be availed of only where an express order of discharge is made by a Magistrate despite the wide language used in Section 437 would have the result of rendering these provisions inapplicable to the very class of cases for which they were intended. When a case is brought before a Magistrate in respect of an offence exclusively or appropriately triable by a Court of Session what the Magistrate has to be satisfied about is whether the material placed before him makes out an offence which can be tried only by the Court of Session or can be appropriately tried by that Court or whether it makes out an offence which he can try or whether it does not make out any offence at all. There is nothing in the language of Section 437 from which it could be said that this power is not exercisable during the pendency of a trial before a Magistrate or that this power can be exercised only where the Magistrate has made an express order of discharge. Express orders of discharge are not required to be passed by the Court in cases where, upon the same facts, it is possible to say that though no offence exclusively or appropriately triable by a Court of Session is made out, an offence triable by a Magistrate is nevertheless made out. Moreover, even if an express order of discharge is made by a Magistrate in respect of an offence exclusively triable by a Court of Session but a trial on the same facts for a minor offence is proceeded with, the Magistrate has undoubtedly power to order his commitment in respect of the very offence regarding which he has passed an order of discharge provided of course the material before him justifies such a course. There is nothing in Section 347 which precludes him from doing this. It will, therefore, be not right to say that the power conferred by Section 437 is exercisable only in respect of express orders of discharge. Thakur Ram v. State of Bihar, AIR 1966 SC 911 : 1966 CrLJ 700 : (1966) 1 SCA 679 : (1966) 2 SCR 740 : (1966) 2 SCJ 438.

[13078] ● Jurisdiction of Additional Sessions Judge to set aside order of Magistrate and direct commitment of appellant to Session Court.—There is another consideration to be taken into account. Take for instance, a case where on certain facts the accused is alleged by the prosecution to have committed a grave offence, say under Section 302, IPC exclusively triable by the Court of Session, but the Magistrate thinks that the offence falls under Section 304-A which he can try and after trying the accused either convicts or acquits him. In either case the result would be that the appropriate Court would be prevented from trying the accused for the grave offence which those very facts disclose. It is to obviate such a consequence and to prevent inferior Courts from exercising a jurisdiction which they do not possess that the provisions of Section 437, CrPC have been enacted. To say that these provisions can be availed of only where an express order of discharge is made is made by a Magistrate would be to render those provisions ineffective and inapplicable to the very class of cases for which they were intended. As we have already pointed out the language used in Section 437, CrPC is wide and there is nothing in that section from which it could be gathered that the power can be exercised only when the Magistrate has made an express order of discharge. We accordingly hold that the Additional Sessions Judge had the jurisdiction to set aside the order of the Magistrate and direct the "commitment" of the appellant to Sessions Court on charge under Section 307 of the IPC. Ram Ekbal Tiwary v. Madan Mohan Tiwary, AIR 1967 SC 1156 : 1967 CrLJ 1076 (1079) : (1967) 2 SCR 368.

[13079] ● Express order of discharge when contemplated.—It is true that in the present case there is no express order of the Magistrate discharging the appellant of the charge under Section 307, IPC, but in his order, the Magistrate has given reasons for holding that no case is made out under Section 307, IPC in order to justify an order of commitment. It is manifest that the order of the Magistrate tantamounts to an implied order of discharge and the Additional Sessions Judge had, therefore, jurisdiction, under Section 437, CrPC, to set aside the order of the Magistrate and to order that the accused should be committed to trial in the Court of Sessions on the major charge under Section 307, IPC. There is nothing in the language of Section 437, CrPC from which it could be said that the power of the Sessions Court under that section can be exercised only when the Magistrate has made an express order of discharge. It is apparent from the language of Section 209(1), CrPC that an express order of discharge is only contemplated in a case where the Magistrate comes to the conclusion that the allegations against the accused do not amount to an offence at all and, therefore no question arises of trying him either by himself or by any other Court. But the section does not contemplate that an express order of discharge should be made in a case where upon the same facts it is possible to say that though no offence exclusively triable by a Court of Session is made out, an offence triable by a Magistrate is nevertheless made out and the Magistrate thereafter proceed with the trial of that offence. Ram Ekbal Tiwary v. Madan Mohan Tiwary, AIR 1967 SC 1156 : 1967 CrLJ 1076 (1079) : (1967) 2 SCR 368.

[13080] ● Test for discharging accused must be in large way be same under both sections.—No doubt a Magistrate enquiring into a case under Section 209, CrPC (old) is not to act as a mere post office and has to come to a conclusion whether the case before him is fit for commitment of the accused to the Court of Session; but in arriving at that conclusion, it is not the function of an enquiring Magistrate to weigh the pros and cons of the prosecution and defence evidence and to discharge the accused merely because in his view the defence evidence was better than the prosecution. The introduction of Section 207-A of the Code of Criminal Procedure by a subsequent amendment does not necessarily imply that the principles governing the exercise of jurisdiction by the Magistrate under Section 209 must thereafter be different from the principles which were held to govern his jurisdiction before this amendment. The words of Sections 207 and 209-A, CrPC are not the same and it is possible to say that the force of the two sections is also not the same, and that Section 209 gives a power to enter upon the merits of a case in manner which Section 207A does not warrant. But the test for discharging the accused must, in a large way, be the same under both the sections. K.P. Raghavan v. M.H. Abbas, AIR 1967 SC 740 : 1967 CrLJ 653 : 1966 Cr App R (SC) 373.

[13081] ● Judicial refusal to summon amounts to discharge.—It is contended, in the instant case that judicial refusal to summon amounts to discharge. There is no force in this contention because there cannot be any question of discharge when the appellant was not sent up upon the charge-sheet submitted by the Police. Raghubans Dubey v. State of Bihar, AIR 1967 SC 1167 : 1967 CrLJ 1081 (1083) : (1967) 2 SCR 423.

[13082] ● Dismissal of complaint on preliminary objection—Discharge not acquittal.—It is true that it is a summons case and no formal charge is necessary to be framed under Section 242, old CrPC but even so here when the accused appeared, before anything was done the accused filed a preliminary objection and no particulars of the offence of which the accused was charged were ever stated to him. The accused is discharged and not acquitted. Municipal Council, Raipur v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1970 SC 1923 : (1969) 2 SCC 582 : 1970 CrLJ 1656 (1657) : (1970) 1 SCR 915.

[13083] ● Enquiry preparatory to commitment—Object.—In terms Section 209, CrPC applies to case which are instituted otherwise than on a Police report. But the principle underlying that section applies to cases which are instituted on a Police report. A Magistrate holding an enquiry is not intended to act merely as a recording machine. He is entitled to shift and weigh the material on record, but only for seeing whether there is sufficient evidence for commitment, and not whether there is sufficient evidence for conviction. If there is no prima facie evidence or the evidence is totally unworthy of credit, it is his duty of Magistrate to discharge the accused; if there is some evidence on which conviction may reasonably be based, he must commit the case. The Magistrate at that stage has no power to evaluate the evidence for satisfying himself of the guilt of the accused. The question before the Magistrate at that stage is whether there is some credible evidence which would sustain a conviction. Alamohan Das v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1970 SC 863 : 1970 CrLJ 860 (863) : (1969) 2 SCR 520 : 1970 CAR 223.

[13084] ● Trespass—Prima facie case existing—Discharge of accused not proper.—Prima facie case exists against the accused person for committing trespass. Title of property cannot be gone into, at this stage. Discharge of accused is not proper. Mahant Abhey Dass v. S. Gurdial Singh, AIR 1971 SC 834 : 1971 SCC (Cri) 244 : 1971 CrLJ 691 : (1972) 4 SCC (N) 44.

[13085] ● Power of Magistrate to discharge accused.—The Magistrate has ample power to discharge the accused at any stage of proceedings. Cricket Association of Bengal v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1971 SC 1925 : (1971) 3 SCC 239 : 1971 SCC (Cri) 446 : 1971 CrLJ 1432 : 1971 Supp SCR 200.

[13086] ● Charge to be framed if case made out on Police report.—If a prima facie case is made out on police report, charge is to be framed. Abhey Dass v. Gurdial Singh, AIR 1971 SC 834 : 1971 SCC (Cri) 244 : 1971 CrLJ 691 : (1971) 1 SCWR 345.

[13087] ● Discharge of accused after consideration of Police report.—No ground for presuming guilt of the accused—he may be discharged after consideration of police report. The order framing charge does substantially affect personal liberty and it cannot be said the Court must automatically frame charge merely because there is a police report. Century Spinning v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1972 SC 545 : (1972) 3 SCC 282 : 1972 SCC (Cri) 495 : 1972 CrLJ 329 : 1971 Cr App R 472.

[13088] ● Sessions Court discharging some accused and framing charge against rest.—Where the Sessions Court discharged some accused after perusing the record and hearing the parties, for reasons to be recorded and framed a charge against the rest of the accused, the High Court is entitled to go into the reasons given by the Sessions Judge in support of his order and to determine for itself whether the order is justified by the facts and circumstances of the case. In the exercise of the wholesome power under Section 482, the High Court is entitled to quash a proceeding if it comes to the conclusion that allowing the proceeding to continue would be an abuse of the process of the Court or that the ends of justice required that the proceeding ought to be quashed. The Sessions Court being seized of the case, has jurisdiction to frame appropriate charge and is not controlled by the specifications contained in the committal order. State of Karnataka v. L. Muniswamy, AIR 1977 SC 1489 : (1977) 2 SCC 699 : (1977) 3 SCC 337 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 404 : 1977 CrLJ 1125 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 188 : (1977) 2 SCJ 145 : (1977) 3 SCR 113 : (1977) 2 SCWR 327 : ILR (1977) 1 Kant 617 : 1977 PunLJ (Cri) 108 : 1977 MLJ (Cri) 428.

[13089] ● At beginning and initial stage of trial truth, veracity and effect of evidence not to be meticulously judged.—Reading the two provisions together in juxta-position, as they have got to be, it would be clear that at the beginning and the initial stage of the trial, the truth, veracity and the effect of the evidence which the prosecutor proposes to adduce are not to be meticulously judged. Nor is any weight to be attached to the probable defence of the accused. It is not obligatory for the Judge at that stage of the trial to consider in any detail and weigh in a sensitive balance whether the facts, if proved, would be incompatible with the innocence of the accused or not. The standard of test and judgment which is to be finally applied before recording a finding regarding the guilt or otherwise of the accused is not exactly to be applied at the stage of deciding the matter under Section 227 or 228 of the Code. At the initial stage, if there is a strong suspicion which leads the Court to think that there is ground for presuming that the accused has committed an offence, then it is not open to the Court to say that there is no sufficient ground for proceeding against him.

If the evidence which the prosecutor proposes to adduce to prove the guilt of the accused even if fully accepted before it is challenged in cross-examination or rebutted by the defence evidence, if any, cannot show that the accused committed the offence, then there will be no sufficient ground for proceeding with the trial.

If the scales of a balance as to the guilt or innocence of the accused are something like even at the conclusion of trial, then, on the theory of benefit of doubt the case is to end in his acquittal. But if, on the other hand, it is so at the initial stage of making an order under Section 227 or Section 228, then in such a situation ordinarily and generally the order which will have to be made will be one under Section 228 and not under Section 227. State of Bihar v. Ramesh Singh, AIR 1977 SC 2018 : (1977) 4 SCC 39 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 533 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 375 : 1977 BBCJ (SC) 226 : 1977 CrAppR (SC) 267 1977 ChandLR (Cri) SC 274.

[13090] ● No power of committing Magistrate to discharge accused.—Under the new Code in cases where the offence is triable exclusively by the Court of Session, the committing Magistrate has no power to discharge the accused. Nor has he power to take oral evidence save where a specified provision like Section 306 enjoins. It is also not open to the committal Court to launch on a process of satisfying itself that a prima facie case has been made out on the merits. The jurisdiction once vested in him under the earlier Code has been eliminated now under the present Code. The narrow inspection hole through which the committing Magistrate has to look at the case limits him merely to ascertain whether the case, as disclosed by the police report, appears to the Magistrate to show an offence triable solely by the Court of Session. If, by error, a wrong section of the Penal Code is quoted, he may look into that aspect. If made-up facts unsupported by any material are reported by the police and a Sessions offence is made to appear, it is perfectly open to the Sessions Court under Section 227, CrPC, to discharge the accused. Sanjay Gandhi v. Union of India, AIR 1978 SC 514 : (1978) 2 SCC 39 : 1978 SCC (Cri) 172 : 1978 CrLJ 642.

[13091] ● In warrant case instituted otherwise than on police report—Accused be discharged at enquiry stage.—In warrant case instituted otherwise than on police report an accused at inquiry stage may be discharged under Section

245, CrPC. But if during trial of other accused persons the Court feels the discharged person might have committed the offence, Court may again frame charge against him and try him. Mohan Joginder v. State of Punjab, AIR 1979 SC 339 : (1971) 1 SCC 345 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 295 : 1979 CrLJ 333 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 21.

[13092] ● Once charged—Framed Magistrate cannot cancel it or discharge accused.—Once a charge is framed, a Magistrate has no power under Section 227 of the Code (Section 216(1) and (2) of 1973 Code) or any other provision of the Code to cancel the charge, and reverse the proceedings to the stage of Section 253 (Section 245 of the new Code) and discharge the accused. Once a charge is framed, the Magistrate is required to proceed with the trial to a logical end if the accused pleads not guilty. He has no power to discharge the accused after the charge is framed. Excepting where the prosecution must fail due to a fundamental defect, such as want of sanction, an order of acquittal must be based upon a 'finding of not guilty' turning on the merits of the case and the appreciation of evidence at the conclusion of the trial. If after framing charges the Magistrate whimsically, without appraising the evidence and without permitting the prosecution to produce all its evidence, 'discharges' the accused, such an acquittal, without trial, even if clothed as 'discharge', will be illegal. Whereas in this case the Magistrate framed charges and subsequently, when on the disposal of Revision Applications by the High Court the records were received back, he arbitrarily deleted those charges and discharged the accused, without examining the 'remaining witnesses' of the prosecution which he had in the order of framing charges said, "will be examined after the charge", the order is illegal. Assuming arguendo, the Magistrate's order of discharge was an order of 'acquittal', then also, it does not alter the fact that this 'acquittal' was manifestly illegal. It was not passed on merits, but without any trial, with consequent failure of justice. The High Court has undoubtedly the power to interfere with such a patently illegal order of acquittal in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction under Section 439 (Section 401 of the new Code) and direct a re-trial. The High Court's order under appeal directing the Magistrate to take de novo proceedings against the accused was not barred by the provisions of Section 403 (Section 300 of the new Code), the earlier proceedings taken by the Magistrate being no trial at all and order passed therein being neither a valid 'discharge' of the accused, nor their acquittal as contemplated by Section 403 (1) (Section 300(1) of the new Code). Ratilal Bhanji v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1979 SC 94 : (1979) 2 SCC 179 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 405 : 1979 CrLJ 41 : 1979 SCCr R 99 : (1979) 1 SCR 993 : 1979 CrAppR (SC) 1 : (1979) 3 MahLR 172.

[13094] ● Discharge of accused—Procedures.—The CrPC contemplates discharge of the accused by the Court of Session under Section 227 incase triable by it; cases instituted upon a police report are covered by Section 239 and cases instituted otherwise than on police report are dealt with in Section 245. The three sections contain somewhat different provisions in regard to discharge of the accused. Under Section 227, the trial Judge is required to discharge the accused if he considers that there is not sufficient ground for proceeding against the accused. Obligation to discharge the accused under Section 239 arises when "the Magistrate considers the charge against the accused to be groundless." The power to discharge is exercisable under Section 245(1) when "the Magistrate considers, for reasons to be rerecorded, that no case against the accused has been made out which, if unrebutted, would warrant his conviction....." It is a fact that Sections 227 and 239 provide for discharge being ordered before the recording of evidence and the consideration as to whether charge has to be framed or not is required to be made on the basis of the record of the case, including documents and oral hearing of the accused and the prosecution or the police report, the documents sent along with it and examination of the accused and after affording an opportunity to the two parties to be heard. The stage for discharge under Section 245, on the other hand, is reached only after the evidence referred to in Section 244 has been taken. Notwithstanding this difference in the position there is no scope for doubt that the stage at which the Magistrate is required to consider the question of framing of charge under Section 245(1) is a preliminary one and the test of "prima facie" case has to be applied. In spite of the difference in the language of the three sections, the legal position is that if the trial Court is satisfied that a prima facie case is made out, charge has to be framed. R.S. Nayak v. A.R. Antulay, AIR 1986 SC 2045 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 256 : 1986 CrLJ 1922 : 1986 CAR 181 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 266.

[13095] ● Discharge—Order of—Validity.—Where a Special Judge discharged the accused under Section 239, CrPC, on the same material on which his predecessor had held that a prima facie case relating to the various offences had been made out against the accused, the subsequent order is in effect a review of the earlier order which the Special Judge was not entitled to do under the Code. At the time of framing charges, all that is required is to see whether a prima facie case regarding the commission of certain offences is made out. the question whether the charges will eventually stand proved or not can be examined only after evidence is recorded in the case. What the Special Judge has done is to decide the case on merits without giving the prosecution an opportunity to adduce evidence against the accused. The order was set aside. State of Himachal v. Kishan Lal Prahar, AIR 1987 SC 773 : (1987) 2 SCC 17 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 270 : 1987 CrLJ 709 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 571.

[13096] ● Withdrawal from prosecution—Application for.—Application for withdrawal of prosecution may be made at any time ranging between the Court taking cognizance of the case till such time the Court actually pronounces judgment. It follows that even where reliable evidence has been adduced to prove the charges, the Public Prosecutor can seek the consent of the Court to withdraw the prosecution. The section does not lay down that an application for withdrawal of the prosecution should necessarily be made at the earliest stages of the case or only if the evidence is of a weak and infirm nature. (Per NATARAJAN, J.)

A cursory glance at Section 321 will satisfy anyone that consent can be given for withdrawal from the prosecution of a case, not only when the charge is not framed, but even after the charge is framed and at any time before the judgment. (Per KHALID, J.)

There can be no doubt that the withdrawal from the prosecution could not be permitted on the ground that there was insufficient or no evidence to sustain the prosecution when a charge was already framed. But if on the basis of the material on record no charge could be framed, and the charge should be quashed, the appeal against permission to withdraw the prosecution should be dismissed and instead of permitting the withdrawal of the prosecution under Section 321, the charge framed is quashed. (Per OZA, J. for himself and on behalf of P.N. BHAGWATI, C.J.) (Minority view.)

Where the consert given by the trial Court for withdrawal of the prosecution does not suffer from any error of law, patent or latent, the same cannot be questioned. (Per. NATARAJAN, J.)

Where the application for withdrawal was clearly bona fide and in furtherance of public justice and it was clearly a false and vexatious criminal prosecution which was sought to be halted, the Court will not interfere with the order of the trial Court permitting the withdrawal and confirmed by the High Court. (Per OZA, J. for himself and on behalf of P.N. BHAGWATI, (C.J.) (Minority view.) Mohd. Mumtaz v. Nandini Satpathy, AIR 1987 SC 863 : (1987) 1 SCC 269 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 63 : 1987 CrLJ 778 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 259.

[13097] ● Discharging accused guidelines as to.—Section 227, itself contains enough guideline as to the scope of inquiry for the purpose of discharging an accused. It provides that "the Judge shall discharge when he considers that there is no sufficient ground for proceeding against the accused". The 'ground' in the context is not a ground for conviction, but a ground for putting the accused on trial. It is in the trial, the guilt or the innocence of the accused will be determined and not at the time of framing of charge. The Court, therefore, need not undertake an elaborate inquiry in shifting and weighing the materials. Nor is it necessary to delve deep into various aspects. Al that the Court has to consider is whether the evidentiary material on record, if generally accepted, would reasonably connect the accused with the crime. Further it is observed : "Section 227 which confers power to discharge an accused was designed to prevent harassment to an innocent person by the arduous trial or the ordeal of prosecution. The power has been entrusted to the Sessions Judge who brings to bear his knowledge and experience in criminal trials. If the Sessions Judge after hearing the parties frames a charge and also makes an order in support thereof, the law must be allowed to take its own course. Self-restraint on the part of the High Court should be the rule unless there is a glaring injustice staring the Court in the face". Shree Atyachar Virodhi Parished v. Dilip Nathuma Chordia, (1989) 1 SCC 715 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 285 : 1989 CrLR (SC) 292 : (1989) 1 Crimes 443

[13098] ● Section 227, CrPC confers special power on Judge to discharge accused—Norms regarding consideration of evidence at time of framing charge.—Section 227, introduced for the first time in the New Code, confers a special power on the Judge to discharge an accused at the threshold if upon consideration of the record and documents he considers 'that there is not sufficient ground' for proceeding against the accused. In other words his consideration of the record and document at that stage is for the limited purpose of ascertaining whether or not there exists sufficient grounds for proceeding with the trial against the accused. If he comes to the conclusion that there is sufficient ground to proceed, he will frame a charge under Section 228, if not he will discharge the accused. It must be remembered that this section was introduced in the Code to avoid waste of public time over cases which did not disclose a prima facie case and to save the accused from avoidable harassment and expenditure. Various norms regarding the consideration of evidence at the time of framing the charge as under :

(1) That the Judge while considering the question of framing the charges under Section 227, of the Code has the undoubted power to shift and weigh the evidence for the limited purpose of finding out whether or not a prima facie case against the accused has been made out.

(2) Where the materials placed before the Court disclose grave suspicion against the accused which has not been properly explained the Court will be fully justified in framing a charge and proceeding with the trial.

(3) The test to determine a prima facie case would naturally depend upon the facts of each case and it is difficult to lay down a rule of universal application. By and large however if two views are equally possible and the judge is satisfied that the evidence adduced before him while giving rise to some suspicion but not grave suspicion against the accused he will be fully within his right to discharge the accused.

(4) That in exercising his jurisdiction under Section 227, of the Code of Judge which (sic) under the present Code is a senior and experienced Judge cannot act merely as a post office or mouth-piece of the prosecution, but has to consider the broad probabilities of the case, the total effect of the evidence and the documents produced before the Court, any basic infirmities appearing in the case and so on. This however does not mean that the Judge should make a roving enquiry into the pros and cons of the matter and weigh the evidence as if he was conducting a trial. Niranjan Singh Karam Singh Punjabi v. Jitendra Bhimraj, AIR 1990 SC 1962 : (1997) 4 SCC 393 : 1990 CrLJ 1869 : JT 1997 (4) SC 84.

[13099] ● Discharge—Prima facie case.—There is sufficient force in the submission of the learned counsel for the State of Andhra Pradesh that there are number of allegations mentioned in the charge-sheet to the effect that the respondents accused have committed the offences punishable under TADA Act for which they are charge-sheeted and the learned trial Judge grossly erred in holding that there is no prima facie case against the accused for the offence under the TADA Act. There are number of allegations which prima facie attract the provisions of the TADA Act. It appears that the learned trial Judge inferred that the investigating agency had come to the conclusion that the accused had a personal grudge against the deceased but the allegations are to the effect that the main object underlying the alleged crime was to propagate pro-Khalistan cult among Sikh community and to organize a force threatening the Government with dire consequences under the pretext of championing the cause of Sikh community. We are satisfied that the trial Court at this stage was not justified in discharging the accused of the offences under TADA Act in respect of which the accused are charge-sheeted. It is needless to say that the prosecution has to prove the said offences beyond all reasonable doubt. For these reasons the appeal is set aside and the designated Court is directed to proceed with the trial by framing charges under the provisions of TADA Act also in accordance with law. State of Andhra Pradesh v. S. Eshar Singh, AIR 1993 SC 1374 : (1993) 1 SCC 440 : 1993 SCC (Cri) 338 (339, 340) : 1993 CrLJ 1028 : 1992 (3) Crimes 875.

[13100] ● Trial Court when not justified in discharging accused of offences under TADA.—There are number of allegations which prima facie attract the provisions of TADA Act. It appears that the learned trial Judge inferred that the investigating agency had come to the conclusion that the accused had a personal grudge against the deceased but the allegations are to the effect that the main object underlying the alleged crime was to propagate pro-Khalistan cult among Sikh community and to organise a force threatening the Government with dire consequences under the pretext of championing the cause of Sikh community. Therefore, the finding of the trial Court that prima facie the provisions of TADA Act are not attracted is clearly wrong. We are satisfied that the trial Court at this stage was not justified in discharging the accused of the offences under TADA Act in respect of which the accused are charge-sheeted. State of Andhra Pradesh v. S. Eshar, AIR 1993 SC 1374 : (1993) 1 SCC 440 : 1993 CrLJ 1028 : 1992 CrLR (SC) 809 : 1992 (3) Crimes 875.

[13101] ● Ingredients of offence of cheating not brought out for framing charge—Discharge of accused proper.—The complainant, it was alleged on being promised to be appointed as Director of a few companies, was induced to part with a good sum for purchase of shares of the companies. But no share certificate was received. It further transpired from the initial evidence that the complainant in fact was made a Director of the companies and to continue as such for two and half years. It further transpired that the sum was paid through a broker of share market. It was held that the ingredients of the offence of cheating as defined in Section 415 have not been attracted and the order of discharge of the accused was upheld by the Supreme Court reversing a decision by Calcutta High Court. Prabhat Kumar Basu v. Tarun Kanti Bagchi, AIR 1994 SC 960 : 1994 CrLJ 1211.

[13102] ● Discharge—Refusal of in interest of justice.—Section 245 occurs in Chapter XIX-B, which prescribes the procedure for trial of warrant cases. A perusal of sub-section (3) would show that it recognises and incorporates the principle of speedy trial implicit in Article 21 of the Constitution. The section applies only to private complaints. According to sub-section (3), if all the evidence referred to in Section 244, is not produced in support of the prosecution within four years from the date of appearance of the accused, the Magistrate shall discharge the accused unless the prosecution satisfies him on the basis of the evidence already recorded and for other special reasons that it will not be in the interest of justice to discharge the accused. If the Magistrate is satisfied that it will not be in the interest of justice to do so, he will not discharge the accused. But the said satisfaction has to be formed on the basis of evidence already recorded and for special reasons which, of course, he may have to record in his order. Santosh De v. Archna Guha, (1994) 2 SCC 420 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 546 : 1995 CrLJ 2640 : 1994 (1) Crimes 548.

[13103] ● Framing of charge—Whether sufficient ground for proceeding against accused.—The object of providing such an opportunity as is envisaged in Section 227 of the Code is to enable the Court to decide whether it is necessary to proceed to conduct the trial. If the case ends there it gains a lot of time of the Court and also saves much human efforts and cost. If the materials produced by the accused even at that early stage would clinch the issue, why should the Court shut it out saying that such document need be produced only after wasting a lot of more time in the name of trial proceedings. Hence the Sessions Judge would be within his powers to consider even materials which the accused may produce at the stage contemplated in Section 227 of the Code. But when the Judge is fairly certain that there is no prospect of the case ending in conviction the valuable time of the Court should not be wasted for holding a trial only for the purpose of formally completing the procedure to pronounce the conclusion on a future date. Most of Sessions Courts in India are under heavy pressure of workload. If the Sessions Judge is almost certain that the trial would only be an exercise in futility or a sheer waste of time it is advisable to truncate or snap the proceedings at the stage of Section 227 of the Code itself. Satish Mehra v. Delhi Administration, (1996) 9 SCC 766 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 1104 : JT 1996 (7) SC 6 : 1996 (3) Crimes 85 : 1996 JCC 507.

[13104] ● Discharge of accused—Failure to conclude investigation within statutory period.—Section 167(5), CrPC as amended in West Bengal providing for discharge of accused if investigation is not completed and charge-sheet not submitted within time frame is not applicable when the charge-sheet had already been submitted but trial is pending. If there is inordinate delay in trial for non fault of accused, the accused may be acquitted for infraction of Article 21, Constitution of India. But that is a different matter altogether. Durgesh Chandra Saha v. Bimal Chandra Saha, AIR 1996 SC 740 : (1996) 1 SCC 341 : 1996 (1) SCC (Cri) 109 : 1996 CrLJ 1137 (SC) : 1995 (6) Scale 661 : 1996 (1) CCR 49 (SC).

[13106] ● Unlawful possession of contraband.—"The evidence collected in a search in violation of law does not become inadmissible in evidence under the Evidence Act. The consequence would be that evidence discovered would be to prove unlawful possession of the contraband under the Act. It is founded in Panchnama to seize the contraband from the possession of the suspect/accused. Though the search may be illegal but the evidence collected, i.e., Panchnama, etc., nonetheless would be admissible at the trial. At the stage of filing charge-sheet it cannot be said that there is no evidence and the Magistrate or the Sessions Judge would be committing illegality to discharge the accused on the ground that Section 50 of the Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Act, 1985 or other provisions have not been complied with. At the trial an opportunity would be available to the prosecution to prove that the search was conducted in accordance with law. Even if search is found to be in violation of law, what weight should be given to the evidence collected is yet another question to be gone into. Under these circumstances, the learned Sessions Judge was not justified in discharging the accused, after filing of the charge-sheet holding that mandatory requirements of Section 50 had not been complied with. State of Himachal Pradesh v. Prithi Chand, AIR 1996 SC 977 : (1996) 2 SCC 37 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 210 (218) : 1996 CrLJ 1354 : JT 1995 (9) SC 411.

[13107] ● Fabricating record and putting up false case.—In the instant case this Court is concerned, with the notice issued by the Second Additional Sessions Judge, Buldana on 3.12.1990 to the appellants for prosecution under Section 194 and 195, IPC for alleged fabrication of the record and setting up a case said to be false against two ladies said to be aged about 60 and 80 years. The Additional Sessions Judge had stated that they are infirm persons, unable to walk and stand without the support of others. Consequently it would be difficult to believe the version of the police that they pelted stones and kicked the police officers while the latter were discharging official duty in apprehending Latur Hasan. It is seen that the observation made by the Sessions Judge is based on Section 161 statements recording during the investigation. The Court should not come to the conclusion on the basis of Section 161 statements which are not evidence. It can be used at the trial only for contradictions or omissions when the witness was examined. Nor could it be contradicted by looking at the physical features of the accused even before they are examined. The learned Sessions Judge had overstepped his jurisdiction in recording a finding, while looking at the physical features of the accused, that the police had fabricated the record. Insurance of notice under Section 340, CrPC is wholly unjustified. Omkar Namdeo Jadhao v. Second Addl. Sessions Judge, Buldana, AIR 1997 SC 331 : 1997 CrLJ 369 : (1996) 7 SCC 498 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 488 (488, 489) : (1996) 1 Crimes 20.

[13108] ● Discharge of accused—Court to consider material at stage of framing charge.—At Sections 227 and 228, CrPC stage the Court is required to evaluate the material and documents on record with a view to finding out if the facts emerging therefrom taken at their face value disclose the existence of all the ingredients constituting the alleged offence. The Court may, for this limited purpose, shift the evidence as it cannot be expected even at that initial stage to accept all that the prosecution states as gospel truth even if it is opposed to common sense or the broad probabilities of the case. Therefore, at the stage of framing of the charge, the Court has to consider the material with a view to find out if there is ground for presuming that the accused has committed the offence or that there is not sufficient ground for proceeding against him and not for the purpose of arriving at the conclusion that it is not likely to lead to a conviction. State of Maharashtra v. Priya Sharan Maharaj, AIR 1997 SC 2041 : (1997) 4 SCC 393 : 1997 SCC (Cri) 584 (588) : 1997 CrLJ 2248 : JT 1997 (4) SC 84.

[13109] ● High Court not to seek independent corroboration at stage of framing charge—Discharge of accused.—What the Court has to consider at the stage of framing of the charges is whether the version of the person complaining together with his/her explanation is prima facie believable or not. It is, therefore not proper for the High Court to seek independent corroboration at that stage and to quash the charge and discharge the accused in absence thereof. State of Maharashtra v. Priya Sharan Maharaj, AIR 1997 SC 2041 : (1997) 4 SCC 393 : 1997 CrLJ 2248 (SC) : JT 1997 (4) SC 84.

[13110] ● Charge-sheet filed—Discharge when to be considered.—It is a settled law, that the charge-sheet constitutes prima facie evidence constituting the offence for proceeding further in the matter. Necessarily, therefore, the Court has to look into the relevant law and the allegations made in the charge-sheet and then consider whether any offence has been committed to frame charges for trial before discharging the accused. State of Jammu and Kashmir v. Romesh Chander, AIR 1997 SC 2401 : 1997 SCC (Cri) 44 : 1997 CrLJ 2976 : 1997 CrLR (SC) 435 : 1996 (4) Crimes 270.

[13111] ● Discharge of accused—Investigation.—The order stopping further investigation into the offence and the consequential order of discharge are not intended to be automatic sequel to the failure to complete investigation within the period fixed in the sub-section. The succeeding words in the sub-section confer power on the Court to refrain from stopping such investigation if the Investigating Officer satisfies the Magistrate of the fusion of two premises : (1) that in the interest of justice it is necessary to proceed with the investigation beyond the period shown in the sub-section, and (2) that there are special reasons to do so. A reading of sub-section (6) of Section 167 further shows that even in a case where the order stopping investigation and the consequent discharge of accused has been made that is not the last word on it because the sub-section opens another avenue for moving the Sessions Judge. If the Sessions Judge is satisfied that "further investigation into the offence ought to be made" he has the power to allow the investigation to proceed. Nirmal Kanti Roy v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1998 SC 2322 : (1998) 4 SCC 590 : 1998 CrLJ 3282 at 3285 (SC) : JT 1998 (3) SC 436 : 1998 (3) Scale 232 : 1998 (4) SLT 782 : 1998 (2) CCR 251 (SC) : 1998 (4) Supreme 209 : 1998 (2) Crimes 267 (SC).

[13112] ● Time—Schedule under Section 167(5) not to be treated with rigidity.—Hence the time schedule shown in Section 167(5) of the CrPC is not to be treated with rigidity and it is not mandatory that on the expiry of the period indicated therein the Magistrate should necessarily pass the order of discharge of the accused. Before ordering stoppage of investigation, the Magistrate shall consider whether, on the facts of that case, further investigation would be necessary to foster interest of criminal justice. Magistrate at that stage must look into the record of investigation to ascertain the progress of investigation thus far registered. If substantial part of investigation was by then over, the Magistrate should seriously ponder over the question whether it would be conducive to the interest of justice to stop further investigation and discharge the accused. Nirmal Kanti Roy v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1998 SC 2322 : (1998) 4 SCC 590 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 1100 (1104) : 1998 CrLJ 3282 : 1998 (2) Crimes 267 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 573 : JT (1998) 3 SC 436.

[13113] ● Failure to hand over possession of flat—Discharge that dispute of civil nature.—Failure to hand over possession of flat provided to employee of company after expiry of period of appointment, then complaint filed by company under Companies Act and also under IPC along with civil suit, then discharging appellant on the basis that dispute was of civil nature was just and proper. Jagdish Chandra Nijhawan v. S.K. Sarraf, AIR 1999 SC 217 : (1999) 1 SCC 119 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 20 : (1998) 4 Crimes 123 : 1999 CrLJ 268.

[13114] ● Discharging accused at stage of framing charge.—Section 239 has to be read alongwith Section 240, CrPC. If the Magistrate finds that there is prima facie evidence or the material against the accused in support of the charge (allegations), he may frame charge in accordance with Section 240, CrPC. But if he finds that the charge (the allegations or imputations) made against the accused do not make out a prima facie case and do not furnish basis for framing the charge, it will be a case of the charge being groundless, so he has no option but to discharge the accused. Where the Magistrate finds that taking cognizance of the offence itself was contrary to any provision of law, like Section 468, CrPC, the complaint being barred by limitation, so he cannot frame the charge, he has to discharge the accused. Indeed in a case where the Magistrate takes cognizance of an offence without taking note of Section 468, CrPC, the most appropriate stage at which the accused can plead for his discharge is the stage of framing the charge. He need not wait till completion of trial. The Magistrate will be committing no illegality in considering the question and discharging the accused at the stage of framing the charge if the facts so justify. Arun Vyas v. Anita Vyas, AIR 1999 SC 2071 : (1999) 4 SCC 690 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 629 (633) : 1999 CrLJ 3479 : JT 1999 (4) SC 421 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 392.

[13115] ● Discharge—Court to see whether prima facie sufficient grounds there for proceeding against accused.—"It is settled law that at the stage of framing the charge, the Court has to prima facie consider whether there is sufficient ground for proceeding against the accused. The Court is not required to appreciate the evidence and arrive at the conclusion that the materials produced are sufficient or not for convicting the accused. If the Court is satisfied that a prima facie case is made out for proceeding further then a charge has to be framed. The charge can be quashed if the evidence which the prosecutor proposes to adduce to prove the guilt of the accused, even if fully accepted before it, is challenged by cross-examination or rebutted by defence evidence, if any, cannot show that accused committed the particular offence. In such case, there would be no sufficient ground for proceeding with the trial." State of Madhya Pradesh v. S.B. Johari, AIR 2000 SC 665 : (2000) 2 SCC 57 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 311 (314) : 2000 CrLJ 944 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 407.

[13116] ● Reasons to be recorded when accused discharged.—It is pertinent to note that the Section 240 of the CrPC, required a Magistrate to record his reasons for discharging the accused but there is no such requirement if he forms the opinion that there is ground for presuming that the accused had committed the offence which he is competent to try. In such a situation, he is only required to frame a charge in writing against the accused.

Even in cases instituted otherwise than of Police report, the Magistrate is required to write an order showing the reasons only if he is to discharge the accused. Kanti Bhadra Shah v. State of West Bengal, AIR 2000 SC 522 : (2000) 1 SCC 722 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 303 (307) : 2000 CrLJ 746 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 173.

[13117] ● Discharge—Imputation not per se defamatory.—"The only effect of an imputation being per se defamatory is that it would relieve the complaint of the burden to establish that the publication of such imputations has lowered him in the estimation of the right thinking members of the public. However, even if the imputation is not per se defamatory, that by itself would not go to the advantage of the publisher, for the complaining person can establish on evidence that the publication has in fact amounted to defamation even in spite of the apparent deficiency. So the appellant cannot contend, at this stage, that he is entitled to discharge on the ground that the imputations in the extracted publication were not per se defamatory." John Thomas v. K. Jagadeesan, AIR 2001 SC 2651 : (2001) 6 SCC 30 : (2001) SCC (Cri) 974 (978) : 2001 CrLJ 3322 : 2001 CrLR (SC) 495 : (2001) 3 Crimes 270.

[13118] ● "Summon cases instituted otherwise than upon complaint".—Summons cases are generally of two categories. Those instituted upon complaints and those instituted otherwise than upon complaints. The latter category would include cases based on Police reports. Section 258 of the Code is intended to cover those cases belonging to one category alone, i.e., "summons cases instituted otherwise than upon complaints". The segment separated at the last part of the section by the words "and in any other case" is only a sub-category or division consisting of "summons cases instituted otherwise than upon complaints". That sub-category is not intended to cover all summons cases other than those instituted on Police report. In fact, Section 258 vivisects only "summons cases instituted otherwise than on complaints" into two divisions. One division consists of cases in which no evidence of material witness was recorded. The section permits the Court to acquit the accused prematurely only in those summons cases instituted otherwise than on complaints wherein the evidence of material witnesses was recorded. But the power of Court to discharge an accused at midway stage is restricted to those cases instituted otherwise than on complaints wherein no material witness was examined at all. The upshot of the above is that Section 258 of the Code has no application to cases instituted upon complaints. John Thomas v. K. Jagadeesan, AIR 2001 SC 2651 : (2001) 6 SCC 30 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 974 (977) : 2001 CrLJ 3322 : 2001 CrLR (SC) 495 : (2001) Crimes 270.

[13119] ● Discharge—Private complaint—Interference in criminal matter.—It is, no doubt, true that referring to the statements of the complainant and his wife, the learned Additional Sessions Judge has said that their evidence is positive, meaning thereby they gave evidence supporting the complainant. But, on scrutiny and after examination of evidence, both oral and documentary, he did not find any justification to proceed with the criminal case against respondents 1-3. In the impugned order he has pointed out that Ext. PW-2/5 clearly shows the mind of the complainant that the complainant bore some ill-will against the respondent. ... As far as respondent No. 4 is concerned his name was found in Ext. PW-2/4, the memo report given by the complainant and the same was supported by the testimony of the witnesses. In these circumstances, this case does not call for interference at our hands under Article 136 of the Constitution of India. Surjit Kaur v. D.S. Kapoor, (2001) 9 SCC 468 : (2002) SCC (Cri) 560 (561, 562) : 2001 CrLJ 4699 : (2001) 4 SCR 73 : (2001) 2 JCC 214.

[13120] ● Magistrate bond to follow directions given by High Court in earlier revision.—The main thrust of the argument of the learned counsel for the petitioner was that the learned Magistrate committed a manifest error in appreciating the evidence produced by the prosecution as required for final disposal of the case either to convict or acquit the accused instead of considering only as to whether there was prima facie material to constitute a charge for offence under Section 313 of the IPC. The learned counsel for the respondent while bringing to our notice, the previous order passed by the learned Magistrate and the High Court urged that in the facts and circumstances of the case, the learned Magistrate was right in passing the order and as such the impugned order of the High Court confirming the same is justified. Looking to the narration of the facts above it is clear that the order discharging the accused for the offence under Section 313 of the IPC, and the order discharging the remaining accused were not challenged by the petitioner. The order made by the High Court on one earlier occasion in a criminal revision was also not challenged. The learned Magistrate complied with the directions given by the High Court in the said revision petition. No fault can be found with the order of the learned Magistrate when he proceeded to record the evidence of six more witnesses and thereafter passed the order holding that no case was made out to commit the accused for trial under Section 313 of the IPC, by the Sessions Court. The learned Magistrate was bound to follow the directions given by the High Court in the aforementioned revision petition. When the petitioner did not challenge the order of the High Court, she cannot now say that the learned Magistrate should not have taken into account the evidence of 8 witnesses examined in passing the order dated 16-3-2000. Harjinder Kaur v. State of Jharkhand, AIR 2001 SC 3716 : (2001) 8 SCC 394 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 88 (90) : 2002 CrLJ 78 : (2001) 3 CCR 229 : (2002) ICRJ 418.

[13121] ● Order of discharge of accused either collecting evidence when to be passed.—An order of discharge of the accused after collecting the evidence envisaged in Section 244 of the CrPC, can be passed only when "the Magistrate considers, for reasons to be recorded, that no case against the accused has been made out which, if unrebutted, would warrant his conviction." This is the legislative edict of Section 245 of the CrPC. The only other exception to the said precept is that it is open to the Magistrate to discharge the accused at any previous stage of the case "if for reasons to be recorded by such Magistrate, he considers the charge to be groundless." The Magistrate has no reason to discharge the accused at that stage as he felt that there is evidence to frame the charge he could not but dismiss the plea for a discharge. State of Bihar v. Baidnath Prasad, AIR 2002 SC 64 (66) : (2002) 1 SCC 465 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 148 : 2002 CrLJ 208 : (2002) 1 Crimes 111.

[13122] ● Revisional powers of High Court scope.—The revision power under the Code of Criminal Procedure cannot be exercised in a routine and casual manner. While exercising such powers, the High Court has no authority to appreciate the evidence in the manner as the trial and the Appellate Courts are required to do. Revisional powers could be exercised only when it is shown that there is a legal bar against the continuance of the criminal proceedings or the framing of charge or the facts as stated in the FIR even if they are taken at the face value and accepted in their entirety do not constitute the offence for which the accused has been charged. In the instant case, the leaned Judge ignored the basic principle which conferred the jurisdiction upon the High Court for exercise of revisional powers. It was premature for the High Court to say that the material placed before the trial Court was insufficient for framing the charge or that the statement of the prosecutrix herself was not sufficient to proceed further against the accused respondent. Munna Devi v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 2002 SC 107 (107, 108) : (2001) 9 SCC 631 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 775 : 2002 CrLJ 225 : (2002) 1 Crimes 145.

[13123] ● Framing of charge, when.—In the old Code, there was no provision similar to Section 227. Section 227 was incorporated in the Code with a view to save the accused from prolonged harassment which is a necessary concomitant of a protracted criminal trial. It is calculated to eliminate harassment to accused persons when the evidential materials gathered after investigation fall short of minimum legal requirements. If the evidence even if fully accepted cannot show that the accused committed the offence, the accused deserves to be discharged. In the old Code, the procedure as contained in Sections 207 and 207-A was fairly lengthy. Section 207, inter alia, provided that the Magistrate, where the case is exclusively triable by a Court of Session in any proceedings instituted on a police report, shall follow the procedure specified in Section 207-A. Under Section 207-A in any proceeding instituted on a police report the Magistrate was required to hold inquiry in terms provided under sub-section (1), to take evidence as provided in sub-section (4), the accused could cross-examine and the prosecution could re-examine the witnesses as provided in sub-section (5), discharge the accused if in the opinion of the Magistrate the evidence and documents disclosed no grounds for committing him for trial, as provided in sub-section (6) and to commit the accused for trial after framing of charge as provided in sub-section (7), summon the witnesses of the accused to appear before the Court to which he has been committed as provided in sub-section (11) and send the record of the inquiry and any weapon or other thing which is to be produced in evidence, to the Court of Session as provided in sub-section (14). The aforesaid Sections 207 and 207-A have been omitted from the Code and a new Section 209 enacted on the recommendation of the Law Commission contained n its 41 Report. It was realised that the commitment inquiry under the old Code was resulting in inordinate delay and served no useful purpose. That inquiry has, therefore, been dispensed with in the Code with the object of expeditious disposal of cases. Instead of the committal Magistrate framing the charge, it is now to be framed by the Court of Session under Section 228 in case the accused is not discharged under Section 227. This change brought out in the Code is also required to be kept in view while determining the question. Under the Code, the evidence can be taken only after framing of charge. State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi, 2005 SCC (Cri) 415 (421).

[13124] ● Word "Record of the case"— Meaning of.—What is the meaning of the expression "the record of the case" as used in Section 227 of the Code. Though the word "case" is not defined in the Code but Section 209 throws light on the interpretation to be placed on the said word. Section 209 which deals with the commitment of case to the Court of Session when offence is triable exclusively by it, inter alia, provides that when it appears to the Magistrate that the offence is triable exclusively by the Court of Session, he shall commit "the case" to the Court of Session and send to that Court "the record of the case" and the document and articles, if any, which are to be produced in evidence and notify the Public Prosecutor of the commitment of the case to the Court of Session. It is evident that the record of the case and documents submitted therewith as postulated in Section 227 relate to the case and the documents referred in Section 209. That is the plain meaning of Section 227 read with Section 209 of the Code. No provision in the Code grants to the accused any right to file any material or document at the stage of framing of charge. That right is granted only at the stage of the trial.

The expression "hearing the submissions of the accused" cannot mean opportunity to file material to be granted to the accused and thereby changing the settled law. At the stage of framing of charge hearing the submissions of the accused has to be confined to the material produced by the police. State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi, 2005 SCC (Cri) 415 (420-421, 423).

[13125] ● Framing of charge, defence of accused cannot be put forth.—At the time of framing charge or taking cognizance, the accused has no right to produce any material. Satish Mehra v. Delhi Administration, (1996) 9 SCC 766 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 1104 holding that the trial Court has power to consider even materials which the accused may produce at the stage of 227, of the Code has not been correctly decided.

It is settled that at the stage of framing of charge the defence of the accused cannot be put forth. The acceptance of the contention of the learned counsel for the accused would mean permitting the accused to adduce his defence at the stage of framing of charge and for examination thereof at that stage which is against the criminal jurisprudence. State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi, 2005 SCC (Cri) 415 (425).

[13126] ● Summons case—No discharge.—Once a plea is recorded in a summons case it is not open to the accused person to seek a discharge cannot also be accepted. The case involving a summons case is covered by Chapter XX of the Code which does not contemplate a stage of discharge like Section 239 which provides for a discharge in a warrant case. Therefore, the High Court was correct in coming to the conclusion that once the plea of the accused is recorded under Section 252 of the Code the procedure contemplated under Chapter XX has to be followed which is to take the trial to its logical conclusion. Subramaniam Sethuraman v. State of Maharashtra, 2005 SCC (Cri) 242 (247).

[13127] ● Discharge of accused—Reasons must be recorded.—While discharging the accused, the Court must record reasons. But in the case of framing of charge need not record the reasons, the Court is required to form an opinion that there exists a ground for presuming that the accused has committed the offence. Lalu Prasad v. State of Bihar, (2007) 1 SCC (Cri) 241 : 2006 (4) Crimes 419 (SC).

[13128] ● High Court failing to deal with matter elaborately—Case remanded to High Court.—The stage of analysing the factual materials was yet to be undertaken. But as rightly contended by the appellant if a bare reading of the FIR, it shows that no offence had been made out for proceeding situation would be different. It would have been proper for the High Court as noted above to deal with the matter elaborately. That apparently has not been done. Therefore, without expressing any opinion on the merits of the case, we set aside the order of the High Court and remit the matter to it for fresh consideration. Pradeep Kumar Verma v. State of Bihar, AIR 2007 SC 3059 SC : 2007 (7) SCC 413 : 2007 (3) SCC (Cri) 407 : 2007 (9) SCR 58 : 2007 (10) Scale 97 : 2007 (5) Supreme 918 : 2007 CrLJ 4333 : 2007 (3) Crimes 346 (SC).

[13129] ● No sufficient ground for proceeding against appellant.—It is trite that the words "not sufficient ground for proceeding against the accused" appearing in the Section postulate exercise of judicial mind on the part of the Judge to the facts of the case in order to determine whether a case for trial has been made out by the prosecution. However, in assessing this fact, the Judge has the power to sift and weigh the material for the limited purpose of finding out whether or not a prima facie case against the accused has been made out. The test to determine a prima facie case depends upon the facts of each case and in this regard it is neither feasible nor desirable to lay down a rule of universal application. By and large, however, if two views are equally possible and the Judge is satisfied that the evidence produced before him given rise to suspicion only as distinguished from grave suspicion, he will be fully within his right to discharge the accused. At this stage, he is not to see as to whether the trial will end in conviction or not. The broad test to be applied is whether the materials on record, if unrebutted, makes a conviction reasonably possible. Yogesh @ Sachin Jagdish Joshi v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2008 SC 2991 : (2008) 10 SCC 394 : 2008 CrLJ 3872 (3875).

[13130] ● No sufficient ground to proceed against appellant.—In the light of the subsequent events, namely, the orders of the High Court dated 7th July, 2006 in Criminal Writ Petitions Nos. 1283 & 1284 of 2006, discharging appellant's mother, sister and two close associates, accused Nos. 2, 4, 11 and 12 respectively; order dated 30th April, 2007 passed by this Court dismissing the Special Leave Petition preferred by the State against order dated 7th July, 2006 and order dated 14th May, 2007 passed by the Sessions Judge. Satara discharging the father (A-11) of the appellant, stated to be the mastermind behind the entire conspiracy, for offences under Sections 120B and 302, IPC, on same set of circumstances and accusations, no sufficient ground survives to proceed against the appellant for the aforementioned offences. For the aforesaid reasons, the appellants are discharged from the charges levelled against them. Yogesh @ Sachin Jagdish Joshi v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2008 SC 2991 : (2008) 10 SCC 394 : 2008 CrLJ 3872 (3877).

[13131] ● Interference by High Court—Limited grounds.—An order of discharge can be interfered with by the High Court on limited grounds. At that stage, it need not be shown that the appellants – accused may not ultimately be conviction. It is enough if strong suspicion exists. Seema Silk v. Sarees v. Directorate of Enforcement, AIR 2008 SC 2564 : (2008) 5 SCC 580 : (2008) 5 SCC 580 (587).

[13132] ● Considerations by Court while entertaining application for discharge.—While considering an application for discharge filed in terms of Section 239 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, it is for the Court to go into the details of the allegations made against each of the accused persons so to form an opinion as to whether any case at all has been made out or not as a strong suspicion in regard thereto shall subserve the requirements of law. Rhmi Dhar v. State of West Bengal, AIR 2009 SC 2195 (2198) : (2009) 6 SCC 364 : 2009 (5) SCR 553 : JT 2009 (5) SC 321.

[13133] ● Trial Court refusing discharge of accused—High Court in revision allowing prayer for discharge without reasons.—"The order of the High Court is practically unreasoned. It is not certainly the way a revision petition was to be disposed of. There is absolutely no discussion as to why the conclusions of the trial Court in rejecting the prayer made in terms of Section 227 of the Code were unsustainable. No basis has also been indicated as to why High Court of the view that no offence was disclosed in the FIR. Reasons introduce clarity in an order. On plainest consideration of justice, the High Court ought to have set forth its reasons, howsoever brief, in its order indicative of an application of its mind, all the more when its order is amenable to further avenue of challenge. The absence of reasons has rendered the High Court's judgment not sustainable.

Such ritualistic observations and summary disposal which has the effect of, at times, cannot be said to be a proper and judicial manner of disposing of judiciously the claim before the Courts. The giving of reasons for a decision is an essential attribute of judicial and judicious disposal of a matter before Courts, and which is the only indication to know about the manner and quality of exercise undertaken, as also the fact that the Court concerned had really applied its mind. Tutul Kumari Sen v. State of Jharkhand, AIR 2009 SC 2547 (2549) : 2009 (7) SCR 321 : JT 2009 (14) 146.

[13134] ● Non-recording of reasons—Effect.—Reasons substitute subjectivity by objectivity. The emphasis on recording reasons is that if the decision reveals the "inscrutable face of the sphinx", it can, by its silence, render it virtually impossible for the Courts to perform their appellate function or exercise the power of judicial review in adjudging the validity of the decision. Right to reason is an indispensable part of a sound judicial system, reasons at least sufficient to indicate an application of mind to the matter before Court. Another rationale is that the affected party can know why the decision has gone against him. One of the salutary requirements of natural justice is spelling out reasons for the order made, in other words, a speaking out. The "inscrutable face of a sphinx" is ordinarily incongruous with a judicial or quasi-judicial performance. Tutul Kumari Sen v. State of Jharkhand, AIR 2009 SC 2547 (2549) : JT 2009 (14) SC 146 : 2009 (7) SCR 321.

[13135] ● Recording of reasons—Necessity.—The Court must record reasons while passing an order of discharge under Section 245, CrPC. Renuka v. State of Karnataka, 2009 CrLJ 2245 : 2009 Crimes 421 (SC) : 2009 (2) SCR 623.

[13136] ● Sections 244 (1) and 245 (2)—Difference.—Under Section 245(1), the Magistrate has the advantage of the evidence led by the prosecution before him under Section 244 and he has to consider whether if the evidence remains unrebutted, the conviction of the accused would be warranted. If there is no discernible incriminating material in the evidence, then the Magistrate proceeds to discharge the accused under Section 245(1), CrPC.

The situation under Section 245(2) CrPC is, however, different. There, under sub-section (2), the Magistrate has the power of discharging the accused at any previous stage of the case, i.e., even before such evidence is led. However, for discharging an accused under Section 245(2) CrPC, the Magistrate has to come to a finding that the charge is groundless. There is no question of any consideration of evidence at that stage, because there is none. The Magistrate can take this decision before the accused appears or is brought before the Court or the evidence is led under Section 244, CrPC. The words appearing in Section 245(2) CrPC "at any previous stage of the case", clearly bring out this position. Ajoy Kumar Ghose v. State of Jharkhand, AIR 2009 SC 2282 : : (2009) 14 SCC 115 : 2009 CrLJ 2824 : 2009 (4) SCR 515 : JT 2009 (4) 245 : 2009 (4) Scale 267.

[13137] ● At any "previous stage of the case" in Section 246, CrPC.—The words "or at any previous stage of the case" appearing in Section 246 CrPC would include Section 245 also, where the accused has not been discharged under Section 245 CrPC, while the similar term in Section 246(2) can include the stage even before any evidence is recorded. It cannot, therefore, be held that the words "at any previous stage of the case" as appearing in Section 245 CrPC would have to be given the same meaning when those words appear in Section 246 CrPC. Ajoy Kumar Ghose v. State of Jharkhand, AIR 2009 SC 2282 : : (2009) 14 SCC 115 : 2009 CrLJ 2824 : 2009 (4) SCR 515 : 2009 (4) Scale 267.

[13138] ● "Previous stage"—Meaning.—The previous stage would obviously be before the evidence of the prosecution under Section 244(1), CrPC is completed or any stage prior to that. Such stages would be under Section 200, CrPC to Section 204, CrPC. Ajay Kumar Ghose v. State of Jharkhand, AIR 2009 SC 2282 : : (2009) 14 SCC 115 : 2009 CrLJ 2824 (2829) : JT 2009 (4) SC 245.

[13139] ● Sections 245 (2) and 246—Scope.—While Section 245(2), CrPC speaks about the discharge of the accused on the ground that the charge is groundless, Section 246(1) operates in entirely different sphere. An order under Section 245(2), CrPC, results in discharge of the accused, whereas, an order under Section 246, CrPC creates a situation for the accused to face a full-fledged trial. Therefore, the two Sections would have to be interpreted in slightly different manner, keeping in mind the different spheres, in which they operate. Ajay Kumar Ghose v. State of Jharkhand, AIR 2009 SC 2282 : : (2009) 14 SCC 115 : 2009 CrLJ 2824 : 2009 (4) SCR 515 : JT 2009 (4) 245.

[13140] ● Discharge of accused—"Sufficient ground for proceeding against the accused".—The words "not sufficient ground for proceeding against the accused" clearly show that the Judge is not a mere Post Office to frame the charge at the behest of the prosecution, but has to exercise his judicial mind to the facts of the case in order to determine whether a case for trial has been made out by the prosecution. In assessing this fact, it is not necessary for the Court to enter into the pros and cons of the matter or into a weighing and balancing of evidence and probabilities which is really the function of the Court, after the trial starts. At the stage of Section 227, the Judge has merely to sift the evidence in order to find out whether or not there is sufficient ground for proceeding against the accused. In other words, the sufficiency of ground would take within its fold the nature of the evidence recorded by the police or the documents produced before the Court which ex facie disclose that there are suspicious circumstances against the accused so as to frame a charge against him. P. Vijayan v. State of Kerala, 2010 CrLJ 1427 (1429) (SC).

[13141] ● Discharge of accused, if two views are possible.—If two views are possible and one of them, gives rise to suspicion, as distinguished from grave suspicion, the trial Judge will be empowered to discharge the accused and at this stage he is not to see whether the trial will end in conviction or acquittal. P. Vijayan v. State of Kerala, AIR 2010 SC 663 : (2010) 2 SCC 398 : 2010 CrLJ 1427 (1429) (SC) : (2010) 2 Crimes 1.

[13142] ● Discharge of accused.—If upon considering the police report and the document sent with it under Section 173, and making such examination, if any, of the accused and after giving the prosecution and the accused an opportunity of being heard, the Magistrate considers the charge against the accused to be groundless, he shall discharge the accused and record his reasons for so doing. K. Neelaveni v. State, AIR 2010 SC 3191 : 2010 CrLJ 2819 : 2010 (2) Crimes 90 (SC).

DISCHARGE OF DUTY

[13143] ● Reasonable connection between act and discharge of official duty.—In the matter of grant of sanction under Section 197 of the Code of Criminal Procedure the offence alleged to have been committed by the accused must have something to do, or must be related in some manner with the discharge of official duty. In other words, there must be a reasonable connection between the act and the discharge of official duty. The act must bear such relation to the duty that the accused could lay a reasonable claim, but not a pretended or fanciful claim, that he did it in the cause of performance of his duty. Matajog Dubey v. H.C. Bhari, AIR 1956 SC 44 : 1956 CrLJ 140 : (1955) 2 SCR 925.

[13144] ● Obstruction to officer executing search warrant.—Where a power is conferred or a duty imposed by statute or otherwise and there is nothing said expressly inhibiting the exercise of the power or the performance of the duty by any limitations or restrictions, it is reasonable to hold that it carries with it the power of doing all such acts or employing such means as are reasonably necessary for such execution, because it is a rule that when the law commands a thing to be done, it authorises the performance of whatever may be necessary for executing its command. Matajog Dubey v. H.C. Bhari, AIR 1956 SC 44 : 1956 CrLJ 140 : (1955) 2 SCR 925.

[13145] ● Misconduct by public servant need not be in connection with his own official duty.—"It is not necessary that the public servant in question, while misconducting himself, should have done so in the discharge of his duty. It would be anomalous to say that a public servant has misconducted himself in the discharge of his duty. 'Duty' and 'Misconduct' go ill together. If a person has misconducted himself as a public servant, it would not ordinarily be in the discharge of his duty, but the reverse, of it. The 'misconduct', which has been made criminal by Section 5 of the Act, does not contain the element-of-discharge of his duty, by public servant, is also made clear by reference to the provisions of clause (c) of Section 5(1). It is well settled that if a public servant dishonestly or fraudulently misappropriates property entrusted to him, he cannot be said to have been doing so in the discharge of his official duty (Vide, the case of Hari Ram Singh v. Crown, 1959 MLJ Cri 589. An application for special leave to appeal from that decision was refused by the Privy Council in Hari Ram Singh v. King Emperor, 1940 (1) MLJ 706. This Court, therefore, misread the section when it observed that the offence consists in criminal misconduct in the discharge of official duty. The error lies in importing the description of the offence into the definition portion of it. It is not necessary to constitute the offence under clause (d) of the section that the public servant must do something in connection with his own duty and thereby obtain any valuable thing or pecuniary advantage. It is equally wrong to say that if a public servant were to take money from a third person, by corrupt or illegal means or otherwise abusing his official position, in order to corrupt some other public servant without there being any question of his misconducting himself in the discharge of his own duty, he has not committed an offence under Section 3(1)(d). It is also erroneous to hold that the essence of an offence under Section 5(2), read with Section 5(1)(d), is that the public servant should do something in the discharge of his own duty and thereby obtain a valuable thing or pecuniary advantage." Dhaneshwar Narain Saxena v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1962 SC 195 : (1962) 1 CrLJ 203 : (1962) 3 SCR 259.

[13146] ● Act done or intended to be done under provisions of Police Act or any other law.—Tamil Nadu District Police Act, 1869, Section 53.—In this case during the course of investigation information was received that one Ramanna had received stolen articles. Ramanna was, therefore, taken into custody and within less than three days thereafter his dead body was found with a number of injuries. The police officers were prosecuted for having caused the injuries to Ramanna for the purpose of extorting from him information which might lead to the detection of an offence and restoration of stolen property. The police officers pleaded that the prosecution was barred by limitation by reason of the provisions of Section 53 of the Act. The protection of Section 53 is not confined only to acts done or intended to be done under the provisions of the Act but extends to acts done or intended to be done under the provisions of any other law conferring powers on the police such as the Code of Criminal Procedure. It becomes the task of the Court, whenever any question whether Section 53 applies or not arises to bestow particular case on its decision. In doing this it has to ascertain first what act is complained of and then to examine if there is any provision of the Police Act or other law conferring powers on the police officer under which it may be said to have been done or intended to be done. The Court has to remember in this connection that an act is not under a provision of law merely because the point of time at which it is done coincides with the point of time when some act in the exercise of the powers granted by the provision or on performance of duty imposed by it. To be able to say that an act is done under a provision of law, one must discover the existence of a reasonable relationship between the provisions of the Act. In the absence of such a relation the act cannot be said to be done under the particular provision of law. The act of beating or act of confining was alleged to be done at a time when the police officer was engaged in investigation. But it is not possible to see what reasonable relationship these acts had with the process of investigation. Nor can one see how the act of sending away the injured person had any relation to the process of investigation. State of Andhra Pradesh v. N. Venugopal, AIR 1964 SC 33 : (1964) 1 CrLJ 16 : (1964) 3 SCR 742.

[13147] ● Acts complained of need not be in discharge of official duties.—If it is proved that the appellant had by illegal means or by otherwise abusing their position as public servants obtained for themselves money or other valuable things, then, they can be said to have committed the offence of criminal misconduct in the discharge of their official duties. The contrary view taken by this Court in AIR 1959 SC 847 : 1959 Supp (2) SCR 739 was overruled by this Court in Dhaneshwar Narain Saxena v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1962 SC 195. In that case it was observed that the words "occurring in Section 5 of the Prevention of Corruption Act in the discharge of his duty" do not constitute an essential ingredient of the offence under Section 5(1)(d), the ingredients of that offence being (1) that the accused should be a public servant (2) that he should use some corrupt or illegal means or otherwise abuse his position as a public servant; (3) that he should have obtained a valuable thing or pecuniary advantage and (4) for himself or any other person. Dalpat Singh v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1969 SC 17 : 1969 CrLJ 262 (267) : (1968) 3 SCR 189.

[13148] ● Disregard of direction to accept food.—Every aspect of life of a soldier is regulated by discipline. Rejection of food might, under circumstances, amount to an indirect expression of remonstrance and resentment against the higher authority. To say that, a mere refusal to eat food is an innocent, neutral act might be an over-simplification of the matter. Mere inaction need not always necessarily be neutral. Serious acts of calumny could be done in silence. A disregard of a direction to accept food might assume the complexion of disrespect to, and even defiance of authority. But an unduly harsh and cruel reaction to the expression of the injured feelings may be counter-productive and even by itself be subversive of discipline. Appellant was perhaps expressing his anguish at, what he considered, an unjust and disproportionate punishment for airing his grievances before his Superior Officers. Ranjit Thakur v. Union of India, AIR 1987 SC 2386 : (1987) 4 SCC 611 : 1988 CrLJ 158 : JT 2007 (5) SC 93.

[13149] ● Sanction for prosecution Police Officer causing death of victim.—In the instant case, it is alleged that grievous injuries were inflicted upon the complainant and as a result of injuries one of the alleged accused had died. The question is while investigating and performing his duties as a Police Officer was it necessary for the petitioner to conduct himself in such a manner which would result in such consequences. It is necessary to protect the public servants in the discharge of their duties. They must be made immune from being harassed in criminal proceedings and prosecution, that is the rationale behind Sections 196 and 197, CrPC. But it is equally important to emphasise that rights of the citizens should be protected and no excesses should be permitted. "Encounter death" has become too common. In the facts and circumstances of each case protection of public officers and public servants functioning in discharge of official duties and protection of private citizens have to be balanced by finding out as to what extent and how far is a public servant working in discharge of his duties or purported discharge of his duties, and whether the public servant has exceeded his limit. It is true that Section 196 states that no cognizance can be taken and even after cognizance having been taken if facts come to light that the acts complained of were done in the discharge of the official duties then the trial may have to be stayed unless sanction is obtained. But at the same time it has to be emphasised that criminal trials should not be stayed in all cases at the preliminary stage because that will cause great damage to the evidence." Bakhshish Singh Brar v. Gurmej Kaur, AIR 1988 SC 257 : (1987) 4 SCC 663 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 29 (33) : 1988 CrLJ 419 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 649 : JT 1987 (5) SC 190 : (1988) 1 SCR 450 : (1988) 1 UJ (SC) 155.

[13150] ● Action of Police Officer—Complaint against.—Tamil Nadu District Police Act, 1869.—The prosecution launched against the respondent is in regard to the ill-treatment meted out to the appellant when the latter visited the former in response to the summons. It was no part of the duty under the Act, or Criminal Procedure Code or any other law for the time being in force conferring power on the Police to beat and torture the appellant when he presented himself before the respondent, in response to the summons. By no stretch of reasoning can it be said that the respondent's action of torturing the appellant was in discharge of any duty or function under the Act or under any other law. It is also difficult to say, if the allegations made are taken at their face value, that the respondent's action was incidental to or in furtherance of his duties and functions under any law. It must be realised that in order to avail of the benefit of Section 53 of the Act the respondent must show that he acted under the Act or under any other law. Merely because the appellant was called through a summons issued under law, the conduct of beating and torturing the appellant on the latter appearing in obedience to the summons cannot establish any nexus between the official act of issuance of summons and the action of the respondent on the appearance of the appellant.

In the present case the allegation in the complaint is that while the appellant was called by service of a summons presumably to enquire into allegations of illicit distillation, the respondent had used it as an excuse to secure his presence but in fact his real intention was to beat him up to prevent him from complaining against those who were paying him "mamool" (illegal gratification) money. Thus according to the appellant, the respondent bore a grudge against him and, therefore, he misused his power, issued a summons, secured his presence and then tortured him. He has charged him for commission of offences under Sections 341, 342, 364, 506 (Part II) and 307, IPC. These do not attract the provisions of Section 53 of the Act. S.P. Vathianathan v. K. Shanmuganathan, AIR 1994 SC 1771 : (1994) 4 SCC 569 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 1311 (1314, 1315) : 1994 CrLJ 2265 : (1994) 1 Crimes 725.

[13151] ● Sanction for prosecution.—In the instant case when a Magistrate on the basis of a complaint issued process for appearance of the accused on being satisfied that there is sufficient ground for proceeding and the accused appears before the Magistrate and takes the plea that the offence alleged to have been committed by him was in the discharge of his official duty and further that he was not removable from his office save by or with the sanction of the Government and consequently the Court has no power to take cognizance except with the previous sanction of the Government as required under sub-section (1) of Section 197, CrPC. It would be unreasonable to hold that accused even though might have really acted in the discharge of his official duty for which the complaints have been lodged yet he will have to wait till the stage under sub-section (4) of Section 246 of the Code reaches or at least till he will be able to bring in relevant materials while cross-examining the prosecution witnesses. On the other hand it would be logical to hold the matter being one dealing with the jurisdiction of the Court to take cognizance, the accused would be entitled to produce the relevant and material documents which can be admitted into evidence without formal proof, for the limited consideration of the Court whether the necessary ingredients to attract Section 197 of the Code have been established or not. The question of applicability of Section 197 and the consequential ouster of jurisdiction of the Court to take cognizance without a valid sanction is genetically different from the plea of the accused that the averments in the complaint do not make out an offence and as such the order of cognizance and/or the criminal proceedings be quashed. Suresh Kumar Bhikamchand Jain v. Pandey Ajay Bhushan, AIR 1998 SC 1524 (1533) : AIR 1998 SCW 544 : (1998) 1 SCC 205 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 1 : 1998 CrLJ 1242.

[13152] ● Appellant asked to remove encroachment order of opening fine in exercise of official duty.—The appellant had been directed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to be present with Police force and remove the encroachment in question and in course of discharge of his duty to control the mob, when he had directed for opening of fire, it must be held that the order of opening of fire was in exercise of the power conferred upon him and the duty imposed upon him under the orders of the Magistrate and in that view of the matter the provisions of Section 197(1), CrPC, applies to the facts of the present case, Admittedly, there being no sanction, the cognizance taken by the Magistrate is bad in law and unless the same is quashed qua the appellant, it will be an abuse of the process of Court. Abdul Wahab Ansari v. State of Bihar, AIR 2000 SC 3187 (3191) : (2000) 8 SCC 500 : 2000 CrLJ 4631 : (2000) 4 Crimes 152.

[13153] ● Sanction for prosecution of public servant—Conditions precedent.—In this case, the appellant was present at the place of occurrence in his official capacity as Sub-Divisional Magistrate for the purpose of removal of encroachment from Government land and in exercise of such duty, he is alleged to have committed the acts from which the gravamen of the allegations contained in the complaint lodged by the respondent. In such circumstances, it cannot but be held that the acts complained of by the respondent against the appellant have a reasonable nexus with the official duty of the appellant. It follows, therefore, that the appellant is entitled to the immunity from 'Criminal' proceedings without sanction provided under Section 197, CrPC. Gauri Shankar Prasad v. State of Bihar, AIR 2000 SCW 3135 : (2000) 5 SCC 15 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 872 : 2000 CrLJ 4031 : (2000) 2 Crimes 176.

DISCOVERY, DISCLOSURE STATEMENT

[13154] ● Discovery.—The three accused were interrogated by the police. They made certain statements which were duly recorded by the police. In these statements it was disclosed that the dead bodies were thrown in a nala. Thereafter, the police party with the three accused, went to the nala where each of them pointed out the place where the different parts of the dead bodies were discovered. It seems to us that if the evidence adduced by the prosecution is found to be open to suspicions and it appears that the police have deliberately attributed similar confessional statement relating to facts discovered to different accused persons, in order to create evidence against all of them, the case undoubtedly demands a most cautious approach. The discoveries made at the instance of S, one of the accused, cannot be ruled out of consideration. It may be that several of the accused gave information to the police that the dead bodies could be recovered in the Sakinala, which is a stream running over several miles. But such an indefinite information could not lead to any discovery unless the accused followed it up by conducting the police to the actual spot where parts of the two bodies were recovered. From the evidence of the head constable as well as that of B, one of the witnesses, it was quite clear that S led the police via Salimpura to a particular spot on Sakinala, and it was at his instance that blood-stained earth was recovered from a place outside the village, and he also pointed out the trunk of the body of D, one of the persons murdered. Therefore the statement of S is admissible under Section 27. Lachhiman Singh v. State, AIR 1952 SC 167 : 1952 CrLJ 363 : 1952 SCJ 230 : 1952 ALJ 437 : (1952) 2 MLJ 100 : 65 MLW 429.

[13155] ● Doctrine of confirmation by subsequent facts.—Section 27, Evidence Act is based on the doctrine of confirmation by subsequent facts. That doctrine is that where, in consequence of a confession otherwise inadmissible, search is, made and facts are discovered which confirm it in material points then such discovery is a guarantee that the confession made was true. But only that portion of the information can be proved which relates distinctly or strictly to the facts discovered. Ram Kishan Mithanlal Sharma v. State of Bombay, AIR 1955 SC 104 : 1955 CrLJ 196 : 1955 SCJ 129 : (1955) 1 SCR 903. TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) Sanjay v. State (N.C.T. of Delhi), AIR 2001 SC 979 : (2001) 3 SCC 190 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 449 : 2001 CrLJ 1231 : (2001) 1 Crimes 268.

[13156] ● Information admissibility of.—The information admissible must depend on the exact nature of the fact discovered to which such information is required to relate. Ramkishan Mithanlal Sharma v. State of Bombay, AIR 1955 SC 104 : 1955 CrLJ 196 : 1955 SCR 418 : 1955 SCJ 129.

[13157] ● Police if already knowing facts.—If the police already knows some facts, their discovery by the accused is inadmissible. Aher Raja Khima v. State of Saurashtra, AIR 1956 SC 217 : 1956 CrLJ 42 : 1956 SCA 440 : 1956 SCJ 243.

[13159] ● Expression "accused of any offence".—The expression "accused of any offence" is descriptive of the person against whom evidence relating to information alleged to be given by him is made provable by Section 27. It does not predicate a formal accusation against him at the time of making the statement sought to be proved, as a condition of its applicability. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Deoman Upadhya, AIR 1960 SC 1125 : 1960 CrLJ 1504 : (1960) 5 SCA 371 : 1960 AWR (HC) 568 : 1960 CrLJ 354.

[13160] ● "When person not in custody approaches Police Officer Investing offence".—The Supreme Court has also taken the same view and held that "when a person not in the custody approaches a Police Officer investigating an offence and offers to give any information leading to the discovery of a fact having a bearing on the charge which may be made against him, he may appropriately be deemed to have surrendered himself to the police. Section 46 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not contemplate any formality before a person can be said to be taken in custody; submission to the custody by word or action by a person is sufficient. A person directly giving to a Police Officer by word of mouth information which may be used as evidence against him may be deemed to have submitted himself to the custody of the Police Officer within the meaning of Section 27 of the Indian Evidence Act." State of Uttar Pradesh v. Deoman Upadhyaya, AIR 1960 SC 1125 : 1961 CrLJ 415 : (1960) 2 SCA 371 : 1960 ALJ 733.

[13161] ● Distinction between persons in custody and person not in custody.—There is nothing in the Evidence Act which precludes proof of information given by a person not in custody which relates to the facts thereby discovered; it is by virtue of the ban imposed by Section 162 of the CrPC, that a statement made to a police officer in the course of the investigation of an offence under Chapter 14 by a person not in police custody at the time it was made even if it leads to the discovery of a fact is not provable against him at the trial for that offence. But the distinction which it may be remembered does not proceed on the same lines as under the Evidence Act, arising in the matter of admissibility of such statements made to the police officer in the course of an investigation between persons in custody and persons not in custody, has little practical significance. If Section 27 renders information admissible on the ground that the discovery of a fact pursuant to a statement made by a person in custody is a guarantee of the truth of the statement made by him, and the legislature has chosen to make on that ground an exception to the rule prohibiting proof of such statement that rule is not to be deemed unconstitutional, because of the possibility of abnormal instances to which the legislature might have, but has not extended the rule. The principle of admitting evidence of statements made by a person giving information leading to the discovery of facts which may be used in evidence against him is manifestly reasonable. The fact that the principle is restricted to persons in custody will not by itself be a ground for holding that there is an attempted hostile discrimination because the rule of admissibility of evidence is not extended to a possible, but an uncommon or abnormal class of cases. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Deoman Upadhyaya, AIR 1960 SC 1125 : 1960 CrLJ 1504 : 1960 (3) SCR 14.

[13162] ● Accused making statement in Police custody.—The mere fact that the accused while making the statement was in police custody would not attract the provisions of Article 20 (3). If there is no evidence to show that the accused was compelled, Article 20 (3) would not be attracted. State of Bombay v. Kathi Kalu Oghad, AIR 1961 SC 1808 : (1961) 2 CrLJ 856 : (1962) 3 SCR 10.

[13163] ● Self-incriminating information given by accused without threat.—Where the self-incriminatory information has been given by an accused person without any threat that will be admissible in evidence and that will not be hit by the provisions of clause (3) of Article 20 of the Constitution for the reason that there has been no compulsion. It must therefore be held that the provisions of Section 27 are not within the prohibition aforesaid unless compulsion has been used in obtaining the (self-incriminatory) information. State of Bombay v. Kathi Kalu Oghad, AIR 1961 SC 1808 : 1961 (2) CrLJ 856 : 1962 (1) SCA 429 : (1962) 9 SCR 10.

[13164] ● Statement when distinctly relating to discovery of stolen property.—If part of the statement distinctly relates to the discovery, the statement will be admissible wholly and the Court cannot exercise a part of it because it is of a confessional nature. Where in a burglary case the accused in police custody made a statement to the police that he would show the place where he had hidden them, namely, the ornaments and that statement led to the discovery of the stolen ornaments, it was held that the whole of the statement distinctly related to the discovery and was admissible under the Section. K. Chinnaswamy Reddy v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1962 SC 1788 : (1963) 1 CrLJ 8 : (1963) 3 SCR 412.

[13165] ● Possession of article by accused when proved.—The statement of the accused that "he would show the place where he had hidden the articles" or "he would show the person to whom he had pawned article" would prove the possession of the accused. K. Chinnaswami v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1962 SC 1788 : (1963) SCR 412.

[13166] ● Theft—Admissibility of statement when accused himself produces.—Section 27 does not nullify the ban imposed by Section 26 in regard to confessions made by persons in police custody but because there is the added guarantee of truthfulness from the fact discovered the statement whether confessional or not is allowed to be given in evidence but only that portion which distinctly relates to the discovery of the fact. A discovery of a fact includes the object found, the place from which it is produced and the knowledge of the accused as to its existence. Thus, Section 27 partially removes the ban placed on the reception of confessional statements under Section 26. But the removal of the ban is not of such an extent as to absolutely undo the object of Section 26. All it says is that so much of the statement made by a person accused of an offence and in custody of a police officer, whether it is confessional or not, as relates distinctly to the fact discovered is provable. Thus, in this case taking the recovery memos the statements in regard to the key was this that the appellant handed over the key and said that he had opened the lock of the shop of the complainant with that key. The handling over of the key is not a confessional statement but the confession lies in the fact that with that key the shop of the complainant was opened and, therefore, that portion will be inadmissible in evidence and only that portion will be admissible which distinctly relates to the fact discovered, i.e., the finding of the key Similarly the recovery of the box is provable because there is no statement of a confessional nature in that memorandum. Udai Bhan v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1962 SC 1116 : 1962 (2) CrLJ 251 : 1962 Supp (2) SCR 830.

[13167] ● Information leading to discovery of stolen ornaments—Whole statement admissible.—It is only that part which distinctly relates to the discovery which is admissible; but if any part of the statement distinctly relates to the discovery it will be admissible wholly and the Court cannot say that it will excise one part of the statement because it is of a confessional nature. Section 27 makes that part of the statement which is distinctly related to the discovery admissible as a whole, whether it be in the nature of confession or not. We are therefore of opinion that the entire statement of the appellant (as well as of the other accused who stated that he had given the ornament to Bada Sab and would have it recovered from him) would be admissible in evidence and the Session Judge was wrong in ruling out part of it. K. Chinnaswamy Reddy v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1962 SC 1788 : 1963 (1) CrLJ 8 : 1963 (3) SCR 413.

[13168] ● Statement of accused—Exclusion of from evidence.—The statement of the accused to the effect that the article produced by him belongs to him is not relevant. So is the case with the statement of the accused that the blood-stained shirt and dhoti belongs to him or that the axe has been used to commit murder. Prabhoo v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1963 SC 1113 : (1963) 2 CrLJ 182 : (1963) 2 SCR 881.

[13169] ● Incriminating statement made by accused to Police Officer.—They were incriminating statements made to a police officer and were hit by Sections 25 and 26 of the Indian Evidence Act. The statement that the axe was one with which the murder had been committed was not a statement which led to any discovery within the meaning of Section 27 of the Evidence Act. Nor was the alleged statement of the appellant that the blood stained shirt and dhoti belonged to him a statement which led to any discovery within the meaning of Section 27. Section 27 provides that when any fact is deposed to as discovered in consequence of information received from a person accused of any offence, in the custody of a police officer, so much of such information, whether it amounts to a confession or not, as relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered may be proved. It is fallacious to treat the 'fact discovered' within the section as equivalent to the object produced; the fact discovered embraces the place from which the object is produced and the knowledge of the accused as to this and the information given must relate distinctly to this fact. Information as to past user, or the past history, of the object produced is not related to its discovery in the setting in which it is discovered. Prabhoo v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1963 SC 1113 : 1963 (2) CrLJ 182 : 1963 (2) SCR 182 : 196 MLJ (Cri) 365.

[13170] ● Confession or admission.—A confession may consist of several parts and may reveal not only the actual commission of the crime but also the motive, the preparation, the opportunity, the provocation, the weapons used, the intention, the concealment of the weapon and the subsequent conduct of the accused. If the confession is tainted the taint, attaches to each part of it. It is not permissible in law to separate one part and to admit it in evidence as a non-confessional statement. Each part discloses some incrimination fact, that is some fact which by itself or along with other admitted or proved facts suggests the inference that the accused committed the crime and though each part taken singly may not amount to a confession each of them being part of a confessional statement partakes of the character of a confession. If a statement contains as offence, not only that admission but also every other admission of an incriminating fact, contained in statement is part of the confession. The separability test is misleading and the entire confessional statement is hit by Section 25 and save and except as provided by Section 27 and save and except the formal part identifying the accused as the maker of the report, no part of it could be tendered in evidence. Aghnoo Nagesea v. State of Bihar, AIR 1966 SC 119 : 1966 CrLJ 100 : (1966) 1 SCR 134.

[13172] ● Police already knowing person who had stolen articles.—In order that Section 27 may apply the prosecution must establish that information given by the appellant led to the discovery of some fact. The discovery must be of some fact which the police had not previously learnt from other sources and that the knowledge of the fact was first derived from information given by accused. If the police had no information before of the complicity of accused No. 3 with the crime and had no idea as to whether the diamonds would be found with him and the appellant had made a statement to the police that he knew where the diamonds were and would lead them to the person who had them, it can be said that the discovery of the diamonds with the third accused was a fact deposed to by the appellant and admissible in evidence under Section 27. However, if it be shown that the police already knew that accused No. 3 had got the diamonds but did not know where the said accused was to be found, it cannot be said that the information given by the appellant that accused No. 3 had the diamonds and could be pointed out in a large crowd at the waiting hall led to the discovery of fact proving his complicity with any crime within the meaning of Section 27. The fact deposed to by him would at best lead to the discovery of the whereabouts of accused No. 3. Under Section 25 of the Evidence Act no confession made by an accused to a police officer can be admitted in evidence against him. An exception to this is however provided by Section 26 which makes a confessional statement made before a Magistrate admissible in evidence against an accused notwithstanding the fact that he was in the custody of the police when he made the incriminating statement. Section 27 is a proviso to Section 26 and makes admissible so much of the statement of the accused which leads to the discovery of a fact deposed to by him and connected with the crime, irrespective of the question whether it is confessional or otherwise. The essential ingredient of the section is that the information given by the accrued must led to the discovery of the fact which is the direct outcome of such information. Secondly, only such portion of the information given as is distinctly connected with the said recovery is admissible against the accused. Thirdly, the discovery of the fact must relate to the commission of some offence. The embargo on statements of the accused before the police will not apply if all the above conditions are fulfilled. If an accused charged with a theft of articles or receiving stolen articles, within the meaning of Section 411, IPC states to the police. 'I will show you the articles at the place where I have kept them,' and the articles are actually found there, there can be no doubt that the information given by him led to the discovery of a fact. i.e., keeping of the articles by the accused at the place mentioned. The discovery of the fact deposed to in such a case is not discovery of the article but the discovery of the fact that the articles were kept by the accused at a particular place. In principle there is no difference between the above statement and that made by the appellant in this case which in effect is that "I will show you the person to whom I have given the diamonds exceeding 200 in number." The only difference between the two statements is that a 'named person" is substituted for 'the place' where the article is kept. In neither case are the articles or the diamonds the fact discovered. Jaffer Hussain Dastagir v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1970 SC 1934 : (1969) 2 SCC 872 : 1970 CrLJ 1659 : 1970 (2) SCR 332.

[13173] ● Confessional statements—Admissibility.—Where the accused produced a gandasa from a pond but it was neither blood-stained nor proved to have been connected with the crime, it was held that the confessional statements were not admissible in evidence. Jaffer Hussain Dastagir v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1970 SC 1934 : (1969) 2 SCC 872 : 1970 (2) SCR 332 : (1970) 2 SCR 332.

[13174] ● Recovery of dead body by police on information given by accused.—The only incriminating evidence against the appellant is his pointing the place where the dead body of the deceased had been thrown. This, in our opinion, is not a conclusive circumstance though undoubtedly it raises a strong suspicion against the appellant. Even if he was not a party to the murder, the appellant could have come to know the place where the dead body of the deceased had been thrown. Further, as mentioned earlier, at the bank of the river where the dead body was thrown into the river, there were broken teeth and parts of the human body lying. Hence anyone who saw those parts could have inferred that the dead body must have been thrown into the river near about that place. Bakshish Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1971 SC 2016 : (1971) 3 SCC 182 : 1971 SCC (Cri) 251 : 1971 CrLJ 1452.

[13176] ● Evidence of ex-convict and inimical to accused with regard to disclosure.—Where the prosecution witness are ex-convict and inimical to the accused, their evidence with regard to disclosure and recoveries cannot be the basis of conviction. Haza Singh v. State of Punjab, (1971) 1 SCC 259.

[13177] ● Expression "fact" as in Section 3 of Evidence Act.—The expression "fact" as defined in Section 3 includes not only the physical fact but also the psychological fact or mental condition of which any person is conscious. It is in the former sense that the word is used in Section 27. Himachal Pradesh Administration v. Om Prakash, AIR 1972 SC 975 : (1972) 1 SCC 249 : 1972 CrLJ 606 : 1972 SCD 128 : (1972) 1 SCJ 691.

[13178] ● Information not distinctly connecting with fact discovered.—What should be discovered is the material fact and the information that is admissible is that which has caused that discovery so as to connect the information and the fact with each other as 'cause and effect.' That information which does not distinctly connect with the fact discovered or that portion of the information which merely explains the material thing discovered is not admissible under Section 27 and cannot be proved. Section 27 is brought into operation where a person in police custody produces from some place of concealment some object said to be connected with the crime of which the informant is the accused. The concealment of the fact which is not known to the police is what is discovered by the information and lends assurance that the information was true. No witness with whom some material fact, such as the weapon of murder, stolen property or other incriminating article is not hidden or sold or kept and which is unknown to the police can be said to be discovered as a consequence of the information furnished by the accused. A witness cannot be said to be discovered if nothing is to be found or recovered from him as a consequence of the information furnished by the accused and information which disclosed the identity of the witness will not be admissible. Himachal Pradesh Administration v. Om Prakash, AIR 1972 SC 975 : (1972) 1 SCC 249 : 1972 CrLJ 606 : 1972 SCD 128 : (1972) 1 SCJ 691.

[13179] ● Recovery witnessing of by Panch witnesses.—Panch witnesses should witness the recovery and they should be examined in the Court and their evidence should be credible. In other words, the fact of recovery has to be proved by the testimony of independent Panch witnesses. Delhi Administration v. Balakrishan, AIR 1972 SC 3 : (1972) 4 SCC 659 : 1972 CrLJ 1 : 1972 LLJ 103.

[13180] ● Statement distinctly relating to fact discovered admissible as evidence against accused.—Section 27 of the Evidence Act is by way of a proviso to Sections 25 and 26, Evidence Act and a statement, even by way of confession, which distinctly relates to the fact discovered is admissible as evidence against the accused in the circumstances stated in Section 27. Accused Hukam Singh is alleged to have a disclosure statement while in police custody. In consequence of that information the police party and the panchas are supposed to have gone to village Dadri where Hukam Singh pointed a place in the hut of one Babulal which, when, dug up, revealed a bundle containing a piece of gold, necklace, a pair of pajeb, a silver armlet and one gold ring, all of which have been identified as stolen property. So far as the recovery of these articles is concerned, the prosecution examined besides members of the police force, two panchas. The case is that the place from where the bundle was taken out was inside the hut close to the wall. But a member of the party stated in his evidence that the handkerchief with the articles tied in it was recovered form a place two to three feet behind the hut. In this state of the evidence the alleged recovery in consequence of information given by Hukam Singh becomes extremely suspicious and it cannot, therefore, be said that the learned Judge was not justified in rejecting this evidence about the recovery. The two panchas examined for the prosecution turned hostile and the third panch was not examined. In those circumstances inspite of the police witnesses giving evidence with regard to this discovery, the learned Judge was not inclined to act upon that evidence and we cannot say that he was wrong in doing so. Delhi Administration v. Balakrishan, AIR 1972 SC 3 : (1972) 4 SCC 659 : 1972 CrLJ 1 (3, 4) : 1972 UJ (SC) 103.

[13181] ● Recovery of blood stained knife at instance of appellant.—There was also the fact that the blood stained knife (Ext. 5), with which the murder was committed was recovered at the instance of the appellant. We have not been impressed by the argument on behalf of the appellant that this evidence is not admissible under the provisions of Section 27 of the Evidence Act as the police already knew about the place where the knife could be found. This argument is wholly without substance. This was based on the fact that the appellant first told the police that he would show them the knife and then took them to the place where the knife was hidden. Karan Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1973 SC 1385 : (1973) 3 SCC 662 : 1973 CrLJ 1136 : 1973 CrLR (SC) 90.

[13183] ● Information limit and scope of provable information.—The first condition necessary for bringing Section 27, Evidence Act into operation is the discovery of a fact, albeit a relevant fact, in consequence of the information received from a person accused of an offence. The second is that the discovery of such fact must be deposed to. The third is that at the time of the receipt of the information the accused must be in police custody. The last but the most important condition is that only "so much of the information" as relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered is admissible. The rest of the information has to be excluded. Mohamed Inayatullah v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1976 SC 483 : (1976) 1 SCC 828 : 1976 CrLJ 481.

[13184] ● Word "distinctly"—Meaning of.—"Only so much of information" as relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered is admissible. The rest of the information has to be excluded the word "distinctly" means "directly" indoubtedly", "strictly", "unmistakably". The word has been advisably used to limit and define the safe of the provable information. The phrase "distinctly" relates to the fact thereby discovered is the linchpin of the provision. This phrase refers to that of the information supplied by the accused which is the direct and immediate of the discovery. The reason behind this partial lifting of the ban against confessions and statements made to the police this partial lifting of the ban against confessions and statements made to the police is that if a fact is actually discovered in consequence of information given by the accused it affords some guarantee of truth of that part and that party only, of the information which was clear, immediate and proximate cause of the discovery. No such guarantee or assurance attaches to the rest of the statement which may be indirectly or remotely related to the fact discovered. Mohamed Inayatullah v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1976 SC 483 : 1976 CrLJ 481 : 1975 CrLR (SC) 567. TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) Autar Singh v. State of Rajasthan, 2005 SCC (Cri) 597 (603).

[13185] ● Statement of accused immediate and direct cause of fact discovered—Admissibility of.—What the accused stated was "I will tell the place of deposit of the three chemical drums which I took out from the Hiji Bunder on first August" only the first part of the statement viz. "I will tell the place of deposit of the three chemical drums" was held to be the immediate and direct cause of the fact discovered and therefore admissible under Section 27. Mohamed Inayatullah v State of Maharashtra, AIR 1976 SC 483 : 1976 CrLJ 481.

[13186] ● Word "distinctly"—Meaning.—The word "distinctly" means "directly", "indubitably", "strictly", "unmistakably". The word has been advisedly used to limit and define the scope of provable information. The phrase "distinctly" "relates to the fact thereby discovered". The phrase refers to that part of information supplied by the accused which is most the direct cause of discovery of a fact. The rest of the information is to be excluded. [Mahmed Inayatullah v. The State of Maharashtra, AIR 1976 SC 483 : (1976) 1 SCC 828 : 1976 CrLJ 481 referred] Geejagande Somaiah v. State of Karnataka, AIR 2007 SC 1355 : (2007) 9 SCC 315 : 2007 (3) SCC (Cri) 135 : 2007 CrLJ 1792 (1798) : JT 2007 (4) SC 380. To the same effect : Amit Singh Bhikam Singh Thakur v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2007 SC 676 : 2007 (1) SCC (Cri) 582 : 2007 CrLJ 1168 : 2007 (2) Crimes 40 (SC) : JT 2007 (1) SC 390.

[13187] ● Discovery statement of accused as to firearms—Admissibility of.—Where no person other than the accused could have known the place from where the recovery of firearms was made, the disclosure statement is admissible in evidence. Narpal Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 1977 SC 1066 : (1977) 2 SCC 131 : 1977 CrLJ 642.

[13188] ● Recovery of seven empties deposed by both witnesses.—The Sessions Judge seems to believe that since these empties were not recovered at night although the Investigating Officer searched for the same in the light of the torch and lantern, their recovery in the day must be deemed to be a fabrication. We are unable to agree with this fallacious process of reasoning. After all night, however lighted it may be, cannot be a good substitute for a day light or for the light of the sun. The emplies were very small articles measuring about 1/2" to I" and it is common experience that there are a number of small articles which one may not, with due diligence, be able to find even with the aid of a torch or electric light, yet they could be easily found in the day. The recovery of these seven empties is mentioned in seizure memo and apart from investigating officer, the recovery has been proved also by PW 19 Gurdial Singh who is an eyewitness and who has also been held by the Courts below to be an independent and disinterested witness. Both these witnesses have deposed on oath regarding the recovery of seven empties from the spot. Merely because other witnesses were not examined would be no ground to reject their evidence. We would, however, like to point out that in future the Investigating Officer should not associate any eye-witness with the recovery memos, because that partakes of an attempt to make the witness omnibus. Narpal Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 1977 SC 1066 : (1977) 2 SCC 131 : 1977 CrLJ 642.

[13189] ● Recoveries of weapons at instance of accused.—As regards the recoveries of the weapons at the instance of accused, it is true that they have been attested by the police officers and some independent persons as search witnesses. The police officers have been examined to prove the search but the other witnesses have not been examined. That by itself does not introduce any serious infirmity in the evidence furnished by the recoveries which at best is the corroborative piece of evidence. Dalbir Kaur v. State of Punjab, AIR 1977 SC 472 : 1976 SCC (Cri) 527 : 1977 CrLJ 273 : 1976 CrLR (SC) 417.

[13190] ● Recovery of currency notes, ring and purse on information by accused.—The actual recovery of the currency notes, the ring and the purse in pursuance of the information given by the accused and at his instances was sufficient guarantee of the truth of that information and could be safely relied on. Mohan Lal v. Ajit Singh, AIR 1978 SC 1183 : (1978) 3 SCC 279 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 378 : 1978 CrLJ 1107.

[13191] ● Recovery of articles of deceased.—Where there was long delay between the fatal attack and the arrest of certain accused and the recovery of articles of the deceased and it was not clear from the recovery memo that the articles were recovered on the information of the accused and the accused was not charged for retaining stolen property, the recovery could not be relied upon as suggesting participation of the accused in the fatal attack. This would be so even if recovery was believed to be at the instance of the accused in question. State of Himachal Pradesh v. Wazir Chand, AIR 1978 SC 315 : (1978) 1 SCC 130 : 1978 SCC (Cri) 58 : 1978 CrLJ 347.

[13192] ● Evidence of I.O.—Seizure memo.—Where the evidence of the investigating officer who recovered the material objects is convincing, the evidence as to recovery need not be rejected on the ground that seizure witnesses did not support the prosecution version. Madan Singh v. State of Rajasthan, (1978) 4 SCC 435 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 56.

[13194] ● Recovery of weapon used to assault deceased.—In the case of recovery of alleged weapon used to assault the deceased the information leading to recovery is admissible but the statement that the weapon was used is inadmissible. Babboo v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1979 SC 1042 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 743 : 1979 CrLJ 908 : 1979CrLR (SC) 15.

[13195] ● Recovery of Katamas on information given by accused.—The recovery of Katamas on the information given by accused Nos. 1, 3 and 5 hardly have an probative value in the facts and circumstances of the case. If there is no substantive evidence worth the name the recovery of Katamas would hardly advance the prosecution case against the accused. Katamas appear to have been stained with human blood. In seizure memorandum it is recited that accused No. 1 made the statement that he would show the Katama with which he assaulted Diwan Singh. The first part on the seizure memo would be inadmissible because the fact that accused No. 1 assaulted Diwan Singh is not discovered in pursuance of the information given by accused No. 1. It would be a confessional statement to police officer but by Section 25 of the Evidence Act. In this background we are not disposed to attach any importance to the recovery of blood-stained Katamas on the information given by accused No. 1, 2 and 5. Babboo v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1979 SC 1042 (1046) : (1979) 4 SCC 74 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 743 : 1979 CrLJ 908 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 15.

[13196] ● Statement of accused leading to discovery of murder weapon—Validity.—The Marathi word "Me" is to be found at the commencement of the statement followed by the wholly inadmissible portion and then there is a reference to the place where the spear was. The Marathi expression 'Thevalela' would more appropriately be translated 'has been kept' and not 'I have kept' because in the case of 'Have kept it,' the Marathi word would be 'Thevala'. It may be that being not conversant with Marathi language our translation may not be appropriate but if this recovery of blood-stained spear is the only important circumstance of an incriminating character established in this case and if the authorship of concealment is not clearly borne out by cogent and incontrovertible evidence but as the High Court observes left to be inferred by implication, we have considerable hesitation in placing implicit reliance upon it. More so when it is a confessional statement which becomes admissible under Section 27 of Evidence Act though made in immediate presence of a Police Officer. The recovery of a bloodstained spear becomes incriminating not because of its recovery at the instance of the accused but the element of criminality tending to connect the accused with the crime lies in the authorship of concealment, namely, that the appellant who gave information leading to its discovery was the person who concealed it. And in this case Bhamta was another co-accused. The appellant may only have the knowledge of the place where it was hidden to make such a circumstance incriminating it must be shown that the appellant himself had concealed the blood-stained spear which was the weapon of offence and on this point the language used in the contemporaneous record Ext. 28 is not free from doubt and when two constructions are possible.

In a criminal trial to make such a circumstance incriminating it must be shown that the appellant himself had concealed the blood-stained spear which was the weapon of offence and on this point the language used in the contemporaneous record Ext. 28 is not free from doubt and when two constructions are possible in a criminal trial, the one beneficial to the accused will have to be adopted. Therefore, this linchpin of the prosecution case ceases to provide any incriminating evidence against the appellant." Pohalya Motya Valvi v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1979 SC 1949 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 261 : 1979 CrLJ 1310 : 1980 CrLR (SC) 185.

[13197] ● Factum of recovery of weapon barred under Section 27 of Evidence Act.—Where weapon was merely taken out by accused from beneath his cot and handed over to police without any statement, the factum of recovery was held inadmissible under Section 27. Bahadul v. State of Orissa, AIR 1979 SC 1262 : (1979) 4 SCC 346 : 1979 CrLJ 1075 : (1980) 1 SCJ 39 : 1979 UJ 348.

[13198] ● Recovery of article on information of accused—Probative value.—In the absence of any substantive evidence worth the name, the recovery of blood-stained Katarnas on the information given by the accused would hardly advance the case of prosecution under Section 302 of the IPC. Babboo v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1979 SC 1042 : (1979) 4 SCC 74 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 743 : 1979 CrLJ 908.

[13199] ● Discovery of under-pant.—The discovery of Sunita's under-pant which is the eighth circumstances, is also enveloped in suspicion. At the time when the under-pant was discovered, the appellant was not in the house. PSI Katke has not stated in his evidence as to whether the appellant's house was open or locked when he and the panchas entered it. It is also difficult to believe that the appellant would keep the under-pant under his pillow while making good his escape from the house after the dead body of Sunita was taken away. Shankarlal Gyarasilal Dixit v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1981 SC 765 (769, 770) : (1981) 2 SCC 35 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 315 : 1981 CrLJ 325 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 616 : (1981) 2 SCR 384.

[13201] ● Mode of recording evidence deprecated.—The evidence that one accused alongwith all other gave information leading to recovery of robbed articles and the evidence of receiver of robbed property that accused 1 to 3 sold him the ring and that accused 1 to 3 asked him to produce the ring when they came with the police party do not present any incriminating material against accused. Such mode of recording evidence was deprecated. Mohd. Abdul Hafeez v. State of A.P., AIR 1983 SC 367 : (1983) 1 SCC 143 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 139 : 1983 CrLJ 689.

[13202] ● Recovery statement—Not incriminating accused.—It is impossible to believe that all spoke simultaneously. This way of recording evidence is most unsatisfactory and we record our disapproval of the same. If evidence otherwise confessional in character is admissible under Section 27 of the Indian Evidence Act, it is obligatory upon the Investigating Officer to state and record who gave the information; when he is dealing with more than one accused, what words were used by him so that a recovery pursuant to the information received may be connected to the person giving the information so as to provide incriminating evidence against the person. Mohd. Abdul Hafeez v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1983 SC 367 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 139 : 1983 CrLJ 689 : 1983 CrLR (SC) 26.

[13203] ● Section 27 of Evidence Act—Applicability—Information—Preconditions.—Under Section 27 only so much of the information as distinctly relates to the facts really thereby discovered is admissible. The word 'fact' means some concrete or material fact to which the information directly relates. For the applicability of Section 27 therefore two conditions are prerequisite, namely (1) the information must be such as has caused discovery of the fact; and (2) the information must 'relate distinctly' to the fact discovered. In the present case, there was a suggestion during the trial that PW-26 had prior knowledge from other sources that the incriminating articles were concealed at certain places and that the statement Ex. P-35 was prepared after the recoveries had been made and therefore there was no 'fact discovered' within the meaning of Section 27 of the Evidence Act. Earabhadrappa v. State of Karnataka, AIR 1983 SC 446 : (1983) 2 SCC 330 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 447 : 1983 CrLJ 846 : 1983 CrLR (SC) 268.

[13204] ● Discovery under Section 27 Evidence Act—When relevant and admissible.—The gun, Exhibit 23, is alleged to have been recovered in pursuance of a statement made by accused Durga. The evidence of the Ballistic expert, Shariq Alvi, shows that the empty shells which were found at the spot of occurrence were fired from that gun. This would be very good evidence to connect an accused with a crime but, the police did not recover the gun from Durga. Nor, indeed, did he make any statement that he had concealed it at a place which he would point out. The discoveries under Section 27 of the Evidence Act are not of guns and daggers used in a crime. Guns and daggers have an ancient origin and one does not have to hunt for an accused to discover them. The discovery, mostly and really, is as regards the authorship of concealment. Conduct and concealment are incriminating circumstances and their discovery becomes relevant and admissible under Section 27 of the Evidence Act. Here, we are left with the position that a gun was recovered from a person called Sunder Ahir and the shells or cartridges found at the scene of offence were fired from that gun. Inexplicably, Sunder has not been examined in the case. His evidence could have shown, what is alleged by the prosecution, that Durga had borrowed his gun at about the material time. Sunder, not having been a witness in the case, there is no legal evidence on the record to connect Durga with the gun. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Jageshwar, AIR 1983 SC 349 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 427 : 1983 CrLJ 686 : 1983 CrLR (SC) 196.

[13205] ● Recoveries of stolen articles at instance of accused in presence of panchas.—It is proved that the recoveries were undoubtedly made at the instance of the accused and in the presence of the panches who had appended their signatures in proof of the recoveries in the various panchnamas and have been examined in Court. As these witnesses were not meant to identify the accused at whose instance the recoveries were made, the reasoning of the learned Sessions Judge to reject their evidence seems to us to be absolutely fallacious. It is obvious that by the time the witnesses came to give evidence in the Court, they could not have remembered which accused disclosed which article. It was sufficient if these facts were proved by the panchnamas which were signed by the witnesses as representing the true state of affairs. These witnesses have not denied in the Court that they have signed the panchnamas or the recoveries were made in their presence at the instance of the accused. Lachhman Ram v. State of Orissa, AIR 1985 SC 486 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 263 : 1985 CrLJ 753 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 186.

[13206] ● Recovery of papers on search of house by ASI—Not pursuant to case of accused making discovery statement.—"The Additional Sessions Judge felt that since the house was actually searched by the ASI and the papers were recovered, it would not be a case of the accused making a discovery statement and he was not prepared to believe that the accused had made any statement leading to recovery; but whether it was a recovery during the search carried out by the ASI or a recovery made pursuant to the statement made by the accused. the fact remains that three papers bearing the signatures of the complainant were found with and recovered from the possession of the accused and such finding of these papers with the accused itself lent corroboration to the complainant's story about what transpired on 10th March, 1978." Chander Kala v. Ram Kishan, AIR 1985 SC 1268 (1271) : (1985) 4 SCC 212 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 491 : 1985 CrLJ 1490 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 365 : (1985) 2 Crimes 642.

[13207] ● Recovery of wearing apparel of accused made more than three weeks after occurrence.—According to the prosecution these two wearing apparel had been removed from the body of the deceased after he had been done to death and to avoid identification, as indicated by the appellant, the pant and the shirt had been removed from the body and hidden there. Recovery is said to have been made more than three weeks after the occurrence. Admittedly, the place from where these two things are said to have been recovered was a public place and appears to have been very much accessible to people of the locality. It is difficult to believe that these two had been so concealed that they were not noticed and were available to be collected from the very place such a long time after. Abdul Sattar v. Union Territory, Chandigarh, AIR 1986 SC 1438 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 505 : 1986 CrLJ 1072 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 485.

[13208] ● Recovery of ornaments worn by deceased at instance of accused.—As regards the evidence of discovery of ornaments, which were worn by the deceased on her person and which were said to have been recovered from PW-15 at the instance of the respondent-accused, the High Court felt that the ornaments were common place articles like some small gold chain with locket etc. which would be commonly available in the market and that the identification of such articles by the father of the deceased woman and other relatives in the absence of any peculiarity or characteristic of these ornaments could not be relied upon. It is not possible to accept this part of the reasoning of the High Court, in the first place the availability of such article in the market would have relevance if those articles had been claimed by respondent-accused or PW-15 as their own and secondly the father's evidence about the identity of these ornaments as having been presented by him to her deceased daughter at the time of her marriage may be difficult to reject. But from the material on record relating to this discovery we find that the same has not been properly proved by the prosecution as discovery of the ornaments at the instance of the accused purely rests upon the evidence of Police Officer. We may mention that the alleged statement of the respondent-accused which is said to have been made by him leading to such discovery as well as the alleged actual recovery are said to have been witnessed by two independent panch witnesses. But, unfortunately neither of the panch witnesses was examined by the prosecution at the trial. In the absence of such independent evidence which could have been made available and which could have been placed before the Court in support of the alleged discovery of the ornaments, it will be difficult to accept such discovery merely relying upon the evidence of the Police Officer. State of Kerala v. Thomas alias Boby, (1986) 2 SCC 411 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 176 (178, 179).

[13209] ● Circumstantial evidence—Weapon of offence recovered from another accused who had grudge against deceased.—The instrument of the offence was recovered at the instance of one Jitrai Majhi who has been discharged and under these circumstances therefore the evidence about the appellant having been seen in the evening with the deceased also is of no consequence. It is a settled rule of circumstantial evidence that each one of the circumstances has to be established beyond doubt and all the circumstances put together must lead to the only one inference and that is of the guilt of the accused. As discussed above the only circumstance which could be said to have been established is of his being with the deceased in the evening and on that circumstance alone the inference of guilt could not be drawn especially in the circumstances of the case where one another accused person from whom an instrument of offence was recovered, who has a grudge against the deceased has been let off. Kansa Behera v. State of Orissa, AIR 1987 SC 1507 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 601 : 1987 CrLJ 1857 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 389.

[13210] ● Handle of Tractor used to give blows to deceased recovered as per recovery memo.—It is also very significant to note that the handle of the tractor used to give blows to the deceased was recovered as per the recovery memo (Ex PG) in pursuance of the disclosure statement made by the accused in presence of independent witnesses, Nirmal Singh and Jarnail Singh. It appears from the report, Ex PH, of Serologist and Chemical Examiner that iron handle was stained with human blood. Jagtar Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1988 SC 628 : (1988) 1 SCC 712 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 254 : 1988 CrLJ 866 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 101 : JT 1988 (1) SC 200 : (1988) 2 SCR 794 : (1988) 1 Crimes 822.

[13211] ● Evidence under Section 27 Evidence Act not circumstance against accused.—There is no presumption of exclusive knowledge to accused of bodies being buried and its recovery from open field. So evidence under Section 27 not a circumstance against accused. Makhan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1988 SC 1705 : (1988) 3 SCJ 362 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 501 : JT 1988 (3) SC 126 : (1988) 2 Crimes 842.

[13212] ● Discovery of saw blade not of conclusive nature connecting appellant with crime.—"The third circumstance relied on in the statement said to have been made by the appellant under Section 27 leading to discovery of the consequential information, namely, saw blade, is not of a conclusive nature connecting the appellant with the crime. The recoveries were long after the arrest of the appellant. The blood stains on all the articles were disintegrated. So it was not possible to find whether it is human blood or not. Moreover, from the prosecution evidence it is clear that the deceased himself was an accused in an earlier murder case and it is obvious that he had enemies at his back. Absolutely no motive to commit crime was attributed to the appellant." Kishore Chand v. State of Himachal Pradesh, AIR 1990 SC 2140 : 1991 SCC (Cri) 172 : 1990 CrLJ 2289 : 1990 CrLR (SC) 608 : (1990) 3 Crimes 341.

[13213] ● Recovery of stolen articles made on subsequent examination.—In the instant case, the stolen articles were not recovered in the first instance. Recovery was made on subsequent examination. The circumstance of recovery cannot be said to be reliable. Chandran alias Surendram v. State of Kerala, AIR 1990 SC 2148 : 1991 SCC (Cri) 245 : 1990 CrLJ 2296 : 1990 CrLR (SC) 519.

[13214] ● Recovery of dead body at instance of accused not proved.—"PW-11 stated in his evidence that before going to the paddy field the FIR Ex. P. 10 was drawn up by him. Surprisingly we find a mention about the discovery of the body in the FIR itself. But the same is not found in the inquest. There is not even a reference to the accused in the Column No. 9 of the inquest report where the information of witness as to the cause of death has to be noticed. We are aware that the purpose of inquest report is only to ascertain the cause of death but in a case of this nature there should have been at least a mention in the inquest report as to how the body was discovered. Apart from that usually a panchnama is prepared for such a discovery made under Section 27 of the Evidence Act but strangely in this case there is no such panchnama nor there is any other evidence apart form the evidence of PWs-1 and 11. PW-6 does not say anything about this aspect. We have perused the evidence of PW-4. His evidence does not in any manner incriminate the accused. PW-4 deposed that the dead body of the deceased was found lying in a paddy field and that the police held inquest over the dead body in his presence and that the inquest report is P. 1 in which he put his signature as a witness. Nothing more is stated by him. He does not even refer to the presence of the accused at the place where the dead body was found or at the time of inquest, which was held also there. PW-4 does not in any manner help the prosecution case so far as this circumstance is concerned. If really the body has been discovered at the instance of the accused there should have been a panchnama and a mention about the same in the inquest report. Jaharlal Das v. State of Orissa, AIR 1991 SC 1388 : 1991 SCC (Cri) 527 : 1991 CrLJ 1809 : 1991 CrLR (SC) 467 : (1991) 2 Crimes 268 : 1991 CAR 217.

[13215] ● Statement of accused leading to exhumation of dead body.—"Even before the respondent gave the information to the police about the place wherefrom the dead body was exhumed, the respondent's husband who stands convicted gave the information to the head constable as to where the dead body was buried. After carefully examining the material placed before us, we are of the opinion that the reasons given by the High Court for discarding the evidence in regard to the recoveries as well the evidence with regard to the exhumation of the dead body do not suffer from any infirmity." State of Rajasthan v. Kamla, AIR 1991 SC 967 : 1991 CrLJ 602.

[13216] ● Evidence insufficient to prove that dead body was placed by accused in trunk.—The Trial Judge when grappling with the matter took note of the evidence of the witnesses of recovery, namely, Chander Shekhar, PW-5 and Sub-Inspector, Markandey Singh, PW-11 wherefrom it was clear that a dead body was found inside a bag kept in the trunk. That by itself was of no consequence and at best gravely suspicious. Its finding was that a dead body in a bag put inside a trunk was recovered from a room of the house and further the part played by the accused in the placing of the dead body in that trunk was evidently not proved. Their individual statement to PW-11 "I have kept the dead body, could give it", which alone, if at all admissible, but not holding so, does not reveal any disappearance of evidence so as to screen the offender of murder. This state of evidence is insufficient to prove the accused-Kapil Deo and Ramapati to have placed the dead body in the Trunk. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Kapil Deo, AIR 1991 SC 2257 : 1991 SCC (Cri) 1008 : 1991 CrLJ 3321 : 1991 Supp (2) SCC 170.

[13217] ● Recovery of shirt worn by deceased at instance of appellant.—"So far as the recovery of shirt worn by the deceased at the instance of appellant, we are of the view that this part of the story is highly improbable and difficult to believe. There is no reason whatsoever as to why the murderer of deceased should take the shirt of the deceased along with him. One can imagine the taking away of jewellery, weapon or some other valuable article from the person of deceased but taking away of the shirt of the deceased by the appellant is a circumstance which cannot be believed. Chandu alias Chandrahas v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1992 SC 2302 : 1992 CrLJ 3956 : 1993 Supp (1) SCC 358.

[13218] ● Fatal injuries inflicted with gupti—Recovery of at instance of accused.—It appears to us that the fatal injuries had been inflicted by Prakash with the gupti. The gupti was recovered at the instance of the accused and such recovery was not otherwise possible if the accused himself had not assisted for such recovery of the gupti. The said gupti was stained with human blood and no reasonable explanation has been given by accused for such blood stain. The injuries found on the person of the deceased could be inflicted by a gupti and complicity of Prakash in inflicting the fatal injuries by gupti has been corroborated by the eye-witness. There may be some minor discrepancies in the evidence of the eye-witness but so far as the complicity of Prakash is concerned, the depositions of the eye-witnesses were consistent. Prakash v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1993 SC 65 : 1992 SCC (Cri) 853 : 1992 CrLJ 3703 : 1992 CrLR (SC) 712 : (1993) 3 Crimes 530.

[13219] ● Recovery of dead body at instance of accused.—In the instant case, the dead body was recovered at the instance of the accused at the place which was not in exclusive possession of accused. Accused himself stated about the dead body to the witness who lodged the missing report. The circumstance is not consistent with the innocence of the accused. Anant Bhujangrao Kulkarni v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1993 SC 110 : 1992 CrLJ 4027 : (1993) 2 SCC Supp 267 : 1992 CrLR (SC) 464 : (1992) 2 Crimes 644.

[13220] ● Circumstantial evidence—Recovery of ornaments of deceased—Important piece of.—The disclosure statement and the consequent recovery pursuant thereto of the ornaments belonging to the deceased has been considered one of the most important piece of circumstantial evidence in the case not only by the High Court but is also before us. This circumstance is indeed of such an incriminating nature that if found to have been established by reliable and trustworthy evidence, it would go a long way to furnish proof of the guilt of the appellant and connect him with the crime and on the other hand, if the evidence in support of that circumstance is found to be not reliable, the entire chain of circumstantial evidence will snap so badly as to affect the credibility of the prosecution case as a whole. On our independent appraisal of the evidence, we find that the prosecution evidence relating to the disclosure statement and the recovery of ornaments is not only discrepant and contradictory but also suffers from glaring infirmities and improbabilities rendering it unsafe to rely upon the same.

There is contradiction between the evidence of Kuldip Kaul, PW-1 and the Investigating Officer as to the place where Kuldip Kaul signed the recovery memo. According to the Investigating Officer it was signed at the spot while according to Kuldip Kaul, PW-1, he had returned to the Police Station and there signed the recovery memo. Again, while Kuldip Kaul attempted to show that he had met the Investigating Officer just once and did not know him earlier, the Investigating Officer has given a direct lie to it. After carefully analysing the evidence, we find Kuldip Kaul, PW-1 was a convenient witness and his evidence does not appear, to be trustworthy. Same is our opinion about Harnaik Singh, PW-2 whereas both Harnaik Singh, PW-2 and the Investigating Officer want the Court to believe that they did not meet each other earlier and that Investigating Officer had seen Harnaik Singh for the first time on that day only at the Police Station, there is abundant material on the record to show not only that Harnaik Singh had earlier been cited as witness by the same Investigating Officer while posted as Sub-Inspector at another Police Station, Harnaik Singh, PW-2 was also present outside the house of the appellant alongwith Kuldip Kaul, PW-1 as early as at 6.30 a.m. on that day. Harnaik Singh, PW-2 also exposed his unreliability when he admitted during the cross-examination that the disclosure statement had not been made by the appellant in his presence at the Police Station but that he had signed a statement which had already been prepared, thus, giving a lie not only to Kuldip Kaul, PW-1 but also to the Investigating Officer who have deposed to the contrary. Surinder Pal Jain v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1993 SC 1723 : 1993 SCC (Cri) 1096 : 1993 CrLJ 1871 : JT 1992 (2) SC 206 : (1993) 1 UJ (SC) 520 : 1993 Cr App R (SC) 254 : (1993) 1 Crimes 987.

[13221] ● Recovery of weapon rendered meaningless in absence of disclosure statement.—As to the disclosure statement which led to the recovery of the axe (MO-9) the only witness examined is Ramu Mellappa, PW-13. He did not depose about witnessing to the disclosure statement which led to the recovery of axe. The only evidence regarding the disclosure is "come with me" and thereafter the accused proceeded towards Harugeri and stopped near the stream situated at a distance of about 2 kms. away and the accused took out the axe from inside the nallah (stream). In the absence of any disclosure statement the recovery of axe itself becomes meaningless. Bhimappa Jinnappa Naganur v. State of Karnataka, AIR 1993 SC 1469 (1471) : 1993 SCC (Cri) 1053 : 1993 CrLJ 1801 : JT 1993 (2) SC 165 : (1993) 3 Crimes 411.

[13222] ● Two essential requirements for application of Section 27 of Evidence Act.—"The two essential requirements for the application of Section 27 of the Evidence Act are that (1) the person giving information must be an accused of any offence, and (2) he must also be in police custody. ...The provisions of Section 27 of the Evidence act are based on the view that if a fact is actually discovered in consequence of information given, some guarantee is afforded thereby that the information was true and consequently the said information can safely be allowed to be given in evidence because if such an information is further fortified and confirmed by the discovery of articles or the instrument of crime and which leads to the belief that the information about the confession made as to the articles of crime cannot be false." Suresh Chandra Bahri v. State of Bihar, AIR 1994 SC 2420 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 60 : 1994 CrLJ 3271 : (1994) 2 Crimes 1027.

[13223] ● Prosecution failed to establish that appellant in conscious possession of revolver and cartridge.—In the present case the statement of the appellant recorded under Section 27, Evidence Act reads : "Revolver is concealed at Dadar. Come on, I will point out the place and revolver". From this statement we are at a loss to understand how the trial Judge could have come to the conclusion that the recovery pursuant to it could clothe the appellant with conscious possession of the revolver and the cartridge. The statement extracted above is capable of an interpretation that the appellant had the knowledge about the concealment of the revolver at the particular place from where it was got recovered and not that he had concealed the same. In this view of the matter, it is not possible to say conclusively and beyond a reasonable doubt that the appellant had conscious possession of the revolver and the cartridge. The evidence of PW01, PW-9 and PW-12 which only relates to the making of the disclosure statement cannot advance the case of prosecution. Since, the prosecution has failed to establish beyond a reasonable doubt that the appellant was in conscious possession of the revolver and the cartridge his conviction for an offence under Section 3 read with Section 25 of the Arms Act, 1959 cannot be sustained. We accordingly accept this appeal and set aside the conviction and sentence of the appellant and acquit him. Raosaheb Balu Killedar v. State of Maharashtra, 1995 CrLJ 2632.

[13224] ● Absence of signature of thumb impression of accused on disclosure statement—Effect.—The absence of the signatures or the thumb impression of an accused on the disclosure statement recorded under Section 27 of the Evidence Act detracts materially from the authenticity and the reliability of the disclosure statement. Jackaran Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1995 SC 2345 : 1995 CrLJ 3992.

[13225] ● Recovery of bones on basis of disclosure statement.—It is true that no disclosure statement of Gurbachan Singh who is said to have given information about the dumping of the dead body under the hillock of Khadgraha dumping ground was recorded but there is positive statement of Rajeshwar Singh, PW-59, Station House Officer of Chutia Police Station, who deposed that during the course of investigation Gurbachan Singh led him to Khadgraha Hillock alongwith Inspector Rangnath Singh and on pointing out the place of Gurbachan Singh he got that place unearthed by labourers where a piece of blanket, pieces of saree and Rassi were found which were seized as per seizure memo Ex 5. ... It true that no public witness was examined by the prosecution in this behalf but the evidence of Rajeshwar Singh, PW-59, does not suffer from any doubt "the last circumstance relied upon by the prosecution is the disclosure statement of the appellant, leading to the recovery of the bones of the deceased. The trial Court ruled out of consideration the disclosure statement and the consequent recovery of the bones and placed no reliance on it. The trial Court opined 'At the outset it may be stated that in this case no importance can be attached to the disclosure statement made by Balwinder Singh accused and in consequence thereof recovery of the bones. Tejinder Kaur, PW, had already visited the place of cremation much before the case was registered. Be that as it may, there is no reason to doubt that the bones were taken into possession from the alleged place of cremation which is admittedly an open place. We agree with the trial Court." Balwinder Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1996 SC 607 (612) : (1996) SCC (Cri) 59 : 1996 CrLJ 883 : (1995) 4 SCC (Supp) 259 : JT 1995 (8) SC 81.

[13226] ● Accused not in Police custody when he made disclosure statement.—We find that no offence was registered against appellant when he was taken to Police Station for interrogation nor was any accusation made against the accused. He was not in custody of Police when he made the disclosure statement. S. 27 of Evidence Act was not applicable in this case and recovery should not have been treated as having been made on the basis of the disclosure statement of the appellant. Manoranjan Singh v. State of Delhi, AIR 1998 SC 2811 : (1998) 3 SCC 523 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 848 : 1998 CrLJ 2062 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 304 : JT 1998 (2) SC 168.

Appeal against acquittal was dismissed. Prem Prakash Mundra v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1998 SC 1189 (1190) : 1998 SCC (Cri) 896 : 1998 CrLJ 1620 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 135 : JT 1998 (1) SC 659.

[13228] ● Nothing in Section 27 Evidence Act rendering statement of accused inadmissible if recovery made from place open or accessible to others.—There is nothing in Section 27 of the Evidence Act which renders the statement of the accused inadmissible if recovery of the articles was made from any place which is "open or accessible to others". It is a fallacious notion that when recovery of any incriminating article was made from a place which is open or accessible to others it would vitiate the evidence under Section 27 of the Evidence Act. Any object can be concealed in places which are open or accessible to others. For example, if the article is buried on the main roadside or if it is concealed beneath dry leaves lying on public places or kept hidden in a public office, the article would remain out of the visibility of others in normal circumstances. Until such article is disinterred its hidden state would remain unhampered. The person who hid it alone knows where it is until he discloses that fact to any other person. Hence the crucial question is not whether the place was accessible to others or not but whether it was ordinarily visible to others. If it is not, then it is immaterial that the concealed place is accessible to others. State of Himachal Pradesh v. Jeet Singh, AIR 1999 SC 1293 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 539 : 1999 CrLJ 2025 : (1999) 2 Crimes 31.

[13229] ● Recovery of blood-stained clothes of accused sufficient to corroborate charge of murder.—Recovery of blood-stained clothes of accused at his instance is a circumstance suffi cient to corroborate the charge of murder. Kumar v. State of Himachal Pradesh, AIR 1999 SC 782 : (1999) 2 SCC 288 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 127 : 1999 CrLJ 1138 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 89.

[13230] ● Recovery of articles from place open or accessible to other when.—Recovery of articles made from any place which, is open or accessible to others would not vitiate the evidence under Section 27. The crucial question is not whether the place was accessible to others or not but whether it was ordinarily visible to others. If it is not then it is immaterial that the concealed place in accessible to others. State of Himachal Pradesh v. Jeet Singh, AIR 1999 SC 1293 : (1999) 4 SCC 370 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 539 : 1999 CrLJ 2025 : (1999) 2 Crimes 31 (SC).

[13232] ● Investigating Officer not obliged to obtain signature of accused in any statement.—The resultant position is that Investigating Officer is not obliged to obtain the signature of an accused in any statement attributed to him while preparing seizure memo for the recovery of any article covered by Section 27 of the Evidence Act. But, if any signature has been obtained by an Investigating Officer, there is nothing wrong or illegal about it. State of Rajasthan v. Teja Ram, AIR 1999 (SC) 1776 : (1999) 3 SCC 507 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 436 : 1999 CrLJ 2588.

[13233] ● Recovery of charas—Coconut tree standing on open space.—Where the coconut tree from whose stem charas was found was admittedly standing on an open space accessible to all, it was held that it could not be said that it was the accused who had concealed the charas there and that it was found out only on the basis of the disclosure statement made by the accused. Krishan Mohan Singh Dugal v. State of Goa, AIR 1999 SC 3842 : (1999) 8 SCC 552 : 2000 CrLJ 18 : (1999) 4 Crimes 225 : (1999) 4 CCR 118.

[13234] ● Recovery of dead body from place pointed out by accused.—There are three possibilities. When an accused points out the place where a dead body or an incriminating material was concealed without stating that it was concealed by himself. One is that he would himself have concealed it. Second is that he would have seen somebody else concealing it and the third is that he would have been told by another person that it was concealed there. But if the accused declines to tell the criminal Court that his knowledge about the concealment was an account of one of the last two possibilities the criminal Court can presume that it was concealed by the accused himself. This is because accused is the only person who can offer the explanation as to how else he came to know of such concealment and if he chooses to refrain from telling the Court as to how else he came to know of it, the Court will be justified in raising the presumption that the concealment was made by himself. State of Maharashtra v. Suresh, (2000) 1 SCC 471 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 263 : JT 1999 (9) SC 513 : (1999) 1 Crimes 1 (SC) : (1999) 4 CCR 344.

[13237] ● "Fact discovered" not comprehend recovery of object.—The Basic idea embedded in Section 27 of the Evidence Act is the doctrine of confirmation by subsequent events. The doctrine is founded on the principle that if any fact is discovered in a search made on the strength of any information obtained from prisoner such a discovery is a guarantee that the information supplied by the prisoner is true. The information might be confessional a non-inculpatory in nature, but if it results in discovery of a fact it becomes a reliable information. Hence the legislature permitted such information to be used as evidence by restricting the admissible portion to the minimum. It is non well settled that recovery of an object is not discovery of a fact as envisaged in the section. The decision of the Privy Council in Pulukuri Kattayya v. Emperor, AIR 1947 PC 67 : 1947 CrLJ 533 is the most quoted authority for supporting the interpretation that the "fact discovered" envisaged in the section embraces the place from which the object was produced, the knowledge of the accused as to it but the information given must relate distinctly to that effect. No doubt, the information permitted to be admitted in evidence is confined to that portion of the information, which "distinctly relates to the fact thereby discovered". But the information to get admissibility need not be so truncated as to make it unsensible or incomprehensible. The extent of information admitted should not be consistent with understandability. State of Maharashtra v. Damu Gopinath Shinde, AIR 2000 SC 1691 : (2000) 6 SCC 269 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1088 : 2000 CrLJ 2301 : (2000) 3 SCR 41.

[13238] ● Presence of human blood on knife recovered at instance of accused.—During the course of investigation, Santosh (A-1) made a disclosure statement under S. 27 of the Evidence act. He disclosed that he had hidden the clothes in the parchhi (cow shed). He further stated that he would produce Naveen's cycle which he had thrown into septic tank. Molai (A-2) was separately interrogated and he made a disclosure statement under S. 27 of the Evidence Act stating that he had concealed a knife in the heap of cow dung cakes. He then stated that he had concealed a piece of underwear, one bed sheet and one paji in the fodder room near the septic tank and he would produce the same. The Courts below accepted the evidence of PW-7 who has proved recovery of articles pursuant to the disclosure statements and the recovery thereof. The prosecution can be held to have successfully proved this circumstance beyond every reasonable doubt. Molai v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2000 SC 177 (182) : (1999) 9 SCC 581 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 438 : 2000 CrLJ 292 : 2000 Cr App R (SC) 95.

[13239] ● Confessional statement made in presence of two panch witnesses.—The appellant who was remanded to the Police custody, during his interrogation on 16th June, 1993 at about 10.30 a.m. expressed his desire to make a voluntary statement regarding the concealment of arms and ammunition. PW-7 who was investigating the crime in question arranged for two Panch witnesses, of which PW-2 is examined. In the presence of the Panch witnesses, the appellant made a statement which came to be recorded vide Ex 10 (memorandum) and the free admitted translation thereof as an under :

> "In the last week of January, 1993, I had given one AK-56 Rifle and two loaded magazines and in the first week of February, one pouch containing 3 hand grenades and two detonators to Pravin Gawand at his residence at 50 Tenement Building, 3rd Floor, Ambedkar Road, Parel, Mumbai for keeping with him. I will point out the said place and the said person, accompany me."

The appellant reached the said place and knocked the door and a person by name Pravin Krishna Gawand opened it. The appellant identified him to be the very same person to whom he had handed over one AK-56 rifle, two magazines loaded with cartridges and a pouch containing three hand grenades and two detonators. When the Investigating Officer questioned Pravin Krishna Gawand about these articles, he admitted to have received these articles and explosives from the appellant and thereafter took out one gunny bag which was kept concealed under the cot behind one suitcase. When gunny bag was opened, it was found to have contained one AK-56 assault rifle, two magazines loaded with 11 and 5 live cartridges respectively and were wrapped together with the rifle. One leather multicoloured pouch containing three hand grenades and two detonators. One assault rifle was wrapped in school uniform together with two loaded magazines. The prosecution has examined PW-2 who acted as Panch witness to the memorandum and seizure memo. PW-2, in his evidence, has very succinctly described how the confessional statement of the appellant was recorded and pursuant thereto how various incriminating articles came to be seized vide seizure memo. Prasad Ramakant Khade v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2000 SC 138 (139, 140) : (1999) 8 SCC 493 : 2000 CrLJ 55 : (1999) 4 Crimes 187.

[13240] ● Insufficient evidence.—There was a long interval between that earlier search and the recovery effected by the Police on the strength of the statement made by Manish Dixit. Very probably Manish Dixit would have chosen such a place to conceal the ornaments on a thinking that the said place is safer than other places as the possibility of a second search at the same place would be too remote. Manish Dixit v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 2001 SC 93 : (2000) 1 SCC 596 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 235 : 2001 CrLJ 133.

[13241] ● Evidence of recovery not vitiated.—Even if panch witnesses turn hostile, which happens very often in criminal cases, the evidence of the person who effected the recovery would not stand vitiated. Mohd. Aslam v. State of Maha rashtra, (2001) 9 SCC 362 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 1024.

[13242] ● Discrepancy between oral testimony and documentary evidence.—Significantly all disclosures, discoveries and even arrests have been made in the presence of three specific persons, namely, Budh Ram, Dholu Ram and Atma Ram—no independent witness could be found in the aforesaid context—is it deliberate or is it sheer coincidence—this is where the relevance of the passage from SARKAR on Evidence comes on. The ingenuity devised by the prosecutor knew no bounds—Can it be attributed to be sheer coincidence? Without any further consideration of the matter, one thing can be more or less with certain amount of conclusiveness be stated that these at least create a doubt or suspicion as to whether the same has been tailor-made or not and in the event of there being such a doubt, the benefit must and ought to be transposed to the accused persons. The trial Court addressed itself on scrutiny of evidence and came to a conclusion that the evidence available on record is trustworthy but the High Court acquitted one of the accused persons on the basis of some discrepancy between the oral testimony and the documentary evidence as noticed fully hereinbefore. The oral testimony, thus, stands tainted with suspicion. If that be the case, then there is no other evidence apart from the omni present Budh Ram and Dholu Ram, who, however, are totally interested witnesses. While it is true that legitimacy of interested witnesses cannot be discredited in any way nor termed to be a suspect witness but the evidence before being ascribed to be trustworthy or being capable of creating confidence, the Court has to consider the same upon proper scrutiny. In our view the High Court was wholly in error in not considering the evidence available on record in its proper perspective. State of Haryana v. Ram Singh, AIR 2002 SC 620 (627, 628) : (2002) 2 SCC 426 : 2002 CrLJ 987 : (2002) 1 Crimes 247.

[13243] ● Disclosure statement—Dead body lying buried in Court-yard.—It is obvious from the facts brought on record that according to the disclosure statements made by the accused the dead body was lying buried in the Court-yard of Gurmit Singh, husband of Bakshish Kaur. On the other hand, the evidence is equally clear that the dead body was actually recovered from the Court-yard of Sucha Singh, husband of Kuldip Kaur. It cannot, therefore, be said that the dead body of Kuldip Kaur was recovered pursuant to the disclosure statements made by the accused. There is also no scope for any confusion because the accused being members of the same family could make no mistake about the Court-yard of one or the other. Moreover, Sucha Singh, PW-6, in his deposition has clearly stated that he had constructed his house with a boundary wall and his brothers also had separate houses with boundary walls. The Court-yard of all the three brothers were, therefore, clearly demarcated and therefore, the recovery cannot be explained by conjecturing that though they mentioned the Court-yard of Gurmit Singh actually they meant the Court-yard of Sucha Singh, Buta Singh, in the course of investigation had informed the Investigating Officer that Bakshish Kaur had invited Kuldip Kaur to her house and she has been killed there. Similarly, Resham Singh, PW-7, in the course of investigation claimed to have seen the murder being committed in the house of Gurmit Singh. The statement made by these witnesses in the course of investigation have been referred only to recapitulate the background in which the disclosure statements were recorded. But as a matter of fact the body was found buried in the Court-yard of Sucha Singh and not in the Court-yard of Gurmit Singh. Under these circumstances, it is not possible to hold that the dead body of Kuldip Kaur was recovered pursuant to the alleged disclosure statements made by the appellants herein. The prosecution has, therefore, failed to establish this incriminating. Kuldip Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 2002 SC 3023 : (2002) 6 SCC 757 : 2002 CrLJ 3944.

[13244] ● The fact of discovery—Admissibility.—The fact discovered embraces the place from which the object is produced and the knowledge of the accused as to this, and the information given, must relate distinctly to this fact. Information as to the post user, or the past history, of the object produced is not related to its discovery in the setting in which it is discovered. Therefore, what is admissible is the place from where the polythene bag containing pistol and other articles was allegedly recovered. The fact that some terrorist organization had given the pistol and other articles to the appellants or its use would not admissible. Salim Akhtar v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 2003 SC 3469 : (2003) 5 SCC 459 : 2003 CrLJ 2302 : 2003 Crimes 289.

[13246] ● Discovery of fact—Relevancy.—The various requirements of the section can be summed up as follows :

(1) The fact of which evidence is sought to be given must be relevant to the issue. It must be borne in mind that the provision has nothing to do with the question of relevancy. The relevancy of the fact discovered must be established according to the prescriptions relating to relevancy of other evidence connecting it with the crime in order to make the fact discovered admissible.

(2) The fact must have been discovered.

(3) The discovery must have been in consequence of some information received from the accused and not by the accused's own act.

(4) The person giving the information must be accused of any offence.

(5) He must be in the custody of a police officer.

(6) The discovery of a fact in consequence of information received from an accused is custody must be deposed to.

(7) There upon only that portion of the information which relates distinctly or strictly to the fact discovered can be proved. The rest is inadmissible. Avtar Singh v. State of Rajasthan, 2005 SCC (Cri) 597 (603).

[13247] ● Fact discovered.—At one time it was held that the expression "fact discovered" in the section is restricted to a physical or material fact which can be perceived by the senses, and that it does not include a mental fact, now it is fairly settled that the expression "fact discovered" includes not only the physical object produced, but also the place from which it is produced and the knowledge of the accused as to this. Avtar Singh v. State of Rajasthan, 2005 SCC (Cri) 597 (603).

[13248] ● Recovery of weapon.—Weapon allegedly used in the crime was recovered at the instance of accused-respondent from the house of one Chandan who though examined did not support the prosecution case. The recovery in fact could not be said to be from a place to which the respondent alone had the exclusive access. The possibility of the said weapon being with the said Chandan always could not be ruled out. In such factual background much importance could not be placed on the recovery of this nature. State of M.P. v. Ghudan, 2005 SCC (Cri) 801 (805).

[13249] ● Recovery of blood-stained clothes.—The prosecution case is that these clothes were bloodstained though washed, still the stains were visible hence were sent to chemical examination which has established the "stains were of blood. Therefore the same was sent to serologist who opined that he could not give an opinion as to the origin of the blood meaning thereby that the bloodstain that was noticed by him on the clothes cannot be said to be that of human origin. In such situation this circumstance of recovery of bloodstained clothes will be of no assistance to the prosecution. State of M.P. v. Kriparam, 2005 SCC (Cri) 830 (833).

[13251] ● Recovery of blood-stained towel.—It is the case of the prosecution that on 18-3-1984 after the arrest of the accused, he led them to a tree just behind the post office building whereunder a bloodstained towel was recovered. The prosecution had earlier alleged that the body of the deceased was found in a septic tank behind the post office on 17-3-1984. The tree under which the bloodstained towel was recovered is also behind the post office, therefore, the septic tank and the tree must be close to each other. If that be so, how the investigating agency missed noticing the bloodstained towel under the tree on the day of inquest is not explained by the prosecution. From the evidence in this regard led by the prosecution, there is nothing to show that this bloodstained towel was concealed in such a manner that the IO could not have noticed it on 17-3-1984 itself. State of Tamil Nadu v. Sundar, 2005 SCC (Cri) 844 (848-49).

[13252] ● Recovery of blood-stained shirt.—It is the case of the prosecution that the respondent-accused made a disclosure statement at the time when he was arrested at Kaveripattinam, and as per the statement, a bloodstained shirt was recovered. According to the prosecution, this is the same shirt which was worn by the accused when he committed the murder but there is no material to show that he had changed this shirt when he came out of the post office. Therefore, if really this bloodstained shirt is the one that was worn by the accused at the time of the murder then PW-3 would not have failed to notice the bloodstains on his shirt when she saw him and also spoke to him on 16-3-1984. This circumstance also, in our opinion, goes against the prosecution. State of Tamil Nadu v. Sundar, 2005 SCC (Cri) 844 (849).

[13253] ● Confession proof of information furnished by accused.—Section 27, which unusually starts with a proviso, lifts the ban against the admissibility of the confession/ statement made to the police to a limited extent by allowing proof of information of a specified nature furnished by the accused in police custody. In that sense Section 27 is considered to be an exception to the rules embodied in Sections 25 and 26. State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu, 2005 SCC (Cri) 1715 (1806).

[13254] ● Discovery of fact.—The first requisite condition for utilising Section 27 in support of the prosecution case is that the investigating police officer should depose that he discovered a fact in consequence of the information received from an accused person in police custody. Thus, there must be a discovery of fact not within the knowledge of police officer as a consequence of information received. Of course, it is axiomatic that the information or disclosure should be free from any element of compulsion. The next component of Section 27 relates to the nature and extent of information that can be proved. It is only so much of the information as relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered that can be proved and nothing more. It is explicitly clarified in the section that there is no taboo against receiving such information in evidence merely because it amounts to a confession. At the same time, the last clause makes it clear that it is not the confessional part that is admissible but it is only such information or part of it, which relates distinctly to the fact discovered by means of the information furnished. Thus, the information conveyed in the statement to the police ought to be dissected if necessary so as to admit only the information of the nature mentioned in the section. The rationale behind this provision is that, if a fact is actually discovered in consequence of the information supplied, it affords some guarantee that the information is true and can therefore be safely allowed to be admitted in evidence as an incriminating factor against the accused.

Lastly, discovery of fact does not comprehend a pure and mental fact or state of mind relating to a physical object dissociated from the recovery of the physical object. State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu, 2005 SCC (Cri) 1715 (1807).

[13255] ● Discovery of fact—Evidence of I.O..—Co-accused Gilani was not taken any places such as the hide-outs. Where the incriminating articles were found. He only pointed out the house of Shaukat who was in the same locality, which is an innocuous circumstance. Though there is some dispute on this aspect, we are inclined to believe the evidence of the investigating officers because Afsan Guru, in her statement under Section 313, stated that Gilani was with the police when they came to her house. One more important aspect that deserves mention is that there is nothing to show that the information furnished by Gilani led to the discovery of facts such as identification of the deceased terrorists, recovery of chemicals, police uniforms, etc., at the hideouts. That was all done on the basis of information furnished by the other accused. There is no inextricable link between the alleged informations furnished by Gilani and the facts discovered. None of the investigating officers deposed to the effect that on the basis of information furnished by Gilani, any incriminating articles were recovered or hideouts were discovered. On the other hand, the evidence discloses the supervening information which led the IOs to discover the things. State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu, 2005 SCC (Cri) 1715 (1888-89).

[13256] ● Disclosure to Police Officer.—Though in most of the cases the person who makes the disclosure himself leads the police officer to the place where an object is concealed and points out the same to him, however, it is not essential that there should be such pointing out in order to make the information admissible under Section 27. It could very well be that on the basis of information furnished by the accused, the investigating officer may go to the spot in the company of other witnesses and recover the material object. By doing so, the investigating officer will be discovering a fact viz. the concealment of an incriminating article and the knowledge of the accused furnishing the information about it. In other words, where the information furnished by the person in custody is verified by the police officer by going to the spot mentioned by the informant and finds it to be correct, that amounts to discovery of fact within the meaning of Section

27. Of course, it is subject to the rider that the information so furnished was the immediate and proximate cause of discovery. If the police officer chooses not to take the informant accused to the spot, it will have no bearing on the point of admissibility under Section 27, though it may be one of the aspects that goes into evaluation of that particular piece of evidence. State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu, 2005 SCC (Cri) 1715 (1816-17).

[13257] ● Disclosure statement—Admissibility.—In fact the disclosure statement is not required to be signed by virtue of the embargo in Section 162(1). The fact that the signature of the accused was obtained on the disclosure statement does not, however detract from its admissibility to the extent it is relevant under Section 27, Evidence Act. State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu, 2005 SCC (Cri) 1715 (1845).

[13258] ● Joint disclosures.—"A person accused" need not necessarily be a single person, but it could be plurality of the accused. It seems to us that the real reason for not acting upon the joint disclosures by taking resort to Section 27 is the inherent difficulty in placing reliance on such information supposed to have emerged from the mouths of two or more accused at a time. In fact, joint or simultaneous disclosure is a myth, because two or more accused persons would not have uttered informatory words in a chorus. At best, one person would have made the statement orally and the other person would have stated so substantially in similar terms a few seconds or minutes later, or the second person would have given unequivocal nod to what has been sad by the first person. Or, two persons in custody may be interrogated separately and simultaneously and both of them may furnish similar information leading to the discovery of fact. Or, in rare cases, both the accused may reduce the information into writing and hand over the written notes to the police officer at the same time. We do not think that such disclosures by two or more persons in police custody do not go out of the purview of Section 27 altogether. If information is given one after the other without any break, almost simultaneously, and if such information is followed up by pointing out the material thing by both of them, herein find no good reason to eschew such evidence from the regime of Section 27. However, there may be practical difficulties in placing reliance on such evidence. It may be difficult for the witness (generally the police officer), to depose which accused spoke what words and in what sequence. In other words, the deposition in regard to the information given by the two accused may be exposed to criticism from the standpoint of credibility and its nexus with discovery. Admissibility and credibility are two distinct aspects, as pointed out by Mr. Gopal Subramanium. Whether and to what extent such a simultaneous disclosure could be relied upon by the Court is really a matter of evaluation of evidence. State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu, 2005 SCC (Cri) 1715 (1817).

[13259] ● Recovery of weapon of offence confirmed and relied upon.—The evidence of prosecution witnesses that the accused led to the spot and pointed out the place where weapon of offence "Khukri" was thrown. The fact was confirmed when the "Khukri" was recovered from the said spot with the help of diver. Appeal against conviction was dismissed. Ghanashyam Das v. State of Assam, (2005) 13 SCC 387 : 2006 (2) SCC (Cri) 331.

[13260] ● Recovery of knife without something more—Value.—A knife was recovered purported to be pursuant to a confession made by the accused. The statement was admissible in evidence but the knife was recovered from the place of incident without something more which would lead to a discovery of fact, it, therefore, may not have much evidentiary value. Vikramjit Singh v. State of Punjab, (2006) 12 SCC 306 : 2007 (1) SCC (Cri) 732 : 2007 CrLJ 1000 (1006) : 2007 (1) Crimes 181 (SC).

[13261] ● Recovery pursuant to disclosure statement—Admissibility.—Recovery pursuant to disclosure statement made by accused under Section 27, Evidence is admissible in evidence. Nisar Khan v. State of Uttranchal, (2006) 9 SCC 386 : 2006 (2) SCC (Cri) 568 : 2006 (1) Crimes 201 (SC) : JT 2006 (2) SC 262.

[13262] ● Information of accused leading to recovery of fact—Value.—Information disclosed by the accused leading to discovery of fact is based on the mental state of affair of the accused and is thus admissible in evidence. Anil v. Administration of Daman and Diu, (2006) 13 SCC 36 : 2007 (2) Crimes 135 (SC) : JT 2006 (10) SC 586.

[13263] ● Confession—Admissibility.—Discovery of the last remains of the deceased was a relevant fact, which was, thus, admissible in evidence. Appellant had pinpointed the exact place which was to be dug up. He marked the exact area. He also made an oral statement that the box was buried beneath the area so marked, location whereof showed that it was a big area, flooring of which had been well plastered with cement having Cuddapah stone slabs. The video showed that the slabs had been laid there much earlier and were not of recent origin.

In his statements before the investigating officer, he made a confession; but what was admissible in evidence is only that part which would come within the purview of Section 27 of the Evidence Act and not the rest. The Court while analyzing the evidence and appreciating the same cannot take none of confession made before the police.

What was therefore, relevant for the purpose of Section 27 of the Evidence Act was that at the instance of the appellant himself a particular place which had been pin pointed by him had been dug and remains of a body and other article were recovered. Swamy Shraddananda v. State of Karnataka, AIR 2007 SC 2531 (2541, 2542) : (2007) 12 SCC 288.

[13264] ● Nature and scope of Section 27, Evidence Act.—Section 25 of Evidence Act mandates that no confession made to a police officer shall be proved as against a person accused of an offence. Similarly Section 26 of the Evidence Act provides that confession by the accused person while in custody of police cannot be proved against him. However, to the aforesaid rule of Sections 25 to 26 of the Evidence Act, there is an exception carved out by Section 27 of the Evidence Act providing that when any fact is deposed to as discovered in consequence of information received from a person accused of any offence, in the custody of a police officer, so much of such information, whether it amounts to a confession or not, as relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered, may be proved. Section 27 is a proviso to Sections 25 and 26. Such statements are generally termed as disclosure statements leading to the discovery of facts which are presumably in the exclusive knowledge of the maker. Section 27 appears to be based on the view that if a fact is actually discovered in consequence of information given, some guarantee is afforded thereby that the information was true and accordingly it can be safely allowed to be given in evidence.

As the section is alleged to be frequently misused by the police, the Courts are required to be vigilant about its application. The Court must ensure the credibility of evidence by police because this provision is vulnerable to abuse. It does not, however, mean that any statement made in terms of the aforesaid section should be seen with suspicion and it cannot be discarded only on the ground that it was made to a police officer during investigation. The Court has to be cautious that no effort is made by the prosecution to make out a statement of accused with a simple case of recovery as a case of discovery of fact in order to attract the provisions of Section 27 the Evidence Act. Geejaganda Somaiah v. State of Karnataka, AIR 2007 SC 1355 : (2007) 9 SCC 315 : 2007 CrLJ 1792 (1796, 1797) : 2007 (3) SCR 899.

[13265] ● Conditions necessary to attract application of Section 27, Evidence Act.—The first condition necessary for bringing Section 27, Evidence Act into operation is the discovery of a fact, albeit a relevant fact, in consequence of the information recovered, from a person accused of an offence. The second is that the discovery of such fact must be deposed to. The third is that at the time of the receipt of the information, the accused must be in police custody. The last but the most important condition is that only "so much of the information "as relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered is admissible. Amit Singh Bhikam Singh Thakur v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2007 SC 676 : 2007 (1) SCC (Cri) 582 : 2007 CrLJ 1168 (1173) : 2007 (2) Crimes 40 (SC).

[13266] ● Chemical Analyst's report—Human blood found on knife and also on butt of knife recovered—Admissibility.—The Chemical Analyst's Report (Ext. 38) establishes that human blood was found on the knife and also on the butt of the knife having been recovered at the instance of the appellant, is also of some significance. Discovery of the said fact is admissible under Section 27 of the Indian Evidence Act. Ramkrishna v. State of Maharashtra, (2007) 13 SCC 525 : 2007 CrLJ 3431 (3433).

[13267] ● Recovery of weapon at the instance of accused—Admissibility.—Recovery of weapon at the instance of accused that has no nexus with the commission of crime is not admissible in evidence. Keshav v. State of Maharashtra, (2007) 13 SCC 284 : 2007 (13) SCR 264 : 2008 (1) Crimes 88 (SC).

[13268] ● "Fact discovered".—"Fact discovered" in the section includes not only the physical object procured, but also the place from which it is produced and the knowledge of the accused as to this. Inspector of Police, Tamil Nadu v. Balaprasanna, (2008) 11 SCC 645 : 2008 SCC (Cri) 959 : 2008 CrLJ 4332 (4336) : JT 2008 (8) SC 242.

[13269] ● Articles recovered from open ground after 10 days—Discovery of no evidence.—Where the discovery of the relevant articles have been made from the open ground though under the bush, that too after more than 10 days of the incident, such discovery would be without any credence. It does not stand to any reason that the concerned investigating officer did not even bother to look hither and thither when the dead body was found. Such kind of farcical discovery which has been relied by the Court below is unreliable and cannot be accepted.

The discovery is a weak kind of evidence and cannot be wholly relied upon and conviction in a serious matter cannot be based upon the discovery. Mani v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 2008 SC 1021 : 2008 CrLJ 1046 (1050) SC : (2008) 1 Crimes 174.

[13270] ● Requirement in case of confessional statement leading to discovery.—The prosecution while relying upon the confessional statement leading to discovery of articles under Section 27, Evidence Act, has to prove through cogent evidence that the evidence has been made voluntarily and leads to the discovery of relevant facts. Inspector of Police, Tamil Nadu v. Balaprasanna, (2008) 11 SCC 645 : 2008 (3) SCC (Cri) 959 : 2008 CrLJ 4332 (4335) : 2008 (3) Crimes 284 : JT 2008 (8) SC 242.

[13271] ● Requirements of Section 27, Evidence Act.—To attract Section 27 of the Evidence Act, the following are the essential requirements:

(1) The fact of which evidence is sought to be given must be relevant to the issue. It must be born in mind that the provision his nothing to do with the question of relevancy. The relevancy of the fact discovered must be established according to the prescription relating to relevancy of other evidence connecting it with the crime in order to make the fact discovered admissible.

(2) The fact must have been discovered.

(3) The discovery must have been in consequence of some information received from the accused and not by the accuseds' own act.

(4) The person giving the information must be accused of any offence.

(5) The must be in the custody of police officer.

(6) The discovery of a fact in conesquence of information received from an accused in custody must be deposed to.

(7) Thereupon only that portion of the information which relates distinctly or strictly to the fact discovered can be proved. The rest is inadmissible. Inspector of Police, Tamil Nadu v. Balaprorsanna, (2008) 11 SCC 645 : 2008 (3) SCC (Cri) 959 : 2008 CrLJ 4332 : JT 2008 (8) SC 242.

[13272] ● Recovery at the instance of accused—Dispute over date of arrest or held illegal custody not fatal.—It was submitted by the appellants that according to PW-16, the accused Nos. 1 and 6 were seen in the police station on 3.2.2005 and this theory of the accused No. 6 being arrested on 11.2.2005 and on his voluntary information furnished on that day, the motor cycle having been recovered in presence of PW-15, cannot be believed. Of course PW-16 in the cross-examination says that when he went to the police station, he saw the accused Nos. 1 and 6. It was submitted by the State that perhaps it may be a typographical mistake and it may be the accused Nos. 1 and 2 since the records show that it is the accused Nos. 1 and 2, who had been arrested on 3.2.2005. The possibility of typographical mistake is possible. However, even then taking into consideration the contention of the learned counsel for the appellants, at the most it may amount to an illegal custody by the police till 11.2.2005, thereafter recovering the motorcycle on 11.2.2005. That may create some doubt regarding the claim of the police with regard to the recovery. But considering the evidence of PW-15, we find that this suspicion is unfounded. It is quite possible that the police detained, accused No. 6 unnecessarily from 3.2.2005 to 11.2.2005. We find no reason to discard the alleged recovery of motorcycle in furtherance of the information furnished by accused No. 6. Ningappa Yallappa Hosamani v. State of Karnataka, 2009 (8) SCR 421 : JT 2009 (8) SC 66 : 2009 (3) Crimes 58 (SC).

[13273] ● Statement made to police—Use.—A statement made to police can only be used to a limited extent provided under Section 27, Evidence Act and that too against person making statement. Lohit Kaushal v. State of Haryana, 2009 (13) Scale 15.

[13274] ● Disclosure statement—Admissibility.—When some facts have been discovered pursuant to statements made by an accused these statements are admissible against person who had made statements in term of Section 27, Evidence Act. State of Punjab v. Gurnam Kaur, (2009) 11 SCC 225 : JT 2009 (3) SC 373.

[13275] ● Murder and robbery discovery statement—Reliability.—The wrist watches and the camera which was recovered in an after the statement of the accused was recorded, while in custody, would not be faulted with as those items had not only been recovered but duly identified by the owners during investigation as well as the trial. The presence of witnesses during search and seizure of the house of the accused on two occasions was established by the prosecution. No confessional statement made to the police, as alleged, was relied upon by the Courts. It was only the objects recovered, in furtherance to the statement of the accused while in police custody like wrist watches, camera etc. that had been relied upon by the Court to complete the of events relating to crime. Santan Naskar v. State of West Bengal, AIR 2010 SC 3570 : (2010) 8 SCC 249 : 2010 CrLJ 3871 (3874) : (2010) 3 Crimes 201.

[13276] ● Disclosure statement—Admissibility.—The part of disclosure statement, namely, that he was ready to show the place where he had concealed the clothes of the deceased on clearly admissible under Section 127 of the Evidence Act because the same related distinctly to the discovery of the clothes of the deceased from that very place. Aftab Ahmad Ansari v. State of Uttranchal, AIR 2010 SC 773 : (2010) 2 SCC 583 : 2010 (1) Crimes 97 (SC).

[13277] ● Deposition under Section 27—Not voluntary—Hit by Art. 20(3), Constitution of India.—Section 27 starts with the word "provided". Therefore, there is no proviso by way an exception to Sections 25 and 26 of the Evidence Act. If the facts deposed under Section 27 are not voluntary, then it will not be admissible and will be hit by Article 20(3) of the Constitution of India. Mushir Khan v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2010 SC 762 : (2010) SCC 748 : 2010 (1) Crimes 136 (SC).

DISCREPANCIES
§ (See also "CONTRADICTIONS", "INCONSISTENCIES")

[13278] ● Discrepancies.—Where a telegram about murder given almost immediately after the murder was committed does not mention the names of the assailants, the omission is a strong circumstance in favour of accused. Wilayat Khan v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1953 SC 122 : 1953 CrLJ 662 (SC).

[13279] ● Principle of "falsus in uno falsus in ominibus"—Applicability of to criminal trials of.—The principle of falsus in Uno,falsus in omnibus does not apply to criminal trials and it is the duty of the Court to separate the grain from the chaff instead of rejecting the prosecution on general grounds. Abdul Gani v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1954 SC 31 : 1954 CrLJ 323.

[13280] ● Recovery of dead body from field of accused.—It seems that no persons other than the appellants would be anxious to bury the body. They had been seen by many witnesses with the deceased in village Chitbaragaon and village Ballia. They had left village Ballia in the company of the deceased and were last seen in village Sardahi with the deceased. In order to avoid suspicion falling upon them they would be keen to get rid of the body, even if the deceased was not murdered by them. That they buried it in their own filed further shows their complicity. Burying in somebody else's field might have been dangerous. Their field is only about 100 paces from their house. Rabindra Bahadur Singh, appellant, who pointed out the place of burial, was about 13 years old and is Ram Dahin's son. He could not have buried the body alone. Further the appellants denied the whole prosecution story. This again lends some assurance that they were denying the Acts in order to conceal their participation in the crime. Ram Dahin Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1971 SC 2013 : (1971) 3 SCC 898 : 1972 SCC (Cri) 146 : 1971 CrLJ 1451.

[13281] ● Minor variance in evidence not to dislodge prosecution version.—Minor variance in evidence cannot dislodge the prosecution version which is proved beyond, reasonable doubt. Sheo Darshan v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1971 SC 1794 : (1972) 3 SCC 74 : 1972 SCC (Cri) 394 : 1971 CrLJ 1306.

[13282] ● Discrepancies in evidence of all material witnesses.—Where there were discrepancies in the evidence of all the material witnesses which created confusion firstly on the point whether both appellants 1 and 2 struck, and if so, which of the two injuries was caused by appellant 1 and 2 and secondly, whether both of them were armed with sticks. That being the situation, the Supreme Court disagreed with the High Court's view that it was not possible to make a distinction between the case of appellant 3 and that of appellants 1 and 2. This was so because whereas there was definiteness and unanimity amongst all the witnesses in regard to the part played by appellant 3, there was no such consistency and preciseness in regard to the parts appellants 1 and 2 individually played. Nagappan v. State of Tamil Nadu, (1972) 4 SCC (N) 27 : 1971 UJ (SC) 880 (885).

[13283] ● Discrepancy in evidence.—According to Dr. Ghosh's evidence none of the three entry wounds showed any blackening or tattooing. Obviously, therefore, the firing did not take place from a very close range but from some distance at least. No doubt, the three eye-witnesses gave different distances ranging from two to six paces. But they could hardly be expected to have marked at the time the precise distance at which the person shooting the fire-arm was. They, therefore, gave an estimate of the distance at which he was from the victim. It is no wonder that the distances they deposed varied. Nothing can, therefore, turn on such variation. Janak Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1972 SC 1853 : (1973) 3 SCC 50 : 1973 SCC (Cri) 128 (132) : 1972 CrLJ 1177 : 1973 UJ (SC) 105.

[13284] ● Discrepancies having fundamental importance for they tend to falsify evidence of eye-witnesses.—The discrepancies have a fundamental importance for they tend to falsify the evidence of the eye-witnesses and show that the incident happened under the cover of darkness and was in all probability not witnessed by anyone. When the witness says that an axe or spear is used there is no warrant for supposing what the witness means is that the blunt side of the weapon was used. If that be the implication it is duty of the prosecution to obtain clarification from the witnesses as to whether a sharp-edged or piercing instrument was used or a blunt weapon. Hallu v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1974 SC 1936 : (1974) 4 SCC 300 : (1974) SCC (Cri) 462 (466-467) : 1974 CrLJ 1385 : 1974 CrLR (SC) 697 : (1974) 3 SCR 652 : 1974 Cr App R (SC) 172.

[13286] ● Trial Court unduly magnifying minor versions in accounts of witnesses.—The trial Court has unduly magnified minor versions in the accounts of the witnesses which are often the hallmark of the truth of their testimony. Ousee Verghese v. State of Kerala, AIR 1974 SC 739 : (1974) 3 SCC 767 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 243 (244) : 1974 CrLJ 624 : 1974 CrLR (SC) 93 : 1974 UJ (SC) 104.

[13287] ● Discrepancies pertaining to precise number of blows.—The discrepancies pertain to the precise number of blows given by the assailant, the standing or lying posture of the victim at the time of the assault, etc. Such discrepancies in matters of detail always occur even in the evidence of truthful witnesses. Such variations creep in because there are always natural differences in the faculties of different individuals in the matter of observation, perception and memorization of details. They are hardly a ground for rejecting their evidence when there is consensus as to the substratum of the case. Sampat Tatyada Shinde v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1974 SC 791 : (1974) 4 SCC 213 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 382 (386) : 1974 CrLJ 674 : 1974 CrLR (SC) 221 : 1974 UJ (SC) 177.

[13288] ● Evidence of actual assault n complainant by appellant not unworthy of credence.—The fact that the complainant at one place in the course of his deposition stated that he did not know the accused but stated at another place that he knew them for about three years, his evidence as to actual assault on him does not become unworthy of credence for that reason. Dharam Vir v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1974 SC 1156 : (1974) 4 SCC 150 : 1974 SCC (Cri) 352 : 1974 CrLJ 812 (813).

[13289] ● Minor contradiction bound to appear when ignorant and illiterate woman giving evidence.—Minor contradictions are bound to appear when ignorant and illiterate women are giving evidence. Even in the case of trained and educated persons, memory sometimes plays false and this would be much more so in case of ignorant and rustic women. It must also be remembered that the evidence given by a witness would very much depend upon his power of observation and it is possible that some aspects of an incident may be observed by one witness while they may not be witnessed by another though both are present at the scene of offence. It would not, therefore, be right to reject the testimony of eye-witnesses merely on the basis of minor contradictions. Boya Ganganna v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1976 SC 1541 : (1976) 1 SCC 584 : 1976 SCC (Cri) 102 : 1976 CrLJ 1158.

[13290] ● Supreme Court not to interfere with findings or question of fact on minor discrepancies.—This Court does not interfere with findings or question of fact on the strength of minor discrepancies which only indicate that the witnesses were not tutored. Faquira v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1976 SC 915 : (1976) 1 SCC 662 : 1976 SCC (Cri) 151 (153) : 1976 CrLJ 677 : 1976 CrLR (SC) 23 : 1976 UJ (SC) 86 : 1976 Cr App R (SC) 28.

[13291] ● Minor discrepancies and minor improbabilities in evidence not of much consequence.—Ordinarily, minor discrepancies and minor improbabilities in the evidence of witnesses are not of much consequence. But when the witnesses are manifestly disreputable persons, their testimony before it can be acted upon, must pass the test of severe scrutiny and in the process and in the context of the case even minor infirmities may assume importance. Sat Paul v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1976 SC 294 : (1976) 1 SCC 727 : 1976 SCC (Cri) 160 (170) : 1976 CrLJ 295 : 1975 CrLR (SC) 597 : (1976) 2 SCR 11 : 1975 Cr App R (SC) 387.

[13292] ● Discrepancy in prosecution evidence.—The evidence given by Dhanna Lal and Ram Nath in regard to the demand for bribe made by Ram Narain is in conflict with the report made by Dhanna Lal to the Dy. S.P. for the purpose of entrapping the appellant and Ram Narain. The case, as unfolded in the evidence of Dhanna Lal and Ram Nath, was that the demand for bribe was made by Ram Narain on March 29 and 30, and the amount of bribe was settled at Rs. 10 on March 30, while according to the report made by Dhanna Lal to the Deputy Superintendent of Police, the talk about the bribe took place for the first time between Ram Narain and Dhanna Lal on March 31 when he went to take the certified copy. This cannot be regarded as trivial or insignificant discrepancy having no relevance to the veracity of the prosecution case. It is a significant departure made by Dhanna Lal and Ram Nath in their evidence and we do not think that their evidence can be regarded as reliable or trustworthy. Shantilal Rameshwar v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1976 SC 739 : (1976) 1 SCC 577 : 1976 SCC (Cri) 95 (99) : 1976 CrLJ 625 : 1975 UJ (SC) 903 : 1975 Cr App R (SC) 431 : 1975 CrLR (SC) 638.

[13293] ● Some of prosecution witnesses contradicting earlier statement.—Where some of the prosecution witnesses have contradicted their earlier statements under Section 164 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 and the contradictions suggested that the defence version might be true. There were also certain other contradictions on material points in the evidence of some of the prosecution witnesses. The trial Court and the High Court both failed to take note of the serious infirmities in the prosecution case. These infirmities cast a legitimate doubt on the truth of the prosecution story. Accordingly, the accused were acquitted. Bhajan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1977 SC 674 (677) : (1977) 4 SCC 596 (1) : 1977 CrLJ 439 : 1976 CrLR (SC) 556 : 1977 Punj LJ (Cri) 23.

[13295] ● Contradiction in evidence of witness.—Where the story narrated by the witness in his evidence before the Court differed substantially from that set out in his statement before the police and having regard to the large number of contradictions in his evidence—contradictions not on mere matters of detail, but on vital points—it was held unsafe to rely on his evidence and such evidence was excluded from consideration in determining the guilt of accused. N.D. Dhayagude v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1977 SC 381 (382) : (1976) 4 SCC 441 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 10 : 1977 CrLJ 238 : 1976 CrLR (SC) 409.

[13296] ● Electric bulb burning—Witnesses bound to observe weapon and main parts of body where blows given.—The witnesses watched the occurrence from a close distance in an electric light. The assault was so dastardly and gruesome that it must have made a definite and lasting impact on the memory of the witnesses that made them remember the assault with its grotesque details. Human memory is like a camera which takes snapshots of striking incidents and then transmits the same through word of mouth faithfully with absolute accuracy and precision. Moreover, it is not a question of giving photographic details at all, but the witnesses have merely described what they actually saw. It is manifest that in view of the electric bulb burning, the witnesses were bound to observe the weapons with which the accused were armed, the main parts of the body where the blows were given and the like. Dalbir Kaur v. State of Punjab, AIR 1977 SC 472 : (1976) 4 SCC 158 (175) : 1976 SCC (Cri) 527 : 1976 CrLR (SC) 417.

[13297] ● Discrepancies not necessarily demolish testimony.—Discrepancies do not necessarily demolish testimony; delay does not necessarily spell unveracity and tortured technicalities do not necessarily upset conviction when the Court has had a perspicacious, sensitive and correctly oriented view of the evidence and probabilities to reach the conclusion it did, Proof of guilt is sustained despite little infirmities, tossing peccadilloes and peripheral probative shortfalls. The 'sacred cows' of shadowy doubts and marginal mistakes, processual or other, cannot deter the Court from punishing crime where it has been sensibly and substantially brought home." Narotam Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1978 SC 1542 : (1979) 4 SCC 505 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 113 : 1978 CrLJ 1612.

[13298] ● Discrepancy in deposition—Effect.—In the instant case, the discrepancy relates to the names of the person, who were present at the time when his mother was dragged away from their house. In the first information report PW-1 stated that one Pratap Singh was present while the evidence he stated that Kaptan Singh was also present. As the evidence of the Investigating Officer is that Pratap Singh is the same person as Kaptan Singh and they are two different persons. This discrepancy is not of any consequence. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Lalla Singh, AIR 1978 SC 368 : (1978) 1 SCC 142 : 1978 SCC (Cri) 70 : 1978 CrLJ 359 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 529.

[13299] ● Material discrepancies.—In this case the discrepancies are with regard to as to which accused "pressed the deceased and at which part of the body on the ground and sat on which part of the body, with regard to whether the respondent, Kalki, gave the axe blow to the deceased while the latter was standing or lying on the ground and whether the blow was given from the side of the head or from the side of the legs. In the depositions of witnesses there are always normal discrepancies however honest and truthful they maybe. These discrepancies are due to normal errors of observation, normal errors of memory due to lapse of time, due to mental deposition such as shock and horror at the time of the occurrence, and the like. Material discrepancies are those which are not normal, and not expected of a normal person. State of Rajasthan v. Kalki, AIR 1981 SC 1390 : (1981) 2 SCC 752 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 593 (595) : 1981 CrLJ 1012 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 350 : (1981) 3 SCR 504.

[13300] ● Several discrepancies regarding persons to whom confession made.—The High Court has noticed several discrepancies regarding the persons to whom the confession was made, the occasions when the confession was made and what precisely was said by the accused. Having regard to these discrepancies we do not think that we would be justified in taking a different view from the view taken by the High Court. State of Madhya Pradesh v. Dayaram, AIR 1981 SC 2007 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 601 : 1981 CrLJ 1688 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 512.

[13301] ● Evidence—Appreciation of—Discrepancies.—It is no doubt true that the prosecution evidence does suffer from inconsistencies here and discrepancies there but that is a shortcoming from which no criminal case is free. The main thing to be seen is whether those inconsistencies, etc., go to the root of the matter or pertain to insignificant aspects thereof. In the former case, the defence may be justified in seeking advantage of the incongruities obtaining in the evidence. In the latter, however, no such benefit may be available to it. This is a salutary method of appreciation of evidence in criminal cases. Krishna Pillai Sree Kumar v. State of Kerala, AIR 1981 SC 1237 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 669 (672) : 1981 CrLJ 743 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 252.

[13302] ● Discrepancies in statement of witnesses.—The mere fact that Resham Singh (PW 2) had succeeded in escaping unhurt or that there are discrepancies in the statements of Resham Singh (PW-2) and Bachan Singh (PW-3), as to whether they had gone to Amarkot with Hazara Singh deceased on the very day of occurrence or a day earlier, was no ground for jumping to the conclusion that PW-2 was not in the company of the deceased or near about the scene of occurrence when Hazara Singh and Resham Singh were shot dead. The occurrence took place on August 4, 1973, while Resham Singh (PW-2) and Bachan Singh (PW-3) were examined at the trial on December 27, 1974; that is to say, 17 months after the incident. Such discrepancies in regard to collateral or subsidiary facts or matters of detail occur even in the statements of truthful witnesses, particularly, when they are examined to depose to events which happened long before their examination. Such discrepancies are hardly a ground to reject the evidence of the witnesses when there is general agreement and consistency in regard to the substratum of the prosecution case. State of Punjab v. Wassan Singh, AIR 1981 SC 697 : (1981) 2 SCC 1 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 292 (298) : 1981 CrLJ 410 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 122 : (1981) 2 SCR 615.

[13303] ● Inconsistency between ocular and medical evidence.—The evidence of eye-witnesses cannot be relied upon. They are in direct conflict with the medical evidence. While both the witnesses categorically stated that the appellants assaulted the deceased with spades with which the earth was being dug out either from the sharp or the blunt side, the Doctor (PW-1) who held the autopsy of the deceased has clearly stated that the injuries could be caused only by a Kassi. No question was put by the prosecution to the Doctor whether any or all of the injuries on the deceased could be caused in the manner alleged by the witnesses, i.e., by a spade. In view of this glaring inconsistency between the ocular and medical evidence, it will be extremely unsafe and hazardous to maintain the conviction of the appellants on such evidence. Mohar Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1981 SC 1578 : 1981 SCC (Cri) 638 (639, 640) : 1981 CrLJ 998 : 1981 CrLR (SC) 322 (2).

[13304] ● Variation between evidence of witnesses.—It was urged that both the witnesses in their respective statements in the course of investigation have not referred that they pointed out that the currency notes were kept under the pillow. A further omission was pointed out that while Mahavir Prasad has stated that accused started quarrelling with him which necessitated summoning additional police help, both the witnesses while referring to the quarrel picked up by the appellant so as to support the evidence of Mahavir Prasad have failed to refer to this in their statements in the course of investigation. These are omissions of trivial details and have hardly any bearing on the part of the prosecution case. In our opinion the so-called inner variations between the evidence of these two witnesses and omissions of trivial details would not cause any dent in the testimony of these two witnesses. Kishan Chand Mangal v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1982 SC 1511 : (1982) 3 SCC 466 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 92 (101) : 1982 CrLJ 1 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 477 : (1983) 1 SCR 569 : 1982 UJ (SC) 885.

[13305] ● Overmuch importance not to be attached to minor discrepancies—Reasons.—Overmuch importance cannot be attached to minor discrepancies. The reasons are obvious :

(1) By and large a witness cannot be expected to possess a photographic memory and to recall the details of an incident. It is not as if a video tape is replayed on the mental screen.

(2) Ordinarily, it so happens that a witness is overtaken by events. The witness could not have anticipated the occurrence which so often has an element of surprise. The mental faculties, therefore, cannot be expected to be attuned to absorb the details.

(3) The powers of observation differ from person to person. What one may notice, another may not. An object or movement might emboss its image on one person's mind whereas it might go unnoticed on the part of another.

(4) By and large people cannot accurately recall a conversation and reproduce the very words used by them or heard by them. They can only recall the main purport of the conversation. It is unrealistic to expect a witness to be a human tape recorder.

(5) In regard to exact time of an incident, or the time and duration of an occurrence, usually, people make their estimates by guessing on the spur of the moment at the time of interrogation. And one cannot expect people to make very precise or reliable estimates in such matters. Again, it depends on the time-sense of individuals which varies from person to person.

(6) Ordinarily, a witness cannot be expected to recall accurately the sequence of events which take place in rapid succession or in a short time span. A witness is liable to get confused, or mixed up when interrogated later on.

(7) A witness, though wholly truthful, is liable to be overawed by the Court atmosphere and the piercing cross-examination made by Counsel and out of nervousness mix up facts, get confused regarding sequence of events, or fill up details from imagination on the spur of the moment. The subconscious mind of the witness sometimes so operates on account of the fear of looking foolish or being disbelieved though the witness is giving a truthful and honest account of the occurrence witnessed by him perhaps it is a sort of a psychological defence mechanism activated on the spur of the moment." Bharwada Bhoginbhai Hirjibhai v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1983 SC 753 : (1983) 3 SCC 217 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 728 (733, 734) : (1983) 2 Crimes 232.

[13306] ● Discrepancies not going to root of matter.—Discrepancies which do not go to the root of the matter and shake the basic version of the witnesses, therefore, cannot be annexed with undue importance. More so when the all important "probabilities-factor" echoes in favour of the version narrated by the witnesses. Bharwada Bhoginbhai Hirjibhai v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1983 SC 753 : (1983) 3 SCC 217 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 728 (733, 734) : 1983 CrLJ 1096 : 1983 CrLR (SC) 396 : (1983) 3 SCR 280 : (1983) 2 Crimes 232.

[13307] ● Benefit of discrepancy between medical evidence and inquest report be given to appellant.—Dr. Sati Punjabi had found post-mortem staining marks on the back and both and lower limbs of the dead body. On the authority of Dr. Modi's Medical Jurisprudence, 16th Edn. p. 233, Dr. Punjabi opined that the staining marks of post-mortem lividity are sometimes mistaken for bruises caused by violence during life. The Police Officer who prepared the Inquest Panchnama was not an expert on medical jurisprudence. The possibility of his having mistaken the post-mortem staining marks on the waist and shoulder of the deceased, for ante-mortem bruises, could not be ruled out. In any case, in such a situation, as a matter of judicial caution, the benefit of this discrepancy between medical evidence and the inquest report, on this point in issue, ought to have been given to the appellants. Maula Bux v. State of Rajasthan, (1983) 1 SCC 379 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 199 (201).

[13308] ● Injured witness—Evidence not to be rejected on account of discrepancies.—It is not possible to reject the evidence of PW-1 altogether on account of the discrepancies having regard to the fact that he is an injured witness whose presence at the scene of the occurrence when the deceased was attacked was not disputed before us. Ram Avtar Rai v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1985 SC 880 (883) : (1985) 2 SCC 61 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 156 : 1985 CrLJ 902 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 180 : 1985 Cr App R (SC) 121 : (1985) 2 Crimes 93.

[13309] ● Extra-judicial confession—Minor variation in language.—Some minor variations in the language used by the witness while giving evidence before the committing Magistrate and before the Sessions Court in respect of the extra-judicial confession, if there is a substantial reproduction, could not permit a total rejection of his evidence. While appreciating the evidence of a witness, the approach must be whether the evidence of the witness read as a whole appears to have a ring of truth. Once the impression is formed, it is undoubtedly necessary for the Court to scrutinise the evidence more particularly keeping in view the deficiencies, drawbacks and infirmities pointed out in the evidence as a whole and evaluate them to find out whether it is against the general tenor of the evidence given by the witness and whether the earlier evaluation of evidence is shaken as to render it unworthy of the belief. Minor discrepancies on trivial matters on touching the core of the case, hyper-technical approach by taking sentences torn out of context here or there from the evidence, attaching importance to some technical error committed by the Investigating Officer not going to the root of the matter would not ordinarily permit rejection of the evidence as a whole. Unless there are reasons weighty and formidable, it would not be proper to reject the evidence on the ground of minor variations or infirmities in the matter of trivial details. Even honest and truthful witnesses may differ in some details unrelated to the main incident because power of observation, retention and reproduction differ with individuals. Cross-examination is an unequal duel between a rustic and refined lawyer. State of Uttar Pradesh v. M.K. Anthony, AIR 1985 SC 48 (54, 55) : (1985) 1 SCC 505 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 105 : 1985 CrLJ 493 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 41.

[13311] ● Evidence of eye-witness and other witnesses trustworthy.—The High Court exercising appellate jurisdiction instead of scrutinizing the evidence of these four eye-witnesses individually, discarded their evidence wholesale, substantially on the ground that the prosecution version as narrated in the FIR at the instance of one of them was in some respects discrepant from the prosecution version as unfolded by these witnesses in the Court. This approach was totally unwarranted and impermissible. The report made in the hand of one Yadunath Prasad which he had written as per the dictation of PW-1 was treated as FIR. At best the evidence of PW-1 could have been tested with reference to the version contained in the FIR and appropriate inference could have been drawn vis-a-vis PW-1 on the basis of the alleged discrepancy. The evidence of the other eye-witnesses who had nothing to do with the narration of the FIR could not have been collectively condemned wholesale on the basis of the alleged discrepancies in the context of the previous statement of PW-1 contained in the FIR on the one hand, and their evidence at the trial, on the other hand. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Brahma Das, AIR 1986 SC 1769 : (1986) 4 SCC 93 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 368 (391) : 1986 CrLJ 1732 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 410 : JT 1986 SC 209 : (1986) 3 Crimes 369.

[13312] ● Appellant stranger to witnesses.—Admittedly, the appellant was a stranger to PWs 1 and 2 and hence they could not have known who he was and what was his occupation. PWs 1 and 2 had not made any inquiries to find out who the appellant was and where he was residing. The strange, version given by PW-1 is that before the appellant began his speech he introduced himself to the demonstrators by giving out his name, address and occupation. Another discrepancy noticed is that while PW-1 has stated that the appellant addressed the gathering from the Chaubara with a microphone in his hand, PW-2 has stated that the appellant stood in the midst of the demonstrators and addressed them and moreover PW-2 makes no reference to the appellant having any microphone. While PW-2 has stated that he did not apprehend any violent reaction from the public on account of the speech made by the appellant, PW-1 would say that from the moment the appellant started introducing himself to the demonstrators he anticipated things and began to take notes of the appellant's speech. The witnesses are not reliable. Balbir Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 1987 SC 1053 : (1987) 1 SCC 533 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 193 : 1987 CrLJ 853 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 202 : (1987) 1 SCR 1095 : (1987) 2 Crimes 874.

[13313] ● No inconsistency between medical evidence and ocular evidence.—The medical officer stated the injuries found on the body of the deceased could be the result of either two shots or even more than two shots, but the evidence of eye-witnesses clearly showed that there were two shots. The Supreme Court held that there was no inconsistency between the medical evidence and the ocular evidence and the inconsistency deposed by the medical officer was merely a probability and it was not fatal to the prosecution case. Maghar Singh v. State of Punjab, (1987) 2 SCC 642 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 403 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 539 : 1987 CAR 342.

[13315] ● Discrepancies due to normal errors of perception or observances not to be given importance.—"The Court while appreciating the evidence must not attach undue importance to minor discrepancies. The discrepancies which do not shake the basic version of the prosecution case may be discarded. The discrepancies which are due to normal errors of perception or observation should not be given importance. The errors due to lapse of memory may be given due allowance. The Court by calling into aid its vast experience of men and matters in different cases must evaluate the entire material on record by excluding the exaggerated version given by any witness. When a doubt arises in respect of certain facts alleged by such witness, the proper course is to ignore that fact only unless it goes into the root of the matter so as to demolish the entire prosecution story. The witnesses nowadays go on adding embellishments to their version perhaps for the fear of their testimony being rejected by the Court. The Courts, however, should not disbelieve the evidence of such witnesses altogether if they are otherwise trustworthy." Appabhai v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1988 SC 696 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 559 (565) : 1988 CrLJ 848 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 178 : JT 1988 (1) SC 249 : (1988) 2 UJ (SC) 27 : (1988) 1 Crimes 606.

[13316] ● Witness giving diametrically inconsistent version.—PW-4 has deposed that A-1 to A-4 assaulted PW-1 and A-1 to A-6 assaulted PW-9. But this witness who was in charge of the Jute Department as on the date of the occurrence did not render any aid to the injured persons nor did he report the matter to the officials, but he immediately left the scene of the occurrence. he gives a diametrically inconsistent version in that whilst he would say in the chief-examination that he saw A-1 snatching away the wrist watch, he in the same breath would deny the same answer in his cross-examination stating "I did not see the snatching of the watch". He admits that he has not told the Secretary of the Mill what he witnesses.

Lalit Kumar Sharma v. Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, Govt. of West Bengal, AIR 1989 SC 2134 : 1991 SCC (Cri) 382 (387) : 1989 CrLJ 2297 : 1989 CrLR (SC) 634 : JT 1989 (3) SC 549 : (1989) 3 Crimes 193.

[13317] ● Evidence of witnesses nothing but conglomeration of contradiction.—From PW-10, it is elicited that she during the investigation stated to the Police that her husband with appellant came to her house even at 8 p.m. while the case of the prosecution is that the appellant came to the house of PW-10 only at about 10.30 p.m. or 11 p.m. DW-1 who was then the writer in the Police Station (MHC) states that the appellant was at the station at 10.05 p.m. If it is so, as rightly pointed out by the learned defence Counsel, the appellant could not have accompanied PW-7 at 10.30 or 11.00 p.m. to his house to get the illegal gratification. Thus, a scrutiny of the evidence of PWs-7 and 10 reveals that their version is nothing but a conglomeration of contradiction. Kewal Krishan v. State of Punjab, AIR 1989 SC 950 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 698 (701) : 1989 CrLJ 1248 : 1989 CrLR (SC) 250 : JT 1989 (1) SC 155 : (1989) 1 Crimes 389.

[13318] ● Witness disposing that she saw respondents attacking her husband.—While PW-8, Safurannessa, has deposed that she saw the respondents attacking her husband and son she has not stated so in her statement under S. 161(3), CrPC. Similarly, while PW-10, Subrat Ali, would say in Court that he had seen the respondents attacking his father and brother, he has told the Investigating Officer during the investigation that he cannot give the names of the assailants of the two victims. State of Assam v. Bhalu Shaikh, AIR 1989 SC 1097 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 643 (648) : 1989 CrLJ 879 : 1989 CrLR (SC) 335 : (1989) 1 Crimes 689.

[13319] ● Minor discrepancies not to render evidence of witness unreliable.—It is true that this Court has held that where the prosecution rests on the sole testimony of an eye-witness, the same should be wholly reliable. However, that does not mean that each and every type of infirmity or minor discrepancies would render the evidence of such witness unreliable. Jayaram Shiva Tagore v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1991 SC 1735 : 1992 SCC (Cri) 62 (64) : (1991) 2 (Supp) SCC 677 : 1991 CrLJ 2192 : 1992 CrLR (SC) 189.

[13320] ● Bones recovered sent for chemical analysis.—It appears that only the bones stated to have been recovered were sent for chemical analysis and the report of the serologist was that it was not possible to give any opinion regarding the origin, sex and age. The report had not even stated that they were human bones. Though PW-10 had stated that there were with him two others at that time and PW-17 had taken PW-10 and the said two others also to the place where the body was stated to have been burnt, they had not been examined. We have read the evidence carefully and the evidence also does not impress us that he is telling the truth. Bhupendra Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1991 SC 1083 : 1991 SCC (Cri) 571 : 1991 CrLJ 1337 : 1991 CrLR (SC) 296 : (1991) 2 Crimes 221.

[13321] ● Causing disappearance of dead body.—A case cannot be thrown out merely on the ground that the dead body is not traced when the other evidence clinchingly establishes that the deceased met his death at the hands of the accused. It may be a legitimate right of any Police Officer to interrogate or arrest any suspect on some credible material but it is needless to say that such an arrest must be in accordance with the law and the interrogation does not mean inflicting injuries. It should be in its true sense and purposeful namely to make the investigation effective. Torturing a person and using third degree methods are of medieval nature and they are barbaric and contrary to law. The police would be accomplishing behind their closed doors precisely what the demands of our legal order forbid.

It is a pity that some of the Police Officers, as it has happened in this case, have not shed such methods even in the modern age. They must adopt some scientific methods than resorting to physical torture. If the custodians of law themselves indulge in committing crimes then no member of the society is safe and secure. If Police Officers who have to provide security and protection to the citizens indulge in such methods they are creating a sense of insecurity in the minds of the citizens. It is more heinous than a game-keeper becoming a poacher.

Under these circumstances the one and the only inference that can be drawn is that the deceased expired because of the injuries caused by the accused and they must have caused the disappearance of his dead body. Bhagwan Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1992 SC 1689 : 1992 SCC (Cri) 629 : 1992 CrLJ 3144 : 1992 CrLR (SC) 454 : (1992) 2 Crimes 329.

[13322] ● Discrepancy minor not to render testimony of witness unworthy.—The High Court fell into patent error in rejecting the testimony PW-26 and PW-27. The High Court rejected the testimony of PW-17 on the ground that the Investigating Officer PW-31 stated PW-17 had six 'Heralikayis' in his hand at the time of recording of his statement, whereas PW-29 stated that after the occurrence when he went to the house of PW-26 he saw two 'Heralikayis' in the hands of PW-17. Ultimately three 'Heralikayis' were produced in the Court. The material part of the testimony of PW-17 is that he was sent to the market to buy 'Heralikayis', whether the 'Heralikayis' were two, three or six was not material. In any case the discrepancy is so minor that it cannot render the testimony of PW-17 unworthy of acceptance. The High Court was not justified in rejecting the evidence of PW-17 on a flimsy ground. State of Karnataka v. Lakshmanaiah, AIR 1993 SC 100 : (1992) 2 SCC 420 : 1992 SCC (Cri) 755 (758) : 1992 CrLJ 3997 : JT 1992 (4) SC 326 : 1992 (2) Crimes 1130.

[13323] ● Witnesses to second dying declaration totally inconsistent about statement made by accused.—"The witnesses to the second dying declaration are totally inconsistent about the statement allegedly made by the accused to all of them. They differ on material aspects. The variation in their testimony as regards the assault by lathis and the participation of all the accused in the commission of the crime renders it unsafe to rely on them to hold that the dying declaration as alleged by the prosecution had been made by the deceased to these witnesses." Govind Narain v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1993 SC 2457 : 1993 SCC (Cri) 1012 (1018) : 1993 CrLJ 2598.

[13324] ● Witness lodged complaint but did not tell who stabbed his father—Not serious discrepancy.—The witness also denied the suggestion that by the time his father spoke the name that Ramku had stabbed him, the other villagers gathered there. In this context, he was confronted with his earlier statement where he is supposed to have stated that his father was stabbed by Ramku. He also admitted that he lodged his complaint but did not tell others who stabbed his father. This is not a serious discrepancy because most of the villagers might have come to know about the incident. Kathi Ramku Aligbhai v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1993 SC 2472 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 171.

[13325] ● No explanation offered concerning contradiction involved in two statement.—In this case, in the chief examination PW-2 mother of deceased stated that there were domestic quarrels between her daughter, the deceased and the accused and coming to know of the occurrence she and her husband went and questioned the deceased who told them that the accused beat her, poured kerosene and set her on fire. Having stated so in the chief examination, in the cross-examination she introduced a different version that her daughter was conscious and on being questioned by them she told them that she got annoyed with her husband and she herself poured kerosene on her person and that if she survived after the said incident, she would be held responsible for the act and, therefore, she falsely gave the name of her husband as the person who poured kerosene and set fire. Then in the re-examination she was asked as to why she gave two statements for which she gave an evasive answer by stating that she did not want to offer any explanation concerning the contradiction involved in the two statements. This aspect has been considered by the Courts below and it has been rightly held that in view of her evasive answer in the re-examination, the only inference is that certain circumstances like her affection for the grand-children must have compelled her to give such a version. Ganpat Mahadeo Mane v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1993 SC 1180 : 1993 SCC (Cri) 491 (495) : 1993 CrLJ 298 : (1993) 1 UJ (SC) 213 : JT 1992 (6) SC 177 : (1992) 3 Crimes 633.

[13326] ● Witnesses categorically stating they heard shouts from front side.—What all the three witnesses have categorically stated is that they heard the shouts from the front side and perhaps they saw the deceased walking that side and knowing that he might have reached that place and thought that they should march from the backyard. However, this is a very minor detail on the basis of which the evidence of PW-10 cannot be rejected. Kathi Ramku Aligbhai v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1993 SC 2472 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 171.

[13327] ● Recovery of arms not supported by reliable evidence.—On the question whether the recovered arm together with cartridges were kept in parcels or not, there are contrary statements between ASI and the Head Constable, while former would state that they were not kept under seals, the latter would depose that they were kept in sealed parcels. This casts a serious doubt about the version of the prosecution. Kartar Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1993 SC 341 : 1993 SCC (Cri) 785 (787) : 1993 CrLJ 183.

[13328] ● Evidence of eye-witnesses supported by FIR medical evidence and other circumstantial evidence.—The only point raised against the veracity of the eye-witnesses is that they have specifically stated that the accused fired thrice and that the postmortem on the dead body of Deputy Singh showed four gun-shot wounds and Lekhraj had only one gun-shot wound and therefore, there is some discrepancy in their evidence when examined in the light of the medical evidence. This cannot be a discrepancy in the strict sense.

Even if the witnesses have not clearly stated as to how many times each one of the assailants fired that does not affect their veracity. The medical evidence amply establishes that the two deceased persons died of fire-arm injuries. That being the position the details as to the number of shots fired being not exactly given by the witnesses do not affect their veracity. Prem Chand v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1994 SC 1534 (1536) : 1994 SCC (Cri) 11 : 1994 CrLJ 1379 : JT 1993 (5) SC 230 : (1993) 3 Crimes 232 : 1993 Cr App R (SC) 334.

[13329] ● Interested witnesses—Evidence of.—PW-3 is in no way related to the deceased or to the PW-2. He gave an explanation for his visit to the tubewell along with PW-2 before the Police Station was to irrigate the land of PW-2 whereas in the present deposition he prevaricated and deposed that he went to the tubewell of the deceased to inform him about the collection of meagre amount of money for presenting the same to the contesting candidate. The High Court noticed that this prevarication shows that he has deliberately improved his version from stage to stage. When interested witnesses are examined it is well settled that the evidence has to be tested in the light of the probabilities and the previous statements and the surrounding circumstances.

In the FIR it is stated that PWs-2 and 3 went to irrigate the field from that tubewell water but while giving statements at the trial they deposed that only PW-2 was to irrigate the field by working the tubewell while PW-3 had accompanied him to the tubewell to meet the deceased as mentioned above. Their presence thus becomes doubtful from the fact that they have not come forward with a proper explanation for giving two versions. State of Punjab and Gurmej Singh v. Jit Singh, AIR 1994 SC 549 (550) : (1995) 2 SCC (Supp) 365 : 1994 CrLJ 1116.

[13330] ● Witnesses not in position because of injuries on them to give consistent and detailed account.—This is a case where a large number of accused as many as 13 or 14 variously armed went to the house where the deceased as well as PWs-1 and 4 were sitting and in a high-handed manner climbed the roof of the house in which the deceased and the two injured witnesses had taken shelter and made a big hole in the roof and then attacked three persons. In such an occurrence even if the eye-witnesses have improved and have not given consistent version regarding the part played by each of the accused that by itself will not be a ground to acquit the accused. The presence of PWs-1 and 4 has not been in dispute and having regard to the number of injuries on them, it would have been impossible for the witnesses to give a detailed account and in any way if while giving some account they have improved or there are some omissions, that would not be a ground to acquit the accused persons whose names have been consistently mentioned throughout in a case of this nature and S. 149, IPC is applicable here. Navganbhai Somabhai v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1994 SC 1187 (1189) : 1995 SCC (Cri) 132 : (1994) 3 SCC (Supp) 653 : 1994 CrLJ 1103.

[13332] ● Evidence if eye-witness—Not giving many details of occurrence.—PW-7 admitted that she did not give many details of the occurrence in her statement under S. 161, CrPC and in her statement under S. 164, CrPC. But that by itself is not a ground to reject her evidence. PW-7 witnessed this ghastly occurrence and even if she has failed to mention some details, that by itself is not of much significance. Govind v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1994 SC 826 (829) : 1994 SCC (Cri) 707 : 1994 CrLJ 938 : 1994 CrLR (SC) 42 : JT 1993 SCC (Supp) 283 : (1994) 1 UJ (SC) 5.

[13333] ● Disappearance of evidence—Attempt to case.—The accused examined her and he just wrote a certificate Ex. P. 7 and in that certificate he simply mentioned thus : "This is to certify that Smt. Sabita Banerjee aged about 35 years wife of Sri Pronab Banerjee of Jadavpur Police quarter, Calcutta-32 expired on 2-7-76. I found her dead, the cause of which I cannot say." The further case of the prosecution is that during the search of the house of Pronab Banerjee the police recovered another certificate marked as Ex. P. 33 which was in the handwriting of the accused and was written on his letter-head and the same reads as follows :

> "This is to certify that Smt. Sabita Banerjee wife of Pronab Banerjee of Flat No. 1/2/1, Raja S.C. Mullick Road, Calcutta-32, has been suffering from Schizophrania with nutrition deficiency. She expired at 3.15 a.m. on this date due to respiratory failure. Her age was about 37 years."

The fact remains that the dead body was sent for regular post-mortem and a case of murder was also registered against Pronab Banerjee, the husband of the deceased. In such an event, we fail to see as to how, even assuming that Ex. P. 33 was issued by the appellant, it would amount to an attempt to commit an offence under Section 201, IPC. There is marked difference between preparation and attempt and in this case it is highly doubtful whether the appellant attempted to commit an offence under Section 201, IPC. According to the prosecution and as held by both the Courts below, the appellant issued Ex. P. 7 in the first instance and the contents of Ex. P. 7 do not in any manner indicate that he intended to facilitate the cremation by issuing such a certificate. On the other hand, the contents of Ex. P. 7 which was issued in the presence of the Police Officer, had in one sense paved the way for further investigation regarding the cause of death. In such a situation merely because Ex. P. 33 was seized from the house of Pronab Banerjee, the same would not fully incriminate the appellant for an offence under Sections 201 read with 511, IPC. At any rate, a reasonable doubt arises about the guilt of the appellant particularly in view of the fact that there is absolutely no material to show whether anybody had seen Ex. P. 33 earlier and whether there was any attempt to put the same to use for facilitating the cremation. Accordingly the appeal is allowed. The conviction and sentence awarded to the accused are set aside. If he is on bail, his bail bonds shall stand cancelled. Balai Chandra Biswas v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1994 SC 914 : (1994) 1 SCC 423 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 536 : 1994 CrLJ 1035 : (1994) 1 UJ 540.

[13334] ● Discrepancies in deposition of witnesses.—It may be stated here that about the recovery of the said pistol and cartridges there are discrepancies in the depositions of the witnesses. While PW-2, stated that the pistol was recovered from the right dub of the chadar, PW-3, stated that the said pistol was recovered from the left dub of the chadar. On the question of the number of cartridges stated to have been recovered from the accused, there is also discrepancy. PW-2 stated that two cartridges were recovered from the pocket of the shirt of the accused but PW-3 stated three cartridges were recovered from the accused. After considering the facts and circumstances of the case it appears that there is discrepancy in the depositions of the PWs-2 and 3 and in the absence of any independent corroboration such discrepancy does not inspire confidence about the reliability of the prosecution case. Megha Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 1995 SC 2339 (2340, 2341) : (1996) 11 SCC 709 : 1995 CrLJ 3988.

[13335] ● No material discrepancies in deposition of eye-witnesses.—The learned Counsel has also contended that there is material contradiction in the first information report lodged by PW-1 and also the depositions given by PW-2 inasmuch as in the first information report it was stated that A-2, A-6 and A-7 caught hold of the deceased while others assaulted him, but in his deposition PW-1 has stated that A-2, A-6 and A-8 caught hold of the deceased. The learned Counsel has also stated that there is also discrepancy between the depositions of PWs-2 and 3 inasmuch as while PW-2 stated that A-2, A-3 and A-7 caught hold of deceased but PW-3 stated that A-2, A-6 and A-7 caught hold of the deceased. After giving our consideration to the facts and circumstances of this case and considering the depositions and also the FIR and the post-mortem report, it appears to us that there is no material discrepancy in the depositions of the eye-witnesses for which such depositions should not be accepted. The statements made in the FIR have been substantially corroborated by the depositions of the eye-witness. There is force in this contention of the learned counsel for the respondent that after a lapse of time of more than a year, it was not unlikely that one or two eye-witnesses could not clearly remember all the names of the accused who had caught hold of the deceased. Kavali Bhaskar v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 1995 SC 1961 (1962, 1963) : 1995 CrLJ 3616.

[13336] ● Causing disappearance of evidence of murder.—When the appellants had taken upon themselves to assert that death had occurred on account of brief illness of the deceased, their word in that regard could not be accepted unless it was supported by production of some evidence either of a doctor or a quack who could supposedly have attended on her, or by evidence of co-villagers who would have supported the defence that the deceased was known to have died a natural death. Not only is the defence lacking in this regard but the non-information of the death of the deceased to her parental family further leads to the conclusion that the defence suggestion was pulpably false. This casts a reflection when integrated with the strong motive being the resentment on breaking of the betrothal afore referred to. The fact that there was a marriage in the parental family of the deceased would bring to the fore the hostile attitude of the appellants as the going of the deceased to her parental house could become a source of strife between them and the deceased, which could have prompted them to do away with her. All these circumstances could well be explaned away or correspondingly established had the dead body of the deceased been not cremated surreptitiously in the absence of her family member. The totality of circumstances thus persuade us to conclude that the dead body of the deceased could have revealed commission of offence punishable at least under Section 304/II, IPC and for destruction of that evidence by cremation of the dead body, the appellants had attracted to themselves the third part of Section 201, IPC whereunder they would be liable to suffer imprisonment for a term which may extend to 2½ years. Invoking that part, but reduce the sentence of the appellants to one year's rigorous imprisonment. Dhura v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1995 SC 1963 : 1995 Supp (3) SCC 713 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 1154 : 1995 CrLJ 3619.

[13338] ● Accused person assisting persons committing murder in causing disappearance of body clandestinely.—As regards the charge of conspiracy, PW-10 has testified that the appellants and the other four co-convicts were talking with each other at a short distance and during said discussion, they decided to cause the disappearance of the dead body in a clandestine manner. In pursuance of this conspiracy, they initially tried to burn the dead body and thereafter extinguished the fire, put the dead body into the gunny bag and after carrying it in the police van near the sleeper bridge, they threw it in the Sutlej river. PW-1 and PW-2 also testified to this effect. Each one of them had substantially undergone a substantive sentence. They are the Government employees. Pursuant to the order passed by this Court, they have been released on bail. In view of these circumstances, it was contended that ends of justice would be met if the appellants are sentenced to the period which they have already undergone. After hearing counsel for the parties as regards the quantum of sentence, we are of the opinion that ends of justice would be met if the substantive sentence of each of the accused under Sections 201/120-B, IPC is reduced to the period which they had already undergone. We accordingly do so. Ram Singh v. State of Himachal Pradesh, 1997 SCC (Cri) 729 : 1997 CrLJ 1829 : 1997 CrLR (SC) 283 : (1997) 1 Crimes 205 (SC).

[13339] ● Little discrepancy not enough to discard consistent evidence.—PW-2 had stated that she had spoken to her husband on the very day Munibai told about the respondent having an 'evil eye' which was about 15 days before the occurrence, whereas the evidence of PW-3 is that his wife had stated to him about this aspect 7-8 days before the occurrence. We do not think of this little discrepancy is enough to discard the otherwise consistent evidence on this point, especially when the statement made by PW-3 that he had asked the respondent to vacate the house was not challenged in cross examination. State of Madhya Pradesh v. Dhirendra Kumar, AIR 1997 SC 318 (319) : (1997) 1 SCC 93 : (1997) 1 SCC 93 : 1997 SCC (Cri) 54 : JT 1996 (10) SC 93 : (1996) 4 Crimes 195.

[13340] ● Causing disappearance of evidence.—The first paragraph of the section contains the postulates for constituting the offence while the remaining three paragraphs prescribe three different tiers of punishments depending upon the degree of offence in each situation. The two indispensable ingredients for all the three tiers in Section 201 are :

(1) The accused should have had the knowledge that an offence has been committed or at least that he should have had reasons to believe it.

(2) He should then have caused disappearance of evidence of commission of that offence. Prosecution cannot escape from establishing the aforesaid two basic ingredients.

for conviction of the accused under Section 201.

The gravest degree contemplated in Section 201 is punishable with the maximum sentence of imprisonment for seven years. The minimum requirement for the offence to reach the said peak degree is that the offender should have caused disappearance of evidence of another offence which is punishable with death, and that should be established in addition to the above mentioned two basic ingredients. Even if the two basics are established, and the prosecution failed to establish the next requirement the Court cannot convict the accused for the highest tier specified in the section. It is not necessary that the offender himself should have been found guilty of the main offence for the purpose of convicting him of offence under Section 201. Nor is it absolutely necessary that somebody else should have been found guilty of the main offence. Nonetheless, it is imperative that prosecution should have established two premises. First is that an offence has been committed and second is that the accused knew about it or he had reasons to believe the commission of that offence. Then and then alone the prosecution can succeed, provided the remaining postulates of the offence are also established. The cremation was hurried through after physically keeping her kith and kin away from the scene. No doubt, such a culpable hurry enkindles fumes of suspicion which can be regarded as an incriminating circumstance against those who showed such a haste. But that circumstance stands isolated and unconcatenated with any other circumstance. Ram Saran Mahto v. State of Bihar, AIR 1999 SC 3435 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 254 : 1999 CrLJ 4311 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 593 : 1999 (3) Crimes 125.

[13341] ● Discrepancy distinguished from contradiction.—Discrepancy has to be distinguished from contradiction. Whereas contradiction in the statement of the witness is fatal for the case, minor discrepancy or variance in evidence will not make the prosecution's case doubtful. The normal course of the human conduct would be that while narrating a particular incidence, there may occur minor discrepancies, such discrepancies in law may render credential to the depositions. Parrot like statements are disfavoured by the Courts. In order to ascertain as to whether the discrepancy pointed out was minor or not or the same amounted to contradiction, regard is required to be had to the circumstances of the case by keeping in view the social status of the witnesses and environment in which such witness was making the statement. State of Himachal Pradesh v. Lekh Raj, AIR 1999 SC 3916 (3921) : (2000) 1 SCC 247 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 147 : 2000 CrLJ 44.

[13342] ● Minor embellishment and trivial discrepancies.—Be it noted that the High Court is within its jurisdiction being the first appellate Court to re-appraise the evidence, but the discrepancies found in the ocular account of two witnesses, unless they are so vital, cannot affect the credibility of the evidence of the witnesses. There is bound to be some discrepancies between the narrations of different witnesses when they speak on details, and unless the contradiction are of a material dimension, the same should not be used to jettison the evidence in its entirety. Incidentally, corroboration of evidence with mathematical niceties cannot be expected in criminal cases. Minor embellishment, there may be, but variations by reason therefor should not render the evidence of eye-witnesses unbelievable. Trivial discrepancies ought not to obliterate an otherwise acceptable evidence. Leela Ram (D) through Duli Chandi v. State of Haryana, AIR 1999 SC 3717 (3720, 3721) : (1999) 9 SCC 525 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 21 : JT 1999 (8) SC 271.

[13343] ● Hurdles in believing that—Prosecution witness witnessing occurrence.—"We have noted some hurdles in the way for believing that PW-1 witnessed the occurrence. The foremost amongst such hurdles is the unambiguous version given by PW-1 in his first written complaint that he saw A4 (Shashiah) who is the father of A-1 to A-3 participating in the occurrence and a specific role (inflicting axe blows on the deceased) has also been ascribed to that accused. But it was latter understood that A-4 was in fact locked up in a Jail during that very night pursuant to a conviction imposed on him by a Criminal Court on the previous day. The jail records as well as the Court proceedings conceived would have proved that fact and, hence, the Police could not array A-4 (Shashiah) as a "participus criminus." That might be the reason why Police allotted a different role to A-4 (Shashiah) as the chief conspirator over the murder of the deceased. When PW-1 gave evidence in Court, he adopted a dubious strategy by saying that A-4 was not present at the scene of occurrence but he saw a person having striking resemblance to A-4 giving axe blows on the deceased . . . .We have no manner of doubt that PW-2's present version, that he identified an assailant having close resemblance with A-4, is nothing but a canard concocted for the purpose of escaping from the charge of a rank perjury." Malempati Pattabi Narendra v. Ghattamaneni Maruthi Prasad, AIR 2000 SC 2195 : (2000) 5

[13344] ● Inconsistency in evidence regarding time when Panch witnesses called.—The trial Court found that the prosecution evidence could safely be relied on even though there was some inconsistency in the evidence regarding the time at which the Panch witnesses were called. PSI Chavda and the constable accompanying him had stated before the Court that the Panch witnesses were called before they had stopped the appellants. According to the Panch witnesses they were called thereafter. The panchnama clearly stated that the Panchas were called after PSI Chavda had stopped the appellants while they were proceeding on the scooter on the road near Nursing Takri. This contradiction is of no significance and the trial Court was right in disbelieving the prosecution evidence on this ground. Sarjudas v. State of Gujarat, AIR 2000 SC 403 (404) : (1999) 8 SCC 508 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 1501 : 2000 CrLJ 509 : (1999) 4 Crimes 185.

[13345] ● Discrepancies—No explanation from side of prosecution.—PW-17 was examined as ballistic expert. According to him metallic bullets-Ex EB-1 recovered from the body of Dr. Dubey and Ex EB-2 recovered from the body of deceased-Manorama, were not fired from the pistols recovered from the possession of accused-respondents and Brijendra Kumar. Moreover there were gun shot injuries on accused Brijendra Kumar. PW-2 and Munnu Singh were also injured. No explanation is forthcoming from the side of prosecution for the above discrepancies, therefore we hold that the High Court has rightly acquitted the accused. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Ashok Dixit, AIR 2000 SC 1066 (1069) : (2000) 3 SCC 70 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 579 : 2000 CrLJ 1436.

[13346] ● Minor variation in evidence.—There may be some variation but there exists no major contradiction on record. Modi's house and Rahar field are two places which have been mentioned by the accused but the factum of being surrounded and the firing done sharply uncontradict. Minor variations may be there but if on a perusal of the evidence in it entirety, it appears to be otherwise trustworthy, question of the evidence being non-trustworthy would not arise. The Court can shift the chaff from the grain and find out the truth from the evidence itself. Sukhdev Yadav v. State of Bihar, AIR 2001 SC 3678 (3683) : (2001) 8 SCC 86 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 1416 : 2002 CrLJ 80 : (2001) 4 Crimes 6.

[13347] ● Discrepancies in evidence of witnesses.—True there were discrepancies in the evidence of PWs-8, 10 & 12 but there was no discrepancy worth quoting for consideration as they are immaterial. Such discrepancies are common features in the testimony of any two witnesses. It was too much of a strain for the judicial mind to ferret out some minor discrepancies as between the testimony of those three witnesses. State Govt. of NCT of Delhi v. Sunil, (2001) 1 SCC 652 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 248 (250) : 2001 CrLJ 504 : (2001) 1 Crimes 176 : 2000 Supp (5) SCR 144.

[13348] ● Inconsistency about place of occurrence.—". . . . according to the High Court there was a doubt raised about the place of the incident which was an infirmity in the prosecution story. The room and the lintel are situated close to each other. PW-1 is not an eye-witness to the incident. When she reached home, she found her daughter the victim of rape, lying on the lintel of the house below the cot. A perusal of the site plan shows that the distance between the two places in insignificant. Moreover, such minor inconsistency coming from the mouth of PW-1, who is not an eye-witness, was of no significance and caused no infirmity in the prosecution case when the overall narration of the incident given by her is found to be natural and trustworthy. ....The learned Sessions Judge had rightly noted in his judgment, relying on the evidence adduced and the observations made at the time of spot inspection, that the room and the lintel are situated near to each other and, therefore, the so-called inconsistency was immaterial and insignificant." State of Himachal Pradesh v. Gian Chand, AIR 2001 SC 2075 : (2001) 6 SCC 71 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 980 (988, 989) : 2001 CrLR (SC) 434 : JT 2001 (5) SC 169 : (2001) 2 Crimes 256.

[13349] ● Contradiction about lodging of FIR.—There is no doubt about the fact that there is definitely a contradiction about the lodging of the FIR but the effect of such contradiction or discrepancy may have to be viewed in the light of the facts and circumstances of each. There may be cases where such a discrepancy may prove fatal to the prosecution case whereas in other cases it may not have the same effect. The consequences of such discrepancies or defective or doubtful investigation is not necessarily only one leading to discredit the main prosecution case if the prosecution evidence inspires and circumstances lead to such a conclusion and the prosecution story rings true. No doubt that in that event it would be necessary to evaluate as to what extent such faulty investigation or discrepant statement on certain facts relating thereto, shall cause damage to the prosecution case as a whole. Dharmendrasinh v. State of Gujarat, AIR 2002 SC 1937 : (2002) 4

[13350] ● Discrepancy in statement of witness not to be treated as fatal.—Testimony of an injured witness has its own efficacy and relevancy—Fact that the witness sustained injuries on his body would show that he was present at the place of occurrence and had seen the occurrence by himself—Convincing evidence would be required to discredit an injured witness—Every discrepancy in statement of witness cannot be treated as fatal—Discrepancy which do not affect the prosecution case materially cannot create any infirmity. Mohar v. State of U.P., AIR 2002 SC 3279 : (2002) 7 SCC 606 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 121 : 2002 CrLJ 4310 : (2002) 4 Crimes 301.

[13351] ● Variations in narrating incident.—When an incident is narrated by the same person to different persons on different occasions, some difference in the mode of narrating the incident is bound to arise. However such differences do not militate against the trust worthiness of the narration. Unless the variations can be held to be so abnormal or unnatural as would not occur if the witness would have really witnessed. What it was narrating. Shyam Sundar v. State of Chattisgarh, AIR 2002 SC 3292 : (2002) 8 SCC 39 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 196 : 2002 CrLJ 4312 : JT 2002 (7) SC 317.

[13352] ● Discrepancy in medical evidence with regard to nature of injury on deceased.—A perusal of the evidence of the doctor shows that there is some discrepancy in his evidence in regard to the nature of the injury on the deceased as to whether the edges of the wound were averted or inverted. But this, is not fatal to the case of the prosecution.

Some discrepancy as to the nature of entry and exit on facts of this case would not make the prosecution case any weaker. It is more so because of the fact that the casings of the bullets which were recovered by the Investigating Officer were positively proved by the ballistic expert as of those bullets which discharged from the weapons recovered from the appellants and these casings having been found near the bodies of the deceased on the roof of their house would establish that the deceased died of bullets discharged from the weapons seized from the appellants. In such circumstances, the question of entry or exist of the wounds would lose its significance if the presence of the accused persons with these weapons at that place and time is otherwise established by the prosecution. Rachhpal Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 2002 SC 2710 : (2002) 6 SCC 462 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 1362 : 2002 CrLJ 3540 : (2002) 3 Crimes 36 (SC).

[13353] ● Minor discrepancies in evidence.—It is argued that as per the inquest report the main injury on the deceased was shown to have been caused on the back side of the head, whereas the medical evidence showed that injury was caused by a fire-arm from the front side of the deceased. The Investigating Officer could not detect the entry wound possible because the head must have been smeared with blood. The evidence of two eye-witnesses clearly showed that appellant fist shot deceased Dharam Paul and there was a second shot at PW-4 Ram Kishan. It is true that PW-3 deposed that appellant first shot his brother Dharam Paul on the backside of the skull. But the medical evidence shows that this shot hit on eye brows. Based on this, it was contended that it was not the appellant but somebody else hiding on the rear side must have caused this injury. We do not find any force in this contention. The incident happened all of a sudden and when firing took place it would be difficult to state on which part of the body the bullet hit. In the instant case, the evidence of PW-4 shows that he himself sustained an injury at the hands of the appellant. It is clearly proved that it was the appellant and none else who was responsible for the crime. The minor discrepancies in the evidence only lend assurance to the credibility of prosecution case. Brij Lal v. State of Haryana, AIR 2002 SC 291 (292) : (2002) 1 SCC 700 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 245 : 2002 CrLJ 581 : (2002) 1 Crimes 200.

[13355] ● Contradictions in doctor's opinion as to weapon causing injuries.—If we believe the oral evidence, then it shows according to the two eye-witnesses the appellant assaulted the deceased on the left ear lobe with the blunt side of the Bankri. If we compare this oral evidence with medical evidence, we find there is no injury on the left ear which could be attribute to a blunt weapon. On the contrary, there is an incised would on the left ear lobe. Therefore, the medical evidence and the oral evidence do not tally. Even in regard to the doctors opinion as to the weapons that could have caused the injuries on the deceased there are considerable contradictions. In the first instance, when the weapons were sent for seeking medical opinion, the doctor opined that all the injuries on the deceased could be caused by weapons like Jaily, Lathi and Kulhari and he even identified the injury on the ear as an injury that could be attributed to a Kulhari. But when the Bankri was sent to him for his opinion, he opined that a lacerated injury found on the head of the deceased could be caused by the said bankri. But according to the eye-witnesses, the injury caused on the deceased by the appellant was not on the head but on the left ear. Therefore, this part of the prosecution evidence cannot be accepted. Bimla Devi v. State of Haryana, AIR 2003 SC 4138 : (2003) 10 SCC 118 : 2003 CrLJ 2319 : JT 2003 (4) SC 1 : (2003) 2 Crimes 455.

[13356] ● Conflict between oral testimony and medical evidence.—The conflict between oral testimony and medical evidence can be of varied dimensions and shapes. There may be a case where there is total absence of injuries which are normally caused by a particular weapon. There is another category where though the injuries found on the victim are of the type which are possible by the weapon of assault, but the size and dimension of the injuries do not exactly tally with the size and dimension of the weapon. The third category can be where the injuries found on the victim are such which are normally caused by the weapon of assault but they are not found on that portion of the body where they are deposed to have been caused by the eye-witnesses. The same kind of inference cannot be drawn in the three categories of apparent conflict in oral and medical evidence enumerated above. In the first category it may legitimately be inferred that the oral evidence regarding assault having been made from a particular weapon is not truthful. However, in the second and third category no such inference and straightway be drawn. The manner and method of assault, the position of the victim, the resistance offered by him, the opportunity available to the witnesses to see the occurrence like their distance, presence of light and many other similar factors will have to be taken into consideration in judging the reliability of ocular testimony. Thaman Kumar v. State of Union Territory of Chandigarh, (2003) 6 SCC 380 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 1362 : 2003 CrLJ 3070 : (2003) 3 Crimes 86 (SC).

[13357] ● Discrepancy between medical evidence and evidence of eye-witnesses.—With regard to the alleged discrepancy between medical evidence and evidence of the eye-witnesses, it is to be noted that at least three injuries referred to by the autopsy Surgeon and forming part of the medical evidence and as stated by the eye-witnesses are common. These three injuries are by themselves sufficient to cause death. The Autopsy Surgeon has not mentioned the knife injury on the backside of the buttock and another injury. The mere non-mention of the two injuries by the autopsy Surgeon does not and cannot lead to rejection of the prosecution case. The two injuries might have escaped the notice of the Doctor. Both the Courts below have found the prosecution case to be fully established and proved beyond any doubt whatsoever and there is no reason to take a different view. Yunis v. State of M.P., AIR 2003 SC 539 : (2003) 1 SCC 425 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 341 (344) : 2003 CrLJ 817.

[13358] ● Discrepancy between medical evidence and ocular evidence.—Both the post mortem report and the medical evidence adduced by the prosecution clearly show that the entire stomach of the deceased including both the intestines were empty which would indicate that at the time of the murder the deceased had not taken his meals and his murder must have taken place at least 3 to 4 hours after he had his last meal. PW-5 at one place in her evidence states that her husband had his lunch in the afternoon and was resting because he was not feeling well. Therefore, it is possible that the deceased was done to death much after his afternoon meal and much before his night meal. If this be the fact then there is a serious dispute as to the actual time of incident which is a very much important factor in finding out whether the case as presented by the prosecution is true or not. This discrepancy also affects the credibility of evidence of eye-witnesses because if really the incident had occurred much before the dinner time, a doubt is created in our minds whether these eye-witnesses could have noticed the incident at all and if they noticed the incident why they are stating the time of incident as 9.30 in the night. In the instant case, time of death being a material factor to verify the presence of the eyewitnesses it was obligatory for the prosecution to have clarified the discrepancy between the medical evidence and the oral evidence. The prosecution having failed to do so, a serious doubt as to the time of incident and the presence of the eye-witnesses at the time of incident and their narration of the incident also becomes doubtful. Therefore, the prosecution has failed to establish its case against the appellant Moti. Moti v. State of U.P., AIR 2003 SC 1897 : (2003) 9 SCC 444 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 1821 : 2003 CrLJ 1694 : (2003) 2 Crimes 62 (SC).

[13359] ● Considerable discrepancy.—PW-1 in his evidence stated: "…..When we went at the shop of the accused persons and the accused Abdul Wahid said to his father that "Pitaji" these are the persons who instigate the tenants and do not allow anybody to pay the rent, shoot them," PW-5 who accompanied the deceased and PW-1 to the shop of the accused in his evidence stated: "xxx Abdul Wahid entered his shop and said to his father Mukhttar Ali that Pitaji these two instigate our tenants, shoot them. In the cross-examination, he clarifies this statement in the following words: "Abdul Wahid said to his father to fire the gun; only this word he used "shoot these two", name of Devendra, Anil or anyone else had not been mentioned." PW-6 another eye-witness in his evidence stated thus: "As soon as Abdul Wahid reached he went inside and said to his father—these instigate the shopkeepers, allow none to pay the rents, shoot them. Saying this having gone inside the shop he stood near the counter. Haji Mukhttar Ali was standing inside the shop holding gun." In his cross-examination, he states that "Abdul Wahid stood and beckoned with his eye and after the beckon Haji fired the shot." PW-7 another witness who spoke about this part of the incident in his evidence stated: "Abdul Wahid while entering his shop said. "Pitaji shoot them, they instigate the tenants, do not let them pay the rent." But in his cross-examination, he stated: "Abdul Wahid had said naming Devendraraj, "Shoot Devendraraj". Abdul Wahid had not taken name of Anil for shooting him." We find a considerable discrepancy in the above statements of PWs-1, 5, 6 and 7 in the language used by the appellant to exhort and the manner and the place where the said exhortation was given. Counsel for the appellant pointed out that the use of the word "Pitaji" by the appellant itself indicates that these witnesses have been tutored to make this statement because it is not the language of a Muslim to address his father as "Pitaji". This thing could only have happened when a witness is wrongly tutored by somebody.

The contention of the counsel was found acceptable and conviction of the accused under Section 302/34 was held proper. Abdul Wahid v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 2004 SC 3211 : (2004) 11 SCC 241 : 2004 CrLJ 2850 (2852) : 2004 (3) Crimes 75.

[13360] ● Minor discrepancies—When can be termed as contradictions.—Minor discrepancies cannot be termed as contradictions unless it affects the credibility of the evidence tendered by a witness. The word 'contradiction' is of a wide connotation which takes within its ambit all material omissions and under the circumstances of a case a Court can decide whether there is one such omission as to amount to contradiction. Shashidhar Purandhar Hegde v. State of Karnataka, AIR 2004 SC 5075 : (2004) 12 SCC 492 : 2004 CrLJ 4677 (4682) : 2004 (4) Crimes 202.

[13361] ● No evidence or record that blood was found on spot—Eye-witness stating that he had witness armed attack.—Certain discrepancies were pointed out by learned counsel for the appellant at the time of arguments. The counsel for the State while answering the said submission of the counsel for the appellant submitted that according to PW-2, the duration of attack which he witnessed before he ran away took place at the office and that there is evidence on record that blood was found at the spot where PW-2 states that he had witnessed the armed attack upon the deceased. The presence of blood at the spot where PW-2 states the attack had taken place establishes the correctness of the version of this witness. In such an event, the mere failure to explain the presence of the dead body at an adjoining place does not disprove or contradict the prosecution case and in our opinion is certainly not fatal to the prosecution case. Yakub Imailbhai Patel v. State of Gujarat, AIR 2004 SC 4209 : (2004) 12 SCC 229 : 2004 CrLJ 4205 (4213).

[13362] ● Veracity of evidence when suspected.—It is only when the medical evidence totally improbabilises the ocular evidence, then that the Court starts suspecting the veracity of the evidence and not otherwise. Surinder Singh v. State of U.P., 2004 SCC (Cri) 717 (725).

[13363] ● Hypothetical discrepancy regarding height from which gun shot.—The hypothetical discrepancy regarding the height from which the gun was shot is one aspect which needs to be noted, only to be rejected. If the eye-witnesses' version, even though of the relatives, is found to be truthful and credible after deep scrutiny the opinionative evidence of the doctor can not wipe out the effect of eye-witnesses' evidence. Main Pal v. State of Haryana, AIR 2004 SC 2158 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 1882 (1887) : 2004 CrLJ 2036 : (2004) 2 Crimes 140.

[13364] ● Minor discrepancy not of much significance.—In the instant case, the only discrepancy which has been pointed out to this Court is that whereas PW-3 had spoken about giving a slap on the cheek of the deceased by one of the accused, no other witness stated so. Such minor discrepancy is of not much significance when his presence in the house at the time when the occurrence took place is beyond any doubt. State of U.P. v. Nawab Singh, 2005 SCC (Cri) 33 (39).

[13364A] ● Discrepancy not affecting prosecution fatally does not create infirmity.—Every discrepancy in the prosecution witness is not fatal. The discrepancy not affecting the prosecution. Fatally does not create infirmity. Rama Shish Rai v. Jagdish Singh, AIR 2005 SC 335 : (2005) 10 SCC 498 : 2005 CrLJ 669 (672) : 2004 (4) Crimes 306.

[13365] ● Minor discrepancies not affecting credibility of evidence.—The minor discrepancies do not affect the credibility of evidence and should not have been magnified. State of M.P. v. Dharkale, 2005 SCC (Cri) 225 (227).

[13366] ● Minor discrepancies in testimony of witness.—Minor discrepancies in the testimony of PWs-3 and 4 were sought to be highlighted. Taking into account the fact that the evidence was recorded in Court after about seven years of the occurrence. There have been rightly held to be of no consequence by both the trial Court and the High Court. Sri Narayan Saha v. State of Tripura, 2005 SCC (Cri) 410 (413).

[13367] ● Discrepancy not contradiction.—"The testimony of PWs-1, 2 and 3 is consistent. The learned counsel for the respondent pointed out that in the evidence of PWs-1 and 2 there is contradiction that the accused did not state before them that he came seeking protection from them. In our view, this discrepancy cannot be termed as a contradiction which would be fatal to the prosecution case. Every discrepancy in the statement of a witness cannot be treated as fatal to the prosecution case. A discrepancy which is not fatal to the prosecution does not create any infirmity. The incident had taken place on 24.1.1992 and PW-2 was examined on 22.1.1996 after almost four years. Human memories are apt to blur with the passage of time. After lapse of almost four years, it cannot be expected that a witness can depose with mathematical precision." State of A.P. v. Kanda Gopalaudu, AIR 2005 SC 3616 : (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 121 (126) : 2005 (4) Crimes 77 : 2005 (7) Scale 677.

[13368] ● Minor discrepancies.—There is no doubt that there are some minor discrepancies in the instant case. But that does not in any way dilute the otherwise cogent evidence of injured witnesses about the role played by two of the accused persons. Lachman Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 2006 SC 2763 : (2006) 10 SCC 524 : 2006 CrLJ 4041 (4043) : 2006 (3) Crimes 164.

[13369] ● Discrepancy not materially affecting prosecution case—No infirmity.—Every discrepancy in the witness statement is not fatal to the prosecutions case. The discrepancy which does not materially affect the prosecution case, does not create any infirmities. State of A.P. v. S. Rayappa, (2006) 4 SCC 512 : (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 353 (357) : JT 2006 (2) SC 392 : 2006 (1) Crimes 219.

[13370] ● Some variations in matters of detail is of no significance.—Some variation in matters of detail is but natural, and much depends on the capacity of a witness to observe and remember events, particularly in matters of minor details. Moreover, the two witnesses came from two different directions, and they may have observed the incident at different stages, though in quick succession. However, such minor discrepancies do not warrant rejection of their evidence. Their deposition is natural and consistent with the case of the prosecution and we find no reason why they should be disbelieved. Prabata v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 2006 SC 747 : (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 252 (255) : 2006 CrLJ 562 : JT 2005 (10) SC 314 : 2006 (1) Crimes 48.

[13371] ● Discrepancy not affecting prosecution materially is of no significance.—The discrepancy which does not affect the prosecution materially does not create infirmity in the prosecution case. Surinder Singh v. State of Haryana, (2006) 2 SCC (Cri) 444 (447) : 2006 (1) Crimes 153 : JT 2006 (1) SC 645 : 2006 (1) JCC 227.

[13372] ● Immaterial discrepancies.—By making observations in an abstract and general manner it concluded that the discrepancies were immaterial, without even discussing the factors which weighed with the trial Court to hold that the prosecution evidence was not cogent and credible. V.N. Rathush v. State of Kerala, AIR 2006 SC 2667 : (2006) 10 SCC 617 : 2006 CrLJ 3634 (3636) : 2006 (3) Crimes 37.

[13373] ● Minor discrepancies.—It is true that minor discrepancies will not necessarily lead to the rejection of the prosecution case, but when there are major discrepancies and unexplained injuries on the accused, it is an important factor to be taken into account. Raj Pal v. State of Haryana, (2006) 9 SCC 678 : 2006 (3) SCC (Cri) 361 : 2007 CrLJ 2926 (2929) : 2006 (2) Crimes 157 (SC).

[13374] ● Minor discrepancies in evidence.—Minor discrepancies and minor defects in the prosecution case cannot afford a ground for rejecting the entire prosecution case. Major Singh v. State of Punjab, (2006) 10 SCC 499 : 2007 CrLJ 59 : 2006 (4) Crimes 274.

[13375] ● Minor discrepancies not affecting prosecution case.—Minor discrepancies which does not materially affect the prosecution case does not create any infirmity. State of Andhra Pradesh v. S. Rajappa, (2006) 4 SCC 512 : 2006 CrLJ 219 (SC) : 2006 (1) Crimes 219 (SC).

[13376] ● Discrepancy in statement of witness.—Discrepancy which does not affect the prosecution case materially cannot ignored. Surender Singh v. State of Haryana, (2006) 9 SCC 247 : 2006 (2) SCC (Cri) 444 : 2006 (1) Crimes 153 (SC).

[13377] ● Discrepancies in major part of testimony—Duty of Court.—Even if a major portion of evidence is found to be deficient in case the residue is sufficient to prove guilt conviction can be maintained. In such a case the Court has a duty to separate grain from chaff. Syed Ibrahim v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2006 SC 2908 : 2006 CrLJ 4087 : 2006 (3) Crimes 156 (SC). TO THE SAME EFFECT : Bathula Nagamalleswara Rao v. State, AIR 2008 SC 3227 : 2008 (1) SCC 722 : 2008 (3) SCC (Cri) 898 : 2008 (2) Crimes 188 (SC).

[13378] ● Discrepancy in FIR and prosecution case—Fatal to prosecution case.—Where in the FIR informant stated in clear words that the accused entered in his house in absence of the informant, but in statement before the Court stated that the accused was leaving his house when the informant was entering into the house, held it was major discrepancy in FIR, improvement in the case. The accused was implicated on mere suspicion, he was entitled to benefit of doubt and acquitted of the charge under Section 302. The Supreme Court held—

"It appears to us that the appellant was implicated only on the strong suspicion on the part of the first information against the appellant. It has come in evidence that the appellant, who is a young man, used to visit the daughter of the first informant and this was resented by the first informant and also by some neighbours. In fact, the first informant told the appellant not to meet his daughter. It is quite possible that on the basis of suspicion the first informant has implicated the appellant. However, from the version given in the FIR it is evident that the first informant had not seen the accused leaving the house of the first informant when the latter entered into it. In fact, in the FIR it is mentioned clearly that the appellant entered into the house of the first informant in the absence of the latter. This, it appears to us that he first informant never saw the appellant leaving the house of the first informant when the latter entered into it and the subsequent version is an improvement. A vital link in the chain of circumstances is missing in this case.

No doubt a minor discrepancy in a FIR will not be fatal to the prosecution case. But the discrepancy in the FIR in the present case is not a minor discrepancy, but a major one. Had the first informant seen the accused entering into the house at the time of the incident he would have definitely mentioned the fact in the FIR." The appellant was hold entitled to the benefit of doubt. Sanjay Sen v. State of West Bengal, (2007) 6 SCC 32 : 2007 (3) SCC (Cri) 47 : 2007 CrLJ 3727 (3728).

[13379] ● Discrepancy in FIR and evidence given after five years.—According to the FIR, A-5 was merely a member of the mob not having any arms in his hands, he neither ran towards the deceased nor caught hold of him nor is said to have assaulted him. Even in his subsequent statement made before the police, the informant [PW-1], had nowhere stated that A-5 caught hold of the deceased but, in Court in the year 1994 after about five years he disclosed, for the first time, that this accused caught hold of the deceased. PW-2 also did not name this accused in his statement made before PW-6 on the basis of which entry was made in the hospital register (Exhibit P-10). Moreover, in his statement made before the police PW-2 had not stated that this accused caught hold of the deceased but in Court he stated for the first time after five years that this accused caught hold of the deceased PW-3 also did not state in his statement made before the police that this accused caught hold of the deceased but made statement in the Sessions Court after five years for the first time that this accused caught hold of the deceased. In view of these facts, we feel that it would not be safe to uphold the conviction of A-5. Mallanna v. State of Karnataka, (2007) 8 SCC 523 : (2007) 3 SCC (Cri) 731.

[13380] ● Minor discrepancies.—The evidence of the prosecutrix should not be rejected on the basis of minor discrepancies and contradictions. Radhu v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (2007) 12 SCC 57 : 2007 CrLJ 4704 (4705) : (2007) 4 Crimes 1.

[13381] ● Contradictions and omission—If fatal.—In the instant case, there were minor contradictions and omissions relating to details of the occurrence. It was held that as the eye-witnesses to the occurrence did not stand disapproved in any manner and they were examined two and a half years after the occurrence, the contradictions and omissions in stating the incident in great detail; would not be fatal. Vikram v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2007 SC 3193 : (2007) 12 SCC 332 : 2007 CrLJ 3193 : 2007 (6) SCR 185.

[13382] ● Minor discrepancies in evidence.—Minor discrepancies on trivial matter not affecting the case of matter, hyper-technical approach by taking sentence out of context here or there from the evidence attaching importance to some technical error committed by the I.O. without going to the root of the matter would not ordinarily lead to rejection of the evidence as a whole. State of Maharashtra v. Siraj Ahmad Nisar Ahmad, AIR 2007 SC 1859 : (2007) 5 SCC 161 : 2007 (2) SCC (Cri) 472.

[13383] ● Normal discrepancies in evidence—What amount to.—Normal discrepancies in evidence are those which are due to normal errors of observation, normal errors of memory due to lapse of time of occurrence due to mental disposition such as shock and horror at the time of occurrence and those one always there however honest or truthful & witness may be. Material discrepancies are those which are not normal and not expected of a normal person, court have liable the catory to which a discrepancy may be categorised. While normal discrepancies do not erode the credibility of a party's case, material discrepancies do so. Dalbir Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 2008 SC 2389 : (2008) 1 SCC 425 : 2008 CrLJ 3061. To the same effect : (1) Dinesh Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, (2008) 15 SCC 745 : 2008 (4) Crimes 45 (SC) : JT 2008 (8) SC 684. [13385] ● Minor discrepancies.—While appreciating the evidence of a witness, minor discrepancies on trivial matters without affecting case of the prosecution case ought not to prompt the Court to reject evidence in its entirety. State v. Saravanan J.R., AIR 2008 SC 152 : (2008) 17 SCC 587 : JT 2008 (11) SC 290.

[13386] ● Minor discrepancies.—Minor discrepancies or some improvements would not lead to rejection of the testimonies of the eye-witnesses, if they are otherwise reliable. Some discrepancies are bound to occur because of the sociological background of the witnesses as also the time gap between the date of occurrence and the date on which their statements are recorded in Court. Shivappa v. State of Karnataka, AIR 2008 SC 1860 : (2008) 11 SCC 337 : 2008 CrLJ 2992.

[13387] ● Minor and material discrepancies.—Normal discrepancies in evidence are those which are due to normal errors of observation, normal errors of memory due to lapse of time, due to mental disposition such as shock and horror at the time of occurrence and those are always there however honest and truthful a witness may be. Material discrepancies are those which are not normal, and not expected of a normal person. Courts have to label the category to which a discrepancy may be categorized. While normal discrepancies do not corrode the credibility of a party's case, material discrepancies do so. Dinesh Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, JT 2008 (8) 684 : 2008 (11) Scale 113 : 2005 (5) Supreme 584 : 2008 (4) Crimes 45 (SC). To the same effect : (1) Dalbir Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 2008 SC 2389 : (2008) 11 SCC 425 : 2008 CrLJ 3061 2008 (2) Crimes 278 (SC). [13388] ● Minor discrepancies or improvements in evidence.—Minor discrepancies or some improvements also, would not justify rejection of the testimonies of the eye-witnesses, if they are otherwise reliable. Some discrepancies are bound to occur because of the sociological background of the witnesses as also the time gap between the date of occurrence and the date on which they give their depositions in Court. Shivappa v. State of Karnataka, AIR 2008 SC 1860 : (2008) 1 SCC 337 : 2008 CrLJ 2992 : JT 2008 (4) SC 477.

[13389] ● Minor discrepancies, when not fatal.—The High Court, on reappraisal and reassessment of the entire evidence on record, came to the conclusion that immediately after the occurrence a report came to be lodged to the Police Station against the appellant who has been identified by the PW-Sanjay, an injured eye-witness and non-injured eye-witnesses and further that the appellant had strong motive to commit the murder of Sunita with malice towards PW-Sanjay-her husband, as well as her deceased mother Nirmalabai, therefore, simply because there are some minor discrepancies in the evidence of witnesses which are of no consequence to the true genesis of the case and that some evidence has not been adduced by the prosecution, though might have been available, would not be sufficient grounds to believe that the appellant has been booked in a false case. There is nothing on record brought by the appellant to show that it was quite possible that the witnesses would spare the real culprit and implicate him in a false case. On the basis of the entire evidence elaborately discussed by the High Court, it cannot be held that the appellant, in the present case, has been framed on suspicion. Mahesh v. State of Maharashtra, 2008 CrLJ 3602 (3617) : 2008 (6) SCR 158 : JT 2008 (6) 11 : 2008 (7) Scale 10 : 2008 (2) Supreme 898 : 2008 (2) Crimes 145 (SC).

[13390] ● Contradictions, omissions and discrepancies in evidence.—If the Court, after separating the grain from chaff, comes to a conclusion that residual evidence is sufficient to convict the accused, undue importance should not be attached to omissions, contradictions and discrepancies which do not touch the case of the matter and shake the basic version of the prosecution. Prithu v. State of Himachal Pradesh, AIR 2009 SC 2070 : (2009) 11 SCC 588 : 200 (2) SCR 765.

[13391] ● Minor contradictions in evidence—Effect.—Minor contradictions can be rightly disbelieved, if same supports the truthfulness of witness. Ramesh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, 2009 CrLJ 4432 : 2009 (3) Crimes 411 (SC).

[13392] ● Minor discrepancies, Inconsistencies.—Minor discrepancies on trivial matters not touching the care of the case, hyper-technical approach by taking sentences, turn out of the context here or there from the evidence, attaching importance to some technical error committed by the Investigating Officer not going to the root of the matter, would not ordinarily permit rejection of the evidence as a whole. Minor omissions in the police statements are never considered to be fatal. The prosecution evidence may suffer from inconsistencies here and discrepancies there, but that is a short-coming from which no criminal case is free. In the deposition of witnesses, there are always normal discrepancies, howsoever, honest and truthful they may be. The discrepancies are due to normal errors of observation, of memory due to lapse of time, due to the mental disposition, shock, horror at the time of occurrence and threat to the life. State of U.P. v. Krishna Master, AIR 2010 SC 3071 : 2010 CrLJ 3889 (3894).

[13393] ● Discrepancies in prosecution case—When not fatal.—Some discrepancies per se would not prove fatal to case of prosecution particularly when there is no reason before the Court to doubt statement of eye-witnesses. Satyavir Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, (2010) 3 SCC 174 : 2010 CrLJ 340.

[13394] ● Discrepancies not minor in nature—Effect.—If the Court finds that discrepancies of eye-witnesses in evidence are not minor, in nature they may be a ground for disbelieving and discrediting their evidence. Sunil Kumar v. Sambhudayal Gupta v. State of Maharashtra, JT 2010 (12) SC 287.

[13395] ● Discrepancy in regard to part of story—Effect.—Discrepancy in regard to the part of the story itself does not go to the root of the case but discrepancy in regard to the material facts only has bearing to test the veracity of the prosecution case. In the instant case there is ample evidence on record that for purpose of grant of composite licence the appellant demanded bribe which was paid to him and recovered from his possession. Billa Nagul Sharief v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2010 SC 3549 : 2010 CrLJ 3885 : 2010 (3) Crimes 128 (SC).

DISCRETION

[13396] ● Discretion.—The discretion as to sentence is that of the trial Judge, and if he gives reasons from the sentence imposed by him, and they are such as a judicial mind could properly accept, a Court of appeal should not interfere with the discretion exercised by the trial Judge. The power to enhance a sentence from transportation to death should be very rarely exercised and only for the strongest possible reasons. It is not enough for the appellate Court to say that if left to itself it would have awarded the greater penalty, because the discretion does not belong to the appellate Court but only to the trial Judge. The only ground on which the appellate Court can interfere is when the discretion has been improperly exercised. For example, when no reasons at all are given and none could be inferred from the circumstances on the record of the case, or when the facts are so gross (that is, the murder is so heinous or brutal) that no judicial mind would award the lesser penalty. It is a sound exercise of judicial discretion for the trial Judge to refrain from awarding a sentence of death when it is not possible to determine who inflicted which blow or who gave the fatal blows and who took only a lesser part. In such a case the Court can legitimately award the lesser penalty to all the accused, though it is not bound to do so. Each case must depend on its own facts and no hard and fast rule can be laid down. But if a Judge imposes a lesser penalty in such a case in the exercise of his discretion, it is not open for the appellate Court to hold that there has been an improper exercise of judicial discretion. In such a case it is not the proper criterion for the appellate Court to ask itself whether it would have acted differently had it been the trial Court. The appeal was accepted on the question of sentence, and it was reduced, in the case of all the accused, to one of transportation for life. Dalip Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1953 SC 364 : 1953 CrLJ 1465 : 1953 SCJ 535.

[13397] ● Word "Case"—Meaning.—The Supreme Court has general powers of judicial superintendence over all the Courts in the country. It is the ultimate interpreter and guardian of the Constitution, and has the duty to see that its provisions are faithfully observed by every Court. Under Article 134(1)(c), the only condition of the issue of a certificate that the case is a fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court is the discretion of the High Court. But the discretion is a judicial discretion and it must be judicially exercised along the well established lines which govern the matter. Further, the certificate must show on the face of it that the discretion conferred was invoked and exercised. If the discretion has been exercised on proper and well established lines, then, as in all questions where an exercise of discretion is involved, there can be no interference by the Supreme Court except on very strong grounds. But if, on the face of the order, it is apparent that the High Court has misdirected itself, (a) either by holding that its discretion is fettered, when it is not, or (b) by holding that in a particular circumstance it has none, then in such a case, the Supreme Court will not be bound by the certificate given by the High Court, and it will decide for itself whether to allow the appeal or not. In the present case, out of 24 persons originally tried under Section 302/149 Penal Code, only three were ultimately convicted by the High Court. By a curious mistake, the name of one N who was intended to be acquitted was included among the three convicted accused instead of that of one B. When this mistake was latter realised, the High Court communicated this fact to the State Government, and the Government remitted the sentence passed on N and directed his release. Thereafter, N and the two other accused who had been convicted applied to the High Court for a certificate under Article 134(1)(c). The High Court granted the certificates to all three of them. As regards N, it rightly considered that despite the remission of his sentence, if his conviction on a charge like that of murder stood undisturbed, the stigma might affect him adversely in the future. However, as regards the other two, there was nothing in their cases to warrant the issue of the certificates to them, but what the High Court thought was that by the word 'case' in clause (c) of Article 134(1) what was contemplated was the appeal as a whole, and that once a certificate was decided to be given, the High Court was bound to give it to all the accused whose conviction was confirmed in such appeal. The view of the High Court is clearly wrong. The word 'case' as used in Article 134(1)(c) means the case of each individual accused, and not the proceeding in appeal as a whole, and for the purpose of the certificate under that Article, the appeal of each accused to the High Court forms a separate 'case'. Therefore, even when a certificate under Article 134(1)(c) has been properly granted to any one or more of the several accused who have been convicted, the remaining accused do not acquire a right merely on that account to have their 'cases' also to be considered by the Supreme Court in appeal. In other words, the application for a certificate under this Article made by each accused has to be considered on its own merits, and the grant of a certificate to any accused would be proper only when the High Court is of opinion that his individual 'case' is a fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court. In the present case, the High Court had misdirected itself about the law in this matter, and had not exercised the discretion vested in it under Article 134(1)(c) in respect of the two convicted accused other than N, therefore, it was a fit case for interference by the Supreme Court in the exercise of its general powers of judicial superintendence. Under the circumstances, their case had to be treated as one under Article 136. Nar Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1954 SC 457 : 1954 CrLJ 1167 : 1954 SCA 642 : 1954 SCJ 570 : 1955 SCR 238 : (1954) ALJ 438 : (1954) 2 MLJ 122 : 1954 AWR 457 : 1954 MWN 741.

[13398] ● High Court not to interfere with sentence imposed by Trial Court when.—The High Court should not interfere with the sentence imposed by the trial Court unless when it is manifestly inadequate, and should not exercise its power of enhancement when the sentence passed by the trial Court imposes substantial punishment. It will be a fit case for interference by the Supreme Court if the High Court has enhanced a sentence without keeping this rule in mind. In the present case the Sessions Court had convicted the accused of the offence under Section 304 Part II of the Penal Code and had sentenced him to 3 years' imprisonment. On appeal, the High Court increased it to 10 years, without giving any reason why it considered such enhancement necessary. The accused appealed to the Supreme Court. It is a fit case for interference. The order of the High Court is set aside, and the original sentence of 3 years is restored. Bed Raj v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1955 SC 778 : 1955 CrLJ 1642 : (1955) 2 SCR 583 : 1956 SCJ 38 : 1956 SCA 169 : 1956-1 MLJ (SC) 28 : 1956 AWR 70 : 1956 ALJ 79 : 1956 MWN 192 : 1958 PunLR 167 : 1956 BLJR 96 : ILR (1956) 1 All 45.

[13399] ● Section 494, CrPC enabling provision—Discretion to withdraw from prosecution of any case vested in Public Prosecutor.—Section 494 of the Code is an enabling section, and under it the discretion as to whether to withdraw from the prosecution of any case is vested in the Public Prosecutor who represents the State. Primarily the question whether to prosecute a person on behalf of the State or to continue with his prosecution, or whether to put a stop to his prosecution by withdrawing it, is a question for the Public Prosecutor to determine. No doubt, under Section 494 the consent of the Court to such a withdrawal is required and in giving or refusing such consent the Court has to exercise a judicial discretion, but in exercising such discretion all that the Court has to be satisfied about is that the application for withdrawal by the Prosecutor does not involve any abuse of his powers. In other words, the initiative under Section 494 regarding the withdrawal of a prosecution against any person rests with the State as represented by the Public Prosecutor, and unless the Court is of opinion that the application made in that behalf is not bona fide, consent to such withdrawal must be given normally as a matter of course. The Court is not required under Section 494 to take evidence for itself as to necessity for such withdrawal and is not required, before it gives its consent to the withdrawal applied for, to arrive at a definite finding that the case for such withdrawal has been satisfactorily made out by the prosecution. Such a course may become necessary only when on the record the Court is satisfied that the application has been made with a view to interfere with the normal course of justice, but not otherwise. State of Bihar v. Ram Naresh Pandey, AIR 1957 SC 389 : (1957) SCC 282 : 1957 CrLJ 567 : 1957 SCA 350 : 1957 SCJ 336 : 1957 SCR 279 : ILR 36 Pat 513 : 1957 BLJR 406 : 1957 (1) MLJ (Cri) 247 : 1957 AWR (HC) 430 : 1957 ALJ 609.

[13400] ● Sentence matter of discretion.—Sentence is a matter of discretion. The Supreme Court will normally refuse to interfere with the order of sentence, unless it is satisfied that the discretion has been improperly exercised. In the present case, the accused was convicted by the High Court under Section 420, Penal Code, and the sentence imposed was of rigorous imprisonment for six months. In the appeal to the Supreme Court the conviction was confirmed, and then it was urged on behalf of the accused that the sentence of rigorous imprisonment for six months on the accused who was an old man was unduly severe, and it was also stated that he was prepared to pay to the complainant the whole amount received from him. The sentence imposed by the High Court cannot be said to be unduly severe, the considerations urged by the appellant cannot be entertained, and there is no justification for the plea that the sentence of rigorous imprisonment should be set aside. The sentence is confirmed. Dharamdas Hukamatrai Dorwani v. State of Bombay, AIR 1960 SC 734 : 1960 CrLJ 1148.

[13401] ● Article 136 of Constitution confers on Supreme Court wide discretionary power to entertain appeal.—Article 136 confers on the Supreme Court a wide discretionary power to entertain appeals in suitable cases not otherwise provided for by the Constitution. It is implicit in this reserve power that it cannot be exhaustively defined, but it has always been exercised by the Court on the principle that decided cases would not be interfered with unless, by disregard to the forms of legal process, or some violation of the principles of natural justice, or otherwise, substantial and grave injustice has been done. Though Article 136 is couched in widest terms the practice of the Supreme Court always is not to interfere on the questions of fact except in exceptional cases where the finding is such, that it shocks the conscience of the Court. Where the High Court has not contravened any of the principles laid down which govern the proper approach in dealing with appeals against acquittal and has given valid reasons for holding that the order of acquittal passed by the trial Court was not justified, the Supreme Court must accept the findings of fact reached by the High Court, and must hold that no case for interference has been made out. Sanwat Singh v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1961 SC 715 : (1961) 1 CrLJ 766 : (1961) 2 SCJ 179 : (1961) 2 SCA 342 : 1961 ALJ 238 : 1961 MPC 274 : 1961 BLJR 313 : (1961) AWR (HC) 382 : 1961 ACrR 215 : (1961) 2 KerLR 249 : 1961 MLJ (Cri) 472.

[13402] ● Section 154 Evidence Act confers discretionary power on Court to permit person calling witness to put any question to him.— Section 154 of the Evidence Act confers a discretionary power on the Court to permit a person who calls a witness to put any question to him which might be put in cross-examination by the adverse party. Section 154 does not in terms or by necessary implication confine the exercise of the power by the Court before the examination-in-chief is concluded or to any particular stage of the examination of the witness. It is wide in scope and the discretion is entirely left to the Court to exercise the power when the circumstances demand. To confine this power to the stage of examination-in-chief is to make it ineffective in practice. The Court can certainly, in exercise of its discretion, will permit the adverse party to cross-examine the witness on the answers elicited by such questions. The Court, therefore, can permit a person who calls a witness to put question to him which might be put in the cross-examination at any stage of the examination of the witness provided it takes care to give an opportunity to the accused to cross-examine him on the answers which do not find place in the examination-in-chief. Dalya Bhai Chhagan Bai Thakkar v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1964 SC 1563 : (1964) 2 CrLJ 472 (477, 478) : (1964) 7 SCR 86.

[13403] ● Section 437, CrPC not make obligatory upon Sessions Judge or District Magistrate to order commitment in every case.—The provisions of Section 437, however, do not make it obligatory upon a Sessions Judge or a District Magistrate to order commitment in every case where an offence is exclusively triable by a Court of Session. The law gives a discretion to the revising authority and that discretion has to be exercised judicially. One of the factors which has to be considered in this case is whether the intervention of the revising authority was sought by the prosecution at an early stage. It would be seen that an attempt to have the case committed failed right in the beginning and was repeated not earlier than 15 months from that date. The second attempt also failed. Instead of filing an application for revision against the order of the Magistrate refusing to pass an order of commitment the prosecution chose to make a second application upon the same facts. It may be that successive applications for such a purpose are not barred but where a latter application is based on the same facts as the earlier one the Magistrate would be justified in refusing it. Where the Magistrate has acted in this way the revisional Court ought not to interfere with propriety unless there are strong grounds to justify interference. While rejecting the application on January 25, 1962, the ground given by the learned Judge was that the case had already entered the defence stage and the attempt to have the committal was very belated. Matters had advanced still further when a third attempt failed on March 30, 1962. By that date not only had the defence been closed and arguments heard, but the case was actually closed up for judgment. It would be a terrible harassment to the appellants now to be called upon to face a fresh trial right from the beginning which would certainly be the result if the Magistrate were to commit the appellants for trial by a Court of Session. It is further noteworthy that after the last attempt failed it was not the prosecution which went up in revision before the Sessions Judge but the informants and, as pointed out earlier, in the matter concerning the appellants before us it was not even the informant Shyam Lall but one Sagarmal, the informant in another case, who preferred a revision application. In a case which has proceeded on a police report a private party has really no locus standi. No doubt the terms of Section 435 under which the jurisdiction of the learned Sessions Judge was invoked are very wide and he could have taken up the matter suo motu. It would, however, not be irrelevant to bear in mind the fact that the Court's jurisdiction was invoked by a private party. The criminal law is not to be used as an instrument of wreaking private vengeance by an aggrieved party against the person who, according to that party, had caused injury to it. Barring a few exceptions, in criminal matters the party who is treated as the aggrieved party is the State which is the custodian of social interest of the community at large and so it is for the State to take all the steps necessary for bringing the person who has acted against the social interests of the community to book. In our opinion it was injudicious for the learned Sessions Judge to order the commitments of the appellants, particularly so without giving any thought to the aspects of the matter to which we have adverted. For all these reasons, we allow the appeals, quash the order of the Sessions Judge as affirmed by the High Court and direct that the trials of each of the appellants shall proceed before the Magistrate according to law from the stages at which they were on the date on which the stay order became operative. Thakur Ram v. State of Bihar, AIR 1966 SC 911 : 1966 CrLJ 700 : (1966) 2 SCR 740.

[13404] ● Discretion to condone delay under proviso to Section 20(2) of—Minimum wages Act—Exercise of with vigilance.—The discretion to condone delay under second proviso to Section 20(2) of Minimum Wages Act, 1948, in presenting the application on sufficient cause being shown must, like other judicial discretion, be exercised with vigilance and circumspection according to justice, common sense, and sound judgment. Sarpanch Lonand Grampanchayat v. Ramgiri Gosavi, AIR 1968 SC 222 (223) : 1967 SCD 1172 : (1967) 2 Lab LJ 870 : (1968) 1 SCWR 65 : (1968) 1 SCJ 789 : (1967) 3 SCR 774 : (1968) 2 SCA 475.

[13405] ● Exercise of judicial discretion on well recognised principles.—Any exhaustive enumeration of aggravating or mitigating circumstances is impossible. The impossibility of laying down standards is at the very core of the criminal law as administered in India which invests the Judges with a very wide discretion in the matter of fixing the degree of punishment. That discretion in the mater of sentence is liable to be corrected by superior Courts. The exercise of judicial discretion on well-recognised principles is, in the final analysis, the safest possible safeguards for the accused. Jagmohan Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1973 SC 947 : (1973) 1 SCC 20 : 1973 CrLJ 370 : (1973) 1 SCJ 200.

[13406] ● No extenuating circumstances to justify lesser sentence.—It was urged that the sentence of death passed on the accused might be commuted to life imprisonment in view of the fact that the accused had been convicted and sentenced about a year hereinbefore. That by itself does not appear to be good ground for reducing the sentence passed on the accused. It was a preplanned, cold-blooded and dastardly murder in which as many as seventeen injuries were caused on the deceased most of which were on vital parts of his body. There are no extenuating circumstances to justify the giving of any lesser sentence by this Court. In these circumstances, we are unable to agree that there is any room for awarding a lesser sentence. Meghar Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1975 SC 1320 : (1975) 4 SCC 234 : 1975 CrLJ 1102 (1105).

[13407] ● Discretion conferred by Section 154 Evidence Act unqualified and untrammeled.—The discretion conferred by S. 154, of the Evidence Act, on the Court is unqualified and untrammelled, and is apart from any question of "hostility". It is to be liberally exercised whenever the Court from the witness's demeanour, temper, attitude, bearing, or the tenor and tendency of his answers, or from a perusal of his previous inconsistent statement, or otherwise, thinks that the grant of such permission is expedient to extract the truth and to do justice. The grant of such permission does not amount to an adjudication by the Court as to the veracity of the witness. Sat Paul v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1976 SC 294 : (1976) 1 SCC 727 : 1976 SCC (Cri) 160 (174) : 1976 CrLJ 295 : 1975 CrLR (SC) 597 : (1976) 2 SCR 11.

[13408] ● Imposition of sentence matter of discretion.—The imposition of sentence is always a matter of discretion and unless the Supreme Court finds that the discretion has been exercised arbitrarily or capriciously or on unsound principles or that the Sessions Court or the High Court has not taken into account any relevant factors in imposing the sentence, the Supreme Court would not be justified in reducing the sentence, merely because it feels that a lesser sentence might well have been imposed. Surendra v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1977 SC 709 : (1976) 4 SCC 232 : 1976 SCC (Cri) 565 : 1977 CrLJ 351 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 56 : 1977 UJ (SC) 60(1).

[13409] ● Court possess wider discretion on basis of which conviction possible.—For the purpose of determining whether there is sufficient ground for proceeding against an accused the Court possess a comparatively wider discretion in the exercise of which it can determine the question whether the material on the record, if unrebutted, is such on the basis of which a conviction can be said reasonably to be possible. State of Karnataka v. L. Muniswamy, AIR 1977 SC 1489 : (1977) 2 SCC 699 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 404 (409) : 1977 CrLJ 1125 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 188 : (1977) 3 SCR 113.

[13410] ● Discretion means sound discretion.—The use of private and independent thought. When anything is left to be done according to one's discretion the law intends it to be done with sound discretion and according to law, and the Court has power to redress things that are otherwise done notwithstanding they are left to the discretion of those that do them. Discretion is discerning between right and wrong; and there has power to act discretion, is bound by the rule of reason fore, whoever and law. And though there be a latitude of discretion given to one, yet he is circumscribed that what he does be necessary and convenient, without which no liberty can defend it. When applied to a Court of Justice, 'discretion' means sound discretion guided by law. It must be governed by rule, not by humour; it must not be arbitrary, vague and fanciful, but legal and regular. Ramji Dayawala & Sons (P) Ltd. v. Invest Imports, AIR 1981 SC 2085 : (1981) 1 SCC 80 at p. 96 : (1981) 1 SCR 899.

[13411] ● Discretionary power vested in Executive to be exercised in just reasonable and fair way.—It is not open to the Supreme Court to issue a writ in the nature of mandamus directing the Central Government to bring Section 30 of the Act into force. But a writ in the nature of mandamus to the Central Government can be issued to consider whether the time for bringing Section 30 of the Act into force has arrived or not. Every discretionary power vested in the Executive should be exercised in a just, reasonable and fair way. That is the essence of the rule of law. It cannot be allowed to leave the matter to lie over without applying its mind to the said question even though the power under Section 30 of the Act is discretionary, having regard to the fact that more than a quarter of a century has elapsed from the date on which the Act received the assent of the President of India. Aeltemesh Rein v. Union of India, AIR 1988 SC 1768 : (1988) 4 SCC 54 : 1988 CrLJ 1809 : JT 1988 (3) SC 275 : (1988) 3 SCJ 195 : (1988) 3 Crimes 513 : (1988) 17 Reports 460 : (1988) 2 CrCC 625.

[13412] ● Death sentence—Awarding of—Discretion lies with Court.—"In the ultimate analysis it could not be disputed and was seriously disputed that the circumstances in which the extreme penalty should be inflicted cannot be enumerated in view of complex situation in society and the possibilities in which the offence could be committed and in this context in ultimate analysis it is not doubted that the Legislature, therefore, was right in leaving it to the discretion of the judicial decision as to what should be the sentence in particular circumstances of the case. But the Legislature has to put a further rider that when the extreme penalty is inflicted it is necessary for the Court to give special reasons thereof." Triveniben v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1989 SC 1335 : (1989) 1 SCC 678 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 248 (261, 262) : 1990 CrLJ 1810 : 1989 CrLR (SC) 267 : JT 1989 (1) SC 314 : (1989) 1 SCR 509 : (1989) 2 Crimes 391.

[13413] ● Arrest not to be made in routine manner on more allegation of commission of offence.—No arrest can be made in a routine manner on a mere allegation of commission of an offence made against a person. It would be prudent for a Police Officer in the interest of protection of the Constitutional rights of a citizen and perhaps in his own interest that no arrest should be made without a reasonable satisfaction is reached after some investigation as to the genuineness and bona fides of a complaint and a reasonable belief both as to the person's complicity and even so as to the need to effect arrest. Denying a person of his liberty is a serious matter. The recommendations of the Police Commission merely reflect the Constitutional concomitants of the fundamental right to personal liberty and freedom. A person is not liable to arrest merely on the suspicion of complicity in an offence. There must be some reasonable justification in the opinion of the officer effecting the arrest that such arrest is necessary and justified. Except in heinous offences, an arrest must be avoided if a Police Officer issues notice to person to attend the Station House and not to leave the Station House without permission would do. Joginder Kumar v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1994 SC 1349 : (1994) 4 SCC 260 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 1172 (1179) : 1994 CrLJ 1981 : (1994) 2 Crimes 106.

[13414] ● Awarding sentence upon conviction judicial function.—Awarding sentence, upon conviction, is concededly a judicial function to be discharged by the Courts of law established in the country. It is always a matter of judicial discretion however, subject to any mandatory minimum sentence prescribed by the law. Awarding the sentence and consideration of its legality or adequacy in appeal is essentially a judicial function embracing within its ambit the power to suspend the sentence under the peculiar circumstances of each case, pending the disposal of the appeal. Dadu v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2000 SC 3203 : (2000) 8 SCC 437 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1528 (1539) : JT 2000 (1) (Supp) SC 449.

[13415] ● Exercise of discretion on well recognised principles.—The exercise of judicial discretion on well recognised principles is the safest possible safeguards for the accused which is at the very core of criminal law administered in India

The Legislature cannot, therefore, make law to deprive the Courts of their legitimate jurisdiction conferred under the procedure established by law. Dadu v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2000 SC 3203 : (2000) 8 SCC 437 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1528 : JT 2000 (1) (Supp) SC 449 : 2000 Cr App R (SC) 554.

[13416] ● Production of documents "necessary or desirable".—The powers conferred under Section 191, CrPC, 1973 are enabling in nature aimed at arming the Court or any officer-in-charge of a police station concerned to enforce and ensure the production of any document or other things "necessary or desirable" for the purpose of any investigation, inquiry or trial or other proceeding under the Code, by issuing a summons or a written order to those in possession of such material. The language of Section 191 would, no doubt, indicate the width of the powers to be unlimited but the inbuilt limitation inherent therein takes its colour and shape from the stage of a point of time of its exercise, commensurately with the nature of proceedings as also the compulsion of necessity and desirability, to fulfil the task or achieve the object. The fact that in one case the Court thought fit to exercise such powers is no compelling circumstance to do so in all and every case before it, as a matter of course and for the mere asking. The Court concerned must be allowed a large latitude in the matter of exercise of discretion and unless in a given case the Court was found to have conducted itself in so demonstrably an unreasonable manner unbecoming of a judicial authority, the Court superior to that Court cannot intervene very lightly or in a routine fashion to interpose or impose itself even at that stage. The reason being, at the stage, the question is one of mere proprieties involved in the exercise of judicial discretion by the Court and not of any rights concretised in favour of the accused. Om Prakash Sharma v. Central Bureau of Investigation, AIR 2000 SC 2335 : (2000) 5 SCC 679 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1014 (1017, 1018) : 2000 CrLJ 3478 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 443 : JT 2000 (6) SC 554.

[13417] ● When Court should proceed against other persons.—What is conferred on the Court is only a discretion as could be discerned from the words "the Court may proceed against such person". The discretionary power so conferred should be exercised only to achieve criminal justice. It is not that the Court should turn against another person whenever it comes across evidence connecting that another person also with the offence. A judicial exercise is called for keeping a conspectus of the case, including the stage at which the trial has proceeded already and the quantum of evidence collected till then, and also the amount of time which the Court had spent for collecting such evidence. It must be remembered that there is no compelling duty on the Court to proceed against other persons. The Court while deciding whether to invoke the power under Section 319 of the Code, must address itself about the other constraints imposed by the first limb of sub-section (4), that proceedings in respect of newly-added persons shall be commenced afresh and the witnesses re-examined. The whole proceedings must be recommenced from the beginning of the trial, summon the witnesses once again and examine them and cross-examine them in order to reach the stage where it had reached earlier. If the witnesses already examined are quite large in number the Court must seriously consider whether the objects sought to be achieved by such exercise are worth wasting the whole labour already undertaken. Unless the Court is hopeful that there is a reasonable prospect of the case as against the newly-brought accused ending in being convicted of the offence concerned we would say that the Court should refrain from adopting such of course of action. Michael Maechedo v. Central Bureau of Investigation, AIR 2000 SC 1127 : (2000) 3 SCC 262 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 609 (614, 615) : 2000 CrLJ 1706 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 265.

[13418] ● Law gives absolute discretion to Court to presume existence of facts.—Law gives absolute discretion to the Court to presume the existence of any fact which it thinks likely to have happened. In that process, the Court may have regard to common course of natural events, human conduct, public or private business vis-a-vis the facts of the particular case. This discretion is clearly envisaged in Section 114 of the Evidence Act. M. Narsinga Rao v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2001 SC 318 : (2001) 1 SCC 691 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 258 (264) : 2001 CrLJ 515 : 2001 CrLR (SC) 102 : (2001) 1 Crimes 79.

[13419] ● Discretion—Meaning.—"Discretion" when applied to a Court of justice means sound discretion guided by law. It must be governed by rule, not by humour, it must not be arbitrary, vague and fanciful but legal and regular. Reliance Airport Development (Pvt.) Ltd. v. Airport Authority of India, (2006) 10 SCC 1 : JT 2006 (10) SC 424.

[13420] ● Discretion under Art. 136, Constitution—Limitation.—The Supreme Court's power to exercise discretion under Art. 136 of the Constitution as apparently not subject to any limitation, the Court has itself imposed certain limitations, upon its powers. Mathai v. George, (2010) 4 SCC 358.

[13421] ● Discretion under Art. 136 of the Constitution—When exercised.—Discretionary jurisdiction under Art. 136 of the Constitution is to be exercised only in suitable cases and very sparingly. Karam Kapahli v. Lal Chand Public Charitable Trust, AIR 2010 SC 2077 : (2010) 4 SCC 753.

[13422] ● Discretionary power under Art. 136, Constitution—Limitation.—The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under Article 136 of the Constitution is basically one of conscience. The jurisdiction is primary and residuary in nature. It is unfettered and not confined within definite bounds. Discretion is to be exercised is subject to only one limitation and that is the wisdom and sense of justice of the judges. Karam Kapahi v. Lal Chand Public Charitable Trust, AIR 2010 SC 2077 : (2010) 4 SCC 753.

DISCRIMINATION—PROCEDURE

[13423] ● Discrimination—Procedure.—A rule of procedure laid down by law comes as much within the purview of Article 14 as any rule of substantive law and it is necessary that all litigants, who are similarly situated, are able to avail themselves of the same procedural rights for relief and for defence with like protection and without discrimination. A procedure different from that laid down by the ordinary law can be prescribed for a particular class of persons if the discrimination is based upon a reasonable classification. Kedar Nath v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1953 SC 404 : 1953 CrLJ 1621 : 1954 SCR 30. TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) Muthiah v. I.T. Commissioner, AIR 1956 SC 269 : (1955) 2 SCR 1247 : 1956 SCJ 349 : (1956) 29 ITR 390.

DISHONEST INTENTION

[13424] ● Theft—Essential ingredients.—The essential ingredients of the offence of theft lie in the taking of the property of another person out of his possession, without his consent, and the dishonest intention with which the act of taking is done. The combined effect to Sections 23 and 24 of the Penal Code is that a man's intention is said to be 'dishonest' if he takes another man's property out of his possession with the intention either to make a gain to himself or to cause a loss to that other by some unlawful means. Taking with a dishonest intention does not require any intention of permanent acquisition or permanent deprivation of the property taken. It is enough if there is a temporary retention or deprivation. In this respect 'theft' under the Penal Code differs from 'larceny' under the English Law which contemplates permanent gain or loss. In the present case, the two accused were cadets in the Indian Air Force and they were charged under Section 379 in respect of the theft of an aeroplane. It was proved that the accused took out from he Jodhpur aerodrome and aircraft which was not meant for training without the authority of the Commandant and flew it away to Pakistan. It was also proved that they persisted in the flight in spite of signals given to them to turn back, as soon as the irregular flight was detected. The proved facts established that the accused took away the aircraft without consent, and that even though the taking may have been for a temporary purpose, it was done with 'dishonest' intention, because the taking was for wrongful and unauthorised use by unlawful means. All the ingredients of the offence of 'theft' were thus clearly established, and the conviction of the accused on the charge under Section 379 was perfectly justified. It was contended that there was a difference between intention to cause a particular result and knowledge, that such result was likely to ensue, and that the legal maxim that every person must be presumed to intend the natural consequences of his acts had no place in criminal jurisprudence. There was no scope on the facts of the present case for raising these contentions, because the conduct of the accused clearly established their intention, to cause a wrongful gain to themselves and to cause a wrongful loss to the Government from the very beginning, when the aircraft was taken out of the aerodrome. The conclusion as to their guilty intention was arrived at as a legitimate inference, from the circumstances of the case, and not by resort to any legal maxim. Mehra K.N. v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1957 SC 369 : 1957 SCC 192 : 1957 CrLJ 552 : 1957 SCA 364 : 1957 SCJ 386 : 1957 SCR 623 : 1957 AWR (HC) 480 : 1957 ALJ 669 : 1957-1 MLJ (Cri) 308 : 1957 MPC 566.

[13425] ● Element of dishonest intention necessary ingredient of offences under Sections 403 to 409, IPC.—The element of dishonest intention is a necessary ingredient of offences under Sections 403 to 409 of the Penal Code and Section 5(1)(c) of the Prevention of Corruption Act. Offences under these sections are committed, if the accused misappropriates any property, which is entrusted to him or placed under his control with a dishonest intention. The question which arises in such cases is—what is dishonest intention and when can dishonest intention on the part of the accused be said to have been proved? Under Sections 23 and 24 of the Code a person is said to act "dishonestly" not only when he makes a wrongful gain to himself of property to which he is not legally entitled, but also when he causes wrongful loss to another person of property to which that person is legally entitled, either by keeping him out of that property or by depriving him of that property. Therefore, an offence involving misappropriation with a dishonest intention is committed, whenever it is proved that the accused was placed in possession of some property by another person and that he has so acted in respect of that property as to intentionally deprive the owner of that property. Krishnan Kumar v. Union of India, AIR 1959 SC 1390 : 1959 CrLJ 1508 : 1959 MLJ (Cri) 974.

[13426] ● Burden of proving intention or knowledge lies on prosecution.—It is the law of this country that the burden of proving the intention or knowledge which is the constituent element of an offence, always lies on the prosecution. Therefore, no doubt, when the accused is charged with an offence involving misappropriation with a dishonest intention, the burden lies on the prosecution to prove, that the accused has so acted as to deprive the owner of the property which was entrusted to him, and that he so acted with a dishonest intention. Krishnan Kumar v. Union of India, AIR 1959 SC 1390 : 1959 CrLJ 1508 : 1960 SCJ 1 : 1960 AWR (HC) 48 : 1959 MLJ (Cri) 974.

[13427] ● Dishonest intention.—Dishonest intention exists when a person taking the property intends to cause wrongful gains to himself or wrongful loss to the other. Suvvari Sanyasi Apparao v. Boddepalli Lakshminarayana, AIR 1962 SC 586 : 1962 Supp (1) SCR 8 : 1962 1 CrLJ 512 : (1962) 2 SCJ 542.

[13428] ● Words "intent to defraud" not synonymous with words "intent to deceive".—The words "intent to defraud" as being not synonymous with the words "intent to deceive" it requires some action resulting in a disadvantage which, but for the deception the person defrauded would have avoided. Hereby the delivery of forged letters there is neither any wrongful gain to anyone nor any wrongful loss to another. The act of the appellant could not thus be termed to have been done dishonestly. Likewise the appellant cannot be said to have any intention to defraud because his action resulted in no disadvantage to anyone which but for the deception the person defrauded would have acted otherwise. The basis ingredients of the act done dishonestly or fraudulently being missing the charge under Section 471 read with 466, IPC was totally misplaced. Jibrail Dewan v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1997 SC 3424 : 1997 CrLJ 4070 (SC) : (1997) 3 Crimes 128.

[13429] ● Owner repossessing vehicle delivered to hirer not amount to theft as vital element of dishonest intention missing.—The owner repossessing the vehicle delivered to the hirer under the hire purchase agreement will not amount to theft as the vital element of 'dishonest intention' is lacking. The element of "dishonest intention" which is an essential element to constitute the offence of theft cannot be attributed to a person exercising his right under an agreement entered into between the parties as he may not have an intention of causing wrongful gain or to cause wrongful loss to the hirer. Charanjit Singh Chadha v. Sudhir Mehra, AIR 2001 SC 3721.

[13430] ● Dishonest intention—Inducing complainant to deliver Rs. 2000/- as advance as part payment for sale of land.—The accused dishonestly induced the complainant to deliver him Rs. 2000/- as advance in cash as part payment alleged for sale of or plot of land knowing fully well that he was not the owner of the said plot. It also came in evidence that the accused had similarly deceived several other persons saying that he would allot plots to them and took money in advance but did not give them the plot. Held, the issuance of the bogus receipts by the accused given to the complainant that he would be provided a plot by the accused in six months or a year. Since property included money, the offence under Section 420, IPC, was made out. There was definitely dishonest intention on the part of the accused. N. Devindrappa v. State of Karnataka, AIR 2007 SC 1741 : (2007) 5 SCC 228 : 2007 (2) SCC (Cri) 496 : 2007 CrLJ 2949 (2950) SC.

DISHONESTLY OR DISHONESTY (S. 24, IPC)

DISHONOURING OF CHEQUE

[13432] ● Dishonouring of cheque.—Section 118 lays down a special rule of evidence applicable to Negotiable Instruments. The presumption of law and thereunder a Court shall presume inter alia, that the negotiable instrument or the endorsement was made or endorsed for consideration in effect it throws the burden of proof of failure of consideration on the maker of the note or the endorser, as the case may be. The phrase "burden of proof" has two meanings—One, the burden of proof a matter of law and pleading and the other the burden of establishing a case; the former is fixed as a question of law on the basis of the pleadings and is unchanged during the entire trial whereas the latter is not constant but shifted as soon as a party adduces sufficient evidence to raise a presumption in his favour. The evidence required to shift the burden need not necessarily be by direct evidence or admission made by opposite party; it may comprise circumstantial evidence or presumptions of law or fact. A plaintiff who says that he had sold certain goods to the defendant and that a promissory note executed as consideration for the goods and that he is in possession of the relevant account books to show that he was in possession of the goods sold and sale was reflected for a particular consideration should produce the said account books. If such a relevant evidence is withheld by the plaintiff, Section 114 Evidence Act enables the Court to draw a presumption to the effect that, if produced, the said accounts would be unfavourable to the plaintiff. This presumption, if raised by a Court, can under certain circumstances rebut the presumption of law raised under Section 118 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. Kundan Lal v. Custodian Evacuee Property, AIR 1961 SC 1316.

[13433] ● Presumption under Section 118(g)—When rebutted.—When the presumption, as provided under Section 118(g), gets rebutted under the circumstances mentioned therein, the burden of proving that he is a holder in due course lies upon him. In a given case, the Court, while examining these requirements including valid consideration must also go into the question whether there was a contract express or implied, for crediting the proceeds to the account of the bearer before receiving the same. It was held that it is a question of fact in each case, namely, whether there was such a contract express or implied that the customer should be entitled to draw presumption against the amount of cheque before it is clear. The words "without having sufficient cause to believe" have to be understood in this background. In Indian Bank v. Nataraja Pillai, (1993) 1 SCC 493, another Bench of two Judges was to consider whether for granting a short term loan by the bank, further loan of Rs. 1,00,000/- was sanctioned to cover up the deficiency for which promissory note was executed along with property hypothecated for short term loans. It was contended that the sanction of Rs. 1,00,000/- under the promissory note was towards discharge of the equitable mortgage and not for cash consideration and that, therefore it was not supported by consideration. It was held that the promissory note was fully supported by consideration, and the presumption of passing of the consideration got attracted. U.P. Ponnappa Morthan Sons Palghat v. Cotholic Syrian Bank Ltd., AIR 1991 SC 441 : (1991) 1 SCC 113 : JT 1990 (4) SC 94 : (1990) 2 Scale 579.

[13434] ● Dishonest intention when inferable.—When a cheque is drawn by a person on an account maintained by him with the banker for payment of any amount of money to another person out of the account for the discharge of the debt in whole or in part or other liability is returned by the Bank with the endorsement like (i) in this case, "refer to the drawer"; (ii) "instructions for stoppage of payment"; and (iii) "sums exceeds arrangement", it amounts to dishonour with the meaning of Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. On issuance of the notice by the payee or the holder in due course after dishonour, the drawer demanding payment within 15 days from the date of the receipt of such a notice, if he does not pay the same, the statutory presumption of dishonest intention, subject to any other liability, stands satisfied . . . The object of bringing Section 138 on statute appears to be to inculcate faith in the efficacy of banking operations and credibility in transacting business on negotiable instruments. Section 138 intended to prevent dishonesty on the part of the drawer of negotiable instrument to draw a cheque without sufficient funds in his account maintained by him in a bank and induces the payee or holder in due course to act upon it. Section 138 draws presumption that one commits the offence if he issues the cheque dishonestly. It is seen that once the cheque has been drawn and issued to the payee and the payee has presented the cheque and thereafter, if any instructions are issued to the bank for non-payment and the cheque is returned to the payee with such an endorsement, it amounts to dishonour of cheque and it comes within the meaning of Section 138. Suppose after the cheque is issued to the payee or to the holder in due course and before it is presented for encashment, notice is issued to him not to present the same for encashment and yet the payee or holder in due course presents the cheque to the bank for payment and when it is returned on instructions, Section 138 does not get attracted. Under these circumstances, since the accused has not made the payment within 15 days from the date of the receipt of the notice issued by the payee or the holder in due course, the dishonest intention is inferable from those facts. Accordingly, the ingredients as contained in Section 138 have been prima facie made out in the complaint. Elec- tronics Trade and Technology Dev. Corp. Ltd., Secunderabad v. Indian Technologists and Engineers (Electronics) P. Ltd., AIR 1996 SC 2339 : (1996) 2 SCC 739 : 1996 CrLJ 1692 (SC) : (1996) 3 Crimes 82 (SC).

[13435] ● Cheque presented by drawee after drawer's instruction to bank to stop payment.— After the cheque is issued to the payee or to the holder in due course and before it is presented for encashment, notice is issued to him not to present the same for encashment and yet the payee or the holder in due course presents the cheque to the bank for payment and when it is returned on instruction, Section 138, N.I. Act does not get attracted. From the facts we are satisfied that in the present case cheques were presented after the appellant had directed its bank as to stop payment. It seems that the first cheque had even been presented after the instruction of "stop payment" issued by the appellant had become known to the respondent. The aforesaid being the position, no case under Section 138, N.I Act is made out. K.K. Sidharthan v. T.P. Praveena Chandran, (1996) 6 SCC 369 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 1340 (1342) : (1996) 4 Crimes 102 : (1996) 7 Supreme 453.

[13436] ● Stay of civil suits by High Court pending disposal of criminal cases.—After issuing notices civil suits were filed for recovery and simultaneously proceedings were initiated under Section 138 of the N.I. Act and also under Section 420, IPC in three complaints. The High Court stayed the proceedings of civil suits pending disposal of the criminal cases. It is settled law that pending of the criminal matters would not be an impediment to proceed with the civil suit. The criminal Court would deal with the offence punishable under the Act. On the other hand, the Courts rarely stay the criminal cases and only when the compelling circumstances require the exercise of their power. We have never come across stay of civil suits by the Courts so far. The High Court of Rajasthan is only an exception to pass such orders. The High Court proceeds on a wrong promise that the accused would be expected to disclose their defence in the criminal case by asking them to proceed with the trial of the suit. It is not a correct principle of law. Even otherwise, it no longer subsists, since many of them have filed their defences in the civil suit. On principle of law, we hold that the approach adopted by the High Court is not correct. But since the defence has already been filed nothing survives in this matter. The order of the High Court is set aside. State of Rajasthan v. Kalyan Sundaram Cement Industries, (1996) 3 SCC 87 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 466 (467) : JT 1996 (3) SC 162 : (1996) 3 Crimes 92 : (1996) 1 UJ 645.

[13437] ● Complaint when body corporate, de jure complainant.—The scheme of the new Code makes it clear that complainant must be a corporeal person who is capable of making physical presence in the Court. Its corollary is that even if a complaint is made in the name of an incorporeal person (like a company or corporation), it is necessary that a natural person represents such juristic person in the Court and it is that natural person who is looked upon, for all practical purposes, to be the complainant in the case. In other words, when the complainant is a body corporate, it is the de jure complainant, and it must necessarily associate a human being as de facto complainant to represent the former in Court proceedings. Associated Cement Co. Ltd. v. Keshvanand, AIR 1998 SC 596 : (1998) 1 SCC 687 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 475 : 1998 CrLJ 856 : 1998 CrLR (SC) 176 : JT 1998 (4) SC 268 : (1998) 1 Crimes 88.

[13438] ● Presumption under Section 139, NI Act in favour of holder followed once.—Section 138 of the Act is a penal provision wherein if a person draws a cheque on an account maintained by him with the banker for payment of any amount of money to another person from out of that account for the discharge, in whole or in part of any debt or other liability, is returned by the bank unpaid, on the ground either because of the amount of money standing to the credit of that account is insufficient to honour the cheque or that it exceeds the amount arranged to be paid from that account by an agreement made with that bank, such person shall be deemed to have committed an offence. The distinction between the deeming provision and the presumption is well discernible. To illustrate, if a person, draws a cheque with no sufficient funds available to his credit on the date of issue, but makes the arrangement or deposits the amount thereafter before the cheque is put in the bank by the drawee, and the cheque is honoured, in such a situation drawing of presumption of dishonesty on the part of the drawer under Section 138 would not be justified. Section 138 of the Act gets attracted only when the cheque is dishonored. Once the cheque is issued by the drawer a presumption under Section 139 must follow and merely because the drawer issues a notice to the drawee or to the Bank for stoppage of the payment it will not preclude an action under Section 138 of the Act by the drawee or the holder of a cheque in due course. On careful reading of Section 138 of the Act, we are unable to subscribe to the view that Section 138 of the Act draws presumption of dishonesty against drawer of the cheque if he without sufficient funds to his credit in his bank account to honour the cheque issues the same and, therefore, amounts to an offence under Section 138 of the Act. Modi Cements Ltd. v. Kuchil Kumar Nandi, AIR 1998 SC 1056 : 1998 CrLJ 1397 : 1998 (2) Guj LR 1620 : 1998 (1) Ker LT 582.

[13439] ● Notice not served within prescribed period under Section 138 of NI Act.—Before filing the complaint the appellant did not serve a notice within the period prescribed under Section 138 N.I. Act. Since the above finding is one of fact and based on proper appreciation of the evidence no interference in respect thereof is called for. However the impugned judgment of the High Court so far as it set aside the order of discharge passed in favour of the appellant cannot be sustained for on perusal of the record; this Court finds that the trial Court was fully justified in concluding that the evidence adduced on behalf of the respondent was insufficient to make out a prima facie case against the appellant. Tomy Jacob Kattikkaran v. Thomas Manjaly, AIR 1998 SC 366 : (1977) 11 SCC 24 : 1998 CrLJ 661 (662) : (1997) 3 Crimes 153.

[13440] ● Complainant cause of action arises and can arise only once.—Consequent upon the failure of the drawer to pay the money within the period of 15 days as envisaged under clause (c) of the proviso to Section 138, the liability of the drawer for being prosecuted for the offence he has committed arises, and the period of one month for filing the complaint under Section 142 is to be reckoned accordingly. The combined reading of the above two sections of the Act leaves no room for doubt that cause of action within the meaning of Section 142(c) arises—and can arise—only once. Besides the language of Sections 138 and 142 which clearly postulates only once cause of action there are other formidable impediments which negates the concept of successive cause of action. One of them is that for dishonour of one cheque there can be only one offence and such offence is committed by the drawer immediately on his failure to make the payment within fifteen days of the receipt of the notice served in accordance with clause (b) of the proviso to Section 138. That necessarily means that for similar failure after service of fresh notice on subsequent dishonour the drawer cannot be liable for any offence nor can the first offence be treated as non est so as to give the payee a right to file a complaint treating the second offence as the first one. On each presentation of the cheque and its dishonour a fresh right—and not cause of action—accrues in his favor. He may, therefore, without taking pre-emptory action in exercise of his such right under clause (b) of Section 138, go on presenting the cheque so as to enable him to exercise such right at any point of time during the validity of the cheque. But, once he gives a notice under clause (b) of Section 138 he forfeits such right, for, in case of failure of the drawer to pay the money within the stipulated time he would be liable for the offence and the cause of action for filing the complaint will arise. Needless to say, the period of one month for filing the complaint will be reckoned from the day immediately following the day on which the period of fifteen days from the date of the receipt of the notice by the drawer, expires. Sadanandan Bhadran v. Madhavan Sunil Kumar, AIR 1998 SC 3043 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 1471 : 1998 CrLJ 4066 : (1998) 3 Crimes 217 : 1998 (3) Mah LJ 365.

[13442] ● Notice to drawer of cheque demanding payment be sent by Fax.—The duty cast on the payee on receipt of information regarding the return of the cheque unpaid is mentioned in clause (b) of Section 138. Within 15 days he has to make a demand for payment. The mode of making such demand is also prescribed in the clause, that it should be "by giving notice in writing to the drawer of the cheque". Nowhere it is said that such notice must be sent by registered post or that it should be despatched through a messenger. Chapter XVII of the Act, containing Sections 138 to 142, was inserted in the Act as per Banking Public Finance Institution and Negotiable Instruments Laws (Amendment) Act, 1968. When the Legislature contemplated that notice in writing should be given to the drawer of the cheque, the Legislature must be presumed to have been aware of the modern devices and equipment already in vogue and also in store for future. If the Court were to interpret the words "giving notice in writing" in the section as restricted to the customary mode of sending notice through postal service or even by personal delivery, the interpretative process would fail to cope up with the change of time. Facsimile (of Fax) is a way of sending hand-written or printed or typed materials as well as pictures by wire or radio. In the West such mode of transmission came to wide use even way back in the late 1930s. By 1954 International News Service began to use Facsimile quite extensively. Technological advancement like Facsimile, Internet, E-mail etc. were on swift progress even before the Bill for the Amendment Act was discussed by the Parliament. So when Parliament contemplated notice in writing to be given we cannot overlook the fact that Parliament was aware of modern devices and equipment already in vogue. "It is presumed that Parliament intends the Court to apply to an ongoing Act a construction that continuously updates its wording to allow for changes since the Act was initially framed (an updating construction). While it remains law, it is to be treated as always speaking. This means that in its application on any date, the language of the Act, though necessarily embedded in its own time, is nevertheless to be construed in accordance with the need to treat it as current law." So if the notice envisaged in clause (b) of the proviso to Section 138 was transmitted by Fax it would be compliance with the legal requirement. The High Court's view is that the sender of the notice must know the date when it was received by the sendee, for otherwise he would not be in a position to count the period in order to ascertain the date when cause of action has arisen. The fallacy of the above reasoning is that it erases the starting date of the period of 15 days envisaged in clause (c). As per the said clause the starting date is the date of "the receipt of the said notice". Once it starts, the offence is completed on the failure to pay the amount within 15 days therefrom. Cause of action would arise if the offence is committed. If a different interpretation is given the absolute interdict incorporated in Section 142 of the Act that, no Court shall take cognizance of any offence unless the complaint is made within one month of the date on which the cause of action arises, would become otiose. SIL Import, USA v. Exim Aides Silk Exporters, Bangalore, AIR 1999 SC 1609 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 600 : 1999 CrLJ 2276 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 317.

[13443] ● Object of notice to give chance to drawer of cheque to rectify omission.—The object of notice is to give a chance to the drawer of the cheque to rectify his omission and also to protect honest drawer. Service of notice of demand in clause (b) of the proviso to Section 138 is a condition precedent for filing a complaint under Section 138 of the Act. In the present appeals there is no dispute that notices were in writing and these were sent within fifteen days of receipt of information by the appellant-bank regarding return of cheques as unpaid. Therefore, only question to be examined whether in the notice there was a demand for payment. Under Section 142 of the Act, Court can take cognizance of an offence punishable under Section 138 only on a complaint in writing made by the payee. Therefore, the police could not have started investigation under Section 138 of the Act. But if a cheque is dishonoured drawer may expose himself to prosecution under various sections of the Indian Penal Code which are cognizable and police could take up investigation. What was indicated in the notice was that in addition to the legal action by the appellant-bank under the Act, option was kept open for taking action against the respondents under the provisions of Indian Penal Code by informing the police. Central Bank of India v. Saxons Farms, AIR 1999 SC 3607 : 1999 CrLJ 4571 : (1999) 3 Crimes 221 : 1999 (3) Ker LT 484 : 2000 (1) MDLJ 149.

[13444] ● Complaint against dishonour of cheque—Limitation for.—Where a particular time is given from a certain date within which an act is to be done, the day on that date is to be excluded. The aforesaid principle of excluding the day from which the period is to be reckoned is incorporated in Section 12(1) and (2) of the Limitation Act, 1963. Section 12(1) specifically provides that in computing the period of limitation for any suit, appeal or application, the day from which such period is to be reckoned, shall be excluded. Similar provision is made in sub-section (2) for appeal, revision or review. The same principle is also incorporated in Section 9 of General Clauses Act 1897 which, inter alia provides that in any Central Act made after the commencement of the General Clauses Act, it shall be sufficient, for the purpose of excluding the first in a series of days or any other period of time, to use the word 'from', and, for the purpose of including the last in a series of days or any other period of time, to use the word 'to'. Hence, there is no reason for not adopting the rule enunciated in the aforesaid case which is consistently followed and which is adopted in the General Clauses Act and the Limitation Act. Ordinarily in computing the time, the rule observed is to exclude the first day and to include the last. Applying the said rule, the period of one month for filing the complaint will be reckoned from the day immediately following the day on which the period of 15 days from the date of the receipt of the notice by the drawer, expires. Period of 15 days, in the present case, expired on counting the period of one month. Complaint is filed on 15th November, 1995. The result would be that the complaint filed on 15th November is within time. Saketh India Ltd. v. India Securities Ltd., AIR 1999 SC 1090 : (1999) 3 SCC 1 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 329 : 1999 CrLJ 1822 : (1999) 1 Crimes 132.

[13445] ● Dishonour of cheque—Complaint regarding.—Under Section 177 of the Code "every offence shall ordinarily be inquired into and tried in a Court within whose jurisdiction it was committed." The locality where the bank (which dishonourd the cheque) is situated cannot be regarded as the sole criteria to determine the place of offence. It must be remembered that offence under Section 138 would not be completed with the dishonour of the cheque. It attains competition only with the failure of the drawer of the cheque to pay the cheque amount within the expiry of 15 days mentioned in clause (c) of the proviso to Section 138 of the Act. It is normally difficult to fix up a particular locality as the place of failure to pay the amount covered by the cheque. A place, for that purpose, would depend upon a variety of factors. It can either be at the place where the drawer resides or at the place where the payee resides or at the place where either of them carries on business. Hence, it is difficult to fix up any particular locality as the place of occurrence for the offence under Section 138 of the Act. Even otherwise the rule that every offence shall be tried by a Court within whose jurisdiction it was committed is not an unexceptional or unchangeable principle. Section 177 itself has been framed by the legislature thoughtfully by using the precautionary word "ordinarily" to indicate that the rule is not invariable in all cases. Section 178 of the Code suggests that if there is uncertainty as to where, among different localities, the offence would have been committed the trial can be had in a Court having jurisdiction over any of those localities. The provision has further widened the scope by stating that in case where the offence was committed partly in one local area and partly in another local area the Court in either of the localities can exercise jurisdiction to try the case. Further again, Section 179 of the Code stretches its scope to a still wider horizon. The offence under Section 138 of the Act can be completed only with the concatenation of a number of acts. Following are the acts which are components of the said offence : (1) Drawing of the cheque, (2) presentation of the cheque to the bank, (3) returning of the cheque unpaid by the drawee bank, (4) giving notice in writing to the drawer of the cheque demanding payment of the cheque amount, (5) failure of the drawer to make payment within 15 days of the receipt of the notice. K. Bhaskaran v. Sankaran Vaidhyan Balan, AIR 1999 SC 3762 : (1999) 7 SCC 510 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 1284 : 1999 CrLJ 4606 : 2000 (1) Mah LJ 193 : (1999) 4 Crimes 212 : (1999) 3 SCJ 426.

[13446] ● Payee to make demand by "giving notice" in writing.—On the part of the payee he has to make a demand by "giving a notice" in writing. If that was the only requirement to complete the offence on the failure of the drawer to pay the cheque amount within 15 days from the date of such "giving", the travails of the prosecution would have been very much lessened. But the legislature says that failure on the part of the drawer to pay the amount should be within 15 days "of the receipt" of the said notice. It is therefore, clear that "giving notice" in the context is not the same as receipt of notice. Giving is a process of which receipt is the accomplishment. It is for the payee to perform the former process by sending the notice to the drawer in the correct address. The context envisaged in Section 138 of the Act invites a liberal interpretation for the person who has the statutory obligation to give notice because he is presumed to be the loser in the transaction and it is for his interest the very provision is made by the legislature. The words in clause (b) of the proviso to Section 138 of the Act show that payee has the statutory obligation to "make a demand" by giving notice. The thrust in the clause is on the need to "make a demand". It is only the mode for making such demand which the legislature has prescribed. A payee can send the notice for doing his part for giving the notice. Once it is despatched his part is over and the next depends on what the sendee does. In the connection a reference to Section 27 of the General Clauses Act will be useful. No doubt Section 138 of the Act does not require that the notice should be given only by "post". Nonetheless the principle incorporated in Section 27 of General Clauses Act profitably be imported in a case where the sender has despatched the notice by post with the correct address written on it. Then it can be deemed to have been served on the sendee unless he proves that it was not really served and that he was not responsible for such non-service. Any other interpretation can lead to a very tenuous position as the drawer of the cheque who is liable to pay the amount would resort to the strategy of subterfuge by successfully avoiding the notice. Thus when a notice is returned by the sendee as unclaimed such date would be the commencing date in reckoning the period of 15 days contemplated in clause (d) of the proviso of Section 138 of the Act. Of course such reckoning would be without prejudice to the right of the drawer of the cheque to show that he had no knowledge that the notice was brought to his address. In the present case the accused did not even attempt to discharge the burden to rebut the aforesaid presumption. K. Bhaskaran v. Sankaran Vaidhyan Balan, AIR 1999 SC 3762 : 1999 CrLJ 4606 : 2000 (1) Mah LJ 193 : 2000 (1) Pun LR 113 : 1999 (3) Raj LW 470.

[13447] ● Company when convicted under Section 138 N.I. Act Court can only impose fine.—It has been pointed out that when a company is convicted under Section 138 N.I. Act, the Court can only impose a fine as the sentence since a juristic person like the company cannot possibly be sent to prison. On its premise, learned counsel contended that recovery of the fine covered by such sentence would be impracticable on account of the bar envisaged in Section 22(1) of the Sick Industrial Companies (Special Provisions) Act (1 of 1986) against proceedings for execution distress or the likes as against any of the properties of the company. The fallacy of the above contention is two fold. First is that maintainability of a prosecution proceeding is not to be tested on the touchstone any practical hurdle in enforcing the sentence which might be imposed on a company after conviction. Second is there is no unsurmountable hurdle for recovery of the fine covered by the sentence even from a sick industrial company, because the ban contained on Section 22(1) is only conditional as could be discerned from the last limb thereof. BSI Limited v. Gift Holdings Pvt. Ltd., AIR 2000 SC 926 (930, 931) : 2000 SCC (Cri) 538 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 737 : 2000 CrLJ 1424 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 247 : JT 2000 (2) SC 127.

[13448] ● Words "the drawer of such cheque fails to make payment" different from saying "drawer refuses to make payment".—The words "the drawer of such cheque fails to make the payment", are ostensibly different from saying "the drawer refuses to make payment". Failure to make payment can be due to the reasons beyond the control of the drawer. It is felt that the Legislature has thoughtfully used the word "fails" instead of other expressions as failure can be due to a variety of reasons including disability to pay. But the offence would be complete when the drawer "fails" to make payment within the stipulated time, whatever be the cause for such failure. The drawer of the cheque can have different explanations for the failure to pay the amount covered by the cheque. But no such explanations would be sufficient to extricate him from the tentacles of the offence contemplated in the section. Perhaps some kind of explanations would be sufficient to alleviate the rigour of the offence which may be useful to mitigate the quantum of sentence to be imposed. But that is no ground for consideration at this stage. Pankaj Mehra v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2000 SC 1953 : (2000) 2 SCC 756 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 556 (567) : 2000 CrLJ 1781 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 237 : JT 2000 (2) SC 113.

[13449] ● FIR not making out any offence.—The gravaman of the appellant's case in the FIR is that certain cheques had been given to the respondents more particularly the Commercial Manager with the specific understanding that these cheques can be presented against delivery of future vehicles and not for any past liability or dues, but the respondents presented the same which, of course, could not be enchased in view of the directions given by the appellant-drawer.

However, the appellant had to sustain the loss of Rs. 8982 as commission charges. Necessary ingredients of the offence of cheating or criminal breach of trust have not been made out and on the other hand the attendant circumstances indicate that the FIR was lodged to pre-empt the filing of the criminal complaint against the information under Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. Sunil Kumar v. Escorts Yamaha Motors Ltd., AIR 2000 SC 27 (29) : (1999) 8 SCC 468 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 1466 : 2000 CrLJ 174.

[13450] ● "Said amount" of money—Refers to cheque amount.—It is a well settled principle of law that notice has to be read as a whole. In the notice, demand has to be made for the "said amount", i.e., cheque amount. If no such demand is made, the notice no doubt, would fall short of its legal requirement. Where in addition to "said amount", there is also a claim by way of interest cost, etc., whether the notice is bad would depend on the language of the notice. If in a notice while giving up break up of the claim, the cheque amount, interest damages, etc. are separately specified, other such claims for interest, cost etc. would be superfluous and these additional claims would be severable and will not invalidate the notice. If, however, in the notice an omnibus demand is made without specifying what was due under the dishonoured cheque, notice might well fail to meet the legal requirement and may be regarded as bad. In the notice in question the said amount i.e., the cheque amount has been clearly stated. Respondent No. 1 had claimed in addition to the cheque amount, incidental and notice charge. These two amounts are severable. In the notice, it was clearly stated that failure to comply with the demand, necessary legal steps will be taken up. If respondent No. 1 had paid the cheque amount, he would have been absolved from the criminal liability under Section 138. Regarding other claims, a civil suit would be necessary. Suman Sethi v. Ajay K. Churiwal, AIR 2000 SC 828 (830) : (2000) 2 SCC 380 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 414 : 2000 CrLJ 1391 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 180 : JT 2000 (1) SC 493.

[13451] ● Presumption under Section 139 of NI Act—Be rebutted by any of accused.—After all a presumption is only for casting the burden of proof as to who should adduce evidence in a case. It is open to any one of the accused to adduce evidence to rebut the said presumption. In a prosecution where both the drawer company and its office-bearers are arrayed as accused, and if the drawer company does not choose to adduce any rebuttal evidence, it is open to the other accused office-bearers to adduce such rebuttal evidence. If that be so, even in a case where the drawer company is not made an accused but the office-bearers of the company alone are made the accused, such office-bearers accused are well within their rights to adduce rebuttal evidence, to establish that the company did not issue the cheque towards any antecedent liability. We are not impressed to the contention that Section 139 of the Negotiable Instruments Act would afford support to the plea that prosecution of the company is sine qua non for prosecuting its directors under Section 141 of the Act. Anil Handa v. Indian Acrylic Ltd., AIR 2000 SC 145 (148) : (2000) 1 SCC 1 : 2000 CrLJ 373 : (2000) 1 Crimes 26 : (2000) 1 SCJ 217.

[13452] ● Finding that offence committed by company sine qua non for convicting other persons.—If the drawer of a cheque happens to be a juristic person like a body corporate, it can be prosecuted for the offence under Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. Now there is no scope for doubt regarding that aspect in view of the clear language employed in Section 141 of the Act. In the expanded ambit of the word "company" even firms or any other associations of persons are included and as a necessary adjunct thereof a partner of the firm is treated as director of that company. Thus when the drawer of the cheque who falls within the ambit of Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, is a human being or a body corporate or even a firm, prosecution proceedings can be initiated against such drawer. In this context, the phrase "as well as" used in sub-s. (1) of Section 141 of the Act has some importance. The said phrase would embroil the persons mentioned in the first category within the tentacles of the offence on a par with the offending company. Similarly, the words "shall also" in sub-s. (2) are capable of bringing the third category of persons additionally within the drangnet of the offence on an equal par. The effect of reading Section 141 is that when the company is the drawer of the cheque, such company is the principal offender under Section 138 of the Act and the remaining persons one made offenders by virtue of the legal fiction created by the Legislature as per the section. Hence, the actual offence should have been committed by the company, and then alone the other two categories of persons can also become liable for the offence.

If the offence was committed by a company, it can be punished only if the company is prosecuted. But instead of prosecuting the company if a payee opts to prosecute only the persons falling within the second or third category, the payee can succeed in the case only if he succeeds in showing that the offence was actually committed by the company. In such a prosecution, the accused can show that the company has not committed the offence, though such company is not made an accused, and hence the prosecuted accused is not liable to be punished. The provisions do not certain condition that prosecution of the company is sine qua non for prosecution of the other persons who fall within the second and the third categories mentioned above. No doubt, a finding that the offence was committed by the company is sine qua non for convicting those other persons. But if a company is not prosecuted due to any legal snag or otherwise, the other prosecuted persons cannot, on that score alone, escape from the penal liability created through the legal fiction envisaged in Section 141 of the Act. Anil Handa v. Indian Acrylic Ltd., AIR 2000 SC 145 (148) : (2000) 1 SCC 1 : 2000 CrLJ 374 : (2000) 1 Crimes 26 : (2000) 1 SCJ 217.

[13453] ● Section 22 SICA not create any legal impediment for instituting and proceeding with criminal case.—Section 22 SICA does not create any legal impediment for instituting and proceeding with a criminal case or the allegation of an offence under Section 138 N.I. Act against a company or its Directors. The section only creates an embargo against disposal of assets of the company for recovery of its debts. The purpose of such embargo is to preserve the assets of the company from being attached or sold for realisation of dues of the creditors. The section does not bar payment of money by the company or its directors to other persons for satisfaction of their legally enforceable dues. Kusum Ingots and Alloys Ltd. v. Pennar Peterson Securities Ltd., AIR 2000 SC 954 (960, 961) : (2000) 2 SCC 745 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 546 : 2000 CrLJ 1464 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 319.

[13454] ● Complaint when not maintainable.—Complaint is not maintainable, if the fact that notice has been served in the complaint has not been mentioned. Shakti Travel and Tours v. State of Bihar, JT 2000 (7) SC 563 : (2000) 4 Crimes 150 : (2000) 7 Crimes 90 : (2000) 7 SLT 319.

[13455] ● Presumption of deemed source of notice matter of course.—Presumption of deemed service is not a matter of course in all cases. Deemed service is to be accepted in the facts of each case. It the present case, the appellant pleaded that he did not get notice on facts of the case, benefit of doubt should be granted. Sridhar M.A. v. Metalloy N. Steel Corporation, (2000) 1 SCC 397 : (2000) 3 SLT 675 : (2000) 3 SLT 675 : (2000) 2 CCR 82.

[13456] ● Appellant paid cheque amount and interest payable thereon.—The respondent has filed an affidavit on 24-8-2000 submitting that the appellant has been paid a sum of Rs. 3,94,243.33 which includes the cheque amount and the interest payable thereon. In support of his submission, he has filed Annexures R-1 and R-2 alongwith the affidavit. Learned Counsel for the appellant has admitted the payment of the amount. Thus we feel that no useful purpose would be served by sending the respondent back to Jail as the interests of justice would be served by imposing a penalty of fine alone in the circumstances adverted to above. Accordingly, upon conviction under Section 138 of the Act, the sentence of imprisonment awarded to the respondent is substituted with the imposition of fine of Rs. 5,000 to be deposited within two months. Narsingh Das Tapadia v. Goverdhan Das Partani, AIR 2000 SC 2946 (2949) : (2000) 7 SCC 183 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1326 : (2000) 4 Crimes 12 : (2000) 3 KLT 605.

[13457] ● "Taking cognizance of offence"—Meaning of.—The High Court found that as the notice intimating the dishonourment of cheque was served upon the accused on 26th October, 1994, the complainant/appellant could not file the complaint unless the expiry of 15 days period. It was found on facts that the complaint filed on 8-11-1994 was returned after finding some defect in it. However, when refiled, the Court took the cognizance on 17-11-1994. The High Court that the original complaint having been filed on 8-11-1994, was pre-mature and liable to be dismissed.

"Taking cognizance of an offence" by the Court has to be distinguished from the filing of the complaint by the complainant. Taking cognizance would mean the action taken by the Court for initiating judicial proceedings against the offender in respect of the offence regarding which the complaint is filed. Before it can be said that any Magistrate or Court has taken cognizance of an offence, it must be shown, that he has applied his mind to the facts for the purpose of proceeding further in the matter at the instance of the complainant. If the Magistrate or the Court is shown to have applied the mind not for the purpose of taking action upon the complaint but for taking some other kind of action contemplated under the Code of Criminal Procedure, such as ordering investigation under Section 156(3) or issuing a search warrant, he cannot be said to have taken cognizance of the offence. Mere presentation of the complaint in the Court cannot be said to mean, that its cognizance had been taken by the Magistrate. If the complaint is found to be premature, it can wait maturity or be returned to the complainant for filing latter and its mere presentation at an earlier date need not necessarily render the complainant liable to be dismissed or confer any right upon the accused to absolve himself from the criminal liability for the offence committed. Mere presentation of the complaint on 8-11-1994 when it was returned to the complainant/appellant on the ground that the verification was not signed by the counsel, could not be termed to be an action of the Magistrate taking cognizance within the meaning of Section 142 of the N.I. Act. The High Court appears to have committed not only mistake of law but a mistake of fact as well. No cognizance was taken on 8-11-1994, but the Magistrate is shown to have applied his mind and taken cognziance only on 17-11-1994. The conviction of the respondent under Section 138 of the Act is upheld. Narsingh Das Tapadia v. Goverdhan Das Partani, AIR 2000 SC 2946 (2948, 2949) : (2000) 7 SCC 183 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1326 : (2000) 4 Crimes 12 : (2000) 3 KLT 605.

[13458] ● "Said amount of money" refers to cheque amount.—In Section 138 of the N.I. Act, Legislature clearly stated that for the dishonoured cheque the drawer shall be liable for conviction if the demand is not made within 15 days of the receipt of notice but this is without prejudice to any other provision of the Act. If the cheque amount is paid within the above period or before the complaint is filed, the legal liability under Section138 will cease and for recovery of other demands as compensation, costs, interest, etc., a civil proceeding will lie. Therefore, if in a notice any other sum is indicated in addition to the "said amount", the notice cannot be faulted, as stated above. Suman Sethi v. Ajay K. Churiwal, AIR 2000 SC 828 (830) : (2000) 2 SCC 380 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 414 : 2000 CrLJ 1391 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 180 : JT 2000 (1) SC 493.

[13459] ● Section 22 of SICA not bar criminal proceedings against company or its directors for dishonour of cheque.—A contention was raised on behalf of the appellants that if the criminal case is proceeded with and the company and the appellants are convicted and sentenced to fine then it will be necessary to realise the amount of fine from the assets of the company which would be impermissible in view of the provisions of Section 22 of the Sick Industrial Companies (Special Provisions) Act, 1985. In the considered view of the Court the contention is premature and farfetched as the occasion to realise fine from the accused company or its directors will arise only in case they are convicted and sentenced or fine is imposed against them. That is not a ground to hold that the criminal proceeding should be foreclosed at the threshold. Take for instance before the date on which the cheque was drawn or before expiry of the statutory period of 15 days after notice, a restraint order of the BIFR under Section 22-A was passed against the company then it cannot be said that the offence under Section 138, N.I. Act was completed. In such a case, it may reasonably be said that the dishonouring of the cheque by the bank and failure to make payment of the amount by the company and/or its Directors is for reasons beyond the control of the accused. It may also be contended that the amount claimed by the complainant is not recoverable from the assets of the company in view of the ban order passed by the BIFR. In such circumstances, it would be unjust and unfair and against the intent and purpose of the statute to hold that the Directors should be compelled to face trial in a criminal case. Kusum Ingots and Alloys Ltd. v. Pennar Peterson Securities Ltd., AIR 2000 SC 954 (961) : (2000) 2 SCC 745 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 546 : 2000 CrLJ 1464 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 319 : JT 2000 (2) SC 390.

[13460] ● Subsequent to order of conviction—Appellant depositing amount.—It appears, subsequent to the said order of conviction, the appellant has deposited a sum of Rs. 5,96,688 in the Court of the XVth Metropolitan Magistrate. The learned counsel for the respondent has stated that if the amount deposited is permitted to be withdrawn by the first respondent, then the first respondent will not press before the Appellate Court for a conviction or for a sentence be it for imprisonment or fine. In such circumstances, the Appellate Court will consider whether the conviction is to be maintained or an order of imposition of fine is to be passed, in the light of the stand taken by the Counsel for the first respondent. Cranex Ltd. v. Nagarjuna Finance Ltd., AIR 2000 SC 3145 (3146) : (2000) 7 SCC 388 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1388 : 2000 CrLJ 4673 : (2004) 4 Crimes 38.

[13461] ● Section 138 NI Act penal provision.—A criminal prosecution is neither for recovery of money nor for enforcement of any security, etc. Section 138 of the N.I. Act is a penal provision the commission of which offence entails a conviction and sentence on proof of the guilt in a duly conducted criminal proceedings. Once the offence under Section 138 is completed, the prosecution proceedings can be initiated not for recovery of the amount covered by the cheque but for bringing the offender to the penal liability. BSI Ltd. v. Gift Holdings Pvt. Ltd., AIR 2000 SC 926 (930, 931) : (2000) 2 SCC 737 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 538 : 2000 CrLJ 1424 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 247 : JT 2000 (2) SC 127.

[13462] ● Complaint filed well within period prescribed.—In the present case, it is apparent from Annexure P-4 that a notice dated 16-7-1996 was given by the appellant to the respondent which was within the time prescribed under cl. (b) of the proviso to Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. The reply of 23-7-1996 given by the respondent makes this position apparent. Under cl. (c) of the proviso to Section 138, 15 days time is given to the respondent for making payment after receipt of notice. No such payment was made within 15 days even if we assume that 23-7-1996 was the date on which the respondent has received the notice Section 142(b) of the Negotiable Instruments Act, provides that complaint should be made within one month from the date on which the cause of action arises under cl. (c) of the proviso to Section 138, of the Act. In the present case, the complaint was filed on 12-8-1996 which is well within the period prescribed after the accrual of the cause of action under cl. (c) of the proviso to Section 138. Jagdish Chand Gupta v. Sandeep Arora, AIR 2000 SC 3639 (3639, 3640).

[13463] ● Complainant fully satisfied with payment.—It has been pointed out that a development took place subsequent to the filing of this appeal. It was that appellant has paid the entire amount covered by the disputed cheques. In fact an affidavit has been sworn to by the deponent which is authenticated by an Advocate. The affidavit shows that complainant is "fully satisfied" with the payment made by the appellant. In view of the said development we alter the sentence to a fine of Rs. 5,000. P. Mohan Babu v. D. Rmaswamy, AIR 2000 SC 3543 (3544) : (2000) 9 SCC 528 : 2000 CrLJ 4671 : (2000) 4 Crimes 112 : (2000) 6 SLT 806 (1).

[13464] ● Supreme Court directing Court concerned to grant exemption from personal appearance on conditions.—Considering the plight of the petitioner in defending prosecution proceedings instituted at various places in India on the strength of the cheques issued by the company of which he was the director, we permit the petitioner to move the Court concerned (before which the prosecution is pending in any of the cases) for exempting him from personal appearance. This can be done only after making the first appearance in the Court concerned. If any such application is filed by the petitioner we direct the Court concerned to exempt him from personal appearance on the following conditions : A Counsel on his behalf would be present in the particular Court on days when his case is taken up. He will not dispute his identity as the accused in the case. He will be present in Court when such presence is imperatively needed. V.K. Jain v. Union of India, AIR 2000 SC 3609 : (2000) 1 SCC 709 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 302 : (2000) 5 SLT 329.

[13465] ● Writ petition for quashing prosecution—Inability of accused to go to all Courts.—This writ petition has been filed for quashing various prosecution launched against this petitioner for the offence under Section 138 N.I. Act merely on the ground that the petitioner is unable to go to all the different Courts. He contends that he was not participating in the affairs of the company which issued the cheques. It is a defence which he can adopt in the prosecutions. But merely raising such a contention now is no ground for quashing the prosecutions. V.K. Jain v. Union of India, AIR 2000 SC 3609 : (2000) 1 SCC 709 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 302 : (2000) 5 SLT 329.

[13466] ● Appellant not incharge of and responsible to company for conduct of its business.—From a perusal of Section 141 it is evident that in a case where a company committed offence under Section 138 of the N.I. Act then not only the company but also every person who at the time when the offence was committed, was incharge of and was responsible to the company for the conduct of the business of the company shall be deemed to be guilty of the offence and liable to be proceeded against under those provisions only if that person was in charge of and was responsible to the company for the conduct of its business. The allegations made in the complaint do not, either in express words or with reference to the allegations contained therein, make out a case that at the time of commission of the offence, the appellant was in charge of and was responsible to the company for the conduct of its business. K.P.G. Nair v. Jindal Menthol India Ltd., 2000 CrLR (SC) 778 : JT 2000 (Supp 1) SC 519 : (2001) 2 Crimes 132 : (2000) 7 SLT 189.

[13467] ● Burden to prove that dishonoured cheque issued to discharge debt or liability.—Under Section 118 N.I. Act unless the contrary was proved, it is to be presumed that the negotiable instrument (including a cheque) had been made or drawn for consideration. Under Section 139, the Court has to presume, unless the contrary was proved, that the holder of the cheque received the cheque for discharge, in whole or in part, of a debt or liability. Thus, in complaints under Section 138, the Court has to presume that the cheque had been issued for a debt or liability. This presumption is rebuttable. However, the burden of proving that a cheque had not been issued for a debt or liability on the accused. In the instant case the first respondent had to prove in the trial, by leading cogent evidence that there was no debt or liability. The 1st respondent not having led any evidence could not be said to have discharged the burden cast on him. The 1st respondent having discharged the burden of proving that the cheque was not issued for a debt or liability, the conviction as awarded by the Magistrate was correct. The High Court erroneously set aside that conviction. K.N. Beena v. Muniyappan, AIR 2001 SC 2895 (2896) : (2001) 8 SCC 458 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 14 : (2001) 4 Crimes 376.

[13468] ● Limitation period for issuing notice of demand to drawer.—Section 138(b) of N.I. Act inter alia provides that the payee has to make demand for the payment of money by giving a notice "to the drawer of the cheque within fifteen days of the receipt of information by him from the bank regarding the return of the cheque as unpaid". So fifteen days are to be counted from the receipt of information regarding the return of the cheque as unpaid. Munoth Investments Ltd. v. Puttukola Properties Ltd., AIR 2001 SC 2752 (2753) : (2001) 6 SCC 582 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 1184 : 2001 CrLR (SC) 847 : (2001) 4 Crimes 122.

[13469] ● Pay order "cheuqe".—A pay order is a cheque within the meaning of Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881. Punjab and Sind Bank v. Vinakar Sahakari Bank Ltd., AIR 2001 SC 3641 : (2001) 7 SCC 721 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 1395 : 2002 CrLJ 93 : (2001) 4 Crimes 289.

[13470] ● Statutory time—Limit for presenting cheque to bank.—It is mandatory that the cheque is presented to "the bank" within a period of six months from the date on which it is drawn or within the period of its validity whichever is earlier. It is the cheque drawn which has to be presented to "the bank" within the period specified therein. When a post-dated cheque is written or drawn, it is only a bill of exchange. The post-dated cheque becomes a cheque under the Act on the date which is written on the said cheque and the six months period has to be reckoned, for the purposes of Section 138 of the N.I. Act, from the said date. Shri Ishar Alloy Steels Ltd. v. Jayaswals NECO Limited, AIR 2001 SC 1161 (1164) : (2001) 3 SCC 609 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 582 : 2000 CrLJ 1250 : JT 2001 (3) SC 114 : (2001) 1 Crimes 284.

[13471] ● Expression "Bank" occurring in proviso (a) to Section 138 NI Act—Meaning.—The payment of the cheque is contemplated by "the bank" meaning thereby where the person issuing the cheque has an account. "The" is the word used before nouns, with a specifying or particularising effect opposed to the indefinite or generalising force of "a" or "an". It determines what particular thing is meant; that is what particular thing we are to assume to be meant. "The" is always mentioned to denote particular thing or a person. "The" would, therefore. refer implicitly to a specified bank and not any bank "The bank" referred to in cl.(a) to the proviso to Section 138 of the N.I. Act would mean the drawee-bank on which the cheque is drawn and not all banks where the cheque is presented for collection including the bank of the payee, in whose favour the cheque is issued. The payee of the cheque has, no doubt, the option to present the cheque in any bank including the collecting bank where he has his account but to attract the criminal liability of the drawer of the cheque such collecting bank is obliged to present the cheque in the drawee or payee bank on which the cheque in drawn within the period of six months from the date on which it is shown to have been issued. The non-presentation of the cheque to the drawee-bank within the period specified in the section would absolve the person issuing the cheque of his criminal liability under Section138 of the Act, who shall otherwise may be liable to pay the cheque amount to the payee in a civil action initiated under the law. A combined reading of Sections 2,72 and 138 of the N.I. Act would leave no doubt in our mind that the law mandates the cheques to be presented at the bank on which it is drawn if the drawer is to be held criminally liable. Such presentation is necessarily to be made within six months at the bank on which the cheque is drawn, whether presented personally or through another bank, namely, the collecting bank of the payee. Shri Ishar Alloy Steels Ltd. v. Jayaswals NECO Limited, AIR 2001 SC 1161 : (2001) 3 SCC 609 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 582 : 2000 CrLJ 1250 : JT 2001 (3) SC 114 : 2001 Cr App R (SC) 353 : (2001) 1 Crimes 284.

[13472] ● Post-dated cheque—Remains Bill of Exchange till date written on face of it.—For prosecuting a person for an offence under Section 138 of N.I. Act, it is inevitable that the cheque is presented to the banker within a period of six months from the date on which it is drawn or within the period of its validity whichever is earlier. When a post-dated cheque is written or drawn, it is only a bill of exchange, and so long the same remains a bill of exchange, the provisions of Section 138 of the Act are not applicable to the said instrument. The post-dated cheque becomes a cheque within the meaning of Section 138 of the Act on the date which is written thereon and the 6 months period has to be reckoned for the purposes of proviso (a) to Section 138 of the Act from the said date. In the present case the cheque was prepared and made over by the drawer to the drawee on 10-11-1995 but the date mentioned thereon was 20-1-1996 and it was presented before the banker for encashment on 7-7-1996, i.e., within a period of six months from 20-1-1996. Thus we find no ground to quash prosecution of the appellant as, on the facts alleged, an offence under Section138 of the Act is clearly made out. Ashok Yashwant Badave v. Surendra Madhavrao Nighojakar, AIR 2001 SC 1315 (1320, 1321) : (2001) 3 SCC 726 : 2001 CrLJ 1674 : 2001 CrLR (SC) 331 : (2001) 2 Crimes 7.

[13473] ● Complainant subsequently filing civil suit and attaching all properties of accused no ground to impose lesser sentence.—The total amount covered by the cheques involved in the present two cases was Rs. 4,50,000. There was no case for the respondent that the said amount had been paid either during the pendency of the cases before the trial Court or revision before the High Court or this Court. If the amounts had been paid to the complainant, there perhaps would have been justification for imposing a fleebite sentence as had been chosen by the trial Court. But in a case where the amount covered by the cheque remained unpaid, it should be the look out of the trial Magistrate that the sentence for the offence under Section 138 should be of such a nature as to give proper effect to the object of the legislation. No drawer of the cheque can be allowed to take dishonour of the cheque issued by him light-heartedly. The very object of enactment of provisions like Section138 of the Act would stand defeated if the sentence is of the nature passed by the trial Magistrate. It is a different matter if the accused paid the amount atleast during the pendency of the case. The learned counsel contended that the complainant has subsequently filed a civil suit and attached all the properties of the accused. That is not a ground for lessening the gravity of the offence or to impose a minor sentence chosen by the trial Court. We set aside the sentence passed on the respondent and remit the case to the trial Magistrate for passing appropriate sentence on the accused after hearing both sides. Suganthi Suresh Kumar v. Jagdeeshan, AIR 2002 SC 681 : (2002) 22 SCC 420 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 344 : JT 2002 (1) SC 220 : (2002) 1 Crimes 265.

[13474] ● Complaint against guarantor—Maintainability.—The issue as regards the co-extensive liability of the guarantor and the principal debtor, is totally out of the purview of Section 138 of the act, neither the same calls for any discussion therein. The language of the Statute depicts the intent of the law-makers to the effect that wherever there is a default on the part of one in favour of another and in the event a cheque is issued in discharge of any debt or other liability there cannot be any restriction or embargo in the matter of application of the provisions of Section 138 of the Act; 'Any cheque' and 'other liability' are the two key expressions which stands as clarifying the legislative intent so as to bring the factual context within the ambit of the provisions of the Statute. Any contra interpretation would defeat the intent of the legislature. I.C.D.S. Ltd. v. Beena Shabeer, AIR 2002 3014 : (2002) 6 SCC 426 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 1342 : 2002 CrLJ 3925 : JT 2002 (6) SC 119 : (2002) 4 Crimes 75 (SC).

[13475] ● Payment due under cheque received—Sentence reduced to period already undergone.—It is stated by the learned Counsel that the money due under the cheque has already been received by the respondent. In this view of the matter, the sentence awarded is reduced to the period already undergone. K.L. Kunjappan v. Rafeeque, (2002) 8 SCC 181 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 1884 : (2001) 124 STC 59.

[13476] ● Closure of account—Difference of hand writing and ink on cheque.—In the revision filed the High Court, taking note of the facts that there is no evidence to show that the cheque has been issued prior to the closure of the account and that no contention was raised that the cheque was issued after closure of the account and also noticing that is Ext P-1 cheque—There is difference in handwritings and in ink, the High Court set aside the order of conviction passed by the Appellate Court confirming the conviction of respondent 1 by the trial Court. Having perused the order of the High Court under challenge we are of the view that the above factors do not rebut the statutory presumptions under Sections 139 and 118 of the Negotiable Instruments Act so as to revise the order, set aside the conviction and sentence. P.K. Manmadhan Kartha v. Sanjeev Raj, (2002) 7 SCC 150 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 1626 (1672) : JT 2002 (6) SC 31 : (2004) 2 SLT 1071 : (2004) 120 Com Cases 282 : (2002) 2 SLT 82.

[13477] ● Dishonour of cheque—Incomplete signature of drawer.—The only ground on which the cheque appears to have not been honoured is that the drawer's signature was incomplete. In this case the dishonouring of cheque did not attract Section 138 Negotiable Instruments Act, 1981. Hence criminal proceedings initiated under Sections 138 and 142. Vinod Tanna v. Zaher Siddiqui, (2002) 7 SCC 541 : 2002 SCC (Cri)

1825 (1826) : JT 2001 (10) SC 345 : (2000) 2 SLT 82.

[13478] ● Complainant not to allege in complaint about subsisting liability.—There is no requirement that the Complainant must specifically allege in the complaint that there was a subsisting liability. The burden of proving that there was no existing debt or liability was on the respondents. This they have to discharge in the trial. At this stage, merely on basis of averments in the petitions filed by them, the High Court could not have concluded that there was no existing debt or liability. M.M.T.C. Ltd. v. Medchl Chemicals and Pharma (P). Ltd., AIR 2002 SC 182 (186) : (2002) 1 SCC 234 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 121 : 2002 CrLJ 266 : (2002) 1 Crimes 156.

[13479] ● Open to drawer to revalidate negotiable instrument including cheque.—"There is no provision in the Negotiable Instruments Act or in any other law which stipulates that a drawer of a negotiable instrument cannot revalidate it. It is always open to a drawer to voluntarily revalidate a negotiable instrument, including a cheque. . . The first paragraph of Section 87 makes it clear that the party who consents to the alteration as well as the party who made the alteration, are disentitled to complain against such alteration, e.g., if the drawer of the cheque himself altered the cheque for validating or revalidating the same instrument, he cannot take advantage of it latter by saying that the cheque became void as there is material alteration thereto. Further even if the payee or the holder of the cheque made the alteration with the consent of the drawer thereof such alteration also cannot be used as the ground to resist the right of the payee or holder thereof. It in always a question of fact whether the alteration was made by the drawer himself or whether it was made with the consent of the drawer. It quires evidence to prove the question when it is disputed." Veera Exports v. T. Kalavathy, AIR 2002 SC 38 (39) : (2002) 1 SCC 97 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 85 : 2002 CrLJ 203 : (2002) 1 Crimes 123 : (2002) 1 KLT 58.

[13480] ● Cheque when dishonoured by reason of stop payment instructions.—"Even when the cheque is dishonoured by reason of "stop payment" instructions by virtue of Section139 the Court has to presume that cheque was received by the holder for the discharge, in whole or in part, of any debt or liability. Of course, this is a rebuttable presumption. The accused can, thus, show that the "stop payment" instructions were not issued because of insufficiency or paucity of funds. If the accused shows that in his account there was sufficient funds to clear the amount of the cheque at the time of presentation of the cheque for encashment at the drawer bank and that the stop payment notice had been issued because of other valid causes including that there was no existing debt or liability at the time of presentation of cheque for encashment, then offence under Section 138 would not be made out. The important thing is that the burden of so proving would be on the accused. Thus, a Court cannot quash a complaint on this ground." M.M.T.C. Ltd. v. Medchl Chemicals and Pharma (P). Ltd., AIR 2002 SC 182 (186) : (2002) 1 SCC 234 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 121 : 2002 CrLJ 266 : (2002) 1 Crimes 156.

[13481] ● Partner of firm liable to be convicted when.—The partner of a firm is liable to be convicted for an offence committed by the firm if he was in charge of and was responsible to the firm for the conduct of the business of the firm or if it is proved that the offence was committed with the consent or connivance of, or was attributable to any neglect on the part of the partner concerned. Katta Sujatha v. Fertilizers & Chemicals Travancore Ltd., (2002) 7 SCC 655 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 151 : JT 2002 (10) SC 134 : (2004) 2 SLT 873 : (2003) 114 Com Cas 27.

[13482] ● Notice containing some amount towards interest and cost not invalid.—Notice under Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act cannot be held to be invalid merely because the notice contained some amount towards interest and cost separately after indicating the amount covered by the cheque which stood bounced. United Credit Ltd. v. Agro Sales India, (2001) 10 SCC 763 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 1055 : (2000) 4 SCR 50 (1) : (2000) 6 SLT 799.

[13483] ● Complaint by company.—A company can file a complaint only through a human agency. The person who presented the complaint on behalf of the company claimed that he is the authorised representative of the company. Prima facie, the trial Court should have accepted it at the time when a complaint was presented. If it is a matter of evidence when the accused disputed the authority of the said individual to present the complaint, opportunity should have been given to the complainant to prove the same, but the opportunity need be given only when the trial commences. The dismissal of the complaint at the threshold on the premise that the individual had not produced certificate copy of the resolution, appears to be too hasty an action. The impugned orders are set aside and the trial Court is directed to proceed with the trial and dispose of it in accordance with law. Samrat Shipping Co. Pvt Ltd. v. Dolly George, (2002) 9 SCC 455 : 2003

SCC (Cri) 1224 (1225) : JT 1999 (10) SC 381 : (2000) 1 JCC 25.

[13484] ● No formal notice prescribed.—Though no formal notice is prescribed in the provision, the statutory provision indicates in unmistakable terms as to what should be clearly indicated in the notice and what manner of demand it should make. In a given case, if the consolidated notice is found to provide sufficient information envisaged by the statutory provision and there was a specific demand for the payment of the sum covered by the cheque dishonoured, mere fact that it was a consolidated notice, and/or that further demands in addition to the statutorily envisaged demand was also found to have been made may not invalidate the same. K.R. Indira v. G. Adhinarayana, (2003) 8 SCC 300 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 2003 : 2004 CrLJ 5 : (2003) 4 Crimes 425.

[13485] ● Post dated cheque—Applicability of Section 138 and nature of presumption under Section 139 NI Act.—In the present case the issue is very different. The issue is regarding payment of a post-dated cheque being countermanded before the date mentioned on the face of the cheque. For purpose of considering the issue, it is relevant to see Section 139 of the act which creates a presumption in favour of the holder of a cheque. It has to be presumed that a cheque is issued in discharge of any debt or other liability. The presumption can be rebutted by adducing evidence and the burden of proof is on the person who wants to rebut the presumption. This presumption coupled with the object of Chapter XVII of the act which is to promote the efficacy of banking operation and to ensure credibility in business transactions through banks persuades us to take a view that by countermanding payment of post-dated cheque, a party should not be allowed to get away from, the penal provision of Section 138 of the act. A contrary view would render Section 138 a dead letter and will provide a handle to persons trying to avoid payment under legal obligations undertaken by them through their own acts which in other words can be said to be taking advantage of one's own wrong.

Once a cheque is issued by a drawer, a presumption under Section 139 must follow and merely because the drawer issued notice to the drawee or to the bank for stoppage of payment it will not preclude an action under Section 138 of the act by the drawee or the holder of the cheque in due course. The said view is in consonance with the object of the legislation. On the faith of payment by way of a post-dated cheque, the payee alters his position by accepting the cheque. If stoppage of payment before the due date of the cheque is allowed to take the transaction out of the purview of Section 138 of the act, it will shake the confidence which a cheque is otherwise intended to inspire regarding payment being available on the due date. Goaplast Pvt. Ltd. v. Chico Ursula D'Souza, AIR 2003 SC 2035 : (2003) 3 SCC 232 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 603 : 2003 CrLJ 1723 : (2003) 2 Crimes 55 (SC).

[13486] ● Vicarious liability of partners—Burden of proof.—Section 141 does not make all partners liable for the offence. The criminal liability has been fastened on those who, at the time of the commission of the offence, were in charge of and were responsible to the firm for the conduct of the business of the firm. These may be sleeping partners who are not required to take any part in the business of the firm; they may be ladies and others who may not know anything about the business of the firm. The primary responsibility is on the complainant to make necessary averments in the complaint so as to make the accused vicariously liable. For fastening the criminal liability, there is no presumption that every partner knows about the transaction. The obligation of the accused to prove that at the time the offence was committed they were not in charge of and were not responsible to the firm for the conduct of the business of the firm, would arise only when first the complainant makes necessary averments in the complaint and establishes that fact. Monaben Ketanbhai Shah v. State of Gujarat, AIR 2004 SC 4247 : (2004) 7 SCC 15 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 1857 (1861) : 2004 CrLJ 4249 : JT 2004 (6) SC 309 : (2004) 3 Crimes 231 : (2004) 3 KAJ 570.

[13487] ● Cheque presumed to be issued in discharge of debt or other liability.—It has to be presumed that a cheque is issued in discharge of any debt or other liability. The presumption can be rebutted by adducing evidence and the burden of proof is on the person who wants to rebut the presumption. This presumption coupled with the object of Chapter XVII of the act which is to promote the efficacy of banking operation and to ensure credibility in business transactions through banks persuades us to take a view that by countermanding payment of post-dated cheque, a party should not be allowed to get away from the penal provision of Section 138 of the act. A contrary view would render Section 138 a dead letter and will provide a handle to persons trying to avoid payment under legal obligations undertaken by them through their own acts which in other words can be said to be taking advantage of one's own wrong. If we hold otherwise, by giving instructions to banks to stop payment of a cheque after issuing the same against adept or liability, a drawer will easily avoid penal consequences under Section 138. Once a cheque is issued by a drawer, a presumption under Section 139 must follow and merely because the drawer issued notice to the drawee or to the bank for stoppage of payment it will not preclude an action under Section 138 of the Act by the drawee or the holder of the cheque in due course. Goa Plast (P) Ltd. v. Chico Insula D' Souza, 2004 SCC (Cri) 499 (510).

[13488] ● Object and enactment of NI Act.—The object and the ingredients under the provisions, in particular, Sections 138 and 139 of the act cannot be ignored. Proper and smooth functioning of all business transactions, particularly, of cheques as instruments, primarily depends upon the integrity and honesty of the parties. In our country, in a large number of commercial transactions, it was noted that the cheques were issued even merely as a device not only to stall but even to defraud the creditors. The sanctity and credibility of issuance of cheques in commercial transactions was eroded to a large extent. Undoubtedly, dishonour of a cheque by the bank causes incalculable loss, injury and inconvenience to the payee and the entire credibility of the business transactions within outside the country suffers a serious setback. Parliament, in order to restore the credibility of cheques as a trustworthy substitute for cash payment enacted the aforesaid provisions. The remedy available in a civil Court is a long-drawn matter and an unscrupulous drawer normally takes various pleas to defeat the genuine claim of the payee. Goa Plast (P) Ltd. v. Chico Ursula D' Souza, 2004 SCC (Cri) 499 (510).

[13489] ● Quashing of proceedings by High Court when.—The High Court can be justified in quashing the proceedings only if it comes to the conclusion that even the statements taken on face value do not make out any offence. S.A. Nanjundeswara v. Varlak Agroteck (P) Ltd., 2004 SCC (Cri) 527 (528).

[13490] ● Parties amicably resolving dispute.—In the present case since the parties have amicably resolved the dispute and the payment has already been made, sentence already undergone would be sufficient punishment for the offender. Nambiram Veetil Pocker v. State of Kerala, 2004 SCC (Cri) 1207 (1207).

[13491] ● Compounding of offence.—In the instant case, the parties have filed a compromise petition bringing to the nature of this Court that dispute between them has since been settled and the amount due to the respondent—Complainant has been paid and praying for setting aside the conviction and sentence be allowed. In view of the fact that Section 147, Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881 allows compounding of offence, the conviction and sentence of the defaulter is set aside. Anil Kumar Hasitwal v. Alka Gupta, AIR 2004 SC 3978 : (2004) 4 SCC 366 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 1084 (1085) : 2004 CrLJ 3853.

[13492] ● Complaint to be read as a whole.—It is not necessary to reproduce the language of Section 141 of the Negotiable Instruments Act verbatim in the complainant since the complainant is required to be read as a whole. If the substance of the allegations made in the complaint fulfil the requirements of Section 141, the complaint has to proceed and is required to be tried with. Manaben Ratan Bhai Shah v. State of Gujarat, 2004 SCC (Cri) 1857 (1859).

[13493] ● "Notice"—Letter for demand of money, of if notice.—The letter sent by complainant to the respondent required the respondent to immediately, manage the payment of the amount of cheque dishonoured failing which he threatened to take legal action, in the matter qualified itself as notice within the meaning of Clause (C) of proviso appended to Section 138, Negotiable Instrument Act. Krishna Exports v. Raju Das, (2004) 13 SCC 498 : 2006 (1) SCC (Cri) 350.

[13494] ● Service of notice on person whose cheque dishonoured mandatory.—Complaint was filed by Respondent 1 alleging commission of offence punishable under Section 138 read with Section 142 of the Act. It was alleged that cheque dated. 30.6.1997 bearing No. SB/A/31 839579 for an amount of Rs. 80,000 issued by the accused in discharge of the advance amount paid by the complainant in respect of the sale consideration was dishonoured by the drawee bank on account of insufficiency of funds. The complainant received this intimation on 2.8.1997. He got issued legal notice on 9.8.1997 through his advocate to the correct address of the accused. In the complainant, it is stated that the said legal notice was returned with an endorsement that the door of the house of the accused was locked. Subsequently, the amount was not paid by the accused. Hence, he filed the complaint. The trial Court opined that under Section 138 of the act, the service of notice on the person, whose cheque was dishonoured is mandatory and in the instant case the notice was not served on the accused and mere sending of notice by the complainant to the accused cannot be taken into consideration. Holding thus, he dismissed the complaint. The said order was assailed before the High Court. No doubt Section 138 of the act does not require that the notice should be given only by "post". Nonetheless the principle incorporated in Section 27 can profitable be imported in a case where the sender has dispatched the notice by post with the correct address written on it. Then it can be deemed to have been served on the sendee unless he proves that it was not really served and that he was not responsible for such non-service. Any other interpretation can lead to a very tenuous position as the drawer of the cheque who is liable to pay the amount would resort to the strategy of subterfuge by successfully avoiding the notice. Burden is on the complainant to show that the accused has managed to get an incorrect postal endorsement made. What is the effect of it has to be considered during trial, as the statutory scheme unmistakably shows the burden is on the complainant to show the service of notice. Therefore, where material is brought to show that there was false endorsement about the non-availability of notice, the inference that is to be drawn has to be judged on the background facts of each case. In view of the aforesaid, the inevitable conclusion is that the High Court was justified in its view and no interference is called for in this case. V. Raja Kumari v. P. Subbarama Naidu, 2005 SCC (Cri) 393 (395, 397, 398).

[13495] ● Successive presentation of cheque.— Clause (a) of the proviso to Section 138. N.I. Act does not put any embargo upon the payee to successively present a dishonoured cheque during the period of its validity. This apart, the cause of business transactions it is not uncommon for a cheque being returned due to insufficient funds or similar such reasons and being presented again by the payee after some time, on his own volition or at the request of the drawer, in expectation that it would be encashed. The primary interest of the payee is to get his money and not prosecution of the drawer, recourse to which, normally, is taken out of compulsion and not choice on each presentation of the cheque and its dishonour, a fresh right—And not a cause of action—Accrues in his favour. He may, therefore, without taking preemptory action in exercise of his such right under clause (b) of Section 138, go on presenting the cheque so as to enable him to exercise such right at any point of time during the validity of the cheque.

But once he gives a notice under clause (b) of Section 138, he forfeits such right as in case of failure of the drawer to pay the money within the stipulated time, he would be liable for offence and the cause of action for filing the complaint will arise. Prem Chand Vijay Kumar v. Yashpal Singh, 2005 SCC (Cri) 1153 (1157-58).

[13496] ● Cause of action.—In a generic and wide sense (as in Section 20 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908 (in short "CPC") "cause of action" means every fact which it is necessary to establish to support a right or obtain a judgment. Viewed in that context, the following facts are required to be proved to successfully prosecute the drawer for an offence under Section 138 of the Act :

(a) that the cheque was drawn for payment of an amount of money for discharge of a debt/liability and the cheque was dishonoured;

(b) that the cheque was presented within the prescribed period;

(c) that the payee made a demand for payment of the money by giving a notice in writing to the drawer within the stipulated period; and

(d) that the drawer failed to make the payment within 15 days of the receipt of the notice.

Proceeding on the basis of the generic meaning of the term "cause of action", certainly each of the above facts would constitute a part of the cause of action but clause (b) of Section 142 gives it a restrictive meaning, in that, it refers to only one fact which will give rise to the cause of action and that is the failure to make the payment within 15 days from the date of the receipt of the notice. A combined reading of Sections 138 and 142 makes it clear that cause of action is to be reckoned accordingly. The combined reading of the above two sections of the Act leaves no room for doubt that cause of action within the meaning of Section 142(b) arises—And can arise—Only once.

One of the indispensable factors to form the cause of action envisaged in Section 138 of the Act is contained in clause (b) of the proviso to that section. It involves the making of a demand by giving a notice in writing to the drawer of the cheque "within fifteen days of the receipt of information by him from the bank regarding the return of the cheque as unpaid". If no such notice is given within the said period of 15 days, no cause of action could have been created at all.

Thus, it is well settled that if dishonour of a cheque has once snowballed into a cause of action it is not permissible for a payee to create another cause of action with the same cheque.

The period of one month for filing the complaint will be reckoned from the day immediately following the day on which the period of fifteen days form the date of the receipt of the notice by the drawer expires. Prem Chand Vijay Kumar v. Yashpal Singh, 2005 SCC (Cri) 1153 (1158).

[13497] ● Compounding of offence.—Where a joint application is field by the parties for compounding the offence under Section 147, stating that the amount due has been paid, necessary figures are disclosed in the application, the application is supported by the affidavits of the accused as well as the complainant, parties should be permitted to compound the offence since the parties have stated that nothing is outstanding from the accused since the amount due has been paid. Permission to compound the offence granted. K. Gyan Sagar v. Ganesh, (2005) 7 SCC 54.

[13498] ● Vicarious liability of person connected with a company.—There is almost unanimous judicial opinion that necessary averments ought to be contained in a complaint before a person can be subjected to criminal process. A liability under Section 141 of the Act is sought to be fastened vicariously on a person connected with a company, the principal accused being the company itself. It is a departure from the rule in criminal law against vicarious liability. A clear case should be spelled out in the complaint against the person sought to be made liable. Section 141 of the Act contains the requirements for making a person liable under the said provision. That the respondent falls within the parameters of Section 141 has to be spelled out. A complaint has to be examined by the Magistrate in the first instance on the basis of averments contained therein. If the Magistrate is satisfied that there are averments which bring the case within Section 141, he would issue the process. We have seen that merely being described as a director in a company is not sufficient to satisfy the requirement of Section 141. Even a non-director can be liable under Section 141 of the Act. The averments in the complaint would also serve the purpose that the person sought to be made liable would know what is the case which is alleged against him. This will enable him to meet the case at the trial. S.M.S. Pharmaceuticals Ltd. v. Neeta Bhalla, 2005 SCC (Cri) 1975 (1987).

[13499] ● Person connected with company.—What is required is that the persons who are sought to be made criminally liable under Section 141 should be, at the time the offence was committed, in charge of and responsible to the company for the conduct of the business of the company. Every person connected with the company shall not fall within the ambit of the provision. It is only those persons who were in charge of and responsible for the conduct of business of the company at the time of commission of an offence, who will be liable for criminal action. It follows from this that if a director of a company who was not in charge of and was not responsible for the conduct of the business of the company at the relevant time, will not be liable under the provision. The liability arises from being in charge of and responsible for the conduct of business of the company at the relevant time when the offence was committed and not on the basis of merely holding a designation or office in a company. Conversely, a person not holding any office or designation in a company may be liable if he satisfies the main requirement of being in charge of and responsible for the conduct of business of a company at the relevant time. Liability depends on the role one plays in the affairs of a company and not on designation or status. S.M.S. Pharmaceuticals Ltd. v. Neeta Bhalla, 2005 SCC (Cri) 1975 (1984).

[13500] ● Person accused was incharge of and responsible for conduct of business of company.—It is necessary to specifically aver in a complaint under Section 141 that at the time the offence was committed, the person accused was in charge of, and responsible for the conduct of business of the company. This averment is an essential requirement of Section 141 and has to be made in a complaint. Without this averment being made in a complaint, the requirements of Section 141 cannot be said to be satisfied. S.M.S. Pharmaceuticals Ltd. v. Neeta Bhalla, 2005 SCC (Cri) 1975 (1987, 1988).

[13501] ● Officer responsible for conducting affairs of company.—The officers responsible for conducting the affairs of companies are generally referred to as directors, managers, secretaries, managing directors, etc. What is required to be considered is. Is it sufficient to simply state in a complaint that a particular person was a director of the company at the time the offence was committed and nothing more is required to be said. For this, it may be worthwhile to notice the role of a director in a company. There is nothing which suggests that simply by being a director in a company, one is supposed to discharge particular functions on behalf of a company.

The role of a director in a company is a question of fact depending on the peculiar facts in each case. There is no universal rule that a director of a company is in charge of its everyday affairs. We have discussed about the position of a director in a company in order to illustrate the point that there is no magic as such in a particular word, be it director, manager or secretary. It all depends upon the respective roles assigned to the officers in a company.

Merely being a director of a company is not sufficient to make the person liable under Section

141 of the Act. A director in a company cannot be deemed to be in charge of and responsible to the company for the conduct of its business. The requirement of Section 141 is that the person sought to be made liable should be in charge of and responsible for the conduct of the business of the company at the relevant time. This has to be averred as a fact as there is no deemed liability of a director in such cases. S.M.S. Pharmaceuticals Ltd. v. Neeta Bhalla, 2005 SCC (Cri) 1975 (1988).

[13502] ● Position of Managing Director or Joint Managing Director.—The position of a managing director or a joint managing director in a company may be different. These persons as the designation of their office suggests, are in charge of a company and are responsible for the conduct of the business of the company. In order to escape liability such persons may have to bring their case within the proviso to Section 141(1), that is, they will have to prove that when the offence was committed they had no knowledge of the offence or that they exercised all due diligence to prevent the commission of the offence. S.M.S. Pharmaceuticals Ltd. v. Neeta Bhalla, 2005 SCC (Cri) 1975 (1983-84).

[13503] ● Accused taking plea that they were not in charge / responsible to company for conduct of business.—Where in prosecution for offence under Negotiable Instrument Act, Section 138, the accused persons take the plea that they were not in-charge/responsible, to the company for the conduct of the business, the plea would be adjudicated on the basis of the material evidence adduced by the parties during the trial, prosecution would not be quashed on that ground on petition under Section 482, CrPC. S.V. Mazumdar v. Gujarat State Fertilizer Co. Ltd., AIR 2005 SC 2436 : (2005) 4 SCC 173 : 2005 CrLJ 2566 (2568) : 2005 (2) Crimes 141.

[13504] ● In the instant case the complaint was as under.—"We are unable to sustain the impugned order of the High Court. It is contrary to the averments made in the complaint as also to what was stated by the complainant in his pre-summoning statement. It would be useful to reproduce para 7 of the complaint:

"The complainant further stated that as per the instruction of the accused he had deposited the two cheques for collection through Indian Overseas Bank. Chengalpattu Branch on 18.4.2001. The complainant states that both the cheques were returned to the complainant without payment 'stating that payment stopped by the drawer' and the same was informed to the complainant on 24.4.2001 by his banker. The complainant stated that for the same he had issued a legal notice to the accused regarding the same dated 2.5.2001. The complainant further stated that a reply notice from the accused lawyer Mr. A. Devakumar, Advocate, Tindivanam dated 5.5.2001 received on 10.5.2001, with false allegation".

Held, in the pre-summoning evidence, statement to the aforesaid effect was made by the complainant appellant. In this view, there was no basis for the conclusion that the complainant had not complied with the provisions of Section 138 of the Negotiable Instrument Act, 1881. The exercise of power of quashing was unwarranted on the facts of the case. At this stage we are not concerned with the defence of the accused. It would, of cause, be open to the accused to take such defence as may be available to him in accordance with law. T.K. Kaya v. K. Devaraj, (2005) 13 SCC 705 : 2006 (2) SCC (Cri) 294.

[13506] ● Limitation for filing complaint—Computation of period. The day on which cause of action had accused has to be excluded for reckoning the period of limitation for filing a complaint under Section 138, Negotiable Instrument Act. Jindal Steel and Power Ltd. v. Ashoka Alloy Steel Ltd., (2006) 9 SCC 340 : 2006 SCC (Cri) 540.

[13507] ● Presumption of service of notice.—We cannot also lose sight of the fact that the drawer may be dubious means manage to get an incorrect endorsement made on the envelope that the premises has been found locked or that the addressee was not available at the time when postman went for delivery of the letter. It may be that the address is correct and even the addressee is available but a wrong endorsement is manipulated by the addressee. In such a case, if the facts are proved, it may amount to refusal of the notice. If the complainant is able to prove that the drawer of the cheque knew about the notice and deliberately evaded service and got a false endorsement made only to defeat the process of law, the Court shall presume service of notice. This, however, is a matter of evidence and proof. Thus even in a case where the notice is returned with the endorsement that the premises has always been found locked or the addressee was not available at the time of postal delivery, it will be open to the complainant to prove at the trial by evidence that the endorsement is not correct and that the addressee, namely the drawer of the cheque, with knowledge of the notice had deliberately avoided to receive notice. Therefore, it would be premature at the stage of issuance of process, to move the High Court for quashing of the proceeding under Section 482 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The question as to whether the service of notice has been fraudulently refused by unscrupulous means is a question of fact to be decided on the basis of evidence. In such a case the High Court ought not to exercise its jurisdiction under Section 482 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. D. Vinod Shivappa v. Nanda Belliappa, AIR 2006 SC 2179 : (2006) 6 SCC 456 : 2006 (3) SCC (Cri) 114 : 2006 CrLJ 2897 (2900, 2901) : (2006) 7 Crimes 282 (SC).

[13508] ● Cause of action to file a complaint—When arises.—If a notice is issued and served upon the drawer of the cheque, no controversy arises. Similarly if the notice is refused by the addressee, it may be presumed to have been served. This is also not disputed. This leaves us with the third situation where the notice could not be served on the addressee for one or the other reason, such as his non availability at the time of delivery, or premises remaining locked on account of his having gone elsewhere etc. If in each such case the law is understood to mean that there has been no service of notice, it would completely defeat the very purpose of the Act. It would then be very easy for an unscrupulous and dishonest drawer of a cheque to make himself scarce for sometime after issuing the cheque so that the requisite statutory notice can never be served upon him and consequently he can never be prosecuted. There is good authority to support the proposition that once the complainant, the payee of the cheque, issues notice to the drawer of the cheque, the cause of action to file a complaint arises on the expiry of the period prescribed for payment by the drawer of the cheque. If he does not file a complaint within one month of the date on which the cause of action arises under clause (c) of the proviso to Section 138 of the Act, his complaint gets barred by time. Thus, a person who can dodge the postman for about a month or two, or a person who can get a fake endorsement made regarding his non-availability can successfully avoid his prosecution because the payee is bound to issue notice to him within a period of 30 days from the date of receipt of information from the bank regarding the return of the cheque as unpaid. He is, therefore, bound to issue the legal notice which may be returned with an endorsement that the addressee is not available on the given address. D. Vinod Shivappa v. Nanda Belliappa, AIR 2006 SC 2179 : (2006) 6 SCC 456 : 2006 (3) SCC (Cri) 114 : 2006 CrLJ 2897 (2900, 2901) : (2006) 7 Crimes 282 (SC).

[13509] ● Postal endorsement that notice could not be serves due to non-availability of addressee—Demand service.—The question is whether in a case of this nature, where the postal endorsement shows that the notice could not be served on account of the non-availability of the addressee, a cause of action may still arise for prosecution of the drawer of the cheque on the basis of deemed service of notice under clause (c) of proviso to Section 138 of the Act. This question has to be answered by reference to the facts of each case and no rule of universal application can be laid down that in all cases where notice is not served on account of non-availability of the addressee, the Court must presume service of notice. D. Vinod Shivappa v. Nanda Belliappa, AIR 2006 SC 2179 : (2006) 6 SCC 456 : 2006 (3) SCC (Cri) 114 : 2006 CrLJ 2897 (2900, 2901) : (2006) 7 Crimes 282 (SC).

[13510] ● Section 138, Proviso (c), Negotiable Instruments Act—Object of Proviso (c).—Section 138 of the Act was enacted to punish those unscrupulous persons who purported to discharge their liability by issuing cheques without really intending to do so, which was demonstrated by the fact that there was no sufficient balance in the account to discharge the liability. Apart from civil liability, a criminal liability was imposed on such unscrupulous drawers of cheques. The prosecution, however, was made subject to certain conditions. With a view to avoid unnecessary prosecution of an honest drawer of a cheque, or to give an opportunity to the drawer to make amends, the proviso to Section 138 provides that after dishonour of the cheque, the payee or the holder of the cheque in due course must give a written notice to the drawer to make good the payment. The drawer is given 15 days time from date of receipt of notice to make the payment, and only if he fails to make the payment he may be prosecuted. The object which the proviso seeks to achieve is quite obvious. It may be that on account of mistake of the bank, a cheque may be returned despite the fact that there is sufficient balance in the account from which the amount is to be paid. In such a case if the drawer of the cheque is prosecuted without notice, it would result in great injustice and hardship to an honest drawer. One can also conceive of cases where a well intentioned drawer may have inadvertently missed to make necessary arrangements for reasons beyond his control, even though he genuinely intended to honour the cheque drawn by him. The law treats such lapses inducted by inadvertence or negligence to be pardonable, provided the drawer after notice makes amends and pays the amount within the prescribed period. It is for this reason that Clause (c) of the proviso to Section 138 provides that the section shall not apply unless the drawer of the cheque fails to make the payment within 15 days of the receipt of the said notice. To repeat, the proviso is meant to protect honest drawers whose cheques may have been dishonored for the fault of others, or who may have genuinely wanted a fulfil their promise but on account inadvertence or negligence failed to make necessary arrangements for the payment of the cheuqe. The proviso is not meant to protect unscrupulous drawers who never intended to honour the cheques issued by them, it being a part of their modus operandi to cheat unsuspecting persons. D. Vinod Shivappa v. Nanda Belliappa, AIR 2006 SC 2179 : (2006) 6 SCC 456 : 2006 (3) SCC (Cri) 114 : 2006 CrLJ 2897 (2900, 2901) : (2006) 7 Crimes 282 (SC).

[13511] ● No proof that cheque was issued in discharge of debt.—We in the facts and circumstances of this case need not go into the question as to whether even if the prosecution fails to prove that large portion of the amount claimed to be a part of debt was not owing and due to the complainant by the accused and only because he has issued a cheque for a higher amount, he would be convicted if it is held that existence of debt in respect of large part of the said amount has not been proved. The appellant clearly said that nothing is due and the cheque was issued by way of security. The said defence has been accepted as probable. If the defence is acceptable as probable the cheque therefore cannot be held to have been issued in discharge of the debt as, for example, if a cheque is issued for security or for any other purpose the same would not come within the purview of Section 138 of the Act. M.S. Narayana Menon v. State of Kerala, AIR 2006 SC 3336 : (2006) 6 SCC 39 : 2006 CrLJ 4607 (4617) : 2006 (3) Crimes 117 (SC).

[13512] ● Limitation for filing complaint.—Section 142 of the Negotiable Instruments Act enacts a bar against taking cognizance of an offence under Section 138 unless such a complaint is made within one month of the date on which the cause of action arises under clause (c) of the proviso to Section 138. Clause (c) of the proviso to Section 138 contemplates a situation when the drawer of such cheque fails to make the payment of the money to the payee or as the case may be to the holder in due course of the cheque within 15 days of the receipt of the said notice. Though the cause of action for the purposes of Section 142(b) arises on the failure of the drawer of the cheque to make the payment in compliance with the demand made in the notice, it is the contention of the learned counsel for the appellant that the accrual of cause of action under Section 142(b) read with Clause (c) of the proviso to Section 138 is relatable to the first notice and on the expiry of the period of 15 days, the complaint ought to have been filed within one month thereafter. However, the contention of the learned counsel for the respondent is that one-month period as contemplated by Section 142(b) should be reckoned with reference to the expiry of the period of 15 days after the second notice was issued on 29.6.1995. It is submitted that there is no bar to re-present the cheque so long as the cheque is valid and it was therefore open to the respondent to file a complaint after the issuance of the second notice. Krishna Exports v. Raju Das, (2006) 13 SCC 498 : 2006 (1) SCC Cr 350.

[13513] ● Territorial jurisdiction.—In this case, the averments made in the writ petition filed by the respondent herein even if given face value and taken to be correct in their entirety would not confer any jurisdiction upon the Kerala High Court. The agreement was entered into within the jurisdiction of the Calcutta High Court. The project for which the supply of stone chips and transportation was being carried out was also within the State of West Bengal, Payments were obviously required to be made within the jurisdiction of the said Court where either the contract had been entered into or where payment was to be made. For the purpose of proving the aforementioned ingredients of the offence under Section 138 of the Act, the complainant appellant was required to prove the facts constituting the cause of action therefore none of which arose within the jurisdiction of the Kerala High Court. It is, apt to mention that in Prem Chand Vijay Kumar (supra) this Court held that cause of action within the meaning of Section 142 (b) of the Act can arise only once. For the reasons aforementioned, we are of the opinion that the Kerala High Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the writ petition as no part of cause of action arose within its jurisdiction. Musaraf Hossain Khan v. Bhagheeratha Engineering Ltd., AIR 2006 SC 1288 : (2006) 3 SCC 658 : 2006 (2) SCC (Cri) 98 : 2006 CrLJ 1683 (1691).

[13514] ● Premature complaint.—Proviso appended to Section 138 contains a non-obstante clause. It provides that nothing contained in the main provision shall apply unless the requirements prescribed therein are complied with. Service of notice is one of the statutory requirements for initiation of a criminal proceeding. Such notice is required to be given within 30 days of the receipt of the information by the complainant from the bank regarding the cheque as unpaid. Clause (c) provides that the holder of the cheque must be given an opportunity to pay the amount in question within 15 days of the receipt of the said notice. Complaint Petition, thus, can be filed for commission of an offence by a drawee of a cheque only 15 days after service of the notice. What are the requirements of service of a notice is no longer res-integra in view of the recent decision of this Court in. C.C. Alavi Haji v. Palapetty Muhammed, JT 2007 (7) SC 498; Sarav Investment & Financial Consultants Pvt. Ltd. v. Lloyds Register of Shipping Indian Office Staff Provident Fund, 2007 (10) SCR 1110 : 2007 (12) Scale 123 : 2007 (4) Crimes 244 (SC).

[13515] ● Cheque whether issued towards discharge of debt.—If, upon analysis of the evidence brought on records by the parties, in a fact situation obtaining in the instant case, a finding of fact has been arrived at by the High Court that the cheques had not been issued by the respondent in discharge of any debt, the view of the High Court cannot be said to be perverse warranting interference by us in exercise of our discretionary jurisdiction under Article 136 of the Constitution of India. The High Court was entitled to take notice of the conduct of the parties. It has been found by the High Court as of fact that the complainant did not approach the Court with clean hands. His conduct was not that of prudent man. Why no instrument was executed although a huge sum of money was allegedly paid to the respondent was a relevant question which could be posed in the matter. It was open to the High Court to draw its own conclusion therein. Not only no document had been executed, even no interest had been charged. It would be absurd to form an opinion that despite knowing that the respondent even was not in a position to discharge his burden to pay installments in respect of the prized amount, an advance would be made to him and that too even after institution of three civil suits. The amount advanced even did not carry any interest. It in a situation of this nature, the High Court has arrived at a finding that the respondent has discharged his burden of proof cast on him under Section 139 of the Act, no exception thereto can be taken. John. K. John v. Tom Varghese, 2007 (11) SCR 287 : JT 2007 (13) SC 222 : 2007 (12) Scale 333 : 2007 (4) Crimes 155 (SC).

[13516] ● Complainant not a man of means to advance huge amounts on various dates—No commercial transactions between parties.—The complainant has been found to be not a man of means. He had allegedly advanced a sum of Rs. 1 lakh on 13.01.1994. He although had himself been taking advances either from his father or brother or third parties, without making any attempt to realize the amount, is said to have advanced sums of Rs. 86,000/- on 8.06.1994. Likewise he continued to advance diverse sums of Rs. 28,000/-, Rs. 50,000/-, Rs. 40,000/- and Rs. 12,000/- on subsequent dates. It is not a case where the appellant paid any amount to the respondent towards repayment of loan. He even did not charge any interest. He had also not proved that there had been any commercial or business transactions between himself and the appellant. Why the appellant required so much amount and why he alone had been making payments of such large sums of money to the appellant has not been disclosed. According to him, he had been maintaining a diary. A contemporaneous document which was in existence as per the admission of the complainant, therefore, was required to be brought on records. He failed to do so. He also did not examine his father and brothers to show that they were men of means and in fact advanced a huge sum to him only for the purpose of grant of loan by him to the appellant. Held, "High Court furthermore has not met the reasons of the learned Trial Judge. It proceeded on the premise that the appellant had not been able to discharge his burden of proof in terms of Section 139 of the Act without posing to itself a further question as to how the said burden of proof can be discharged. It furthermore did not take into consideration the legal principle that the standard of proof upon a prosecution and upon an accused is different. For the reasons aforementioned, the impugned judgment cannot be sustained which is set aside accordingly. The appeal is allowed". K. Prakashan v. P.K. Surenderan, 2007 (10) SCR 1010 : JT 2007 (11) SC 573 : 2007 (12) Scale 96 : 2007 (4) Crimes 217 (SC).

[13517] ● Notice to drawer of cheque.—Under Clause (b) of the proviso, the payee or the holder of the cheque in Notice Negotiable Instrument Act, Section 138, Proviso (b) due course is required to give a written notice to the drawer of the cheque within a period of thirty days from the date of receipt of information from the bank regarding the return of the cheque as unpaid. Under Clause (c), the drawer is given fifteen days time from the date of receipt of the notice to make the payment, a complaint may be filed against him. The object of the proviso is to avoid unnecessary hardship to an honest drawer. Therefore, the observance of stipulations in quoted Clause (b) and its aftermath in Clause (c) being a pre-condition for invoking Section 138 of the Act, giving a notice to the drawer before filing complaint under Section 138 of the Act is a mandatory requirement. C.C. Alvi Haji v. Palapetty Muhammed, (2007) 6 SCC 555 : 2007 (3) SCC (Cri) 236 : 2007 CrLJ 3214 (3216) (SC) : 2007 (3) Crimes 120 (SC).

[13518] ● Receipt of Notice.—When the notice is sent by registered post by correctly addressing the drawer of the cheque, the mandatory requirement of issue of notice in terms of Clause (b) of proviso to Section 138 of the Act stands complied with. The complaint must contain basic facts regarding the mode and manner of the issuance of notice to the drawer of the cheque. It is well settled that at the time of taking cognizance of the complaint under Section 138 of the Act, the Court is required to be prima facie satisfied that a case under the said Section is made out and the aforenoted mandatory statutory procedural requirements have been complied with. It is then for the drawer to rebut the presumption about the service of notice and show that he had no knowledge that the notice was brought to his address or that the address mentioned on the cover was incorrect or that the letter was never tendered or that the report of the postman was incorrect. C.C. Alvi Haji v. Palapetty Muhammed, (2007) 6 SCC 555 : 2007 (3) SCC (Cri) 236 : 2007 CrLJ 3214 (3219) (SC) : 2007 (3) Crimes 120 (SC).

[13519] ● Presumption under Section 27, General Clauses Act.—In view of the presumption available under Section 127 of the General Clauses Act, it is not necessary to aver in the complaint under Section 138 of the Negotiable Instrument Act that the service of notice was evaded by the accused or that the accused had a role to play in the return of the notice unserved. C.C. Alvi Haji v. Palapetty Muhammed, (2007) 6 SCC 555 : 2007 (3) SCC (Cri) 236 : 2007 CrLJ 3214 (3219) : 2007 (3) Crimes 120 (SC).

[13520] ● Notice without specifying as to what was amount due under dishonoured cheque does not subserve requirement of law.—Operation of Section 138 of the Act is limited by the proviso. When the proviso applies, the main Section would not. Unless a notice is served in conformity with Proviso (b) appended to Section 138 of the Act, the complaint petition would not be maintainable. The Parliament while enacting the said provision consciously imposed certain conditions. One of the conditions was service of a notice making demand of the payment of the amount of cheque as is evident from the use of the phraseology "payment of the said amount of money". Such a notice has to be issued within a period of 30 days from the date of receipt of information from the bank in regard to the return of the cheque as unpaid. The statute envisages application of the penal provisions. A penal provision should be construed strictly; the condition precedent wherefor is service of notice. It is one thing to say that the demand may not only represent the unpaid amount under cheque but also other incidental expenses like costs and interests, but the same would not mean that the notice would be vague and capable of two interpretations. An omnibus notice without specifying as to what was the amount due under the dishonoured cheque would not subserve the requirement of law. Rahul Builders v. Arihant Fertilizers and Chemicals, 2008 CrLJ 452 : 2007 (4) Crimes 235 (SC) : JT 2007 (12) SCC 495.

[13521] ● Period must be specified in notice.—When the statute prescribes for service of notice specifying a particular period, it should be expressly stated. In absence of any such stipulation, it is difficult to hold that 15 days' notice was thereby contemplated. The High Court, therefore, was not correct in arriving at the aforementioned finding. Rahul Builders v. Arihant fertilizers and Chemical, 2008 CrLJ 452 : JT 2007 (12) SC 495 : 2007 (12) Scale 662 : 2007 (4) Crimes 235 (SC).

[13522] ● Service of notice—Non-compliance of Section 138 (c), Negotiation Instruments Act.—Service of notice in this case was not sought to be effected under registered cover with acknowledgment due. It was sought to be done by the agent of the complainant itself. The agent of the complainant sought to serve the said notice through their own employees.

The notice, was only required to be dispatched. Its contents were required to be communicated. Communication to the appellant about the fact of dishonouring of the cheques and calling upon him to pay the amount within 15 days is imperative in character. It is not a case, where, actual communication was not necessary. Service of notice is a part of cause of action for lodging the complaint.

We may consider the effect of the nature of service of notice effective by the employees of the Law Firm. Pragraph 2 of the affidavit affirmed by Ramchandra Damaji Khadpe does not disclose as to when he had gone to serve notice upon the appellant at 34, Adarsh Nagar, Worli, Mumbai. It was stated that he having been told by the neighbour of the appellant. Arvind Naik that he had shifted to Bhatachi Chawl in Worli, went there also. He did not disclose as to what was the new address. He did not furthermore state when did he visit that place.

The learned Magistrate proceeded on the basis that the service of notice upon the company at its registered office would subserve the requirements of law. But, in this case, point taken by the appellant is a different one.

Conduct of the appellant, in our opinion, is not material for determining the issue. Even no presumption can be raised in regard to the service of notice as the same has not been effected in terms of the statute. Sarav Investment & Financial Consultants Pvt. Ltd. v. Lloyds Register of Shipping Indian Office Staff Provident Fund, (2007) 4 SCC 753 : 2007 (10) SCR 1110 : 2007 (12) Scale 123 : 2007 (4) Crimes 244 (SC).

[13523] ● Dishonouring of cheque by company.—While Section 138 made a person criminally liable on dishonour of a cheque for insufficiency of funds or the circumstances referred to in the Section and on the conditions mentioned therein, Section 141 laid down a special provision in respect of issuance of cheques by companies and commission of offences by companies under Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. Therein, it was provided that if the person committing an offence under Section 138 of the Act was a company, every person who at the time the offence was committed, was in charge of and was responsible to the company for the conduct of the business of the company as well as the company, shall be deemed to be guilty of the offence and shall be liable to be proceeded against and punished accordingly.

Prosecution be launched not only against the company on behalf of which the cheque issued has been dishonoured, but it could also be initiated against every person who at the time the offence was committed, was in charge of and was responsible for the conduct of the business of the company. In fact, Section 141 deems such persons to be guilty of such offence, liable to be proceeded against and punished for the offence, leaving it to the person concerned, to prove that the offence was committed by the company without his knowledge or that he has exercised due diligence to prevent the commission of the offence. Subsection (2) of Section 141 also roped in Directors, Managers, Secretaries or other officers of the company, if it was proved that the offence was committed with their consent or connivance. N. Rangachari v. Bharat Sanchar Nigam Ltd., AIR 2007 SC 1682 : (2007) 5 SCC 108 : 2007 (2) SCC (Cri) 460 : 2007 CrLJ 2448 : 2007 (5) Scale 821 : 2007 (5) SCR 329 : 2007 (2) Crimes 455 (SC).

[13524] ● Prosecution under Section 138, Negotiable Instrument Act—Object.—Prosecution under the Act never meant to be a prosecution but is a measure of deterrence. Dilip S. Dhanukar v. Kotak Mahindra Co. Ltd., (2007) 6 SCC 528 : 2007 (3) SCC (Cri) 209 : 2007 (2) Crimes 435 (SC).

[13525] ● Standard of proof.—The standard of proof for the accused is mere preponderance of probability. K. Prakashan v. P.K. Surendersam, 2007 (4) Crimes 217 (SC) : JT 2007 (11) (SC) 573.

[13526] ● Compensation instead of substantive sentence.—"It appears from a plain reading of the complaint petition that the respondent had admitted his liability to the extent of Rs. 7,00,000/-. It was found as of fact to be so by the Courts below. The said findings do not warrant any interference. The defence raised by the respondent to the effect that the parties had entered into a compromise in the police station and he had to sign a cheque under some threat or coercion had not been accepted by the Courts below. There cannot be any doubt whatsoever that had the respondent been able to show that the cheque had been issued not in discharge of a debt but by way of a security pending determination of his liability by an auditor, the matter would have been different. In such an event, the Court could have arrived at a finding that the cheque having been issued on the basis of an anticipated profit which by itself did not create any liability in praesenti and the result of the audit might have gone either way, no case under Section 138 of the Act was made out. But, the same is not the case here.

The question which now arises for consideration is as to whether any case for awarding a substantial sentence has been made out. We do not think so. Grant of compensation, in our opinion, would subserve the purpose.

Respondent has not been charged with any fraudulent action. He had a probable defence. Appellant furthermore had not preferred any appeal against the judgment of the learned Trial Judge for enhancement of the sentence. It may be that quantum of compensation has been altered to that of the fine but in effect and substance the same did not matter.

In our opinion, therefore, interest of justice would be subserved, if the respondent is hereby directed to pay a compensation of Rs. 7,00,000/- instead and place of a fine of Rs. 5,000/- as has been directed by the High Court. Thus, the appellant would be entitled to get the aforementioned sum of Rs. 7,00,000/- by way of compensation. Suresh Kumar v. R. Shankar, AIR 2007 SC 1774 : (2007) 4 SCC 752 : 2007 (2) SCC (Cri) 696 : 2007 CrLJ 2951 (2954-55).

[13527] ● Vicarious liability.—A Chairman of a large Company may or may not be aware of the actual transaction. If in a given situation, cheques are issued in ordinary course of business. The Managing Director or a Deputy Managing Director, would be deemed to be aware thereof. A Chairman or a Director of a Company need not be. But, without going into the finer question raised by Mr. Tulsi, we may notice that allegations have not only been made in terms of the wordings of section but also at more than one place, it has categorically been averred that the payments were made after the meetings held by and between the representative of the Company and Accused Nos. 1 to 5 which would include Respondent Nos. 2 and 3.

It is, therefore, not a case where having regard to the position held by the said respondents in the Company, they could plead ignorance of the entire transaction.

Not only cheques were issued having regard to the huge amount payable by Accused No. 6 to the Company but also as a result of fall out of non-payment thereof, negotiations were held between the parties wherein Respondent Nos. 2 and 3, the Chairman and Managing Director of the Company took part, and, thus, in our opinion, there cannot be any doubt that the ingredients of the provisions of Section 141 of the Act stand satisfied. *Everest Advertising Pvt. [13528] ● Ingredients of offence.—To bring the case within the purview of Section 138, N.I. Act, the Complaint most show: (i) That a cheque was issued; (ii) The same was presented but dishonoured; (iii) A notice in terms of section was served on person sought to be made liable; (iv) Despite service of notice, neither payments were made nor other obligations, if any were complied with within 15 days of receipt of notice. Saroj Kumar Poddar v. State (NCT of Delhi), AIR 2007 SC 912 : (2007) 3 SCC 693 : 2007 (2) SCC (Cri) 135 : 2007 CrLJ 1419 : 2007 (1) SCR 907 : 2007 (1) Crimes 274 (SC). TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) *N.K. [13529] ● Quashing of proceedings on ground that company is sick.—"According to the High Court, admittedly the purchase orders in question were entered into and the purchases were made by the appellants with full knowledge of the proceedings that the company was declared sick under the SICA, the appellants clearly all through gave the impression to the respondent company that the outstanding amount towards the purchase of the goods would be shortly cleared. The fact that the purchases were made with the clear promise to repay could not be disputed by the appellants. The Directors had in fact issued the cheques for discharging their liability with the full knowledge, would not only clearly show that there was an undisputed debt, but would also show that, right from the inception, the appellants in fact had no intention of paying the amount for the purchases made by them. The intention of the appellants can be gathered by their subsequent acts, conduct and behaviour of taking a shelter under the provisions of SICA. Hence, the appellants are not entitled to any indulgence of this Court under its extraordinary jurisdiction under Article 136 of the Constitution. The appellants had lost their total credibility because of their conduct. When the appellant company was declared sick, then without disclosing this fact the appellants ought not to have made huge purchases from the respondent company. Ultimately, the appellant company did not pay for the purchases. This clearly indicates that the appellants had no intention of making payment of the purchases made by it.

The High Court, in the impugned order, has directed the trial Court to dispose of the cases of the appellants as early as possible, but not later than six months from the date of its order. The appellants by approaching this Court have caused avoidable delay in disposal of these cases before the trial Court.

In the facts and circumstances of the case, we deem it appropriate to request the trial Court now to conclude the trial of these cases as expeditiously as possible and, in any event within six months from the date of this judgment". Southern Steel Ltd. v. Jindal Vijayanagar Steel, AIR 2008 SC 3143 : (2008) 5 SCC 762 : 2008 (3) SCC (Cri) 75 : 2008 CrLJ 3960.

[13530] ● Object of Section 138, Negotiation Instruments Act.—Section 138 of the Act was inserted by the Banking, Public financial Institutions and Negotiable Instrument Law (Amendment) Act, 1988 (Act 66 of 1988) to regulate financial promises in growing business, trade, commerce and industrial activities of the country and the strict liability to promote greater vigilance in financial matters. The incorporation of the provision is designed to safeguard the faith of the creditor in the drawer of the cheque, which is essential to the economic life of a developing country like India. The provision has been introduced with a view to curb cases of issuing cheques indiscriminately by making stringent provisions and safeguarding interest of creditors. Vinay Devanna Nayak v. Ryot Seva Sahakari Bank Ltd., AIR 2008 (SC) 716 : (2008) 2 SCC 305 : 2008 (1) SCC (Cri) 351 : 2008 CrLJ 805 : 2007 (12) SCR 1134 : JT 2007 (13) 382 : 2007 (13) Scale 705 : 2007 (7) Supreme 245 : 2007 (4) Crimes 352 (SC).

[13531] ● Ingredients.—To attract the provisions of Section 138, Negotiation Instrument Act, it must be proved (i) that there is a legally enforceable debt; (ii) that the cheque was drawn from the account of bank for discharge in whole or in part of any debt or other liability, which presupposes or legally enforceable debt; (iii) that the cheque so issued had been returned due to insufficiency of funds. Lalit Kumar Sharma v. State of Uttar Pradesh, (2008) 5 SCC 638 : 2008 (2) SCC (Cri) 682 : 2008 (2) Crimes 397 (SC); TO THE SAME EFFECT : Krishna Janardhan v. Dattatraya G. Hegde, AIR 2008 SC 1325 : (2008) 4 SCC 54 : 2008 SCC (Cri) 166 : 2008 CrLJ 1172 : 2008 (1) Crimes 227 (SC).

[13532] ● Civil suit and petition under Section 138, Negotiation Instrument Act on the same cause of action.—A suit for recovery of money due from a borrower indisputably is maintainable at the instance of the creditor. It is furthermore beyond any doubt or dispute that for the same cause of action a complaint petition under terms of Section 138 of Negotiation Instrument Act would also be maintainable. D. Purushotama Reddy v. K. Sateesh, AIR 2008 SC 3202 (3203) : (2008) 8 SCC 505.

[13533] ● No embargo on successive presentation of cheque during period of its validity.—Clause (a) of the proviso to Section 138 does not put any embargo upon the payee to successively present a dishonoured cheque during the period of its validity. This apart, in the course of business transactions it is not uncommon for a cheque being returned due to insufficient funds or similar such reasons and being presented again by the payee after sometime, on his own volition or at the request of the drawer, in expectation that it would be encashed. The primary interest of the payee is to get his money and not prosecution of the drawer, recourse to which, normally, is taken out of compulsion and not choice. On each presentation of the cheque and its dishonour, a fresh right-and not a cause of action-accrues in his favour. He may, therefore, without taking preemptory action in exercise of his such right under Clause (b) of Section 138, go on presenting the cheque so as to enable him to exercise such right at any point of time during the validity of the cheque. Anil Kumar Goel v. Kishan Chand Kaura, AIR 2008 SC 899 : (2007) 13 SCC 492 : 2008 CrLJ 1386 : 2001 (13) SCR 313 : 2007 (14) Scale 179.

[13534] ● Proper complaints—Condition.—For a proper complaint under Section 138 of the Act, the cheque must have been drawn by a person and secondly the account must be maintained by "such person" and it should have been given for payment of amount of money to another person from out of that account for the discharge of any debt or other liability and when such cheque is returned by the bank unpaid because of the insufficient funds to honour the cheque. Then such person would be liable under Section 138 of the Act.

In the present case, the account was being maintained by "Intel Travels" and the appellant had the authority to sign the cheque of that account. Therefore, there will be a clear liability if the appellant used the cheque which she had the authority to use and that too for discharging the debt. It must be pointed out at this juncture that the words in Section 138 of the Act are "any debt" or "other liability". In this case since M/s Intel Travels was maintaining the account and the appellant had the authority to operate the same, the conditions will be satisfied even if it was given for the discharge of the liability of the appellant. Aneeta Hada v. Godfather Travel and Tours Pvt. Ltd., (2008) 13 SCC 703 : 2008 (7) SCR 1054 : 2008 (8) Scale 25.

[13535] ● Complaint under Section 138, Negotiation Instrument Act.—In proceedings under Section 138, Negotiation Instrument Act, the appellant can raise a defence that the cheques were not meant to be used towards discharge of a lawful liability or a debt, but the same by itself would not mean that in an appropriate case a complaint petition cannot be allowed to be filed. Surya Lakshmi Cotton Mills Ltd. v. Rajvir Industries Ltd., AIR 2008 SC 1683 (1688) : 2008 (1) Crimes 165 (SC) : JT 2008 (1) SC 340.

[13536] ● Whether cheque dishonoured issued in discharge of liability of debt—Determination.—Single Judge has not addressed himself on the legal question raised before him that the criminal liability of appellant under the provisions of Section 138 are attracted only on account of the dishonour of the cheques issued in discharge of liability or debt, but not on account of issuance of security cheques. The Single Judge has also not given cogent, satisfactory and convincing reasons for disbelieving and discarding the pre-charge evidence of the appellant corroborated by the evidence of the expert opinion in regard to the interpolation in and fabrication of the cheques by adding one more figure '0' to make Rs. 30,000/- to Rs. 3,00,000/- and similarly adding one more figure '0' to make Rs. 40,000/- to Rs. 4,00,000/-. In the backdrop of the facts of these cases, we are of the opinion that the judgments and orders of the High Court cannot be sustained on the premise that the High Court has not addressed itself on the above-said two legal questions raised by the appellant and, therefore, the impugned judgments and orders dated 25.01.2007 and 19.02.2007 are set aside. The interest of justice should be sub-served if the matters are remitted to the High Court to decide the appeals filed by the respondent against the appellant and criminal miscellaneous petitions seeking for quashing the first information reports registered against the respondent and his wife by the police of commission of the offences stated in FIR Nos. 93 and 94 of 1998. Needless to say that any observation made by us in this judgment shall not be construed as an expression of opinion on the merits of the cases, which shall be decided by the High Court on their own merits in accordance with law. Sudhir Kumar Bhalla v. Jagdish Chand, AIR 2008 SC 2407 : (2008) 7 SCC 137 : 2008 (7) SCR 459 : JT 2008 (6) 549 : 2008 (6) Scale 626.

[13537] ● Rebuttal of presumption—Object of Section 139, Negotiation Instrument Act.—The provision of Section 139, Negotiation Instrument Act has been inserted to regulate the growing business, trade, commerce and industrial activities of the country and the strict liability to promote greater vigilance in financial matters and safeguard the faith of the creditor in the drawer of the cheque which is essential to the economic life of a developing country like India. This, however, shall not mean that the Courts shall put a blind eye to the ground realities. Statute mandates raising of presumption but it stops at that. It does not say how presumption drawn should be held to have rebutted. Other important principles of legal jurisprudence, namely presumption of innocence as human rights and the doctrine of reverse burden introduced by Section 139 should be delicately balanced. Such balancing acts, indisputably would largely depend upon the factual matrix of each case, the materials brought on record and having regard to legal principles governing the same. Krishna Janardhan Bhatt v. Duttaraya, AIR 2008 SC 1325 : 2008 (2) SCC (Cri) 166 : 2008 CrLJ 1172 (1179-1180) : 2008 (1) Crimes 227 (SC).

[13538] ● Presumption under Section 139, Negotiation Instrument Act.—Section 139 of the Negotiation Instrument Act merely raises a presumption in favour of the holder of the cheque that same has been issued for discharging of any debt or other liability. Existence of legally recoverable debt is not a matter of presumption under Section 139, Negotiable Instrument Act. Krishna Janardhan Bhat v. Duttaraya G. Hegde, AIR 2008 SC 1325 : (2008) 4 SCC 54 : 2008 (2) SCC (Cri) 166 : 2008 CrLJ 1172 (1177) : 2008 (1) Crimes 227 (SC).

[13539] ● Compounding of offence.—In the instant case, since the matter has been compromised between the parties and the amount of Rs. 45,000/- has been paid by the appellant towards full and final settlement to the respondent-bank towards its dues, the appellant is entitled to acquittal.. The order of conviction and sentence recorded by all Courts is set aside and he is acquitted of the charge levelled against him. Vinay Devanna Nayak v. Ryot Seva Sabakari Bank Ltd., AIR 2008 SC 716 : (2008) 2 SCC 305 : 2008 (1) SCC (Cri) 351 : 2008 CrLJ 805 : 2007 (12) SCR 1134 : JT 2007 (13) 382 : 2007 (13) Scale 705 : 2007 (8) Supreme 245 : 2007 (4) Crimes 352 (SC).

[13540] ● Person resigning with knowledge of complainant in 1996—Cannot be incharge of company in 1996 when cheque was dishonoured.—A person, who had resigned with the knowledge of the complainant in 1996 could not be a person incharge of the company in 1998 when the cheque was dishonoured. He had no say in the matter of seeing that the cheque is honoured. DCM Financial Services Ltd. v. Jal Sareen, AIR 2008 SC 2255 : (2008) 8 SCC 1 : 2008 (3) SCC (Cri) 401 : 2008 CrLJ 3178.

[13541] ● Belated complaint.—The provisions of the Act being special in nature, in terms thereof the jurisdiction of the Court to take cognizance of an offence under Section 138 of the Act was limited to the period of thirty days in terms of the proviso appended thereto. The Parliament only with a view to obviate the aforementioned difficulties on the part of the complainant inserted proviso to Clause (b) of Section 142 of the Act in 2002. It confers a jurisdiction upon the Court to condone the delay. It is, therefore, a substantive provision and not a procedural one. The matter might have been different if the Magistrate could have exercised its jurisdiction either under Section 5 of the Limitation Act, 1963 or Section 473 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1976. The provisions of the said Acts are not applicable. In any event, no such application for condonation of delay was filed. If the proviso appended to Clause (b) of Section 142 of the Act contained a substantive provision and not a procedural one, it could not have been given a retrospective effect. A substantive law, as it is well-settled, in absence of an express provision, cannot be given a retrospective effect or retroactive operation. Subodh S. Salaskar v. Jayaprakash M. Shah, AIR 2008 SC 3086 : 2008 CrLJ 3953 (3958) : JT 2008 (8) SC 637.

[13542] ● Presumption of service.—Presumption of service under the statute would arise only when it is sent by registered post in times of Section 27 of the General Clauses Act but such a presumption may be raised also under Section 114 of the Evidence Act. Even when a notice is received back with an endorsement that the party has refused the accept, still then the presumption can be raised as regards the valid service of notice. Subodh Salaskar v. Jayaprakash M. Shah, AIR 2008 SC 3086 : 2008 CrLJ 3953 (3957) : JT 2008 (8) (SC) 637.

[13543] ● Liability of Directors and partners of firm—Legal fiction.—Section 41, Negotiation Instrument Act raises a legal fiction in terms whereof, the Directors of a company which would include the partners of a firm would be deemed to have committed an offence, if they are in-charge of the affairs of the company and responsible to it. Green Earth Asphalt and Power (P) Ltd. v. State of Maharashtra, (2008) 8 SCC 278 (279) : 2008 (3) SCC (Cri) 481.

[13544] ● Service of notice.—Where the service of notice upon the accused director of the company, through the employee of the advocate of the complainant was not proved, the complainant for offence under Section 138, N.I. Act was not entertained. S.I. and F.C. (P) Ltd. v. Lloyds Register of SIO Staff Provident Fund, 2008 CrLJ 377 (382) : (2007) 4 Crimes 244 : (2007) 14 SCC 753.

[13545] ● Notice ambiguously stating amount.—Where the notice served ambiguously stated the entire amount and not the amount of the cheque dishonoured Criminal Proceedings under Section 138 N.I. Act were quashed. Rahul Builders v. Arihant Fertilizers and Chemical, (2008) 2 SCC 321 : 2008 CrLJ 452 : (2007) 4 Crimes 235.

[13546] ● Who can file complaint.—Where the payee is a proprietary concern, the complaint can be filed: (i) by the proprietor of the proprietary concern, describing himself as the sole proprietor of the 'payee'; (ii) the proprietary concern, describing itself as a sole proprietary concern, represented by its sole proprietor, and (iii) the proprietor or the proprietary concern represented by the attorney-holder under a power of attorney executed by the sole proprietor. Shankar Finance and Investments v. State of Andhra Pradesh, AIR 2009 SC 422 : (2008) 8 SCC 536 : 2008 (10) SCR 905 : 2008 (10) Scale 654.

[13547] ● Service of Notice.—When the notice is sent by registered post and under certificate of posting correctly addressed, it must be presumed that the service of notice has been made effective. Indo Automobiles v. Jai Durga Enterprises, AIR 2009 SC 386 : (2008) 8 SCC 529 : 2008 (3) Crimes 158.

[13548] ● Notice sent by registered post with A/D—Presumption.—Once notice has been sent by registered post with A/D on a correct address, is must be presumed that the service had been made effective. Indo Automobiles v. Jai Durga Enterprises, AIR 2009 SC 386 : (2008) 8 SCC 529 : 2008 (3) Crimes 158.

[13549] ● First notice not received by accused—Presentation of cheque for second time—Second notice not invalid.—The first notice purported to have been issued by the complainant-respondent on 8.7.2003 is not on record. Admittedly appellants have not received the same

As regards notice dated 9.9.2003 which is said to be the second notice, it is evident that the same had not been served upon the appellants having been returned. If that be so, the presentation of the cheque for the second time and issuance of the second notice in our opinion would not be invalid. S.L. Construction v. Alapati Srivasa Rao, AIR 2009 SC 1538 : (2009) 1 SCC 500 : 2008 (15) SCR 51 : JT 2008 (13) 472 : 2008 (15) Scale 308.

[13550] ● Scope of Section 138, Negotiation Instrument Act.—Section 138 of Negotiation Instrument Act provides for a final provision. Such a penal provision, enacted in terms of the legal fiction drawn would be attracted when a cheque is retuned by the bank unpaid. Such non-payment may either be: (i) because of the amount of money standing to the credit of that account is insufficient to honour the cheque, or (ii) it exceeds the amount arranged to be paid from that account by an agreement made with the bank.

Before a proceeding thereunder is initiated, all the legal requirements therefor must be complied with. The Court must be satisfied that all the ingredients of commission of an offence under the said provision have been complied with.

The parameters for invoking the provisions of Section 138 of the Act, thus, being limited, we are of the opinion that refusal on the part of the bank to honour the cheque would not bring the matter within the mischief of the provisions of Section 138 of the Act.

The Court while exercising its jurisdiction for taking cognizance of an offence under Section 138 of the Act was required to consider only the allegations made in the complaint petition and the evidence of the complainant and his witnesses, if any. It could not have taken into consideration the result of the complaint petition filed by the respondent No. 2 or the closer report filed by the Superintendent of Police in the First Information Report lodged by the appellant against him. Raj Kumar Khurana v. State of (NCT of Delhi), (2009) 6 SCC 72 : 2009 CrLJ 3454 : 2009 (7) SCR 434 : JT 2009 (7) 351 : 2009 (7) Scale 55.

[13551] ● Ingredients.—In order to attract Section 138, Negotiable Instruments Act to complaint must show: That cheque was issued, the same was presented; it was dishonoured on presentation; a notice in terms of the provisions was served on the person sought to be made liable and despite service of notice, neither any payment was made, nor other obligations, if any, were made were complied with within fifteen days, from the date of receipt of the notice. Ramraj Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (2009) 6 SCC 729 : JT 2009 (5) SC 649 : 2009 (5) SCR 1130.

[13552] ● High Court failing to examine probative value of documents produced by complainant—Case remitted.—It is noticed that the evidence of PW-1 was to the effect that the accused was liable to pay Rs. 1,81,256.75 and the cash discount and the sales tax. It is also seen that the appellants had produced the relevant documents to substantiate the contention that the cheque in question was issued to discharge the liability. The documents produced included the invoices, ledger and bills.

It is noticed that the High Court has not examined the matter in proper perspective. The probative value of the documents produced and the acceptability of the evidence of PW-1 has not been examined. That being so, we set aside the impugned order of the High Court and remit the matter to it to consider the matter afresh taking into account the various aspects highlighted above. V.G. Saraf and Sons v. H. Ranjith, (2009) 5 SCC 141 : 2009 CrLJ 2788, 2789 : 2009 (4) SCR 387 : JT 2009 (4) 107 : 2009 (3) Scale 784 (2) : 2009 (2) Supreme 491.

[13553] ● Presumption of service of notice.—Presumption raised in support of service of notice would depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case. It application is on the question of law or the fact obtaining. Presumption has to be raised on the hypothesis or surmises but if the foundational facts are laid down therefor, only because presumption of service of notice is possible to be raised at the trial, the same by itself may not be a ground to hold that the distinction between giving of notice and service of notices ceases to exist. Harman Electronics (P) Ltd. v. National Panasonic India Ltd., AIR 2009 SC 1168 : (2009) 1 SCC 720 : 2009 CrLJ 1109 (1115).

[13554] ● Demand notice—Service of such notice.—While issuance of a notice by the holder of a negotiable instrument is necessary, service thereof is also imperative only on a service of such notice and failure on the part of the accused to pay the demanded amount within a period of fifteen days thereafter, commission of an offence completes. Giving of notice, ‘therefore, cannot have any precedence over the service. Harman Electronics (P) Ltd. v. National Panasonic India (Pvt.) Ltd., AIR 2009 SC 1168 : (2009) 1 SCC 720 : 2009 CrLJ 1109 (1115).

[13555] ● Ingredients of offence under Section 138, Negotiation Instruments Act.—To constitute an offence under Section 138 of the Act, the following ingredients are required to be fulfilled:

(i) A person must have drawn a cheque on an account maintained by him in a bank for payment of a certain amount of money to another person from out of that account; (ii) the cheque should have been issued for the discharge, in whole or in part, of any debt or other liability, (iii) that cheque has been presented to the bank within a period of six months from the date on which it is drawn or within the period of its validity whichever is earlier, (iv) that cheque is returned by the bank unpaid, either because of the amount of money standing to the credit of the account is insufficient to honour the cheque or that it exceeds the amount arranged to be paid from that account by an agreement made with the bank; (v) the payee or the holder in due course of the cheque makes a demand for the payment of the said amount of money by giving a notice in writing, to the drawer of the cheque, within 15 days of the receipt of information by him from the bank regarding the return of the cheque as unpaid; (vi) the drawer of such cheque fails to make payment of the said amount of money to the payee or the holder in due course of the cheque within 15 days of the receipt of the said notice. Jugesh Sehgal v. Shamsher Singh Gogi, (2009) 14 SCC 683 : 2009 (10) SCR 857 : JT 2009 (9) SC 292 : 2009 (9) Scale 455 : 2009 (5) Supreme 320.

[13556] ● Failure to prove existence of debt or liability.—It is the specific case of the respondent that he had sold woolen carpets to the appellant on 6-8-1994 and in discharge of the said liability the appellant had issued two cheques, which were ultimately dishonoured. In support of his case the respondent produced the carbon copy of the bill. A perusal of the bill makes it evident that there is no endorsement made by the respondent accepting the correctness of the contents of the bill. The bill is neither signed by the appellant. On the contrary, the appellant examined one official from the Sales Tax Department, who positively asserted before the Court that the respondent had filed sales tax return for the Assessment Year 1994-95 indicating that no sale of woolen carpets had taken place during the said Assessment Year and, therefore, sales tax was not paid.

Once the testimony of the official of the Sales Tax Department is accepted, it becomes evident that no transaction of sale of woolen carpets had taken place between the respondent and the appellant, as alleged by the respondent. When sale of woolen carpets had not taken place, there was no existing debt in discharge of which, the appellant was expected to issue cheques to the respondent. Thus the accused has discharged the onus of proving that the cheques were not received by the holder for discharge of a debt or liability. Under the circumstances the defence of the appellant that blank cheques were obtained by the respondent as advance payment also becomes probable and the onus of burden would shift on the complainant. The complainant did not produce any books of account or stock register maintained by him in the course of his regular business or any acknowledgement for delivery of goods, to establish that as a matter of fact woolen carpets were sold by him to the appellant on August 6, 1994 for a sum of Rs. 1,90, 348.39. Having regard to the materials on record, this Court is of the opinion that the respondent failed to establish his case under Section 138 of the Act as required by law and, therefore, the impugned judgment of the High Court is liable to be set aside. Kumar Exports v. Sharma Carpets, AIR 2009 SC 1518 : (2009) 2 SCC 513 : 2008 (17) SCR 572 : 2008 (16) Scale 372.

[13557] ● Object of Section 138, Negotiable Instruments Act.—Chapter XVII of the Act provides for penalties in case of dishonour of cheques for insufficiency of funds in the accounts of the drawer thereof.

Indisputably, Chapter XVII, which was inserted by the Banking Public Financial Institutions and Negotiable Instruments Laws (Amendment) Act, 1988 (66 of 1988) and came into force on 1.4.1989, was incorporated to "enhance the acceptability of cheques in settlement of liabilities by making the drawer liable for penalties in case of bouncing of cheques due to insufficiency of funds in the accounts or for the reason that it exceeds the arrangements made by the drawer, with adequate safeguards to prevent harassment of honest drawers." S.L. Construction v. Alapati Srinivasa Rao, AIR 2009 SC 1538 : (2009) 1 SCC 500 : 2008 (15) SCR 51 : JT 2008 (13) 472 : 2008 (15) Scale 308.

[13558] ● Territorial Jurisdiction.—The complaint petition does not show that the cheque was presented at Delhi. It is absolutely silent in that regard. The facility for collection of the cheque admittedly was available at Chandigarh and the said facility was a1vailed of. The certificate dated 24.6.2003, which was not produced before the learned Court taking cognizance, even if taken into consideration does not show that the cheque was presented at the Delhi Branch of the Citi Bank. We, therefore, have no other option but to presume that the cheque was presented at Chandigarh. Indisputably, the dishonour of the cheque also took place at Chandigarh. The only question, therefore, which arises for consideration is that as to whether sending of notice from Delhi itself would give rise to a cause of action for taking cognizance under the Negotiable Instruments Act.

It is one thing to say that sending of a notice is one of the ingredients for maintaining the complaint but it is another thing to say that dishonour of a cheque by itself constitutes an offence. For the purpose of proving its case that the accused had committed an offence under Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, the ingredients thereof are required to be proved. What would constitute an offence is stated in the main provision. The proviso appended thereto, however, imposes certain further conditions which are required to be fulfilled before cognizance of the offence can be taken. If the ingredients for constitution of the offence laid down in the provisos (a), (b) and (c) appended to Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act intended to be applied in favour of the accused, there cannot be any doubt that receipt of a notice would ultimately give rise to the cause of action for filing a complaint. As it is only on receipt of the notice the accused at his own peril may refuse to pay the amount.

Therefore, the place where an offence has been committed plays an important role. It is one thing to say that a presumption is raised that notice is served but it is another thing to say that service of notice may not be held to be of any significance or may be held to be wholly unnecessary.

We cannot, an things stand today, be oblivious of the fact that a banking institution holding several cheques signed by the same borrower cannot only present the cheque for its encashment at four different places but also may serve notices from four different places so as to enable it to file four complaint cases at four different places. This only causes grave harassment to the accused. It is, therefore, necessary in a case of this nature to strike a balance between the right of the complainant and the right of an accused vis-a-vis the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

For the views we have taken it must be held that Delhi High Court has no jurisdiction to try the case. We, however, while exercising our jurisdiction under Article 142 of the Constitution of India direct that Complaint Case No. 1549 pending in the Court of Shri N.K. Kaushik, Additional Sessions Judge, New Delhi, be transferred to the Court of the District and Sessions Judge, Chandigarh who shall assign the same to a Court of competent jurisdiction. The transferee Court shall fix a specific date of hearing and shall not grant any adjournment on the date on which the complainant and its witnesses are present. The transferee Court is furthermore directed to dispose of the matter within a period of six months from the date of receipt of the records of the case on assignment by the learned District and Sessions Judge, Chandigarh. Harman Electronics (P) Ltd. v. National Panasonic India Pvt. Ltd., AIR 2009 SC 1168 : (2009) 1 SCC 720 : 2009 CrLJ 1109 : 2008 (17) SCR 487 : JT 2008 (13) 671.

[13558A] ● Presentation of cheque for third time and issuance of third notice—Not invalid.—In this case, the first notice having not been served and the second notice having been withdrawn in terms of the reply issued by the learned advocate for the appellants themselves, the complainant cannot be said to have committed any illegality in presenting the cheque for the third time and issuing the third notice upon the defaulter. S.L. Construction v. Alapati Srinivasa Rao, AIR 2009 SC 1538 : (2009) 1 SCC 500 : 2008 (15) SCR 51.

[13559] ● Ingredients of Section 138, N.I. Act.—In order to bring application of Section 138 the complaint must show. That Cheque was issued, the same was presented; it was dishonored on presentation; a notice in terms of the provisions was served on the person sought to be made liable and despite service of notice, neither any payment was made nor other obligations, if any, were complied with within fifteen days from the date of receipt of the notice. Ramraj Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (2009) 6 SCC 729 : 2009 (5) SCR 1130 : JT 2009 (5) 649 : 2009 (5) Scale 670.

[13560] ● Dishonour of cheque—Power of attorney holder can file complaint.—Filing of complaint by payee though power of attorney-holder is justified and cannot be quashed. Praveen v. Mohd. Tajuddin, (2009) 12 SCC 706.

[13561] ● Dishonouring of cheque—Offence by company.—In this case, save and except for the statement that the Respondents, Mr. Rajiv Jain and Sarla Jain and some of the other accused, were Directors of the accused Companies and were responsible and liable for the acts of the said Companies, no specific allegation has been made against any of them. The question of proving a fact which had not been mentioned to the complaint did not, therefore, arise in the facts of this case. This has prompted the High Court to observe that the Bank had relied on the mistaken presumption that as Directors, Rajiv Jain, Sarla Jain and the other Directors were vicariously liable for the acts of the Company. Admittedly, except for the aforesaid statement, no other material has been disclosed in the complaint to make out a case against the respondents that they had been in charge of the affairs of the Company and were responsible for its action. The High Court, therefore, rightly held that in the absence of any specific charge against the Respondents, the complaint was liable to be quashed and the respondents were liable to be discharged.

As to the submission made on behalf of the Bank that they were holders in due course of the four cheque issued by the Respondent No. 3 Company and that by presenting them to the Petitioner Bank for encashment, the Respondent No. 1 Company had become liable for dishonour thereof, has been adequately dealt with and negated by the High Court and does not require any further elaboration.

The Special Leave Petitions filed by the Central Bank of India, therefore, fail and are dismissed. Central Bank of India v. Assam Global Ltd., AIR 2010 SC 2835 : JT 2010 (7) SC 88.

[13562] ● Dishonour of cheque—Complaint, maintainable only against drawer of cheque.—A complaint under Section 138 of the N.I. Act would not be maintainable against a person who was not the drawer, of the cheque from an account maintained by him which ultimately came to be dishonoured on presentation. P.J. Agro Tech. Ltd. v. Water Base Ltd., 2010 CrLJ 4386 (4388) (SC).

[13563] ● "Stop-payment" instructions to bank.—Section 138 of N.I. Act can indeed be attracted when a cheque is dishonoured on account of "stop payment" instructions sent by the accused to his bank in respect of a post-dated cheque, irrespective of insufficiency of finds in the account. Rangappa v. Mohan, AIR 2010 SC 1898 : 2010 CrLJ 2871 (2875) (SC) : (2010) 3 Crimes 40.

[13564] ● Legally recoverable debt or liability.—Section 139 of the Act is an example of a reverse onus clause that has been included in furtherance of the legislative objective of improving the credibility of negotiable instruments. While Section 138 of the Act specifies a strong criminal remedy in relation to the dishonour of cheques, the rebuttable presumption under Section 139 is a device to prevent undue delay in the course of litigation. However, it must be remembered that the offence made punishable by Section 138 can be better described as a regulatory offence since the bouncing of a cheque is largely in the nature of a civil wrong whose impact is usually confined to the private parties involved in commercial transactions. In such a scenario, the test of proportionality should guide the construction and interpretation of reverse onus clauses and the accused/defendant cannot be expected to discharge an unduly high standard of proof. In the absence of compelling justifications, reverse onus clauses usually impose an evidentiary burden and not a persuasive burden. Keeping this in view, it is a settled position that when an accused has to rebut the presumption under Section 139, the standard of proof for doing so is that of 'preponderance of probabilities'. Therefore, if the accused is able to raise a probable defence which creates doubts about the existence of a legally enforceable debt or liability, the prosecution can fail. As clarified in the citations, the accused can rely on the materials submitted by the complainant in order to raise such a defence and it is conceivable that in some cases the accused may not need to adduce evidence of his/her own. Rangappa v. Mohan, AIR 2010 SC 1898 : 2010 CrLJ 2871 (2875) : (2010) 3 Crimes 40. [observations to contrary in Krishna Janardhan Bhat v. Dattatraya G. Hegde, AIR 2010 SC 1325 : (2010) 3 SCC 786 overruled].

[13565] ● Presumption as to existence of legally enforceable debt.—In the instant case the defence of the loss of or blank cheque was taken up belatedly and the accused had mentioned a different date in the "stop payment" instructions to his bank. Furthermore, the instructions to "stop payment" had not even mentioned that the cheque had been lost. A perusal of the trial record showed that the accused appeared to be aware of the fact that the cheque was with the complainant. Furthermore, the very fact that the accused had failed to reply to the statutory notice under Section 138 of the Act led to the inference that there was merit in the complainants version. Apart from not raising a probable defence, the appellant accused was not able to contest the existence of a legally enforceable debt or liability. The fact that accused had made regular payments to the complainant in relation to the construction of his house did not preclude the possibility of the complainant having spent his own money for the same purpose. There was a slight discrepancy in the complainant's version, so far as was not clear whether the accused had asked for a hand loan to meet the construction, related expenses or whether the complainant had incurred the said expenditure over a period of time. Either way the complainant disclosed the prima facie existence of a legally enforceable debt or liability since the complainant had maintained that his money was used for the construction expenses. Since the accused did admit that the signatures on the cheque was his, the statutory presumption came into play and the same had not been rebutted with regard to the materials submitted by the complainant. Ranga-

[13566] ● Dishonour of cheque—No multiple complaint in respect of same transaction.—The Supreme Court made it mandatory for the complainant to disclose that no other complaint has been filed in any other Court in respect of the same transaction, and directed that such a disclosure should be made on sworn affidavit which should accompany the complaint filed under Section 200 of the CrPC and if it is found that such multiple complaints have been filed, orders for transfer of the complaint to the first Court should be given, generally speaking, by the High Court after imposing hearing costs on the complainant for resorting to such a practice. These directions were directed to be given effect prospectively. Damodar S. Prabhu v. Syed Babalal H., AIR 2010 SC 1907 : (2010) 5 SCC 663 : 2010 CrLJ 2860 (2866).

[13567] ● Dishonour of cheque—Nature of offence.—Dishonour of a cheque can be best described as a regulatory offence that has been created to serve the public interest in ensuring the liability of these instruments. The impact of this offence is usually confined to the private parties involved in commercial transactions. Damodar S. Prabhu v. Syed Babalal H., AIR 2010 SC 1907 : (2010) 5 SCC 663 : 2010 CrLJ 2860 (2861, 2862).

[13568] ● Compounding of offences under N.I. Act not governed by Section 320, IPC.—In view of the non-obstinate clause, the compounding of offences under the N.I. Act, 1881 is controlled by Section 147 of the Act and the scheme contemplated by Section 320, CrPC will not be applicable in the strict sense since the latter is meant for the specified offences under the Indian Penal Code. Damodar S. Prabhu v. Syed Babalal H., AIR 2010 SC 1907 : (2010) 5 SCC 663 : 2010 CrLJ 2860 (2863).

[13569] ● Dishonour of cheque—Liability of Directors.—In this case, save and except for the statement that respondents were Directors of the accused companies, no specific allegation was made against any one of them. The question of proving the fact which had not been mentioned on the complaint, did not, therefore, arise in the facts of the case. Admittedly except for the aforesaid statement, no other material was disclosed in the complaint to make out a case against the respondents that they had been in charge of the affairs of the company and were responsible for its action. Held, in the absence of any specific charge against the respondents, the complaint was liable to be quashed. Central Bank of India v. Asian Global Ltd., AIR 2010 SC 2835 : 2010 CrLJ 4420 (4422, 4423).

[13570] ● Dishonour of cheque—Compounding of offence—Sections 138, 147, N.I. Act, 1881.—With regard to the progression in cheque bouncing cases, the Attorney-General urged the Supreme Court to frame guidelines for a graded scheme of imposing costs on parties who unduly delay compounding of the offence. It was submitted that the requirement of deposits of the costs will act as a deterrent for delayed composition, since at present, free and easy compounding of offences at any stage, however belated, gives an incentive to the drawer of the cheque to delay settling the case for years. An application for compounding made alter several years not only result in the system being burdened but the complainant is also deprived of effective justice. In view of this submission, the Supreme Court has directed to follow the guidelines given in this judgment. The Supreme Court made it clear that even though the imposition of costs by the competent Court is a matter of discretion, the scale of costs has been suggested in the interest of uniformity. The competent can of course reduce the costs with regard to the specific facts and circumstances of a case, while recording reasons in writing for such variance. Bona fide litigants should of course contest the proceedings to their logical end. Damodar S. Prabhu v. Syed Babalal H., AIR 2010 SC 1907 : (2010) 5 SCC 663 : 2010 CrLJ 2860 (2865, 2866, 2867).

[13571] ● Occasion to summon prosecution witnesses by prosecution.—In so far as the prosecution is concerned the occasion to summon any of its witnesses who has given his evidence on affidavit may arise in two ways. The prosecution may summon a person who has given his evidence on affidavit and has been cross-examined for "re-examination". The prosecution may also have to summon a witness whose evidence is given on affidavit in case objection is raised by the defence regarding the validity and/or sufficiency of proof of some document(s) submitted along with the affidavit. In that event the witness may be summoned to appear before the Court to cure the defect and to have the document(s) properly proved by following the correct legal mode. This appears to us as the simple answer to the above question and the correct legal position. Any other meaning given to sub-section (2) of the Section 145, as suggested by Mr. Ranjit Kumar would make the provision of Section 145(1) nugatory and would completely defeat the very scheme of trial as designed under Sections 143 to 147. Mandvi Co-op. Bank Ltd. v. Nimesh B.

[13572] ● Sections 138, 142(b)—Dishonour of cheque—Limitation for filing complaint.—In the instant case, the first notices were received by the accused-appellant on 14.6.2006, whereas the complaints were filed beyond the period of limitation and the Magistrate erred on taking cognizance of the complaints filed on the basis of the second notices issued on 7.6.2006. Similarly the High Court was also wrong in affirming the order of the Magistrate. Tameeshwar Vaishnav v. Ramvishal Gupta, AIR 2010 SC 1209 : (2010) 2 SCC 329 : 2010 CrLJ 1237 (1240).

[13573] ● Dishonour of cheque—Sentence.—The appellant had been facing criminal prosecution for the last 7 years. He was petty businessman. He had paid the hefty amount of compensation as a penalty for dishonour of the cheque issued by him. No material had been placed on record to indicate that the appellant had earlier committed any such or similar offence. In view of the above the conviction under Section was maintained. The substantive sentence of imprisonment was set aside. However, a sentence of a fine of Rs. 1000/- was maintained and imposition of composition in the sum of Rs. 35,000/- was also maintained. Basavaraj v. Dhanlaxmi Finance Co. (R) Terdal, AIR 2010 SC 382 : (2010) 1 SCC 602 : 2010 CrLJ 838 (839) (SC).

[13574] ● Respondent Director no more Director when the cheques alleged in complaint were signed—Liability.—Where the respondent Director was no more a Director of the Company when the cheques were signed, no responsibility can be fastened on him. National Small Industries Corporation Ltd. v. Harmeet Singh Paintal, (2010) 3 SCC 330 : 2010 CrLJ 1907 (1916, 1917).

[13575] ● Sections 143 to 147, N.I. Act—Retrospective operation.—The provisions of Sections 143 to 147 of the N.I. Act do not take away any substantive rights of the accused. These provisions are not substantive but procedural in nature and would therefore, undoubtedly, apply to the cases that were pending on the date the provisions came into force. Mandvi Co-operative Bank Ltd. v. Nimesh B. Thakore, AIR 2010 SC 1402 (1415) : (2010) 3 SCC 83.

[13576] ● Right of accused to give evidence on affidavit.—On a bare reading of Section 143, N.I. Act, it is clear that the legislature provided for the complainant to give his evidence on affidavit and did not provide for the accused to similarly do so. The case of the complainant in a complaint under Section 138 of the Act would be based largely on documentary evidence. The accused, on the other hand, in a large number of cases, may not lead any evidence at all and let the prosecution stand or fall on its own evidence. In case the defence does lead any evidence, the nature of its evidence may not be necessarily documentary; in all likelihood the defence would lead other kinds of evidences to rebut the presumption that the issuance of the cheque was not in the discharge of any debt or liability. This is the basic difference between the nature of the complainant's evidence and the evidence of the accused in case of dishonoured cheque. It is, therefore, wrong to equate the defence evidence with the complainant's evidence and to extend the same option to the accused as well. Mandvi Co-op. Bank Ltd. v. Nimesh B. Thakore (11-01-2010), AIR 2010 SC 1402 : (2010) 3 SCC 83 : JT 2010 (1) 259 : 2010 (1) Scale 188.

[13577] ● Dishonour of cheque—Offence by company responsibility of complainant—Prosecution of Directors—Principles.—The primary responsibility is on the complainant to make specific averments as are required under the law in the complaint so as to make the accused vicariously liable. For fastening the criminal liability, there is no presumption that every Director knows about the transaction.

Section 141 does not make all the Directors liable for the offence. The criminal liability can be fastened only on those who, at the time of the commission of the offence, were in charge of and were responsible for the conduct of the business of the company.

Vicarious liability can be inferred against a company registered or incorporated under the Companies Act, 1956 only if the requisite statements, which are required to be averred in the complaint/petition, are made so as to make accused therein vicariously liable for offence committed by company alongwith averments in the petition containing that accused were in-charge of and responsible for the business of the company and by virtue of their position they are liable to be proceeded with.

Vicarious liability on the part of a person must be pleaded and proved and not inferred.

If accused is Managing Director or Joint Managing Director then it is not necessary to make specific averment in the complaint and by virtue of their position they are liable to be proceeded with.

If accused is a director or an Officer of a company who signed the cheques on behalf of the company then also it is not necessary to make specific averment in complaint.

The person sought to be made liable should be in-charge of and responsible for the conduct of the business of the company at the relevant time. This has to be averred as a fact as there is no deemed liability of a Director in such cases. National Small Industries Corporation Ltd. v. Harmeet Singh Paintal, 2010 CrLJ 1907 (1916) (SC).

[13578] ● Section 145—Evidence on affidavit.—If affidavit in terms of the provisions of section 145 of the Act is to be considered to be an evidence, it is difficult to comprehend as to why the Court will ask the deponent of the said affidavit to examine himself with regard to the contents thereof once over again. He may be cross-examined and upon completion of his evidence, he may be re-examined. Thus, the words "examine any person giving evidence on affidavit as to the facts contained therein, in the event, the deponent is summoned by the Court in terms of sub-section (2) of Section 145 of the Act, would mean for the purpose of cross-examination. The provision seeks to attend a salutary purpose.

The object of enactment of the said provision is for the purpose of expedition of the trial. A criminal trial even otherwise is required to be expeditiously held. There is no justification for arriving at a finding that a witness can again be summoned for his examination in chief in the Court despite affirming affidavit in that behalf. Radhey Shyam Garg v. Naresh Kumar Gupta, AIR 2010 SC 3210 (2009) 13 SCC 201 : 2010 CrLJ 2810 (2814) (SC).

[13579] ● Dishonour of cheque—Compounding of offence.—The N.I. Act, 1881 being a special statute, the provisions of Section 147, will have an overriding effect over the provisions of the Code relating to compounding of offences. K.M. Ibrahim v. K.P. Mohammed, AIR 2010 SC 276 : (2010) 1 SCC 798 : 2010 CrLJ 525 (527, 528).

[13580] ● Right of accused to examine complainant or his witness.—Once it is realized that Sections 143 to 147 were designed especially to lay down a much simplified procedure for the trial of dishonoured cheque cases with the sole object that the trial of those cases should follow a course even swifter than a summary trial and once it is seen that even the special procedure failed to effectively and expeditiously handle the vast multitude of cases coming to the Court, the claim of the accused that on being summoned under Section 145(2), the complainant or any of his witnesses whose evidence is given on affidavit must be made to depose in examination-in-chief all over again plainly appears to be a demand for meaningless duplication, apparently aimed at delaying the trial.

In the event an application is made by the accused, the Court would be obliged to summon the person giving evidence on affidavit in terms of Section 145(1) without having any discretion in the matter. There can be no disagreement with this part of the submission but the question is when the person who has given his evidence on affidavit appears in Court, whether it is also open to the accused to insist that before cross-examining him as to the facts stated in the affidavit he must first depose in examination-in-chief and be required to verbally state what is already said in the affidavit. Mr. Ranjit Kumar referred to Section 137 of the Indian Evidence Act, the defines "examination-in-chief", "cross-examination" and "re-examination" and on that basis sought to argue that the word "examine" occurring in Section 145(2) must be construed to mean all the three kinds of examination of a witness. This, according to him, coupled with the use of the word "shall" with reference to the application made by the accused made it quite clear that a person giving his evidence on affidavit, on being summoned under Section 145(2) at the instance of the accused must begin his deposition with examination-in-chief, before he may be cross-examined by the accused. In this regard he submitted that Section 145 did not override the Evidence Act or the Negotiable Instruments Act or any other law except the Code of Criminal Procedure. He further submitted that the plain language of Section 145(2) was clear and unambiguous and was capable of only one meaning and, therefore, the provision must be understood in its literal sense and the High Court was in error in resorting to purposive interpretation of the provision. . .

We find nothing in Section 145(2) to suggest that. We may also make it clear that Section 137 of the Evidence Act does not define "examine" to mean and include the three kinds of examination of a witness; it simply defines "examination-in-chief", "cross-examination" and "re-examination". What Section 145(2) of the Act says is simply this. The Court may, at its discretion, call a person giving his evidence on affidavit and examine him as to the facts contained therein. But if an application is made either by the prosecution or by the accused the Court must call the person giving his evidence on affidavit, again to be examined as to the facts contained therein. What would be the extent and nature of examination in each case is a different matter and that has to be reasonably construed in light of the provision of Section 145(1) and having regard to the object and purpose of the entire scheme of Sections 143 to 146. The scheme of Sections 143 to 146 does not in any way affect the judge's powers under Section 165 of the Evidence Act. As a matter of fact, Section 145(2) expressly provides that the Court may, if it thinks fit, summon and examine any person giving evidence on affidavit. But how would the person giving evidence on affidavit be examined, on being summoned to appear before the Court on the application made by the prosecution or the accused? The affidavit of the person so summoned that is already on the record is obviously in the nature of examination-in-chief. Hence, on being summoned on the application made by the accused the deponent of the affidavit (the complainant or any of his witnesses) can only be subjected to cross-examination as to the facts stated in the affidavit. Mandvi Co-op. Bank Ltd. v. Nimesh B. Thakore (11-01-2010), AIR 2010 SC 1402 : (2010) 3 SCC 83 : JT 2010 (1) 259 : 2010 (1) Scale 188 : 2010 (1) Supreme 360.

[13581] ● Insertion of Sections 142 to 147, N.I. Act—Object.—Sections 142 to 147 of N.I. Act lay down a kind of special Code for trial of offences under Chapter XVII of the N.I. Act and Sections 143 to 147 were inserted in the Act by the N.I. (Amendment and Miscellaneous Provisions Act, 2002 to do away with all the stages and processes in a regular criminal trial that normally cause inordinate delay in its conclusion and to make the trial procedure as expeditious as possible without in any way compromising on the right of the accused for a fair trial. Mandvi Co-op. Bank Ltd. v. Nimesh B. Thakore, AIR 2010 SC 1402 (1411) : (2010) 3 SCC 83.

[13582] ● Subject to all 'just exceptions'—The evidence given on affidavit, by the complainant is "subject to all just exceptions'. This simply means that the evidence on affidavit must be admissible and it must not include inadmissible materials such as facts not relevant to the issue or any hearsay statements. In case the affidavits of the complainant contain statements that are admissible in evidence, it is always open to the accused to point those out to the Court and the Court would then surely deal with the objections in accordance with law. Mandavi Co-op. Bank Ltd. v. Nimesh B. Thakore, AIR 2010 SC 1402 : (2010) 3 SCC 83.

[13583] ● Object and scope of Section 147, N.I. Act.—Section 147 of the N.I. Act is in the nature of an enabling provision which provides for the compounding of offences prescribed under the same Act, thereby saving as an exception to the general rule incorporated in sub-section (9) of the Section 320, CrPC which states that no offences shall be compounded except as provided by this section. A bare reading of this provision would lead to the inference that offences punishable under laws other than the Indian Penal Code also cannot be compounded. However, since Section 147 was inserted by way an amendment to a special law, the same will override the effect of Section 320(9) of the CrPC, especially keeping in mind that Section 147 carries a non-obstante clause. Damodar v. S. Prabhu v. Syed Babalal H., AIR 2010 SC 1907 : (2010) 5 SCC 663 : 2010 CrLJ 2860 : 2010 (2) Crimes 233 (SC).

[13584] ● Dishonour of cheque—Compounding can be allowed at the appellate state.—Section 147 of N.I. Act does not bar the parties from compounding an offence under section 138 even at the appellate stage of the proceedings. Accordingly, there is no reason to reject the application under Section 147 of the Act even a proceeding under Article 136 of the Constitution. K.M. Ibrahim v. K.P. Mohammed, AIR 2010 SC 276 : (2010) 1 SCC 798 : 2010 CrLJ 525 (528).

[13585] ● Dishonour of cheque—Compounding of offence—Power of Supreme Court.—The Supreme Court is empowered under Article 142 of the Constitution to pass appropriate orders in line with sub-section (8) of section 320, CrPC in an application under section 147 of the Act in order to do justice to the parties. K.M. Ibrahim v. K.P. Mohammed, AIR 2010 SC 276 : (2010) 1 SCC 798 : 2010 CrLJ 525 (527).

DISOBEDIENCE OF ORDER

[13586] ● Disobedience of order.—It is a commonplace that where the superior Court's order staying proceedings is disobeyed by the inferior Court to whom it is addressed, the latter Court commits contempt of Court, for it acts in disobedience to the authority of the former Court. Just as the disobedience to a specific order of the Court undermines the authority and dignity of the Court in a particular case, similarly any deliberate and mala fide conduct of not following the law laid down in the previous decision undermines the Constitutional authority and respect of the High Court. Baradakanta Mishra v. Bhimsen Dixit. AIR 1972 SC 2466 : (1973) 1 SCC 446 : 1973 SCC (Cri) 360 (364) : 1973 CrLJ 19 : 1973 CrLR (SC) 415 : (1973) 2 SCR 495.

[13587] ● Existence of public nuisance—Offence aggravated if disobedience cause dan- ger to human health or safety.—Section 133, Cr PC is categoric, although reads discretionary. Judicial discretion when facts for its exercise are present, has a mandatory import. Therefore, when the Sub-divisional Magistrate, Ratlam has before him information and evidence, which disclose the existence of a public nuisance and on the materials placed, he considers that such unlawful obstruction or nuisance should be removed from any public place which may be lawfully used by the public, he shall act. Thus, his judicial power shall passing through the procedural barrel, fire upon the obstruction or nuisance, triggered by the jurisdictional facts. Magistrate's responsibility under Section 133, CrPC is to order removal of such nuisance within a time to be fixed in the order. This is a public duty implicit in the public power to be exercised on behalf of the public and pursuant to a public proceeding. Failure to comply with the direction will be visited with a punishment contemplated by Section 188, IPC. Therefore, the Municipal Commissioner or other executive authority bound by the order under Section 133, CrPC shall obey the direction because disobedience, if it causes obstruction or annoyance or injury to any persons lawfully pursuing their employment, shall be punished with simple imprisonment or fine as prescribed in the section. The offence is aggravated if the disobedience tends to cause danger to human health or safety. The imperative tone under Section 133, CrPC read with the punitive temper of Section 188, IPC makes the prohibitory act as a mandatory duty. Municipal Council, Ratlam v. Vardhichand, AIR 1980 SC 1622 : (1980) 4 SCC 162 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 933 : 1980 CrLJ 1075 : 1980 CrLR (SC) 543 : 1980 Cr App R (SC) 267 : (1981) 1 SCR 97.

[13588] ● Failure of power supply to flour mill.—Offence under Section 42(b) of the Electricity Act will be made out if contravention of the provisions of this Act or rules made thereunder is proved and further if it is established that without reasonable supply of energy is discontinued. A perusal of the complaint shows that what was mentioned was that the power supply has been interrupted on a number of occasions because of wilful failure and so far as the duties which are made the basis of offence, the allegation was that electricity was not being supplied knowingly and intentionally to cause wrongful loss and damage to the concern. It is therefore, clear that no facts have been specifically stated to constitute an offence under Section 42(b) of the aforesaid Act. To make out an offence under Section 166 of the IPC it has to be stated that the public servant knowingly disobeyed any particular direction of the law which he was bound to obey and further that such disobedience would cause injury to any person to the knowledge of the public servant. A perusal of the complaint does not disclose any particular act or omission of any of the Officers of the Board because it is not disputed that the Officers of the Board will be public servant within the meaning of definition of the term in the Indian Penal Code. Bihar State Electricity Board v. Nand Kishore Tamakhuwala, AIR 1986 SC 1653 : (1986) 2 SCC 414 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 179 (181, 182) : 1986 CrLJ 1246 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 178.

[13589] ● Discriminatory order of—Commission of Inquiry.—Discriminatory order of Commission of Inquiry regarding presence of police officials as witnesses for the purposes of cross-examination in the beginning of inquiry are liable to be quashed. Karan Bedi v. Committee of Enquiry, AIR 1988 SC 2252 : 1988 SCC (Cri) 895 : 1989 CrLJ 303 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 796.

[13590] ● Commissioner/Secretary of State Government not shown to have wilfully or deliberately or contemptuously floated or disobeyed orders.—In the instant case, it cannot conclusively be said that the respondents have wilfully or deliberately or contemptuously flouted or disobeyed the orders of this Court dated 7-2-1991. It appears to be a case of misinterpretation of the executive directions and orders of this Court dated 7-2-1991 and is, therefore, not a fit case in which contempt proceedings need to proceed any further. Accordingly contempt proceedings are dropped and discharged, the rule issued against the respondents. Ashok Kumar Singh v. State of Bihar, AIR 1992 SC 407 : 1992 SCC (Cri) 84 : 1992 SCC CrLR (SC) 174 : 1992 CrLJ 284.

DISPARAGING REMARK

[13591] ● Disparaging remarks.—It cannot be overlooked that judicial restraints and discipline are necessary to orderly administration of justice. One must always keep in view golden advice given by S.K. DAS, J. in State of Uttar Pradesh v. Mohd. Naim, AIR 1964 SC 703 : (1964) 2 SCR 363.

[13592] ● Disparaging remarks—Courts' privilege—Scope.—While with a case on hand, a Court of law may comment on the conduct of parties or witnesses and may also make necessary observations, keeping in view the evidence adduced by then. It is also time that the Judges are flash, and blood mortals with likes and dislike and normal human trails. State of Rajasthan v. Netrapal, (2007) 4 SCC 45 : 2007 (2) SCC (Cri)

187 : 2007 CrLJ 1783 : 2007 (2) Crimes 325 (SC).

[13593] ● Rights and duties of Courts.— "If there is one principle of cardinal importance in the administration of justice, it is this : the proper freedom and independence of Judges and Magistrates must be maintained and they must be allowed to perform their functions freely and fearlessly and without undue interference by anybody, given by this Court. At the same time it is equally necessary that in expressing their opinions Judges and Magistrates must be guided by considerations of justice, fair-play and restraint. It is not infrequent that sweeping generalizations defeat the very purpose for which they are made. It has been judicially recognized that in the matter of making disparaging remarks against persons or authorities whose conduct comes into consideration before Courts of law in cases to be decided by them, it is relevant to consider (a) whether the party whose conduct is in question is before the Court or has an opportunity of explaining or defending himself; (b) whether there is evidence on record bearing on that conduct justifying the remarks; and (c) whether it is necessary for the decision of the case, as an integral part thereof, to animadvert on that conduct. It has also been recognized that judicial pronouncements must be judicial in nature, and should not normally depart from sobriety, moderation and reserve." State of Rajasthan v. Netrapal, (2007) 4 SCC 45 : 2007 CrLJ 1783 (1785, 1786).

DISPOSAL OF PROPERTY
(Ss. 451 to 459, CrPC, 1973)

[13594] ● Disposal of property.—When a Magistrate has acquitted an accused charged of an offence against property, and in the exercise of his powers under Section 517 of the Code has made an order returning to the accused the money seized from him, the High Court has no jurisdiction, in the exercise of its powers of revision, to reverse the order and direct the money to be returned to the complainant, unless, after considering the evidence on record, it comes to the conclusion that the accused is guilty and having set aside the order of acquittal, it convicts the accused under procedure according to law. If in such a case the High Court affirms the order of acquittal and yet directs the money or property seized from the accused to be returned to the complainant, it is an improper exercise of the powers of revision, and the order has to be set aside. In the present case, the accused was charged under Section 379, Penal Code, in respect of a sum of money. The Magistrate acquitted the accused after coming to a clear finding that the prosecution had failed to establish beyond doubt that the money found from the accused was stolen property. He passed an order under Section 517 of the Code returning the money to the accused. The complainant applied in revision to the High Court against the order of acquittal and the order under Section 517. The High Court refused to interfere with the order of acquittal but set aside the order under Section 517 and directed that the money found from the accused be returned to the complainant. The order made by the High Court cannot be sustained. When a Magistrate has made an order acquitting an accused, and then, in the exercise of his power under Section 517 of the Code, has made an order returning to the accused the money seized from him, the High Court has no jurisdiction in appeal or revision to reverse that order unless the order of acquittal is first set aside and is converted into one of conviction. The order of the High Court is set aside and the original order of the trial Magistrate returning the money seized to the accused is restored. Pushkar Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1953 SC 508 : 1954 CrLJ 153.

[13595] ● Trial Court to make appropriate order on conclusion of trial for disposal of property.—Under Section 517 of the Code, power is conferred upon a trial Court to make an appropriate order at the conclusion of the trial for disposal of the property in respect of which an offence has been committed. This power can be exercised not only in respect of property as to which an offence has been committed, but also in respect of any property produced before it or in its custody, and further, the power of such disposal includes disposal by confiscation. No doubt, under Section 517 the Court is entitled to make an order of confiscation even in respect of property as to which no offence is proved to have been committed, provided the property is in the custody of the Court, but the exercise of this power is the exercise of a judicial discretion, and the order so made can be justified only when it could be said that in consideration of all circumstances of the case, such an order is appropriate. In the present case, the accused was found to have possessed gold worth about three lakhs of rupees, and though there was strong suspicion that it was smuggled gold, no charge under the Sea Customs Act could be levelled against him. He was prosecuted and convicted under Section 61-E of the Bombay District Police Act, 1890 (now, Section 124 of the Bombay Police Act, 1951), which made it an offence to possess any property as to which "there was reason to believe" that it was stolen property or property fraudulently obtained.

and was sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 100. After convicting the accused, the trial Magistrate made an order under Section 517 of the Code confiscating the gold seized from him and from persons with whom he had deposited it. Order of confiscation of gold worth about three lakhs of rupees is singularly inappropriate in a case in which the prosecution case that the gold was smuggled gold brought into India from Africa is not accepted by the Court, and the conviction is only for an offence based upon belief that the property is smuggled goods, and not for any offence which requires proof of the property being stolen property or property in respect of which any offence under any Special Act has been committed. The Court also took it into consideration that the Police Act did not contain any provision regarding confiscation such as is found in the Sea Customs Act. The order of confiscation is set aside, and the gold is directed to be returned to the accused. Suleman Issa v. State of Bombay, AIR 1954 SC 312 : 1954 CrLJ 881 : 1954 SCA 403 : 1954 SCJ 387 : 1954 SCR 976 : 56 PunLR 239 : 1954 MWN 814 : 56 Bom LR 1180.

[13596] ● Power of High Court to confirm or to set aside order of trial Court under Section 517, CrPC regarding confiscation of property seized. —In the exercise of its powers of revision, the High Court undoubtedly possesses the power to confirm or to set aside an order made by the trial Court under Section 517 regarding confiscation of the property seized from the accused. However, when an accused is charged with an offence in respect of any property which has been seized or recovered from him, an order of confiscation regarding the property as to which an offence is alleged to have been committed can validly follow only upon the conviction of the accused of such an offence. In such a case, if on appeal or revision the High Court sets aside the order of conviction and acquits the accused it has no power to confirm the order of confiscation. The only appropriate order as to the property seized which can be made in such a case is to set aside the order of confiscation made by the trial Court and direct the property to be returned to the accused or the person from whom it was seized. In the present case, the case against the accused who was arrested when crossing into Indian territory from Pondicherry was that he was carrying two blocks of gold which were dutiable goods. He as charged under Section 7 of the Land Customs Act. The trial Magistrate convicted him and made an order confiscating the gold. On appeal the High Court acquitted the accused, but curiously enough allowed the order of confiscation to stand. Under the circumstances, the order of confiscation is illegal. The order was set aside. Krishna Pillai v. State of Madras, AIR 1954 SC 335 : 1954 CrLJ 1051 : 1954 SCJ 236 : 1954 (1) MLJ 389 : 1954 MWN 37.

[13597] ● Order of return of seized property—Opportunity of being heard be given before passing of order. —In this appeal, it was contended that the High Court violated the principle of natural justice in reversing the order of the Sessions Judge directing the return of the currency notes without giving notice or opportunity of being heard to the appellant. The police seized currency notes worth rupees 21,000/- from the State Bank of India Branch in the course of an investigation of a case under Sections 120-B, 420 and 406, IPC, registered against K.G. (R-3). He came into possession of Rs. 1,50,000/- in Government currency notes by cheating R-1 and R-2, and the amount seized from the appellant was part of it. The appellant contended that he had come into possession of the said currency notes in usual course of its business without any knowledge that they had been the subject-matter of an offence. The accused including R-3 were acquitted by the Sessions Judge and the appellant's application under Section 517(1) of the old Code for delivery of the currency notes of Rs. 21,000/- on the ground that he was an innocent third party without any knowledge or suspicion of their having been involved in the commission of an offence was allowed. Subsequently an appeal was filed to the High Court by the State and the appeal was allowed and the High Court set aside the order of acquittal of R-3 and convicted him under Sections 420, 406 and 120-B, IPC R-1 made an application to the High Court asking for delivery of the currency notes as they belonged to him and R-2 and as they had been deprived of the said property by R-3 by committing the aforesaid offences. The High Court allowed the application directing handing over of the currency notes to R-1 and R-2. The contention of the appellant herein was that the High Court had reversed the order of the Sessions Judge directing the return of the currency notes to him without giving a notice and without giving him an opportunity of being heard. It was contended on behalf of the respondents that there is no provision in Section 520 of the old Code for giving notice to the affected parties and the order of the High Court could not be challenged on the ground and there was no question of a violation of the principle of natural justice. There is no warrant or justification for the argument advanced on behalf of the respondents though it is true that the statute is silent regarding issue of any notice. Even so, there is in the eye of law a necessary implication that the parties adversely affected should be heard before the Court makes an order for return of the seized property. Applying that principle to the present case, the order of the High Court is vitiated in law. The appellant asserted that it has obtained the currency notes in the normal course of its business and without any knowledge or suspicion of their having been involved in the commission of any offence. The respondents do not allege fraud or lack of good faith on the part of the appellant. The order of the High Court is erroneous, the reason being that the property in coins and currency notes passes by mere delivery and it is that clearest exception to the rule Nemo dat quod non habet. In the circumstances the High Court should have directed the return of the said currency notes to the appellant who has the "right to possess" the currency notes within the language of Section 517 of the old Code. State Bank of India v. Rajendra Kumar, AIR 1969 SC 401 : 1969 CrLJ 659 : (1968) 2 SCWR 461 : (1969) 2 SCA 236 : (1968) 1 SCJ 822 : 1969 ALJ 389 : 1969 Jab LJ 479 : 1969 BLJR 388 : 1969 MPLJ 465 : 1969 Mah LJ 527 : 1969 MPWR 358.

[13598] ● Sessions Judge directing District Judge to deliver sale proceeds of subject matter of offence.—Where the Sessions Judge directed the Magistrate by his order that the sale proceeds of the subject-matter of the offence lying in Court deposit be delivered to the accused on his furnishing the bond of the amount covered by the sale proceeds to the satisfaction of the District Magistrate, the Additional District Magistrate could accept the bond and when no particular form was prescribed for the bond, a bond given by the accused in the name of the Government of West Bengal substantially (if not wholly) complied with the order and such a bond could be enforced against the accused without any trouble. Debabrata v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1969 SC 189 : 1969 CrLJ 401 : (1969) 1 SCJ 533 : (1969) 1 SCWR 377.

[13599] ● Property lost or destroyed during pendency of trial—Power of Court to order payment of value of property.—The short point of law that was raised in this appeal was as regards the powers of the Court in indemnifying the owner of the property which is destroyed or lost whilst in the custody of the Court. In this case a large number of ornaments and cash, etc., were stolen from the house of the complainant. The number of stolen articles were recovered from the accused. When they were produced before the Magistrate, he directed the police officer concerned to retain the articles in his custody until the same were verified and their value was determined by a goldsmith. The SI kept the articles in the Guard Room of his police station in a trunk with a list of the articles and a corresponding entry in the concerned register as the Court was waiting to obtain sanction of the necessary funds from the higher authorities for payment of the fees of the goldsmith. When the Court subsequently directed the SI after his return from leave to produce the articles in the Court, the SI opened the trunk and to his utter dismay found that the trunk contained only stones and no articles all of which had disappeared. Before going on leave, the SI found the articles in the trunk intact. The SI immediately filed a complaint of theft of the ornaments. As the accused were not traced, that case was referred. The original charge-sheet in respect of the theft of the articles in the complainant's house ended in conviction of the accused from whom they were recovered. Their appeal to the Sessions Judge was unsuccessful but the High Court acquitted them on technical grounds. After the conclusion of the trial, the complainant filed an application before the trial Magistrate to return the stolen articles or their value. The Magistrate rejected the application on the ground that as the articles did not reach the Court, the complainant was not entitled to their restoration. The Sessions Court as well as the High Court also dismissed his applications. Hence this appeal. A production before the Court did not mean physical custody or possession by the Court but included even control exercised by the Court by passing an order regarding the custody of the articles. In the instant case when once the Magistrate, after having been informed that the articles were produced before the Court, directed the SI to keep them with him in safe custody, to get them verified and valued by a goldsmith, the articles were undoubtedly produced before the Court and became custodia legis. The articles were the subject-matter of an offence of theft. That fact was sufficient to clothe the Magistrate with the power to pass an order for return of the property. Where the property was stolen, lost or destroyed and there was no prima facie defence made out that the State or its officers had taken due case and caution to protect the property, the Magistrate might order payment of the value of the property in an appropriate case where the ends of the justice so required. The view of the High Court that once the articles were not available with the Court, the Court had no power to do anything in the matter and was utterly helpless was not correct. The Court ordered the State to pay the cash equivalent of the property lost to the complainant. Decision of the High Court reported in 1971 CrLJ 566 (Mys) was reversed. Basava v. State of Mysore, AIR 1977 SC 1749 : (1977) 4 SCC 358 : 1977 SCC (Cri)

598 : (1977) 1 SCWR 613 : 1977 CrLJ 1141 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 257 : 1977 SCCrR 391 : (1977) 1 SCWR 613 : (1977) 2 SCJ 289 : 1977 CrAppR (SC) 314 : ILR (1977) 2 Kant 925 : 1977 BBCJ (SC) 168 : 1977 AWC 467 : 1977 ACrR 337 : 1977 ACrC 220 : 1977 Cur LJ (Cri) 162 : 1977 MLJ (Cri) 486.

[13600] ● Seizure of foreign currency.—In a case where the foreign currency seized from the accused was not produced before the Magistrate and was not in the custody or control of the Court, the order of confiscation passed by the Magistrate is liable to be set aside. The Magistrate ordered the goods to be confiscated if not already confiscated and it clearly showed that he was not aware as to what had happened to them which were in the control of the Customs Authority. Remo Paul Altoe v. Union of India, AIR 1977 SC 2255 : (1977) 4 SCC 437 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 629 : 1977 CrLJ 1933 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 482 : 1977 UJ (SC) 730 : 1977 CrAppR (SC) 377.

[13601] ● Release of property seized by Police—Not produced before Court.—A considerable sum of money was recovered by the police from appellant and the money is stated to be seized in connection with an offence registered against an accused person by name Bansi Lal. Whether the appellant himself can be a witness or an accused is not possible to state at that moment according to the counsel for the State. The situation is squarely covered by Section 457, CrPC. However, the Special Judge has to be circumspect in such a situation before releasing the property. The fact that the Court has power to dispose of property in such a situation does not mean that the Court should always release such property to the person from whom the property has been recovered, especially when the stage of the case is in suspicion, the investigation is not over and charge-sheet has not yet been filed. The question of release has to be decided on its own merits in each case and the discretion of the Court has to be exercised after due consideration of the interests of justice including the prospective necessity of the production of those seized articles at the time of trial. If the release of the property seized, will, in any manner, affect or prejudice the course of justice at the time of trial, it will be a wise discretion to reject the claim for return. If the Judge is of the opinion that the property seized is required to be retained with the police in the Court for future use at the time of the inquiry or trial, the property should not be released. If, on the other hand, the property is not needed in any manner in the latter stages of the inquiry or trial, it will be proper for the Court to release the property on the claimant furnishing adequate security. The Special Judge is ordered to dispose of the matter expeditiously. Ram Prakash v. State of Haryana, AIR 1978 SC 1282 : (1978) 2 SCC 491 : 1978 SCC (Cri) 309 : 1978 CrLJ 1120 : 1978 CrLR (SC) 267 : 1978 SCCrR 299 : (1978) 2 SCJ 552 : (1978) 2 SCWR 200 : 1978 CrAppR (SC) 303 : 1978 BBCJ (SC) 84 : 1978 Chand LR (Cri) 179 (SC) : 1978 ACrR 380 : 1978 ACrC 209 : 1978 MLJ (Cri) 655 : 1978 MLW (Cri) 120.

[13602] ● Restoration of possession within reasonable time of disposal of appeal—Reference or revision.—In other words, the appellate or revisional Court acting under Section 456(2) will have jurisdiction or power to pass the order or restoration of possession at any time but it has to be exercised with discretion within a reasonable time of the disposal of the appeal, reference or revision. H.P. Gupta v. Manohar Lal, AIR 1979 SC 433 : (1979) 2 SCC 486 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 530 : 1979 CrLJ 199 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 5 : (1979) 1 SCWR 71 : (1979) 1 SCJ 383 : (1979) 1 SCCrR 127 : 1979 UJ (SC) 100 : 1978 ACrC 427 : 1979 CrAppR (SC) 52 : 1979 CrAppR (SC) 52 : 1979 MLW (Cri) 79 : 1979 MLJ (Cri) 322 : (1979) 3 Mah LR 110 : 1979 Chand LR (Cri) (SC) 158.

[13603] ● Disposal of property—Discretion as to.—In disposal of property discretion given to the Court under the section is inherently a judicial function. The choice of the mode or manner of disposal is not to be made arbitrarily, but judicially in accordance with sound principles founded on reason and justice, keeping in view the class and nature of the property and the material before it. One of such well-recognised principles is that when after an inquiry or trial the accused is discharged or acquitted, the Court should normally restore the property of class (a) (which is produced before the Court) or (b) (which is in the custody of the Court) to the person from whose custody it was taken. Departure from this salutary rule of practice is not to be lightly made, when there is no dispute or doubt—as in the instant case—that the property in question was seized from the custody of such accused and belonged to him. The accused was acquitted of the offence of murder on the ground that this gun was used in causing the fatal injury to the deceased, only in self-defence, which necessarily involved a finding that the gun was not used in the commission of any offence for which the accused was tried. In the circumstances the impugned order of confiscation of the gun being arbitrary and unjust, cannot be sustained. N. Mahadavan v. State of Kerala, AIR 1979 SC 1829 : (1979) 4 SCC 1 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 883 : 1979 CrLJ 1197 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 606 : 1979 UJ (SC) 793 : 1979 CrAppR (SC) 291 : 1979 ACrR 432.

[13604] ● Disposal of property—Magistrate entrusting seized property to Official Receiver.— The Magistrate entrusted three buses to the custody of an interim receiver in a case of theft. That receiver was succeeded by another Official Receiver. The appellant obtained a decree of civil Court declaring him to be entitled to the buses. The appellant approached the Magistrate for release and delivery of his vehicles. Both the receivers pleaded they were not liable to restore possession of the vehicles. The Magistrate made an order to that effect which was confirmed by the High Court. The appellant then filed another petition for delivery of the vehicles, one claiming to have handed over possession to his successor and latter pleading that he was never given possession. The appellant's counsel was unable to give information about the whereabouts of the vehicles. The Magistrate dismissed the application referring the appellant to a civil Court. The Sessions Judge and High Court confirmed the said order. On appeal the Supreme Court held that the Magistrate could not simply shrug his shoulders and direct the appellant to go to a civil Court. In such situation it was the duty of the Court to probe into the matter, make a full enquiry and trace the whereabouts of the buses. If they could not be so traced or delivered to the owner for any reason, the Court should direct the culpable party to pay the value of the vehicles to the appellant. Act of Court harms no one. Matter was remitted to the Magistrate to dispose of the same in accordance with law after making full enquiry as suggested above. Orders of the subordinate Courts were set aside. Inter Continental Agencies v. Amin Chand, AIR 1980 SC 951 : (1980) 3 SCC 103 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 544 : 1980 CrLJ 689 : 1980 CrLR (SC) 175 : 1980 SC CrR 266 : (1980) 2 SCJ 152 : 1980 JU (SC) 303 : 1980 CrAppR (SC) 188 : 1980 MLJ (Cri) 583 : 1980 ACrR 275 : 1980 Sim LC 277.

[13605] ● Confiscation of property for being in possession disproportionate to known source of income.—None of the provisions of the Prevention of Corruption Act provides for confiscation or prescribe the mode by which an order of confiscation may be passed. The Prevention of Corruption Act being totally silent on the question of confiscation, the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure would apply in their full force, with the result that the Court trying an offence under the Prevention of Corruption Act would have the power to pass an order of confiscation by reason of the provisions contained in Section 452 of the CrPC. The order of confiscation cannot, therefore, be held to be without jurisdiction. If a person is convicted for taking a bribe under the Prevention of Corruption Act, forms and the money which from the subject-matter of the bribe belongs to him, no order of confiscation of that amount can be passed. A person who is found guilty of accepting the bribe is not only liable to be convicted and sentenced for the offence of bribery but the amount which he has taken by way of bribe is liable to be confiscated by reason of the powers of confiscation conferred by Section 452 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to the extent that the said provisions apply. The appellant has been convicted under Section 5(1)(e) precisely for the reason that he was in possession of the two receipts and the aforesaid cash sum. It cannot then be said that the order of confiscation in regard to these amounts has not been properly passed or has been passed without any application of mind. Mirza Iqbal Hussain v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1983 SC 60 : (1982) 3 SCC 516 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 111 : 1983 CrLJ 154 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 515 : 1983 JU (SC) 41.

[13606] ● Magistrate imposing fine and also directing non-applicant to vacate premises.—In this case under Section 448, IPC, the Magistrate while convicting the present appellant and sentencing her to pay a fine of Rs. 100/- also passed an order directing her to vacate the premises within two months of the passing of the order, purporting to be one under Section 456, CrPC. Aggrieved by the said order, the appellant went up in appeal and the Sessions Judge set aside the said order and acquitted her. Against that order, the complainant preferred an appeal to the High Court against the acquittal. The High Court allowed the same holding that no appeal lay to the Sessions Judge. The present appellant feeling aggrieved by the judgment of the High Court filed the present appeal with special leave. The conviction of the appellant is incorrect as no offence under Section 448, IPC has been made out. The part of the order of the Magistrate presumably passed under Section 456, CrPC, made the order appealable and the High Court has gone wrong in holding that appeal filed by the appellant before the Sessions Judge is not maintainable. The appeal is accordingly allowed and the judgment of the High Court is set aside and that of the Court of Session restored. Kanwal Sood v. Nawal Kishore, AIR 1983 SC 159 : (1983) 2 SCC 25.

[13607] ● Sentence of fine.—With great respect to the Supreme Court Judge, it has to be pointed out that no appeal lay against the judgment of a Magistrate of the 1st class if the punishment awarded by him was only one of a fine of Rs. 100/- as in the above case. Even if an order under Section 456, CrPC, was passed alongwith the said sentence of fine, the judgment would not become appealable. Hence the observations of the High Court were correct while those of the Supreme Court are not correct. However, an appeal lies under Section 456(3) independently of the conviction for the offence being appealable or otherwise. The Supreme Court is perfectly justified in setting aside the order of the Magistrate purporting to be passed under Section 456, CrPC though the reasoning given, with due respect, is not correct.] Kanwal Sood v. Nawal Kishore, AIR 1983 SC 159 : (1983) 2 SCC 25 : 1983 SCC (Cri) 555 : 1983 CrLJ 173 : 1983 ALJ 814 : 1983 CrLR (SC) 16 : (1983) 1 East LR 13 : 1983 UJ (SC) 118 : 1983 AWC 123 : (1983) 1 Chand LR (CrI) 135 : 1983 ACIR 73 : 1983 CrAppR (SC) 14 : 1983 Chand CrC (SC) 8 : (1983) 1 Crimes 244 : (1983) 1 SCWR 262 : 1983 SCCrR 196 : (1983) 2 Cr LC 75 : (1983) 1 SCR 871.

[13608] ● Confiscation proceeding under Section 44(1A) of A.P. Forest Act.—Where any property is produced by an officer before a Criminal Court in an inquiry or trial, the Court may, under Section 451, CrPC, 1973 make any direction, as it thinks fit, for the proper custody of such property pending the conclusion of the inquiry or trial. At the conclusion of the inquiry or trial, the Court may also under Section 452 of the Code make an order for the disposal of the property produced before it and make such other directions as it may think necessary. Where the property is not produced before a criminal Court in an inquiry or trial, the Magistrate is empowered under Section 459 of the Code to make such order as he thinks fit respecting the disposal of the property. The general provision of Section 452 of the CrPC with regard to disposal of property by a criminal Court such as by destruction, confiscation or delivery to any person claiming to be entitled to possession thereof, and that of Section 457 investing a Magistrate to make an order for disposal of property seized by a Police Officer and not produced before a Criminal Court during an inquiry or trial, must necessarily yield where a statute makes a special provision with regard to forfeiture of any property and its disposal. In the instant case, admittedly, the illicitly felled teak trees seized by the Forest Range Officer, Adilabad were produced by him before the Divisional Forest Officer, Hyderabad who is the Authorised Officer under sub-s. (2-A) of Section 44 of the A.P. Forest Act, 1967, alongwith a report by him under sub-s. (2) thereof that he had reason to believe that a forest offence had been committed by the respondents. Merely because the Forest Range Officer also latter lodged a complaint before the learned Metropolitan Magistrate for trial of the respondents for commission of offences under Sections 20(1)(c)(iv) and (x) and 20(1)(d) read with Section 29(4)(a)(ii) of the Act, did not imply that the Authorised Officer was bereft of his power and authority to direct confiscation of the seized timber and the implements, etc. under sub-s. (2-A) of Section 44 of the Act if he was satisfied that a forest offence had been committed. Divisional Forest Officer v. *G.V. [13609] ● Power and authority of—Authorised officer to direct confiscation of seized— Timber.—Merely because the Forest Range Officer, also latter lodged a complaint before the, Metropolitan Magistrate for trial of the respondents for commission of offences under Section 20(1)(c)(iv) and (x) and 20(1)(d) read with Section 29(4)(a)(ii) of the Act, did not imply that the authorised officer was bereft of his power and authority to direct confiscation of the seized timber and the implements etc. under sub-section (2-A) of Section 44 of the Act if he was satisfied that a forest offence has been committed. Divisional Forest Officer v. G.V. Sudhakar Rao, AIR 1986 SC 328 : (1985) 4 SCC 573 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 34 (44) : 1986 CrLJ 357 : (1986) 1 Crimes 313.

[13610] ● Disposal of seized property—Properties ordered to be taken possession of in insolvency proceedings.—In these special leave petitions it is contended that the High Court exceeded its powers under Section 451, CrPC in passing an order for the handing over of the negatives of the film to M.C. Punnose of M/s. Navadoya instead of the Sajan K. Varghese or M/s. Super Film. It is no doubt true that the semi-processed films and the negatives were seized by the police during the investigation of the criminal case registered against Sajan K. Varghese. However, it has to be noted that the semi-processed films and the negatives are not themselves items of properties regarding which offences were committed. On the other hand, the gravamen of the accusation made against Sajan K. Varghese is that he had induced thousands of investors to deposit crores of rupees in the Finance Company on the assurance that he would pay them high rates of interest and thereafter defrauded them and secondly he had committed breach of trust by utilising the deposit amount for the production of the film in question. That apart, this is not a case where the creditors have stopped with preferring a report to the police of the commission of offences by Sajan K. Varghese. About 3,500 creditors have formed themselves into an association and filed an insolvency petition and in that the unfinished film has been shown as an item of asset of the respondents to be secured by the Insolvency Court. That Court has appointed an interim receiver and ordered him to take possession of the assets of Sajan K. Varghese and the Finance Company. Consequently, by reason of the insolvency proceedings which are pending, the unprocessed films and negatives cannot be strictly said to be properties over which an order of disposal could be made out under Section 451 of the Code. Sajan K. Varghese v. State of Kerala, AIR 1989 SC 1058 : (1989) 2 SCC 208 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 339 : 1989 CrLJ 897 : (1989) 2 Crimes 305.

[13611] ● Seizure of sandalwood by appellant—Writ petition.—The High Court committed error in adjudicating the question, whether the sandalwood was legally or illegally seized or was not in wrongful possession or whether the seized sandalwood is or is not the subject-matter of criminal cases. There did not exist any evidence on record to decide or conclude any such above findings. As this Court has observed the High Court committed error in going into the questions and recording findings which it should not have done in exercise of its power under Art. 226 of the Constitution of India. Not only High Court had decided disputed questions of fact but through its order has taken the property outside the reach of the Criminal Court. Accordingly, the said impugned orders are unsustainable in law. In fact the proper course open to the respondent was to move the Criminal Court under Section 451 of the CrPC in respect of the custody of the seized sandalwood. Admitted position is, the seized goods have been produced before the Criminal Court concerned, then for the custody of the same Section 451 of the CrPC is the proper course. This section empowers the Criminal Court to order for custody and disposal of property pending trial. Even if there be a dispute, as in the present case, whether the seized goods is the property in the pending criminal case, it is that Criminal Court alone which would be competent to adjudicate and decide the issue but not the High Court under its writ jurisdiction. In view of this, the High Court committed error in issuing the writ and granting the said relief to the respondent. Accordingly, the order of the learned Single Judge and the impugned judgment in writ appeal are hereby quashed. S.P. Forest Cell v. Kannans Co., (2001) 9 SCC 209 : 2002 SCC (Cri) 789 (790) : JT 2000 (10) SC 302 : (2000) 7 Supreme 696 : (2000) 7 SLT 453.

[13612] ● Disposal of property pending trial.—Whatever be the situation, it is of no use to keep seized valuable articles, vehicles, narcotic drugs liquor at the police stations for a long period. It is for the Magistrate to pass appropriate orders immediately by taking appropriate bond and guarantee as well as security for return of the said vehicle, if required at any point of time. This can be done pending hearing of applications for return of such vehicles. In case where the vehicle is not claimed by the accused, owner, or the insurance company or by third person, then such vehicle may be ordered to be auctioned by the Court. If the said vehicle is insured with the insurance company then insurance company be informed by the Court to take possession of the vehicle which is not claimed by the owner or a third person. If insurance company fails to take possession the vehicles may be sold as per the direction of the Court. The Court would pass such order within a period of six months from the date of production of the said vehicle before the Court. In any case, before handing over possession of such vehicles, appropriate photographs of the said vehicle should be taken and detailed panchanama should be prepared. For articles such as seized liquor also, prompt action should be taken in disposing it of after preparing necessary panchnama. If sample is required to be taken, sample may kept properly after sending it to the chemical analyser, if required. But in no case, large quantity of liquor should be stored at the police station. No purpose is served by such storing. Similarly for the Narcotic drugs also, for its identification, procedure under section 451, CrPC should be followed of recording evidence and disposal. Its identity could be on the basis of evidence recorded by the Magistrate. Samples also should be sent immediately to the Chemical Analyser to that subsequently, a contention may not be raised that the article which was seized was not the same. However these powers are to be exercised by the concerned Magistrate. We hope and trust that the concerned Magistrate would take immediate action for seeing that powers under Section 451, CrPC are properly and promptly exercised and articles are not kept for a long time at the police station, in any case for not more than fifteen days to one month. This object can also be achieved if there is proper supervision by the Registry of the concerned High Court in seeing that the rules framed by the High Court with regard to such articles are implemented properly. Sunderbhai Ambalal Desai v. State of Gujarat, AIR 2003 SC 638 : (2002) 10 SCC 283 : 2003 SCC (Cri) 1943 : JT 2002 (10) SC 80.

[13613] ● Release of vehicle on certain conditions.—Indisputably, in the Registration Certificate the name of the financier has been indicated and the factum that the vehicle was subject to such an agreement was also noted. In the agreement, appellant is described as owner, but respondent No. 2 as hirer. It is noticed that respondent No. 2 had applied for release of vehicle and High Court had directed for, but those condition have not been fulfilled and vehicle lying with seizure authorities for nearly eight years now. In view of said factual position, direction for release of vehicle in favour of appellant subject to fulfillment of conditions stipulated for respondent No. 2 was issued. Bharath Metha v. State, AIR 2008 SC 1970 : (2008) 5 SCC 752 : 2008 (3) SCC (Cri) 72 : 2008 CrLJ 2245 : 2008 (5) SCR 478 : 2008 (4) Scale 186 : 2008 (2) Supreme 596 : 2008 (2) Crimes 105 (SC).

[13614] ● Disposal of property during trial.—"Looking to the facts of the case and the controversy involved, we in the interest of both the parties order that the peddy/rice presently lying in the Court custody at Guruharsahai, District Firozpur shall be put to public auction. Additional Chief Judicial Magistrate, Firozpur shall conduct the public auction with the help of the Collector of the District or any other officer authorised by the Collector, after giving due publicity to the prospective auction purchasers as per the procedure adopted by the concerned Executive Officer. The sale proceeds received from such auction, initially shall be paid to the appellant-M/s Satnam Agro Industries subject to the condition that the appellant-Firm shall furnish bank guarantee for the said amount before the Additional Chief Judicial Magistrate, Firozpur. The process of auction shall be finalised within six weeks from this order. All rights and contentions raised by the parties before us are left for the decision of the appropriate authority in appropriate proceedings. We hope that the civil suit and the criminal proceedings pending in the respective Courts shall be expeditiously decided.

"The Criminal Appeals are accordingly disposed of". Satnam Agro Industries v. State of Punjab, AIR 2009 SC 249 : (2008) 15 SCC 784 : 2009 CrLJ 387 : 2008 (13) Scale 371 : 2008 (4) Crimes 243 (SC).

[13615] ● Release of vehicle seized by Abkari Officer under Kerala Abkari Act, 1967—Conditions.—"Section 67E of the Act deals with the appeal in respect of an order passed under Section 67B of the Act while Section 67F refers to the power of revision in respect of an order under Sections 67B and 67E and can be exercised on his own motion by the Commissioner Admittedly, the statutory remedies have not been availed. The High Court ought not to have interfered in a matter when statutory remedies are provided. In the instant case it is submitted by the respondent that pursuant to the High Court's order dated 26th October, 2006 the vehicle has been released.

However, the direction for release or executing a bond seems to be without any justification when Assistant Excise Commissioner had directed furnishing of the bank guarantee equal to the value of the vehicle. The High Court had not indicated any reason as to why that part of the order was interfered with.

We dispose of the appeal with the direction that in addition to the personal bond executed for securing release of the vehicle, the respondent shall within a period of six weeks from today furnish bank guarantee for the sum of Rs. 25,000/- in the satisfaction of the Assistant Excise Commissioner concerned. If the bank guarantee is not furnished, the concerned official shall be free to cancel the bond and to take possession of the vehicle in question". State of Kerala v. C.A. Jabbar, (2009) 15 SCC 92 : 2009 (7) SCR 300 : JT 2009 (14) SC 81.

[13616] ● Interim custody of vehicle.—It is not in dispute that the appellant on the basis of loan advanced by the bank had purchased the truck and was the registered owner. Respondent 2 and his wife were merely guarantors. The truck was seized by the police for the alleged offence under the provisions of the Motor Vehicles Act; The dispute concerning civil liability of the registered owner towards the loan obtained from the bank on guarantee bank bond furnished jointly by Respondent 2 and his wife was wholly irrelevant in the criminal case pending for trial before the Magistrate for alleged offence under the provisions, if any. The impugned order of the Sessions Court and of the High Court confirming the same by order to the extent of imposing condition on the appellant to get the guarantors exonerated towards loan obtained from the bank on the vehicle was set aside and it was directed that the seized truck in question be released to the appellant registered owner on his furnishing security in the sum of Rs. four lakhs to the satisfaction of the trial Magistrate. Ramesh Chand Jain v. State of Haryana, (2007) 15 SCC 126.

[13617] ● Legality of search and seizure of truck carrying goats and sheep by place—State Government directed to take appropriate departmental action.—In the order passed by the learned Additional Chief Judicial Magistrate no officer has been named at all. Whether search and seizure of the goats and sheep is illegal or not can be effectively gone into only at the stage of final disposal of the trial and not at interim stage when the Court hears an application under Section 451 read with Section 457 of the Code of criminal Procedure, 1973 for interim custody of the muddammal. Direction to the State Government to initiate appropriate departmental action for illegal or unauthorized actions at the interim stage is harsh as well as not called for on the facts of the case. Therefore, the said direction, which is contained in Clause (5) of paragraph 14 of the impugned judgment, also deserves to be set aside. Bharat Amratlal Kothari v. Dosukhan Samadkhan Sindhi, AIR 2010 SC 475 : (2010) 1 SCC 234 : (2009) (15) SCR) 662 : JT 2009 (14) 102 : 2009 (8) Supreme 385 : 2010 (1) Crimes 38.

[13618] ● Interim custody of goats and sheep.—Undisputably, respondents Nos. 1 to 6 are owners of the goats and sheep seized. Admittedly the respondent Nos. 1 to 6 by vocation trade in goats and sheep. Probably a period of more that one and half years has elapsed by this time and by production of goats and sheep seized before the Court, the prosecution cannot prove that they were subjected to cruelty by the accused because no marks of cruelty would be found by this time. The trade in which respondent Nos. 1 to 6 are engaged, is not prohibited by any law. On the facts and in the circumstances of the case this Court is of the opinion that respondent: Nos. 1 to 6 would be entitled to interim custody of goats and sheep seized in the case during the pendency of the trial, of course, subject to certain conditions. Bharat Amratlal Kothari v. Dosukhan Samadkhan Sindhe, AIR 2010 SC 475 : (2010) 1 SCC 234 : 2010 (1) Crimes 38 (SC) : 2009 (1) SCR 662.

DISPROPORTIONATE ASSETS

[13619] ● Disproportionate assets.—During the course of gathering of the material, it does happen that the officer concerned or other person may be questioned or other queries made. For the formation of a prima facie opinion that an officer may be guilty of criminal misconduct leading to the filing of the first information report, there is no provision in law or otherwise which makes it obligatory of an opportunity of being heard to be given to a person against whom the report is to be lodged. That such satisfactory account had to be rendered before a Court is also borne out from the judgment of this Court in Veeraswamis' case ((1991) 3 SCC 655) where referring to Section 5(1)(e) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1974 at page 713 of the said judgment. It was observed as follows :

Clause (e) creates a statutory offence which must be proved by the prosecution. It is for the prosecution to prove that the accused or any person on his behalf has been in possession of pecuniary resources or property disproportionate to his known sources of income. When teat onus is discharged by the prosecution, it is for the accused to account satisfactorily for the disproportionality of the properties possessed by him. The Section makes available statutory defence which must be proved by the accused. It is a restricted defence that is accorded to the accused to account for the disproportionality of the assets over the income. But the legal burden of proof placed on the accused is not so onerous as that of the prosecution. However, it is just not throwing some doubt on the prosecution version. The legislature has advisedly used the expression "satisfactorily account". The emphasis must be on the word "satisfactorily". That means the accused has to satisfy the Court that his explanation is worthy of acceptance. The burden of proof placed on the accused is an evidential burden though not a persuasive burden. The accused, however, could discharge that burden of proof "on the balance of probabilities" either from the evidence of the prosecution and/or evidence from the defence." State of Maharashtra v. Ishwar Piraji Kalpatri, AIR 1996 SC 722 : 1996 SCC (Cri) 150 : 1996 CrLJ 1127 : 1995 (4) Crimes 769.

DISPUTE AS TO IMMOVABLE PROPERTY (Ss. 145, 146, CrPC, 1973)

[13620] ● Dispute as to immovable property.—Section 145 of the Code limits the jurisdiction of a Magistrate only to one question, namely, whether a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists concerning any land, and then for the purpose of preventing any such breach, to issue an order that the party in possession of the land at the date of the order shall retain that possession undisturbed until ejected therefrom under any order of a civil Court. Therefore, the Magistrate has first to determine the question as to which of the disputing parties was in possession of the land in question at the date of the preliminary order under Section 145(1) requiring the parties to produce their evidence regarding such possession. The combined effect of the various sub-sections of Section 145 is that the Magistrate has to determine who actually was in possession of the land in dispute and to pass orders which help the person proved to have been in possession to retain his possession by forbidding all disturbances of such possession. Bhinka v. Charan Singh, AIR

1959 SC 960 : 1959 CrLJ 1223 : 1959 ALJ 557 : 1959 AWR (HC) 440 : 1959 ACrR 337.

[13621] ● No power of Magistrate under Section 145, CrPC to direct possession of land.—The Magistrate has no power under Section 145 to direct any party in actual possession of land to deliver its possession to anyone who was not in possession of it at the date of the preliminary order under Section 145(1) or to authories anyone not in possession to take such possession. In other words, no one can claim that he was given possession or that he took possession by virtue of an order under Section 145. Bhinka v. Charan Singh, AIR 1959 SC 960 : 1959 CrLJ 1223 : 1959 ALJ 557 : 1959 AWR (HC) 440.

[13622] ● Legal effect of order made by Magistrate under Section 145(6), CrPC.—The legal effect of an order made by a Magistrate under Section 145(6) of the Code is as under. The order declares only which party was in fact in possession at the date of the preliminary order under sub-section (1) and then declares that party to be entitled to retain that possession undistrubed until he is ejected in due course of law. The Magistrate has no jurisdiction to decide a party's title or right to possession, and the question of title to possession is expressly reserved to be decided by a civil Court. The foundation of jurisdiction under Section 145 being only an apprehension of a breach of peace, the power conferred on the Magistrate is a limited one, namely, to make a temporary order regarding retention of possession on the basis of proved prior possession, irrespective of legal rights and titles to possession. The life of the order is co-terminus with the passing of a decree of a civil Court, and the moment a civil Court makes an order in relation to that property, that order displaces the order made under Section 145. Bhinka v. Charan Singh, AIR 1959 SC 960 : 1959 CrLJ 1223 : 1959 ALJ 557 : 1959 AWR (HC) 440 : 1959 ACrR 337.

[13623] ● Order of Magistrate under Section 145, CrPC provisional Police order.—The order of a Magistrate under Section 145 is merely a provisional police order based upon the fact of previous possession. It is made only for the purpose of preventing a breach of the peace, and being made irrespective of the rights of the parties, it cannot enable the person in whose favour it is made to resist a suit based on title. Bhinka v. Charan Singh, AIR 1959 SC 960 : 1959 CrLJ 1223 : 1959 ALJ 557 : 1959 AWR (HC) 440 : 1959 ACrR 337.

[13624] ● Final order under Section 145, CrPC not effect rights of parties.—A final order under this section does not in any manner effect the rights of the parties. Bhinka v. Charan Singh, AIR 1959 SC 960 : 1959 CrLJ 1223 : 1959 Supp (2) SCR 789 : 1960 SCJ 892.

[13625] ● Principle of res judicata—Applicability.—The principle of res judicata applies also as between two stages in the same litigation to this extent that a Court whether the trial Court or a High Court having at an earlier stage decided a matter in one way will not allow the parties to reagitate the matter again at a subsequent stage of the same proceedings. Satyadhyan Ghosal v. Deorajin Debi, AIR 1960 SC 941 (943) : (1960) 3 SCR 590 : (1962) 1 SCJ 268.

[13626] ● Property in custodia legis.—The property being in custodia legis no party is under any obligation to bring a suit for recovery of possession. Deo Kuer, AIR 1966 SC 359 : (1965) 3 SCR 655.

[13627] ● Magistrate to arrive at his satisfaction both from Police report or from other information.—The language of Section 145(1) of the Code is clear and unambiguous that the Magistrate can arrive at his satisfaction both from the police report or "from other information" which must include an application by the party dispossessed. The High Court would not go into the sufficiency or otherwise of the material which has satisfied the Magistrate. The proposition that the Magistrate before proceeding under Section 145(1) must, as a rule, call for a police report where he is moved by a private party or that the absence of a police report is a sure indication of the absence of possibility of breach of peace, is not warranted by the clear language of section. Once the Magistrate, having examined the applicant on oath, is satisfied that his application disclosed the existence of the dispute and the likelihood of breach of peace, there is no bar against his acting under Section 145(1) of the Code. R.H. Bhutani v. Mani J. Desai, AIR 1968 SC 1444 : 1969 CrLJ 13 : (1969) 1 SCJ 510 : (1968) 2 SCWR 637 : 1968 SCD 1135 : (1969) 1 SCA 90 : 1970 Mah LJ 148 : 1970 MP LJ 137 : 1969 KLJ 932 : 1969 MLJ (Cri) 321 : 1969 AWR (HC) 59 : 1969 ACrR 49 : 71 Bom LR 83 : 1968 Cur LJ 980 : (1968) 2 UmnP 763.

[13628] ● Magistrate not barred from deciding question of actual possession.—Proviso to subsection (4) merely recites the circumstances under which a presumption of possession may be made in favour of the dispossessed party and a Magistrate is not barred from deciding the question of actual possession on other grounds also. R.H.

Bhutani v. Mani, AIR 1968 SC 1444 : 1969 CrLJ 13(1969) 1 SCR 80 : 1968 CAR 222.

[13629] ● Use of word "then" at beginning of sub-section (4) of Section 145, CrPC.—The use of the word "then" at the beginning of sub-section (4) indicates that the question of determination of the factum of possession under sub-section (4) arises only after the requirements of sub-sections (1) and (3) have been complied with. The section contemplates a determination of the question of possession without reference to the merits of the respective Claims of the disputing parties to a right to possess the subject of the dispute. R.H. Bhutani v. Mani J. Desai, AIR 1968 SC 1444 : (1969) 1 SCR 80 : 1968 CAR 222.

[13630] ● Party if dispossessed within two months of date of Police report.—If a party is found to have been dispossessed within two months of the date of receipt of the police report or other information on the basis of which proceedings were started under this section, the Magistrate may treat such party to be in possession on such date restore possession to him and prohibit the dispossessor from interfering with the possession until eviction of that person in due course of law. R.H. Bhutani v. Mani, AIR 1968 SC 1444 : 1969 CrLJ 13 (14) : (1969) 1 SCR 80 : 1968 CAR 222. TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) R.C. Patuck v. Fatima A. Kundasa, 1997 CrLJ 2576 (SC).

[13631] ● Revisional Court not to go into question of sufficiency of material.—The revisional Court in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction would not go into the question of sufficiency of material which has satisfied the Magistrate. R.H. Bhutani v. Mani, AIR 1968 SC 1444 : 1969 CrLJ 13 : (1968) 71 Bom LR 83 (SC) : (1969) 1 SCR 80 : 1968 CAR 222.

[13632] ● Magistrate to decide first who is in actual possession.—The Magistrate has first to decide who is in actual possession at the date of his preliminary order, if, however, the party in de facto possession is found to have obtained possession by forcibly and wrongfully dispossessing the other party within two months next preceding the date of his order, the Magistrate can treat the dispossessed party as if he was in possession on such date, restore possession to him and prohibit the dispossessor from interfering with that possession until eviction of that person in due course of law. The proviso is founded on the principle that forcible and wrongful dispossession is not to be recognised under the criminal law, so that it is not possible to say that such an act of dispossession was completed before the date of the order. The word "dispossessed" in the second proviso (old Code) means to be out of possession, removed from the premises, ousted, ejected or excluded. Even where a person has a right to possession but taking the law into his hands makes a forcible entry otherwise then in due course of law, it would be a case of both forcible and wrongful dispossession. The second proviso to sub-section (4) and sub-section (6) contemplate not a fugitive act of trespass or interference with the possession of the applicant, the dispossession there referred to is one that amounts to a completed act of forcible and wrongful driving out a party from his possession. The fact that dispossession of the applicant was a completed act and the applicant had filed a criminal complaint and the police had taken action thereunder do not mean that the Magistrate could not proceed under Section 145 and give directions permissible under sub-section (6). R.H. Bhutani v. Mani J. Desai, AIR 1968 SC 1444 : 1969 CrLJ 13 : (1969) 1 SCJ 510 : (1968) 2 SCWR 637 : 1968 SCD 1135 : (1969) 1 SCA 90 : 1970 Mah LJ 148 : 1970 MP LJ 137 : 1969 KLJ 932 : (1969 MLJ (Cri) 321 : 1969 AWR (HC) 59 : 1969 ACrR 49 : 71 Bom LR 83 : 1968 Cur LJ 980 : (1968) 2 UmNP 763.

[13633] ● Continuation of apprehension of breach of peace not necessary for final order.—Continuation of apprehension of breach of the peace is not necessary for final order. R.H. Bhutani v. Mani J. Desai, AIR 1968 SC 1444 : (1969) 1 SCR 80 : 1968 CAR 222.

[13634] ● Discretion of Magistrate sound judicial discretion.—The discretion of the Magistrate must be a sound judicial discretion. R.H. Bhutani v. Mani, AIR 1968 SC 1444 : (1969) 1 SCR 80 : 1968 CAR 222.

[13635] ● Magistrate to base his action on statement of complainant on oath.—The Magistrate can base his action on the statements of the complainant on oath in the application. R.H. Bhutani v. Mani J. Desai, AIR 1968 SC 1444 : 1969 CrLJ 13 : (1969) 1 SCR 80 : 1968 CAR 222.

[13636] ● Initiation of proceedings—Conditions.—All that the section requires is that the Magistrate must be satisfied before initiating the proceedings tnat a dispute regarding an immovable property exists and that such dispute is likely to cause breach of the peace. Once he is satisfied in respect of these two conditions, he had to pass the preliminary order under sub-section (1) and thereafter to make an enquiry under sub-section (4) and pass a final order under sub-section (6). A view has been taken that it is not necessary that at the time of passing the final order, the apprehension of breach of the peace should continue or should have continued to exist. R.H. Bhutani v. Mani J. Desai, AIR 1968 SC 1444 : (1969) 1 SCR 80 : 1968 CAR 222.

[13637] ● Power of High Court under Article 227 of Constitution.—The power of High Court under Art. 227, Constitution of India cannot be contained under Section 146, CrPC. Chandrasekhar Singh v. Siya Ram Singh, AIR 1977 SC 1 : (1976) 4 SCC 691 : 1977 CrLJ 13 (17) : (1977) 2 SCR 1 : 1976 UJ 960.

[13638] ● Undertaking to handover possession if suits dismissed.—When a party to proceedings under this section gives an undertaking that they would handover possession if their suits are dismissed to Nazir who in turn shall handover it to the opposite party, the proceedings under Section 145, CrPC shall be treated as closed on disposal of civil suit. Jala Bano v. State of J&K, AIR 1977 SC 2220 : (1977) 4 SC 607 (3) : 1977 SCC (Cri) 672 (1) : 1977 CrLJ 1919.

[13639] ● Affidavits sworn or affirmed before Magistrate not of formal character.—Affidavits under Section 145 is not of formal character because it is means to prove or disprove the competing claims of the parties as respects the fact of actual possession of the subject of dispute. There is thus no provision in the Code specifying the Courts or persons before whom the affidavits referred to in this section has to be sworn and affirmed. This has 'therefore' to be done according to the general provisions relating to affidavits. Chhotan Prasad v. Hari Dusadh, AIR 1977 SC 407 : (1977) 1 SCC 102 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 35 : 1977 CrLJ 249 : 1977 UJ 46.

[13640] ● Affidavits sworn or affirmed before Magistrate not in seisin of case.—Affidavits sworn or affirmed before Magistrates not in seisin of the case under Section 145, CrPC are inadmissible and cannot be read in evidence. Chhotan Prasad v. Hari Dusadh, AIR 1977 SC 407 : (1977) 1 SCC 102 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 35 : 1977 CrLJ 249 : 1977 UJ 46.

[13641] ● Affidavits under Section 145, CrPC evidence for purposes of proceedings before Magistrate.—Affidavits contemplated under Section 145, CrPC are evidence for the purpose of proceedings before the Magistrate concerned even though the Evidence Act does not apply to them. Chhotan Prasad v. Hari Dusadh, AIR 1977 SC 407 : (1977) 1 SCC 102 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 35 : 1977 CrLJ 249 : 1977 UJ 46.

[13642] ● Proceeding under Section 145, CrPC—Bar of Section 8 of Maharashtra Vacant Lands (Prohibition of Unauthorised Occupational Summary Eviction) Act not attracted.—Maharashtra Vacant Lands (Prohibition of Unauthorised Occupation and Summary Eviction) Act, 1975, Section 8.—In the context of the Act, the bar in Section 8 is not attracted to any suit or proceedings in respect of the eviction of any person from any vacant land started in relation to a dispute of possession between two private persons. It is attracted if the suit or proceeding concerns the eviction of any person if he is in unauthorised occupation of any vacant land by the Competent Authority. In substance and in effect a proceeding under Section 145 of the Code is not for the purpose of evicting any person from any land but is primarily concerned with the prevention of the breach of the peace by declaring the party found in possession to be entitled to remain in possession until evicted therefrom in due course of law. Therefore, the proceeding pending under Section 145, CrPC, does not abate on account of the bar in Section 8 of the Act and it has to be disposed of by the Magistrate in accordance with the provisions of law contained in Sections 145 and 146 of the Code. Chandu Naik v. Sitaram B. Naik, AIR 1978 SC 333 : (1978) 1 SCC 210 : 1978 SCC (Cri) 100 : 1978 CrLJ 356 : 1978 CrLR (SC) 30 : 1978 SCCrR 60 : (1978) 2 SCR 353 : 1978 UJ (SC) 27 : 1978 CrAppR (SC) 33 : 1978 Chand LR (Cri) 188 (SC) : 1978 MLJ (Cri) 126 : 1978 Sim LC 217.

[13643] ● Jurisdiction of Magistrate not ends with attachment.—Sections 145 & 146 together constitute a scheme for the resolution of a situation where there is a likelihood of a breach of the peace because of a dispute concerning any land or water or their boundaries. If Section 146 is torn out of its setting and read independently of Section 145, it is capable of being construed to mean that once an attachment is effected in any of the three situations mentioned therein, the dispute can only be resolved by a competent Court and not by the Magistrate effecting the attachment.

Except for the reason that there is no dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace and as provided by Section 145(5), a proceeding initiated by a preliminary order under Section 145(1) must run its full course. There is no express stipulation in Section 146 that the jurisdiction of the Magistrate ends with the attachment. Nor is it implied. The Magistrate need not wait for determination of rights of parties by a competent Court as per the procedure introduced by the 1955 amendment but should proceed to determine as to which of the parties was in possession on the date of the preliminary order as provided in Section 145(6) and withdraw the attachment as provided in Section 146(1) since there can be no dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace once an order in terms of Section 145(6) is made. Mathuralal v. Banwarlal, AIR 1980 SC 242 : (1979) 4 SCC 665 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 9 : 1980 CrLJ 1 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 673 : 1979 All CrC 325 : 1979 CrAppR (SC) 367 : 1980 Chand CrC 6 (SC) : 1980 Rajdhani LR 238 : (1980) 1 SCR 620 : (1980) 1 SCJ 521 : 1980 MLJ (Cri) 454.

[13644] ● Existence of breach of peace not necessary when final order passed.—Once a preliminary order was drawn up by the Magistrate setting out the reasons for holding that a breach of peace existed, it is not necessary that breach of peace should continue at every stage of the proceeding unless there is clear evidence to show that the dispute has ceased to exist so as to bring the case within the ambit of Section 145(5). Unless such a contingency arose, proceedings have to be carried to their logical end culminating to the final order under Section 145(6). Rajpati v. Bachan, AIR 1981 SC 18 : (1980) 4 SCC 116 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 927 : 1980 CrLJ 1276 : 1980 CrLR (SC) 549 : (1981) 1 SCR 92 : 1980 CrAppR (SC) 265 : 1981 UP CrC 17 : 1980 ACrC 274 : 1980 Cur LJ (Cri) 191 : 1980 UJ (SC) 918 : 1980 SCCrR 443 : 1981 Bihar CrC (SC) 17 : (1981) 1 SCJ 228 : 1981 Chand LR (Cri) 257 (SC) : 1980 MLW (Cri) 209 : 1980 ACrR 444 : 1980 AWC 642 : (1980) 3 Mah LR 308 : 1980 TLNJ (SC) 1 : 1981 MLJ (Cri) 163.

[13645] ● Magistrate to be satisfied regarding existence of breach of face.—It is well settled that under Section 145, CrPC it is for the Magistrate to be satisfied regarding the existence of a breach of the peace and once he records his satisfaction in the preliminary order the High Court in revision cannot go into the sufficiency or otherwise of the materials on the basis of which the satisfaction of the Magistrate is based. Rajpati v. Bachan, AIR 1981 SC 18 : (1980) 4 SCC 116 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 927 : 1980 CrLJ 1276 : 1980 UJ 918.

[13646] ● Omission of Magistrate to mention breach of peace in final order.—Assuming however, that there was an omission on the part of the Magistrate to mention in his final order that there was breach of the peace, that being an error of procedure would clearly fall within the domain of a curable irregularity which is not sufficient to vitiate the order passed by the Magistrate, particularly when there is nothing to show in the instant case that any prejudice was caused to any of the parties who had the full opportunity to produce their evidence before the Court. Rajpati v. Bachan, AIR 1981 SC 18 : (1980) 4 SCC 116 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 927 : 1980 CrLJ 1276 : 1980 UJ 918.

[13647] ● Title of parties not affected when.—An order passed under Section 145, CrPC during the pendency of the proceedings does not in any way affect the title of the parties to disputed premises though it reflects the factum of possession. Sadhuram Bansal v. Publin Bihari Sarkar, AIR 1984 SC 1471 (1489) : (1984) 3 SCC 410 : (1984) 3 SCR 582 : (1984) 1 Scale 999.

[13648] ● Property when in custody of receiver appointed by Court.—When the property is in custody of a receiver appointed by the Court, the property is in the custody of the Court. No party can acquire any titles or right by coming in or over the property which is in the possession of the receiver without the leave or consent of the receiver or sanction of Court. Sadhuram Bansal v. Publin Bihari Sarkar, AIR 1984 SC 1471 (1490) : (1984) 3 SCC 410 : (1984) 3 SCR 582 : (1984) 1 Scale 999.

[13649] ● Parallel proceedings.—When possession is being examined by the civil Court and parties are in a position to obtain interim orders therein, jurisdiction of criminal Court should not be allowed to be invoked. Multiplicity of litigation and parallel proceedings are not in the interest of parties nor should public time be allowed to be wasted over meaningless litigation. Order under Section 145 was quashed. Ram Sumer Puri v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1985 SC 472 : (1985) 1 SCC 427 : 1985 CrLJ 752 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 1 : 1985 AWC 128 : 1985 ACrR 108 : (1985) 1 ACrLR 382 : (1985) 1 RecCrR 278.

[13650] ● Dispute regarding immovable property.—The ratio of the decision in Ram Sumer Puri Mahant v. State of U.P., AIR 1985 SC 472 : (1985) 1 SCC 427 : 1985 CrLJ 752, is that a party should not be permitted to litigate before the Criminal Court when the civil suit is pending in respect of the same subject-matter. That does not mean that a concluded order under Section 145, CrPC, made by the Magistrate of competent jurisdiction should be set at naught merely because the unsuccessful party has approached the civil Court. An order made under Section 145 deals only with the factum of possession of the party as on a particular day. It confers no title to remain in possession of the disputed property. The order is subject to the decision of the civil Court. The unsuccessful party, therefore, must get relief only in the civil Court. He may move the civil Court with a properly constituted suit. He may file a suit for declaration and prove a better right to possession. The civil Court has jurisdiction to give a finding different from that which the Magistrate has reached. The order of the High Court was set aside and the order of the Magistrate directing the appellant to be put in possession of the disputed shop was restored. The parties may work out their rights as per law. Jhunamal alias Devandas v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1988 SC 1973 : (1988) 4 SCC 452 : 1989 CrLJ 82 : (1988) 3 SCJ 401 : (1988) 3 Crimes 282 : (1988) BBCJ (SC) 134 : (1988) 2 LS (SC) 18 : 1988 ACrC 401 : 1988 ACrR 573 : 1988 AWC 1163 : 1988 BLJR 674 : 1988 UPCrR 288 : (1988) 2 APLJ (SC) 45 : 1988 APLJ (Cri) 286 : 1988 Jab LJ 584 : (1988) 2 KLT 355.

[13651] ● Institution of civil suit during pendency of proceedings.—The institution of civil suit during the pendency of proceedings is no ground to stay or quash the proceedings under Section 145, CrPC. Bharat Bhusan v. Vivek Joshi, SDM, (1993) 3 All CrLR 430 (431) (SC).

[13652] ● Attachment of property—Withdrawal of.—It is obvious from sub-section (1) of Section 146, that the Magistrate is given power to attach the subject of dispute "until the competent Court has determined the rights of the parties thereto with regard to the person entitled to the possession thereof." The determination by a competent Court of the rights of the parties spoken of there has not necessarily to be a final determination. The determination may be even tentative at the interim stage when the competent Court passes an order of interim injunction or appoints a receiver in respect of the subject-matter of the dispute pending the final decision in the suit. The moment the competent Court does so, even at the interim stage, the order of attachment passed by the Magistrate has to come to an end. Otherwise, there will be inconsistency between the order passed by the civil Court and the order of attachment passed by the Magistrate. The proviso to sub-section (1) of Section 146 itself takes cognizance of such a situation when it states that "Magistrate may withdraw the attachment at any time if he is satisfied that there is no longer any likelihood of any breach of peace with regard to the subject of dispute." When a civil Court passes an order of injunction or receiver, it is the civil Court which is seized of the matter and any breach of its order can be punished by it according to law. Hence on the passing of the interlocutory order by the civil Court, it can legitimately be said that there is no longer any likelihood of the breach of the peace with regard to the subject of dispute. The fact that the Magistrate can withdraw the order of attachment passed by him even during the pendency of the dispute in the Civil Court is made further clear by the provisions of sub-section (2) of Section 146. When the civil Court appoints a receiver, the order of attachment passed by the Magistrate necessarily gives way to the order of the civil Court appointing the receiver. It is only when the civil Court does not appoint the receiver that the Magistrate may make arrangements for looking after the property or even appoint a receiver himself. However, even when such a receiver is appointed and the civil Court subsequently appoints a receiver of its own, the Magistrate has to order the receiver appointed by him to hand over the possession of the subject in dispute to the receiver appointed by the civil Court and discharge the receiver appointed by him. He has also to pass such other incidental or consequential orders as he thinks just. Such order may include an order of withdrawal of the attachment in view of the seizure of the matter by the civil Court and the consequent want of apprehension of breach of the peace. It is, therefore, not correct to say as held by the High Court that the property continues to remain under attachment of the Magisterial order till the rights of the parties are decided finally by the competent Court of law. Dharampal v. Ramshri, AIR 1993 SC 1361 : 1993 CrLJ 1049 : 1993 CrLR (SC) 189 : (1993) 1 Crimes 304 : 1993 (1) CCr 47 (SC).

[13653] ● Applicability of Sections 145 and 107, CrPC.—True, a suit or remedy in civil Court for possession or injunction normally prevents a person from invoking jurisdiction of the criminal Court, particularly when possession is being examined by the civil Court and parties are in a position to approach the civil Court for interim orders such as injunction or appointment of receiver for adequate protection of the property during pendency of the dispute. Multiplicity of litigation is not in the interest of parties nor should public time be allowed to be wasted over meaningless litigation. When claim or title are not in dispute and the parties on their own showing are co-owners and there is no partition one cannot be permitted to act forcibly and unlawfully and ask the other to act in accordance with law. Where the dispute is not on the right to possession but on the question of possession the Magistrate is empowered to take cognizance under Section 145, CrPC. Prakash Chand Sachdev v. State, AIR 1994 SC 1436 : (1994) 1 SCC 471 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 438 : 1994 CrLJ 2117 : 1993 CrLR (SC) 758 : (1994) 1 UJ 158.

[13654] ● Proceedings under Section 107, CrPC for public peace and tranquillity.—The proceedings under Section 107, CrPC are for public peace and tranquility whereas those under Section 145 relate to disputes regarding possession between parties concerning any land or water or boundaries thereof. Prakash Chand Sachdev v. State, AIR 1994 SC 1436 : (1994) 1 SCC 471 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 438 : 1994 CrLJ 2117 : 1993 CrLR (SC) 758 : (1994) 1 UJ 158.

[13655] ● Dropping of proceedings under Section 107, CrPC.—Dropping of proceedings under Section 107 could not furnish foundation for dropping the proceedings under Section 145, CrPC. Prakash Chand Sachdev v. State, AIR 1994 SC 1436 : (1994) 1 SCC 471 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 438 : 1994 CrLJ 2117 : 1993 CrLR (SC) 758 : (1994) 1 UJ 158.

[13656] ● Apprehension of breach of peace.—Where there is apprehension of breach of peace merely because the matter is pending before the consolidation authorities, is no ground for dropping the proceedings under this section. Rajendra Pratap Singh v. District and Sessions Judge Gonda, 1996 CrLJ 698 (SC).

[13657] ● Conditions mentioned in proviso to sub-section (4) of Section 145 CrPc if satisfied.—If the conditions mentioned in the proviso to sub-section (4) are satisfied, the Magistrate can deem a person to be in possession as on the date of the order under Section 145(1) notwithstanding the fact that he was not in fact in possession on date but also in possession earlier within two months next before the order. R.C. Pathak v. Fatima A. Kundara, AIR 1997 SC 2320 : (1997) 5 SCC 334 : (1997) 2 Crimes 162 (SC).

[13658] ● Civil Court competent to decide question of little as well as possession.—When civil suit is for possession or for declaration of title in respect of the same property and where reliefs regarding protection of the property concerned can be applied for and granted by civil Court that proceedings should not be allowed to continue. Civil Court is competent to decide the question of title as well as possession between the parties and orders of civil Courts would be binding on Magistrate. Amresh Tiwari v. L.P. Dubey, AIR 2000 SC 1504 : (2000) 4 SCC 440 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 806 : 2000 CrLJ 2226 : 2000 (5) SRJ 199 (SC) : (2000) 3 Crimes 37.

[13659] ● Civil suit for possession or for declaration of title.—It is only in cases where civil suit is for possession or for declaration of title in respect of the same property and where reliefs regarding protection of property concerned can be applied for and granted by the civil Court that proceedings under Section 145 should not be allowed to continue. Amresh Tiwari v. Lalta Prasad Dubey, AIR 2000 SC 1504 : (2000) 4 SCC 440 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 806 : 2000 CrLJ 2226 (SC) : (2000) 3 Crimes 37.

[13660] ● Petitioner not in possession of disputed property.—Where the petitioner was not in possession of disputed property on the date of passing preliminary order, the proceedings are liable to be quashed. The proviso to sub-section (4) cannot be applied to entangle dispute of further date. Lophinoris Shangpling v. Hombay Shullal, 2001 CrLJ 2943 (2944) (SC).

[13661] ● Words "competent Court"—Meaning of.—The words "competent Court" as used in sub-section (1) Section 146 of the Code do not necessarily mean a civil Court only. A competent Court is one which has the jurisdictional competence to determine the question of title or the rights of the parties with regard to the entitlement as to possession over the property forming the subject-matter of proceedings before the Executive Magistrate. Shanti Kumar Panda v. Shakuntala Devi, AIR 2004 SC 115 : (2004) 1 SCC 438 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 320 (332) : 2004 CrLJ 1249.

[13662] ● Party unsuccessful in order under Section 145(1) to initiate proceedings in competent Court.—A party unsuccessful in an order under Section 145(1) would initiate proceedings in a competent Court to establish its entitlement to possession over the disputed property against the successful party. Ordinarily, a relief of recovery of possession would be appropriate to be sought for. In legal proceedings initiated before a competent Court consequent upon attachment under Section 146(1) of the Code it is not necessary to seek relief of recovery of possession. As the property is held custodia legis by the Magistrate for and on behalf of the party who would ultimately succeed from the Court, it would suffice if only determination of the rights with regard to the entitlement to the possession is sought for. Such a suit shall not be bad for not asking for the relief of possession. Shanti Kumar Panda v. Shakuntala Devi, AIR 2004 SC 115 : (2004) 1 SCC 438 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 320 (332) : 2004 CrLJ 1249.

[13663] ● Decision by Criminal Court does not bind Civil Court.—A decision by a criminal Court does not bind the civil Court while a decision by the civil Court binds the criminal Court. An order passed by the Executive Magistrate in proceedings under Sections 145/146 of the Code is an order by a criminal Court and that too based on a summary enquiry. The order is entitled to respect and wait before the competent Court at the interlocutory stage. At the stage of final adjudication of rights, which would be on the evidence adduced before the Court, the order of the Magistrate is only one out of several process of evidence. Shanti Kumar Panda v. Shakuntala Devi, AIR 2004 SC 115 : (2004) 1 SCC 438 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 320 (332) : 2004 CrLJ 1249.

[13664] ● Final or interlocutory order of Court—Effect.—The Court will be loath to issue an order of interim injunction or to order an interim arrangement inconsistent with the one made by the Executive Magistrate. However, to say so is merely stating a rule of caution or restraint, on exercise of discretion by Court, dictated by prudence and regard for the urgent/ emergent executive orders made within jurisdiction by their makers; and certainly not a tab on the power of Court. The Court does have jurisdiction to make an interim order including an order of ad interim injunction inconsistent with the order of the Executive Magistrate. The jurisdiction is there but the same shall be exercised not as a rule but as an exception. Even at the stage of passing an ad interim order the party unsuccessful before the Executive Magistrate may on material placed before the Court succeed in making out a strong prima facie case demonstrating the findings of the Executive Magistrate to be without jurisdiction, palpably wrong or self-inconsistent in which or the like cases the Court may, after recording its reasons and satisfaction, make an order inconsistent with, or in departure from, the one made by the Executive Magistrate. The order of the Court—Final or interlocutory, would have the effect of declaring one of the parties entitled to possession and evicting therefrom the party successful before the Executive Magistrate within the meaning of sub-section (6) of Section 145. Shanti Kumar Panda v. Shakuntala Devi, AIR 2004 SC 115 : (2004) 1 SCC 438 : 2004 SCC (Cri) 320 (332) : 2004 CrLJ 1249.

[13665] ● Question as to possession over property or entitlement to possession to be determined by Civil Court.—The question as to possession over the property or entitlement to possession would be determined by the civil Court. The criminal proceedings have remained pending for about a decade. We do not find any propriety behind allowing these proceedings to continue in view of the parties having already approached the civil Court. Whichever way proceedings under Section 145, CrPC may terminate, the order of the criminal Court would always be subject to decision by the civil Court. Inasmuch as the parties are already before the civil Court, we deem it proper to let the civil suit be decided and therein appropriate interim order be passed taking care of the grievances of the parties by making such arrangement as may remain in operation during the hearing of the civil suit.

We direct the criminal proceedings initiated under Section 145, CrPC to be quashed. Mahar Jahan v. State of Delhi, 2004 (13) SCC 421 : 2006 (1) SCC (Cri) 320.

[13666] ● Compromise between parties attaining finality—Proceedings under Section 145, CrPC—Abuse of process.—Where the parties settled the dispute as to property and obtained a compromise decree in civil proceedings which attained finality, the proceedings under Section 145 was held an abuse of process of Court. The order of High Court was set aside and proceedings under Section 145, CrPC were directed to be dropped. Kanjbihari v. Balram, (2006) 11 SCC 66 : 2007 (1) SCC (Cri) 376.

[13667] ● Passing order of injunction by civil Court against Magistrates' order handing over property to respondents—SDM not party in civil suit—Effect.—In the suit, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate was not a party. No order of injunction could have been passed against him but them that would not mean that the Civil Court could not pass an order of injunction against the defendant-respondent. If an order of injunction was passed against the defendant-respondent from obtaining possession, the question of SDM's executing his own order dated 9.10.1997 would not arise. Even where a Court or a statutory authority may not be subjected to an order of injunction, a party can be injuncted from proceeding in the matter. M.P. Peter v. State of Kerala, (2009) 12 SCC 785 : 2009 (8) SCR 576.

[13668] ● Order passed by SDM directing appellant to hand over property to respondent attaining finality—Effect.—The proceeding under Section 145 of the Code indisputably remained pending for a long time. It was initiated on or about 9.01.1996 when a complaint was filed by the respondent No. 3. As noticed hereinbefore, the Sub Divisional Magistrate directed the appellant to handover the property to the respondent No. 3. However, the order of the Sub Divisional Magistrate was reversed by the learned Sessions Judge, which in turn was set aside by the High Court by an order dated 25.09.2007.

The correctness or otherwise of the said order of the learned Sub Divisional Magistrate attained finality as the Special Leave Petition filed against the order of the High Court dated 25.09.2007 was dismissed by this Court by an order dated 11.02.2008. M.P. Peter v. State of Kerala, (2009) 12 SCC 785 : 2009 (8) SCR 576.

[13669] ● Specific Relief Act—Not applicable to proceedings under Section 145, CrPC.—"It is true that while making such declaration under Section 145(4) of the Code, the Magistrate could have also directed that the appellants be put in possession of the same. The question which is now required to be considered is whether the High Court was right in quashing the order passed by the Magistrate, which was confirmed by the Sessions Judge, on the ground that the application made by the appellants under Section 145(6) of the Code was barred firstly by limitation under Article 137 of the Limitation Act and also by virtue of Section 6 of the Specific Relied Act, 1963. We are in agreement with Mr. Sanyal that the provisions of the Specific Relief Act had been misapplied by the High Court in holding that the appellants should have come for an order under Section 145(6) of the Code within six months from the date of dispossession, as provided in Section 6 of the said Act, as the Specific Relief Act has no application to a proceeding under Section 145, CrPC." Shakuntala Devi v. Chamru Mahto, AIR 2009 SC 2075 : (2009) 3 SCC 310 : 2009 CrLJ 1770 : 2009 (3) SCR 85 : JT 2009 (3) 502 : 2009 (1) Crimes 443.

[13670] ● Order passed by Executive Magistrate—Whether Civil Court can pass order of injunction.—Despite an order passed under Section 145, CrPC, the Civil Court may, in a suit, pass an order of injunction. M.P. Peter v. State of Kerala, (2009) 12 SCC 785 : 2009 (8) SCR 576.

[13671] ● Limitation for filing application for implementation of order.—There is no doubt that the High Court erred in applying the provisions of the Specific Relief Act to a proceeding under Section 145, Cr.P.C., but as far as making an application for implementation of the order passed under Section 145(4), Cr.P.C. is concerned, since no period of limitation is prescribed, the same ought to have been filed within a period of three years from the date of the order. While the final order in the proceedings under Section 145, Cr.P.C. was passed on 7th October, 1994, the application for implementation of the same was made on 12th November, 1997, which was beyond the period of limitation prescribed under the provisions of Article 137 of the Limitation Act.

There is no confusion on the point that an application under Section 145(6) may be made to be put in possession of a property in respect of which the party has been declared to be entitled to possession. Such an application cannot be made as and when the person dispossessed chooses to do so. It is for such purpose that Article 137 has been pressed into service since no limitation has been prescribed in Section 145 itself to indicate as to within which time a party found to be entitled to possession could be put back in possession. There is also no explanation forthcoming as to the cause of such delay. Accordingly, even if the High Court was wrong in applying the provisions of the Specific Relief Act to the facts of the case, the bar under Article 137 of the Limitation Act cannot be avoided and the application made by the appellants for being restored to possession in terms of a declaration made more than three years before the making of the application has to be rejected". Shakuntala Devi v. Chamru Mahto, AIR 2009 SC 2075 : (2009) 3 SCC 310 : 2009 CrLJ 1770 : 2009 (3) SCR 85 : JT 2009 (3) 502 : 2009 (1) Crimes 443.

DISQUALIFICATION OF JUDGE AND MAGISTRATE
(S. 479, CrPC, 1973)

[13672] ● Disqualification of judge and magistrate.—The expression "personal interest" in Section 556 does not mean only private interest; it means and includes official interest also. The Explanation and the Illustration to Section 556 clearly indicate the intention of the Legislature as to the extent of the interest in, and the nature of the connection with, a case which will attract the disability under Section 556. These provisions show that a distinction must be made between an active and a passive interest, and that the disability under Section 556 arises only when the interest of the Judge or Magistrate in any case is only active. The dividing line between an active and a passive interest is thin, but it is sufficiently definite and tangible and depends upon the facts and circumstances of each particular case. If the interest in question consists merely of a grant of a formal sanction given for the purpose of fulfilling some legal requirement, the bar under Section 556 does not operate. On the other hand, if it consists of a direction to initiate criminal proceedings, the bar operates since the interest taken is active. The mere fact that the officer had to apply his mind to the facts of the case is not the test, because an application of the mind is involved in both cases; the distinction lies in this that in the case of formal sanction all that he has to be satisfied about is the existence of a prima facie case, whereas in the case of a direction to prosecute he has further to apply his mind as to whether the accused deserves to be prosecuted. Rameshwar

Bhartia v. State of Assam, AIR 1952 SC 405 : 1953 CrLJ 163 : 1952 SCJ 559 : 1953 SCA 42.

[13673] ● Personally interested—Meaning of.—A mere formal grant of sanction which is necessary only for the purpose of fulfilling a technical statutory requirement may not amount to "personal interest" within the meaning of Section 556 (Now Section 479) in may cases in which such sanction is given or refused for considerations which are extraneous to the merits of the case; whereas a direction authorising prosecution necessarily requires in each case that the officer must apply him mind to the very merits of the case and the truth or otherwise of the allegations made against the offender. The difference between the two lies in the nature of action required of the officer; in the former case it is only a permission while in the latter case, it is a direction or order. Rameshwar Bhartia v. State of Assam, AIR 1952 SC 405 : 1953 CrLJ 163 : 1952 SCJ 559 : 1953 SCA 42.

[13674] ● Same individual holding two capacities.—In the present case, the same individual held two capacities, one of a Director of Procurement under the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act, 1946, and the other of a First Class Magistrate. In the former capacity he granted a sanction for the prosecution of a person for an offence arising from a breach of a Food Grains Control Order and then in the latter capacity he presided over the trial of that person for the offence. The conviction was challenged on the ground that the officer had no competence to preside over that trial by reason of the disability arising from the application of Section 556 of the Code. No infringement of Section 556 has occurred in the present case because only a formal sanction has been given which does not amount to "personal interest" within the meaning of that section. The trial has not been vitiated by any illegality, and there is no reason to interfere with the conviction. Rameshwar Bhartia v. State of Assam, AIR 1952 SC 405 : 1953 CrLJ 163 : 1952 SCJ 559 : 1953 SCA 42.

[13675] ● Distinction to be drawn between pecuniary interest and prejudice.—A distinction must be drawn between pecuniary interest and 'prejudice'. The smallest pecuniary interest is a bar to the Magistrate acting in the case; but where the interest is not pecuniary, the question arises whether the interest is of such 'substantial character' as to make it likely that he has a real 'bias' in the matter. If such a bias is shown to be existing that will form a good ground for the transfer of the case under Section 407. Rameshwar Bhartia v. State of Assam, AIR 1952 SC 405 : 1953 CrLJ 163 : 1952 SCJ 559 : 1953 SCA 42.

[13676] ● Object of Section 479, CrPC.—One important object of Section 479, CrPC, 1973 is to clear away everything which might endanger suspicion and distrust of the tribunal and so to promote feeling of confidence in the administration of justice. Manaklal v. Prem Chand, AIR 1957 SC 425 : 1957 SCR 575 : 1957 SCJ 359.

[13677] ● General principles embodied under Section 479, CrPC—Applicability of.—The general principle embodied under Section 479, CrPC, 1973 applies not only to Judges and Magistrates under this Code but also to all persons acting in judicial capacity. Manaklal v. Prem Chand, AIR 1957 SC 425 : 1957 SCR 575 : 1957 SCJ 345.

[13678] ● Judge or Magistrate when disqualified from trying case.—Where a Judge or a Magistrate who is himself a witness in the case and his examination shows that he is personally interested to any extent, he will be disqualified from trying the case. State of Uttar Pradesh v. Mohd. Nooh, AIR 1958 SC 86 (90, 91) : 1958 SCR 595 : 1958 SCJ 242.

DISRUPTIVE ACTIVITY

[13679] ● Disruptive activity.—The killing of a public servant or killing of another person bound by oath would be an offence under the Indian Penal Code. But it must be noted that such killing, as such is not a disruptive activity. Certain type of actions which preceded such killings alone is regarded as a disruptive activity through the legal fiction created by Section 4(3) of TADA Act. Such actions include advocating, advising, suggesting, inciting, predicting, prophesying, pronouncing or prompting the killing of such persons. In other words all the preceding actions directed positively towards killing of such persons would amount to disruptive activity, but not the final result, namely the act of killing of such persons. If there is any evidence in this case to show that any such preceding act was perpetrated by any of the appellants towards killing of a police officer who was killed at the place of occurrence, it would, no doubt, amount to disruptive activity. But there is no such evidence that any such activity was done for the purpose of killing any police personnel. However, there is a plethora of evidence for establishing that all such preceding activities were done by many among the accused arrayed for killing Rajiv Gandhi. But unfortunately Rajiv Gandhi was not then "a person bound by oath under the Constitution to uphold the sovereignty and integrity of India". Even the Lok Sabha stood dissolved months prior to this incident and hence it cannot be found that he was under an oath as a Member of Parliament. The inevitable fall out of the above situation is that none of the conspirators can be caught in the dragnet of sub-Section (3) of Section 4 of TADA. State of Tamil Nadu v. Nalini, AIR 1999 SC 2640 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 691 (736) : 1999 CrLJ 3124 : 1999 CrLR (SC) 424.

[13680] ● No evidence that accused either committed or conspired or attempted to commit advocated or advised or knowing facilitated commission of any disruptive activity.—To attract S. 4 of TADA Act, it is obligatory for the prosecution to establish that the accused committed or conspired or attempted to commit or abetted, advocated, or advised or knowingly facilitated the commission of any disruptive activity or any act preparatory to a disruptive activity. The expression "disruptive activity" has been defined in sub-s. (2) of S. 4 of TADA Act. From the entire prosecution evidence established in this case we really fail to appreciate how it can be said that the prosecution has been able to establish the charge under sub-s. (1) to S. 4 of TADA Act. There is not an iota of evidence to indicate that the accused appellants either committed or conspired or attempted to commit or abetted or advocated or advised or knowingly facilitated the commission of any disruptive activity. In the aforesaid circumstances, the offence under S. 4(1) of TADA Act cannot be said to have been established beyond reasonable doubt to convict the appellants under S. 4(1) of TADA Act. Similarly we are also satisfied that no offence can be said to have been committed either under S. 124-A or S. 153-A of the IPC. We, therefore set aside the conviction and sentence passed against the appellants and acquit them. Balbir Singh v. State of U.P., AIR 2000 SC 464 : (1999) 5 SCC 682 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 1030 : 2000 CrLJ 590.

[13681] ● No weapon much less any lethal weapon specified in Section 3(1) of TADA found in possession of accused.—It is admitted by the prosecution that none of the appellants was in possession of any weapon, much less lethal weapon specified in Section 3(1) of TADA. All the articles which the appellants were alleged to have possessed were wall posters and other materials needed for pasting them on the walls. The expression 'disruptive activity" has been defined in Section 4(2) of TADA. Such activity should involve questioning or disrupting the sovereignty and territorial integrity of India or an activity intended towards the cession or secession of any part of India from the Union. Unfortunately the prosecution has not led any evidence to show what is meant by word "khalistan" used in the wall posters could it have been a State within the Indian Union, or just a movement for that purpose or something more than that. Due to total paucity of evidence in that regard it is not possible to assume that the word is aimed unmistakably at creation of a separate country. The prosecution did not succeed in proving that any of the appellants has committed any act falling within the purview of TADA. Sukhchain Singh v. State of Rajasthan, (2000) 2 SCC 183 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 341 (342, 343) : JT 1999 (10) SC 533.

DISTINCT OFFENCES
(S. 218, CrPC, 1973)
§ (See sub-topic "JOINDER OF CHARGES" UNDER TOPIC "CHARGE")

"DISTINCTLY"
§ (See "DISCOVERY")

[13682] ● "Distinctly".—The word "Distinctly" in Section 27, Evidence Act means "directly", "indubitably", "strictly", "unmistakably". The word has been advisedly used to limit and define the scope of the provable information. The phrase "Distinctly related to the fact thereby discovered" is the linchpin of the provision. This phrase refers to that part of the information supplied by the accused which is the direct and immediate cause of the discovery. Mohammed Inayatullah v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1976 SC 483 : (1976) 11 SCC 828 (832) : 1976 SCC (Cri) 199.

DISTRICT MAGISTRATE

[13683] ● Power of detention—No officer below rank of District Magistrate exercise.—Besides there is only one District Magistrate in a district and all other Magistrates whether they be Magistrate first class or even Additional District Magistrates must obviously be below him in rank. as Section 3(2)(15) of the Defence of India Act 1962 provides that the power of detention cannot be exercised by any officer below the rank of the District Magistrate, such power cannot be exercised by an Additional District Magistrate. who is an officer below the rank of a District Magistrate. Ajaib Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1965 SC 1619 : 1965 (2) CrLJ 553 (557) : (1965) 2 SCR 845.

[13684] ● Order of State Govt. appointing officer—District Magistrate of District—Suffi- cient.—In the instant case, Shri Bhalla who was the District Magistrate on the instructions issued by the Governor of Punjab handed over the current charge of the office of the Deputy Commissioner, Amritsar. Even though Shri Bhalla may have gone after handing over charge on the afternoon of May 15, 1964, Shri Lall Singh could not and did not become the District Magistrate of Amritsar in the absence of a notification under Section 10(1) of the CrPC by the State Government. The instructions of the Governor cannot take the place of a notification under Section 10(1) of the Code. But it does not mean that a notification appointing a District Magistrate must necessarily recite in terms that it was being made under Section 10 of the Code; all that it means is that there must be an order of the State Government appointing an officer as District Magistrate of the District. In the absence of such an officer no officer can claim to be the District Magistrate of the District. Ajaib Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1965 SC 1619 : 1965 (2) CrLJ 553 (556) : (1965) 2 SCR 845.

[13685] ● District Magistrate and Addl. District Magistrate two different and district authorities.—The scheme of Section 10 of the Code of Criminal Procedure leaves no room for doubt that the District Magistrate and the Additional District Magistrate are two different and distinct authorities and even though the latter may be empowered under sub-Section (2) to exercise all or any of the powers of a District Magistrate but by no stretch of reasoning can an Additional District Magistrate be called the District Magistrate which are the words employed in sub-Section (1) of Section 10 of the Code. Hari Chand Aggarwal v. Batala Engineering Co. Ltd., AIR 1969 SC 483 : 1969 CrLJ 803 (807) : (1969) 2 SCR 201.

[13686] ● Court of Additional District Judge not subordinate to High Court within Section 195(3), CrPC.—The Court of the Additional District Magistrate would not seem to be subordinate to the High Court as provided by Section 195(3) of the Code. Santokh Singh v. Izhar Hussain, AIR 1973 SC 2190 : (1973) SCC 406 : 1973 SCC (Cri) 828 (834) : 1973 CrLJ 1176 : 1973 CrLR (SC) 473 : (1974) 1 SCR 78. TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) Kuldip Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1956 SC 391 : 1856 SCJ 387 : 1956 SCR 125.

[13687] ● Tender of pardon—Power of District Magistrate.—Section 338, CrPC gives full power to the Court to which commitment is made, to tender pardon or order the committing Magistrate or the District Magistrate to tender pardon on the same condition. The proviso to Section 337 of the Code contemplates concurrent jurisdiction on the District Magistrate and the Magistrate making an enquiry or holding the trial to tender a pardon. The District Magistrate is empowered to tender a pardon even after a commitment is made if the Court so directs. Under Section 8(2) of the Criminal Law (Amendment) Act, 1952 the Special Judge has also been granted power to tender pardon. The conferment of this power on the special judge in no way deprives the District Magistrate of his power to grant a pardon under Section 337 of the Code. State of U.P. v. Kailash Nath Agarwal, AIR 1973 SC 2210 : (1973) 1 SCC 751 : 1973 SCC (Cri) 698 (704) : 1973 CrLJ 1196 : 1973 CrLR (SC) 369. TO THE SAME EFFECT : (1) Kanta Prashad v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1958 SC 350 : 1958 SCR 1218 (1224-1225) : 1958 SCJ 668.

[13688] ● DM and Sessions Judge directed personally or through surrogates to visit prisons.—The District Magistrate and Sessions Judges shall, personally or through surrogates, visit prisons in their jurisdiction and afford effective opportunities for ventilating legal grievances, shall make expeditious enquiries there into and take suitable remedial action. In appropriate cases reports shall be made to the High Court for the latter to initiate, if found necessary, habeas action. Rakesh Kaushik v. B.L. Vig.-Superintendent, Central Jail, New Delhi, AIR 1981 SC 1767 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 834 (838) : 1981 CrLJ 1438 : 1980 CrLR (SC) 757.

[13689] ● District Magistrate—Rent control officer to be deemed to be a Civil Servant.—Section 34(1) of the U.P. Urban Buildings (Regulation of Letting, Rent and Eviction) Act provides that the District Magistrate, the prescribed authority or any appellate authority shall for the purposes of holding any enquiry or hearing any appeal under the Act have the same powers as are vested in the Civil Court under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. Where trying a suit sub-section (2) of Section 34 would show that the expression "District Magistrate" has been defined in S. 3(c) to include an officer authorized by the District Magistrate to exercise, perform and discharge all or any of his powers, functions and duties under the Act. Rent Control Officer is one such officer who is authorized by the District Magistrate to exercise, perform and discharge the powers, functions and duties conferred upon him. It would follow that the Rent Control Officer shall be deemed to be a civil Court within the meaning of Ss. 345 and 346 of the Cr.P.Code, 1973 and in the view of sub-s. (2) of Section 34 of the Rent Act, shall be a Civil Court for the purpose of Section 193, IPC.

If, therefore, according to the complainant false evidence was given in a judicial proceeding before the Court, and a person given such to be affidavit under Section 193, IPC in or in relation to a proceeding before the court no Court can take cognizance of such offence except on a complaint in writing of the Court. The grievance is that a false affidavit was filed by the appellants which was receivable as evidence in the allotment proceedings before the Rent Control Officer which as a Tribunal would be comprehended in the expression "Court". If false evidence in the form of affidavits filed by the appellants was given before Rental Officer a Civil Court for the purpose of Section 193, IPC, that before a Judicial Magistrate, Section 195(1)(b)(i) would be attracted. The CJM, Sekendarabad had no jurisdiction to take cognizance or the offence or Section 193 IPC, in the circumstances on the complaint. Chandrapal Singh v. Maharaj Singh, AIR 1982 SC 1238 : (1982) 1 SCC 466 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 249 : 1982 CrLJ 1731.

[13690] ● Preventive detention—Activities attributed to detenu concerning more than two districts.—Counsel of the petitioner, in the instant case, contended that the activities attributed to the detenue are concerned with two districts, namely Jammu and Kashmir. The order of detention issued by the District Magistrate Jammu is, therefore, illegal since it ought to have been issued by the Divisional Commissioner of the Division or by the State Government. We do not find any substance therefrom to the contention urged. Section 8(2) of J&K Safety Act, 1978 does not state that in inter-district activities, the Divisional Commissioner alone is competent to pass an order of detention. Power to detain has been confined on the Divisional Commissioner as well as the District Magistrate. Swaran Singh v. State of Jammu and Kashmir, AIR 1989 SC 188 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 191 (193) : 1989 CrLJ 792 : 1989 CrLR (SC) 33 : JT 1988 (4) SC 429 : (1989) 1 Crimes 68.

[13691] ● Power delegated to District Magistrate cannot be further delegated by State Government to ADM.—The power of consent rests with the Central Government. The Central Government has delegated it to the District Magistrate. It is not competent for the State Government to further delegate to the Additional District Magistrate a power of the Central Government has delegated to the District Magistrate.

In the instant case, the consent fort the prosecution of the respondent was granted by the Additional District Magistrate and in this behalf, reliance was placed, on behalf of the appellant, upon a notification issued by the appellant. Whereunder it appointed the Joint Collector and Executive Magistrate as Additional District Magistrate for the District of Gawalior and directed that he should "exercise powers of District Magistrate conferred under the Criminal Procedure Code or under any other law for the time being in force". State of Madhya Pradesh v. Bhupendra Singh, AIR 2000 SC 679 : (2000) 1 SCC 555 : 2000 CrLJ 805 : 2000 CrLR (SC) 152.

DISTURBED AREA, DECLARATION OF

1. ARMED FORCES (SPECIAL POWERS) ACT (28 OF 1958), SECTION 3

[13692] ● Armed Forces (Special Powers) Act.—Section 3 of the Armed Forces (Special Powers) Act (28 of 1958) does not confer an arbitrary or unguided power to declare an area as a disturbed area. For declaring an area as disturbed area under Section 3, there must exist a grave situation of law and order on the basis of which the Governor/administrator of the State/ Union Territory or the Central Government can form an opinion that the area is in such a disturbed or dangerous condition that the use of the armed forces in aid of the civil power is necessary. A declaration under S. 3 has to be for a limited duration and there should be periodic review of the declaration before the expiry of six months. Although a declaration under S. 3 can be made by the Central Government suo motu without consulting the concerned State Government, but it is desirable that the State Government should be consulted by the Central Government while making the declaration. The conferment of the power to make a declaration under S. 3 of the Act on the Governor of the State cannot be regarded as delegation of the power of the Central Government. The conferment of the power to make a declaration under S. 3 of the said Act on the Central Government, is not violative of the federal scheme as envisaged by the Constitution. Naga People's Movement of Human v. Union of India, AIR 1998 SC 431 (463) : (1998) 2 SCC 109 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 514 : JT 1997 (9) SC 431.

[13693] ● Power of Central Govt. to declare area disturbed area.—Under Section (3) of the Armed Forces (Special Powers) Act (28 of 1958), as amended by Act 7 of 1972 the Central Government has been empowered to declare an area to be a disturbed area. There is no requirement that it shall consult the State Government before making the declaration. As a consequence of such a declaration the power under Section 4 can be exercised by Armed Forces and such a declaration can only be revoked by the Central Government. The conferment of the said power on the Central Government regarding declaration of areas to be disturbed areas does not, however, result in taking over of the State administration by the Army or by other Armed Forces of the union because after such declaration by the Central Government the powers under Section 4 of the Act can be exercised by the personnel of the Armed Forces only with the co-operation of the authorities of the State government concerned. It is therefore, desirable that the State government should be consulted and its cooperation sought while making a declaration. It is not possible to accept the contentions that the Central Act is ultra vires the legislative power conferred on Parliament inasmuch as it is not an enactment with respect to maintenance of public order which is a field assigned to the State Legislature under Entry 1 of the State list. Naga Peoples' Movement of Human v. Union of India, AIR 1998 SC 431 (448) : (1998) 2 SCC 109 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 514 : JT 1997 (9) SC 431.

[13694] ● Distinction between delegation of power and statutory conferment of power.— There is a distinction between delegation of power by a statutory authority and statutory conferment of power on a particular authority/ authorities by the Legislation under Section 3 of the Armed Forces (Special Powers) Act (28 of 1958). There is no delegation of power on the Central Government to the Governor of the State. What has been done is that the power to issue a declaration has been conferred by the Parliament on three authorities, namely, (1) the Governor of the State, (2) the Administrator of the Union Territory, and (3) the Central Government. In view of the information available at the local level the Governor of the State or the Administrator of the Union Territory is in a position to assess the situation and form an opinion about the need for invoking the provisions of the said Act for use of the Armed Forces of the Union in aid of the civil power for the purpose of dealing with the situation that has arisen in the concerned State or the Union Territory. Moreover, the issuance of a declaration, by Itself, would not oblige the Central Government to deploy the Armed Forces of the Union. After such a declaration has been issued by the Governor/Administrator, the Central Government would have to take a decision regarding the deployment of the Armed Forces of the Union in the area that has been declared as 'disturbed area'. The conferment of power on the Governor of the State to make the declaration under Section 3 cannot, therefore, be regarded as delegation of power of the Central Government. Naga Peoples' Movement of Human v. Union of India, AIR 1998 SC 431 (453) : (1998) 2 SCC 109 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 514 : JT 1997 (9) SC 431.

DIVORCE DECREE PASSED BY FOREIGN COURT

[13695] ● Decree of divorce passed by American Court—Effect.—In view of the facts and circumstances of the case, the decree passed by the American Court though a relevant factor, cannot override the consideration of welfare of the minor children. We have already stated earlier that in U.S.A. respondent Sushil is staying along with his mother aged about 80 years. There is no one else in the family. The respondent appears to be in the habit of taking excessive alcohol. Though it is true that both the children have the American citizenship and there is a possibility that in U.S.A. they may be able to get better education, it is doubtful if the respondent will be in a position to take proper care of the children when they are so young. Out of them one is a female child. She is aged about 5 years. Ordinarily, a female child should be allowed to remain with the mother so that she can be properly looked after. It is also not desirable that two children are separated from each other. If a female child has to stay with the mother, it will be in the interest of both the children that they both stay with the mother.

Here in India also proper care of the children is taken and they are at present studying in good schools. We have not found the appellant wanting in taking proper care of the children. Both the children have a desire to stay with the mother. At the same time it must be said that the son, who is elder than daughter, has good feeling for his father also. Considering all the aspects relating to the welfare of the children, we are of the opinion that in spite of the order passed by Court in U.S.A. it was not proper for the High Court to have allowed the Habeas Corpus writ petition and directed the appellant to hand over custody of the children to the respondent and permit him to take them away of U.S.A. What would be in the interest of the children requires a full and thorough inquiry and, therefore, the High Court should have directed the respondent to initiate appropriate proceedings in which such an inquiry can be held. Still there is some possibility of mother returning to U.S.A. in the interest of the children. Therefore, we do not desire to say anything more regarding entitlement of the custody of the children. The chances of the appellant returning to U.S.A. with the children would depend upon the joint efforts of the appellant and the respondent to get the arrest warrant cancelled by explaining to the Court in U.S.A. the circumstances under which she had left U.S.A. with the children without taking permission of the Court. There is a possibility that both of them may thereafter be able to approach the Court which passed the decree to suitably modify the order with respect to the custody of the children and visitation rights. Sarita Sharma v. Sushil Sharma, AIR 2000 SC 1019 : (2000) 3 SCC 14 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 568 : 2000 CrLJ 1459 (1463) : (2001) 1 Crimes 272.

DNA TEST

[13696] ● DNA test/finger printing.—Section 112 of the Evidence Act was enacted at a time when the modern scientific advancements with deoxyribonucleic acid (DNA) as well as ribonucleic acid (RNA) tests were not even in contemplation of the Legislature. The result of a genuine DNA test is said to be scientifically accurate. But even that is not enough to escape from the conclusiveness of Section 112 of the Evidence Act, for example, if a husband and wife were living together during the time of conception but the DNA test revealed that the child was not borne to the husband, the conclusiveness in law would remain irrebutable. This may look hard from the point of view of the husband who would be compelled to bear the fatherhood of a child of which he may be innocent. But even in such a case the law leans in favour of the innocent child from being bastardised if his mother and her spouse were living together during the time of conception. Hence the question regarding the degree of proof of non-access for rebutting the conclusiveness must be answered in the light of what is meant by access or non-access as delineated above. Kamti Devi v. Poshi Ram, AIR 2001 SC 2226 : (2001) 5 SCC 311 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 892 (896).

[13697] ● Identification based on analysis of segments of Human DNA.—The Forensic analysis of a biological material like blood, flesh, semen, hair, urinal, etc. have progressed to high level of sophistication for individualisation. In 1985, Professor Alec Jeffery from Lister Institute of Preventive Medicine, U.K. described a new approach to identification or individualisation, based on analysis of segments of Human DNA known as Hyper variable Minisatellite Region, or V.N.T.R. (Variable Number of Tandem Repeat) loci scattered along the chromosomes. Modi's Medical Jurisprudence, 22nd Edition, p. 198.

[13698] ● Process of DNA Test.—Fingerprinting is a well-known method of identifying criminals by means of their digital or palmar prints (cf. Finger Prints, Galton System). Forensic biology-the testing of biological evidence material and paternity testing - has advanced dramatically over the last three years. Forensic biology should prepare itself to take advantage of a new category of genetic variation : polymorphism at the deoxyribonucleic acid (DNA) level. The new test, called DNA fingerprinting, looks directly at a person's genetic make-up.

In simplified form, the process works as follows : The DNA is extracted from the nuclei of white blood cells (or of spermatozoons or of the hair follicle cells that cling to the roots of hair that have fallen, or been pulled out). A DNA sample is first digested with a restriction enzyme that cuts it into fragments only at specific sites. The number of these sites present in an individual's DNA dictates the number and size of DNA fragments generated by the enzyme. The fragments are separated according to size by gel electrophoresis. When this process is repeated with several enzymes, each of which cuts at different sites, enough information is gathered to construct a detailed genetic fingerprint of a person. For detecting the fragments, Jeffreys (Nature 1985 : 316: 76-78) produced probes, short pieces of radioactively labelled DNA, that specifically bind to the core sequences. The locations of the fragments that bind the radioactive probes are detected with X-ray film. This produces a picture of a strip of 30 to 40 dark bands, which looks something like the bar Codes used to identify items at the grocery store. The degree of biological variation is so high that every individual, with the exception of identical twins, produces a unique band pattern, much as every individual has a unique set of ordinary (Galton system) fingerprints.

Identity of a criminal is determined by comparing the accused man's DNA fingerprint with that of the blood or seminal stain found at the scene of crime. If the DNA fingerprints are identical, there is an absolute identification.

Currently, the most important tool used to make a paternity determination is a blood test called a human leucocyte antigen (HLA) test. It is based on the principle that the genetic variation among individuals is partially reflected in the kinds of proteins, called antigens, that are present on their leucocytes. Because a child inherits half his genetic information from his mother and half from his father, his proteins should therefore be representative of both parents. If, for example, the HLA test shows that none of an accused man's proteins are present on a child's blood cells, then it can be said with nearly 100 per cent certainty that he is not the father of the child. If the accused man's proteins are on the child's cells, then it is highly likely that he is the father. The relationship, however, is not certain, because it is always possible that another man with the same proteins fathered the child. That is, the test falls short because the proteins used in the HLA analysis are not unique to any individual. There can be as much as 5 to 10 per cent chance that a man who is deemed the father is actually not. By contrast, the DNA fingerprints are unique (except for identical twins). The DNA fingerprints are inherited as simple Mandelian characters. Paternity is determined by comparing the accused man's DNA fingerprint with that of the child.

Of course, DNA typing can exonerate a suspect as well as incriminate him.

There are certain concerns with the application of DNA fingerprinting on medicolegal evidence samples.

Gene frequencies for the major population groups must be established to provide a base for the interpretation of findings. Standard typing reagents should be available to the forensic science community to allow independent testing in different laboratories. Methodological guidelines need to be defined to insure reliability of test results. These guidelines would include standard good practice in genetic testing: the use of appropriate standards and controls. For example, a control to determine the completeness of the restriction digestion is needed.

The DNA content of evidence samples is at present a limiting constraint. Bloodstains would have to contain at least 50 µl of blood to be amenable to analysis. The corresponding value for semen is about µl.

Assessment of the stability of DNA in evidence materials centers on two questions : Does DNA survive in high molecular form and are restriction sites modified in any way? The recovery of DNA fragments from mummy tissue and from 100 year-old dried skin proves the chemical stability in the dry state. Definition of the limits of survival requires measurement of hydrolysis rates as a function of moisture content, chemical environment, temperature, and exposure to light and other radiation. If DNA is demonstrated to maintain acceptable integrity in evidence materials, then the whole range o probes are open for use. Experts estimate that forensic DNA fingerprinting will be wide spread in 3-5 years. *J. [13699] ● DNA test to establish paternity.—In the instant case, Dr. Lalji Singh Deputy Director, CCMB Hyderabad conducted the DNA test on dead foetus to establish paternity in rape case. He was examined as PW. He stated that after the detailed examination, the result was submitted vide Ext. P-185. The operative portion of the report is as follows :

> "When DNA profiles in Track 3 (Premananda) was compared with that of Track 2 (tissue from the foetus) and Track 1 (Aruljothi) it is seen that every band present in Track 2 is fully accounted for either being inherited from the mother (Track 1) or from the alleged father (Track 3). The alleged father Premananda (source of Exhibit A) and the mother Aruljothi (source of Exhibit C) are, therefore, the biological parents of the dead foetus (source of Exhibit B)."

Dr. Lalji Singh was subjected to lengthy cross-examination. He has categorically stated that if really there is any contamination, it would result only in non-matching of bands. He has also stated that multilocus/single-locus probe have been carried out throughout the world for DNA test.

Regarding database and contamination Dr. Lalji has stated in cross-examination as under :

> "As far as paternity is concerned, the paternity of the child is determined by identifying which are the bands of maternal and which are paternal. Therefore, comparison of DNA fingerprinting of the child with the mother will identify which are the bands maternally inherited. Elimination of these bands will leave those bands inherited from the child's father, the paternally specific bands. If the alleged father's fingerprinting pattern contains all of these bands, then he is the true biological father of that child and paternity is confirmed. The article published by a laboratory—CELLMARK, United States is ext. D-42."

The witness further clarified that a laboratory error can produce mismatch but it cannot produce a proper match.

The witness further clarified that when the sample is taken in a sterile container following the instructions given by CCMB scrupulously there is no possibility of any bacterial or any other infection.

The witness further stated that the contamination never results in proper match. It can give rise to exclusion not to positive inclusion. The witness in cross-examination has specifically stated as under :

> "According to me, for paternity test, large-scale population database was neither > required not even today. When the samples of the parents are not available and when one has to establish the identity of the child based on probability only then database is required. In short, where both the parents are available, no database is required for paternity testing."

Both the trial Court and the High Court have appreciated the evidence of Dr. Lalji Singh and correctly. Kamalantha v. State of Tamil Nadu, 2005 SCC (Cri) 1121 (1149-50).

[13700] ● Presumption under Section 112, Evidence, cannot be rebutted by DNA Test.—Law leans in favour of child being basterdised. The conclusiveness of presumption laid down in Section 112, Evidence Act cannot be rebutted by DNA Test. Banarsi Dass v. Teeku Dutta, (2005) 4 SCC 449 : 2005 (3) Supreme 569.

[13701] ● Legitimacy of child—D.N.A. Test should not be directed as a matter of routine.—DNA Test would not be directed as a matter of routine. Direction for DNA Test can be given only in deserving cases. Direction for DNA Test in for assurance of succession certificate was refused. Banarsi Das v. Teeku Datta, (2005) 4 SCC 449 (455) : JT 2005 (4) SC 627.

DOCUMENT

[13702] ● Document.—The forms prescribed under the Code requires that articles seized as a result of the warrant should be brought into Court, and a Magistrate, who issued a search warrant is entitled to see that his warrant is not abused and has been properly executed. In a suitable case, of course, a Magistrate may amend the warrant dispensing with the production of the goods or documents before him. That would however be in a clear case only, but if the Magistrate so desires he need not amend the form and keep the control of the goods or documents to himself. Mohammad Sirajuddin v. R.C. Mishra, AIR 1962 SC 759 : 1962 (1) CrLJ 692 (696) : 1962 Supp (1) SCR 545 : 1984 ECR 111 : (1983) 13 ELT 1370.

[13703] ● Public servant prohibited from producing document in Court.—A public servant, under the old income-tax Act (S. 54) was unconditionally prohibited from producing documents in a Court and, therefore, Section 91, CrPC would not apply to such a person. C.I.T. v. Laxmi Chand, AIR 1962 SC 1121 : (1962) 2 CrLJ 254.

[13704] ● Court to draw adverse inference when.—The Court has to drawn an adverse inference, when all the relevant documents have not been produced. Raghavamma v. Chenchamma, AIR 1964 SC 136 : (1964) 2 SCR 933.

[13705] ● Order for return of document to party from whom seized.—There is no provision under S. 19-A of the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, 1947 or any other section of the Act that the documents be returned to the party from whose custody they were seized, without an order from the Magistrate and that therefore no order for their return can be made by any other authority. No such express provision is necessary. Documents seized have to be returned if the law provides that they are not to be retained after a certain period of time. Such a direction under the statute is sufficient justification and the authority for the person in possession of the documents to return them to the person from whose possession they had been seized. Provisions are necessary for retaining documents of others and not for returning them to the persons entitled. Nilratan Sixar v. Lakshmi Narayan Ram Niwas, AIR 1965 SC 1 : 1965 (1) CrLJ 100 (104, 105) : (1964) 7 SCR 724.

[13706] ● Section 94, CrPC 1895 not to apply to accused person.—Section 94, on its true construction, does not apply to an accused person on trial. No specific words indicate its application to accused persons on trial. A limitation should be put on wide words used; otherwise calling upon an accused person to produce documents which are incriminating as against him, will negate the safeguard of Art. 20(3) of the Constitution of India. It may be that this Construction of Section 94 would render Section 96 useless. But to a search by the police officer under Section 165, Art. 20(3) has no application. State of Gujarat v. Shyam Lal Mohan Lal Choksi, AIR 1965 SC 1251 : 1965 (2) CrLJ 256 : (1965) 2 SCR 457.

[13707] ● Entry made by public servant in official record.—The reason why an entry made by a public servant in public or other official book, register, or record stating a fact in issue or a relevant fact has been made relevant is that when a public servant makes it himself in the discharge of his official duty, the probability of its being truly and correctly recorded is high. Brij Mohan Singh v. Priya Brat Narain Sinha, AIR 1965 SC 282 (286) : (1965) 3 SCR 861 (864).

[13708] ● Summoning of document—Matter within discretion of trial Court.—Whether a particular document should be summoned or not is not essentially in the discretion of the trial Court. Except fro any good reasons, High Court should not interfere with that discretion. Assistant Customs Collector, Bombay v. L.R. Melwani, AIR

1970 SC 962 : 1970 CrLJ 885 : (1969) 2 SCR 438.

[13709] ● Case instituted on private complaint.—Section 173, CrPC is attracted only in a case investigated by a Police officer under Chapter XIV followed up by a final report. Therefore, in a criminal prosecution instituted on private complaint the documents mentioned in sub-Section (5) of Section 173, CrPC cannot be made available to the accused. Assistant Collector of Customs, Bombay v. L.R. Melwani, AIR 1970 SC 962 : 1970 CrLJ 885 : (1969) 2 SCR 438.

[13710] ● Entry whether made in discharge of official duty—Not proved.—In the instant case it has not been proved that the entry in question was made by a public servant. No proof has been led as to who made the entry and whether the entry was made in the discharge of an official duty. In the result it must be held that Ex. D., the hath chitha was rightly held by the High Court to be inadmissible. Ram Prasad Sharma v. State of Bihar, AIR 1970 SC 326 : (1969) 2 SCC 359 : 1970 CrLJ 496 (499) : (1970) 1 SCR 694.

[13711] ● Unproved and unexhibited school certificate.—The trial Court took into consideration an unproved and unexhibited school certificate which appears to have been obtained by the investigating officer. It is held that unproved and unexhibited school certificate cannot be relied upon. Ram Murti v. State of Haryana, AIR 1970 SC 1029 : 1970 SCC (Cri) 371 : 1970 CrLJ 991 (994, 995).

[13712] ● Proof of solemnization of second marriage.—In the present case the High Court was of the view that the statement contained in Ex-2 would really be a confession statement and declining to act on the same for two reasons : firstly, that the statement in Ex-2 had not been put to the respondent when he was examined under Section 342, CrPC so as to give him an opportunity to explain the statements contained therein; Secondly, that even if the statement contained in Ex-2 can be taken into account by themselves they will not be proof of the fact that all the essential ceremonies necessary for a marriage have been performed. The reasons by the High Court are substantially correct. Priya Bala Ghosh v. Suresh Chandra, AIR 1971 SC 1153 : (1971) 1 SCC 864 : 1971 SCC (Cri) 253 : 1971 CrLJ 939 (944) : (1971) 3 SCR 961.

[13713] ● Person appearing in response to summons under Section 94(1), CrPC if becomes witness.—According to sub-section (2) of Section 94, a person required under the section merely to produce a document shall be deemed to have complied with the requisition if he "causes such document to be produced instead of attending personally to produce the same." There is nothing on the chapter to provide that the person who appears in the Court, in pursuance of its summons under sub-section (1) of Section 94 thereby becomes a witness and can be examined and cross-examined by the Court although he has not been cited as a witness in the proceedings. Even if a person produces the document for which a summons has been issued to him, Section 139 of the Evidence Act clearly provides that he does not thereby become a witness by the mere fact that he produces it, and he cannot be cross-examined unless and until he is called as a witness. Parmeshwari Devi v. State, AIR 1977 SC 403 : (1977) 1 SCC 169 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 74(76) : 1977 CrLJ 245 : 1976 CrLR (SC) 553 : (1977) 2 SCR 160.

[13714] ● Suit for declaration that appellants Indian Nationals.—The appellants instituted a suit for a declaration that they are Indian nationals. The Court found that the appellants have not produced any document to prove that the appellants 1 and 3 were born in India or any certificate from any school which would prove that they studied in India. No documents were produced to show that the appellants were doing any work in the ferry ghat or living in India. No voters list or any ration records were produced to substantiate their plea that they were Indian citizens. The counsel drew our attention to the fact that the document, the alleged mortgage deed was filed in Court but submitted that through the mistake of the advocate, it was not marked as an exhibit. It admitted that the document was not mentioned by any of the witnesses and was not put in evidence. The executant of the document which is styled as mortgage deed and is dated 29.9.1947, is Md. Mabeswar Ali Chaudhury who was examined on behalf of the appellants in the trial Court. Through this mortgage deed the appellants in the trial Court. Through this mortgage deed he leased 4 Bighas of land for Rs. 50. There is no evidence to prove that Mabeswar Ali is the owner of the land. He failed to produce any document to show that he owned any land. Even after taking into account the document on the counsel placed considerable reliance, though not marked in the Court below, there is no material for coming to the conclusion that the appellants are citizens of India. Abdul Rahman Haldar v. Union of India, AIR 1978 SC 1454 : (1978) 3 SCC 138 : 1978 SCC (Cri) 362 (363).

[13715] ● Expression "person" in Section 9(1), CrPC.—It is indisputable that according to the majority opinion in State of Bombay v. Kathi Kalu Oghad, AIR 1961 SC 1808 : (1962) 3 SCR 10 : (1961) 2 CrLJ 856 the expression "person" in Section 9(1), CrPC, 1973 does not take within its sweep a person accused of an offence which would mean that a summon issued to an accused person to produce a thing or document considered necessary or desirable for the purpose of an investigation, inquiry or trial would imply compulsion and the document or thing so produced would be compelled testimony and would be violative of the constitutional immunity against self-incrimination. V.S. Kuttan Pillai v. Ramakrishnan, AIR 1980 SC 185 : (1980) 1 SCC 264 : 1980 SCC (Cri) 226 (232) : 1980 CrLJ 196 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 657.

[13716] ● Absence of proof of mis-appropriation of govt. money by accused.—Where there was no evidence to establish, that the accused misappropriated any Government money or that he prepared false muster rolls, no offence under Section 214 is established.

Conviction under Section 214 was confirmed by the High Court. Accused was acquitted for charge under Section 165-A by the trial Court. Essence of the case against the accused was that, he had misappropriated Government money by preparing false muster rolls. Certain incriminating documents alleged to be in the handwriting of the accused came into the possession of a person and in order to prevent him from taking further action the accused was alleged to have given him bribe. No evidence was produced in regard to the preparation of false muster rolls which had themselves not been produced nor nay one examined to say that his name was shown in the muster rolls as if he had been paid wages, though in fact he was not so paid. There was, therefore, no evidence to establish that the accused misappropriated any Government money or that he prepared false muster rolls. In view of the infirmities, the accused was not liable to be convicted on the charge under Section 214. The High Court's judgment was reversed. Mohd. Aslam v. State of M.P., AIR 1981 SC 1735 : (1979) 3 SCC 767 : 1979 SCC (Cri) 864 : 1981 CrLJ 1285 : 1979 CrLR (SC) 1 : 1979 SCCrR 344.

[13717] ● Evidence—Appreciation of—Proof.—"Undoubtedly, mere proof of the handwriting of a document would not tantamount to proof of all the contents or the facts stated in the document. If the truth of the facts stated in a document is in issue, mere proof of the handwriting and execution of the document would not furnish evidence of the truth of the facts or contents of the document. The truth or otherwise of the facts or contents so stated would have to be proved by admissible evidence, i.e., by the evidence of those persons who can vouchsafe for the truth of the facts in issue." Ramji Dayawala & Sons (P) Ltd. v. Invest Import, AIR 1981 SC 2085 (2092) : (1981) 1 SCC 80 : (1981) 1 SCR 899.

[13718] ● No legal requirement that public or official book be kept by public officer.—"Under S. 35 of the Evidence Act, all that is necessary is that the document should be maintained regularly by a person whose duty it is to maintain the document and there is no legal requirement that the document should be maintained by a public officer only. The High Court seems to have confused the provisions of Sections 35, 73 and 74 of the Evidence Act in interpreting the documents which were admissible not as public documents or documents maintained by public servants under Ss. 34, 73 or 74 but which were admissible under Section 35 of the Evidence Act. . . . A perusal of the provisions of S. 35 would clearly reveal that there is no legal requirement that the public or other official book should be kept only by a public officer but all that is required is that it should be regularly kept in discharge of her official duty." Umesh Chandra v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1982 SC 1057 (1059, 1060) : (1982) 2 SCC 202 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 396 : 1982 CrLJ 994 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 259 : (1982) 3 SCR 583 : 1982 UJ (SC) 426.

[13719] ● Non-supply of material and documents alongwith grounds of detention.—"It is true that under sub-s. (3) of S. 3 of the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities act, 1974 it is provided that for the purpose of Art. 22(5) of the Constitution, the communication to a person detained in pursuance of the detention order of the grounds on which the order has been made shall be made as soon as may be after the detention, but ordinarily not later than five days and in exceptional circumstances and for reasons to be recorded in writing, not later than fifteen days, from the date of detention. This provision under which five days' period in normal circumstances and fifteen days' period in exceptional circumstances has been provided relates to the supply or communication of the grounds on which the order of detention has been made to the detenue. It has no reference to the documents and material on the basis of which the detention order has been made and it is quite clear that there is no reason why the documents and materials in support of the grounds on the basis of which the detention order has been made, the same being ex-hypothesis in existence at the time of the issuance of the detention order and framing of the grounds, should not be supplied to the detenue along with the grounds. Non-supply of such material and documents along with the grounds would clearly amount to a violation of the safeguard guaranteed under Art. 22(5) of the Constitution. Since in the instant case that safeguard afforded to the datenue has been violated, further detention of the detenue would be illegal and void." Sunil Dutt v. Union of India, AIR 1982 SC 53 (54) : (1982) 3 SCC 405 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 62 : 1982 CrLJ 193 : 1983 CrLR (SC) 535.

[13720] ● Documents relied on by authorities not supplied with grounds of detention.—In the view that we have taken in a number of decisions starting from Smt. Pechu Devi Choraria's case (1980) 4 SCC 531 to the case of Kamla Kanahaiya Lal Khasalami's case, AIR 1981 SC 814, it is manifest that the question of demanding the documents is wholly irrelevant because it is the constitutional mandate whither requires the detaining authority to give the documents relied on or referred to in the order of detention pari passu the grounds of detention in order that the detenue may make an affective representation immediately instead of waiting for the documents to be supplied with. In the instant case, the detenue did make a representation promptly on December 30, 1980 but was seriously handicapped in making an effective representation because the aforesaid documents which were of vital importance were not supplied to him. Mohd. Zakir v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1982 SC 696 (696-697) : (1982) 3 SCC 216 : 1982 SCC (Cri) 605 : 1982 CrLJ 611 : 1982 CrLR (SC) 569.

[13721] ● Public documents what are.—Section 73, Evidence Act prescribes what the public documents are. Section 75 declares all other documents are private. Section 35 enacts that if there is an entry in any public or official book, register or record and if there is any such entry in any book maintained under a statute by any person authorised by the statute to make the entry then such entries are relevant facts. To bring a document under the sweep of Section 35, Evidence Act, it must be shown that the concerned document was (a) prepared by a public servant and (b) it was so done in discharge of his official duty or prepared by one in performance of duty specially enjoined by law. The reason, as explained by this Court in Ram Prasad v. State of Bihar, AIR 1970 SC 326 : (1969) 2 SCC 359 : 1970 CrLJ 496 : 1970 Mad LJ (Cri) 102 : 1970 BLJR 144 : (1970) 1 SCJ 184 : 1970 Pat LJR 189 : (1970) 1 SCR 694, as to why an entry made by a public servant in a public or other official book, register, or record stating a fact in issue or a relevant fact has been made relevant is that when a public servant makes it himself in discharge of this official duty, the probability of its being truly and correctly recorded is high. State of Bihar v. Radha Krishna Singh, AIR 1983 SC 684 : (1983) 2 SCC 118 : (1983) 2 SCR 808 : (1983) 1 Scale 789.

[13722] ● Admissibility of document—Conditions to be fulfilled.—Section 35 of the Evidence act requires the following conditions to be fulfilled before a document can be admissible under this section :

(1) the document must be in the nature of an entry in any public or other official book, register or record;

(2) it must state a fact in issue or a relevant fact; and

(3) the entry must be made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duties or in performance of his duties especially enjoined by the law of the country in which the relevant entry is kept. ... Admissibility of a document is one thing and its probative value quite another—these two aspects cannot be combined. A document may be admissible and yet may not carry any conviction and the weight of its probative value may be nil. ... We would like to mention here that even if a document may be admissible or an ancient one, it cannot carry the same weight or probative value as a document which is prepared either under a Statute, Ordinance or an Act which requires certain condition to be fulfilled. ... In our opinion, therefore, where a report is given by a responsible officer, which is based on evidence of witnesses and documents and has a statutory flavour in that it is given not merely by a administrative Officer but under the authority of a statute, its probative value would indeed be very high so as to be entitled to great weight. The probative value of the documents which however ancient they may be, do not disclose source of their information or have not achieved sufficient notoriety is precious little. State of Bihar v. Radha Krishna Singh, AIR 1983 SC 684 (694, 695, 697, 698, 714) : (1983) 3 SCC 118 : (1983) 2 SCR 808 : (1983) 1 Scale 789.

[13723] ● Non-supply of document not substitute for copies of documents.—The explanation for the non-supply of the document cannot be a substitute for the copies of the documents without which the respondent could not have made any effective representation against the detention. Union of India v. Haji Mastan Mirza, AIR 1984 SC 681 (684) : (1984) 2 SCC 427 : 1984 SCC (Cri) 271 : 1984 CrLJ 610 : 1984 CrLR (SC) 117 : 1984 (1) Crimes 651.

[13724] ● Letter addressed subsequently by father of deceased standing in position of prosecutor.—Admittedly, by 29-4-1973 when this letter is said to have been written, investigation had started on the basis of the first information report and, therefore, a letter written by PW-1 who stood in the place of the prosecutor would not al all be admissible in evidence. Vinod Chaturvedi v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1984 SC 911 (913) : (1984) 2 SCC 350 : 1984 SCC (Cri) 250 : 1984 CrLJ 814 : 1984 CrLR (SC) 202 : (1984) 3 SCR 93 : (1984) 1 Crimes 733.

[13725] ● Non-supply of copies of documents relied upon in grounds of detention.—"This Court has repeatedly held in several decisions that the failure to supply copies of documents referred to and relied upon in the grounds of detention under the Conservation of Foreign Exchange and Prevention of Smuggling Activities Act, 1974 vitiates the detention itself. In the present case also copies of documents which were indisputably material documents and were referred to in the grounds of detention and relied upon for the purpose of detention were admittedly not supplied to the respondent. Therefore, the detention of the respondent was bad in law and the order of detention could not be sustained and is liable to be quashed." Union of India v. Haji Mastan Mirza, AIR 1984 SC 681 (684, 685) : (1984) 2 SCC 427 : 1984 SCC (Cri) 271 : 1984 CrLJ 610 : 1984 CrLR (SC) 117 : (1984) 3 SCR 1 : (1984) 1 Crimes 651.

[13726] ● Writer of letter not examined as witness.—When the writer of a letter (written by the Superintendent of Police to his administrative superior) has not been examined as a witness and no opportunity has been given to the defence to cross-examine the writer, the letter cannot be relied upon in the trial of a case. To rely on the contents of such a letter in the said circumstances would be totally misconceived. Vinod Chaturvedi v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1984 SC 911 : (1984) 2 SCC 350 : 1984 SCC (Cri) 250 : 1984 CrLJ 814 : 1984 CrLR (SC) 202 : (1984) 1 Crimes 733.

[13727] ● Search and seizure—When illegal.—"The view taken by single judge of the Calcutta High Court in New Central Jute Mills Co. Ltd. case AIR 1976 Cal 178 that once the authorisation for carrying out the search is found to be illegal on account of the absence of recording of reasons in the formation of a reasonable belief, the officer who has seized documents during such search must return the document seized as a result of the illegal search is against the weight of judicial opinion on the subject and does not commend to us." Pratap Singh v. Director of Enforcement, Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, AIR 1985 SC 989 : (1985) 3 SCC 72 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 312 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 589 : (1985) 3 SCR 969.

[13728] ● Issuance of search warrant found to be not illegal or invalid.—If the officer who issued the search warrant had material for forming a reasonable belief to exercise the power, the search cannot be styled as illegal and, therefore, no case is made out for directing return of the documents on the supposition that the search and seizure were illegal. Pratap Singh v. Director of Enforcement, Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, AIR 1985 SC 989 (995) : (1985) 3 SCC 72 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 312 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 589 : (1985) 3 SCR 969 : 1986 Cr App R (SC) 169.

[13729] ● Documents seized during search not providing sufficient material to officer for further action.—"That the documents seized during the search did not provide sufficient material to the officer for further action cannot be a ground for holding that the grounds which induced the reasonable belief were either imaginary or fictitious or mala fide conjured up." Pratap Singh v. Director of Enforcement, Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, AIR 1985 SC 989 (994) : (1985) 3 SCC 72 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 312 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 589 : (1985) 3 SCR 969.

[13730] ● Detenu not entitled to disclosure of confidential source of information.—In the instant case, the respondent contended and the High Court accepted the submission that not providing copies of intelligence reports to the detenue, though the same had been relied upon in the grounds of detention, vitiated the order of detention. The grounds of detention were divided into two groups, one levelled as criminal activities and the other as extremist activities. Against extremist activities it was further indicated, on the basis of 'confidential reports'. The facts by way accusations were detailed but copies of the reports as such were not furnished.

It is the settled position in law that the detenue has to be supplied all materials relied upon in making the order of detention with a view to being provided an adequate opportunity of making an effective representation. Personal freedom is an invaluable treasure and the founding fathers took great care to protect it by making appropriate provisions in the Constitution. Simultaneously taking into consideration the peculiar situations prevailing in the country, the right of the State to order preventive detention was also provided therein.

In order that personal freedom may not be curtailed beyond necessity and the executive administration may not make it an empty guarantee, detailed provisions were made in Art. 22 providing an effective procedure in the matter of making of representation and scrutiny of the materials in the presence of the detenue. While that is so, the detenue is not entitled to a disclosure of the confidential source of information used in the grounds or utilised for the making of the order. What is necessary for the making of an effective representation is the disclosure of the material and not the source thereof. By indicating that the facts have been gathered from confidential reports, a suggestive disclosure of the source has also been made. State of Rajasthan v. Shamsher Singh, AIR 1985 SC 1082 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 421 : (1985) 2 Crimes 242 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 1268.

[13731] ● Illegality of search not vitiate evidence collected.—"It has after been held that the legality in the method, manner or initiation of a search does not necessarily mean that anything seized during the search has to be returned. After all in the course of search, things or documents are required to be seized and such things and documents when seized may furnish evidence. Illegality of the search does not vitiate the evidence collected during such illegal search. The only requirement is that the Court or the authority before which such material or evidence seized during the search shown to be illegal, is placed has to be cautious and circumspect in dealing with such evidence or material." Partap Singh v. Director of Enforcement, Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, AIR 1985 SC 989 (994) : (1985) 3 SCC 72 : 1985 SCC (Cri) 312 : 1985 CrLR (SC) 589 : (1985) 3 SCR 969.

[13732] ● Seizure of various books documents and papers by Investigations Officer—Inspection of.—"In the course of investigation, the Investigating Officer has seized and taken into his possession various books, documents and papers. It appears that the petitioners have obtained directions for convening a meeting of the unsecured creditors of the company. As the meeting is once postponed it is likely that it may be directed to be convened in near future. To facilitate holding of the meeting of the company any documents seized in the course of the investigation are necessary, an appropriate application shall be made to the learned Company Judge and upon his direction, the Investigating Officer in whose possession or custody the documents are retained shall produce them before the Chairman, presiding over the meeting who after taking necessary inspection and permitting taking of the photostat copies shall return them to the Investigating Officer and he is entitled to retain the same and shall retain them. Respondents Nos. 1 and 2 are at liberty to approach the Investigating Officer and he will grant necessary facility for taking inspection of the documents seized." Eastern Spinning Mills Shri Virendra Kumar Sharda v. Rajiv Poddar, AIR 1985 SC 1668 (1669) : 1989 Supp (2) SCC 385 : 1985 CrLJ 1858.

[13733] ● Non-application of mind by detaining authority.—"It appears to be clear to us that the documents mentioned by the appellant in his petition were not placed before the detaining authority and therefore, were not considered by the detaining authority. It is possible that they were placed before the Screening Committee in the first instance, but that is immaterial. It was the detaining authority that had to consider the relevant material before taking a decision whether it was necessary to detain the appellant under the COFEPOSA, 1974. That was not done and there was, therefore, a clear non-application of mind by the detaining authority to relevant material.

"No one can dispute the right of the detaining authority to make an order of detention, if on a consideration of the relevant material, the detaining authority came to the conclusion that it was necessary to detain the appellant. But the question was whether the detaining authority applied its mind to relevant consideration. If it did not, the appellant would be entitled to be released." Sita Ram Somani v. Sate of Rajasthan, AIR 1986 SC 1072 : (1986) 2 SCC 86 : 1986 SCC (Cri) 104 (107) : 1986 CrLJ 860 : 1986 CrLR (SC) 145.

[13734] ● Vital document seized from custody of accused not produced.—In our opinion where, as in the instant case, defence is founded on a relevant and vital document seized from the custody of the accused and not deliberately produced, it is difficult to sustain the conviction of the accused.

It was the duty of the prosecution to produce the release order No. 115 in order to remove all doubts by showing that the goods which were being despatched by the appellant were not covered by the release order. The said statement of PW-2 that in the release orders dated March 7, 1968 delivery was marked in respect of the goods which were dispatched outside without producing the release order in question, is no evidence at all and is also no answer to defence plea that the said 22 bags of wheat were loaded in the truck as per the release order No. 115. Chittaranjan Choudhury v. State of Bihar, AIR 1987 SC 856 : (1987) 2 SCC 104 : 1987 SCC (Cri) 287 (289) : 1987 CrLJ 773 : 1987 CrLR (SC) 195 : JT (1987) SC 282 : (1987) 1 UJ (SC) 477 : (1987) 1 Crimes 383.

[13735] ● Document produced or given in evidence in proceeding in any Court.—The original document was not filed in the civil Court, and temporary injunction was obtained on the strength of its copy. Sub-S. (1)(b)(ii) of S. 195 of the CrPC lays down that no Court shall take cognizance of any offence described in the sections mentioned therein when such offence is alleged to have been committed in respect of "a document produced or given in evidence in a proceeding in any Court." Interpreting the similar language of the corresponding provision in the earlier Criminal Procedure Code of 1898, the Privy Council in Sanmukh Singh v. King, AIR 1950 PC 31 observed that by production of a copy of the alleged forged document it cannot be said that the document itself was given in evidence. By production of a copy of the allegedly forged document, it cannot be said that the document itself was given in evidence. As the document was not forged during the period it was in Court custody, the bar of S. 195(1)b)(ii) of the CrPC was not attracted.

Since the document alleged to have been forged was not, in the present case, produced in the Court, the provisions of S. 195(1)(b)(ii) of the Code have no application". Sushil Kumar v. State of Harayna, AIR 1988 SC 419 (419-420) : 1988 SCC (Cri) 136 : (1982) 2 SCR 182 : 1988 CrLJ 427 : 1988 CrLR (SC) 15 : JT 1987 (5) SC 586.

[13736] ● Supply of copies of relevant documents to detenu.—"There is no dispute that all the documents which were considered by the detaining authority in reaching his subjective satisfaction and referred to in the grounds of detention have been furnished to the detenue. It is not necessary to furnish copies of all the documents including the Bank pass books which are not material and relevant for reaching the subjective satisfaction of the detaining authority merely because they were mentioned in the panchnama Moreover, no application had been made before the detaining authority for giving the detenue the copies of the Bank pass books necessary for making an effective representation against the order of detention." Haridas Amarchand Shah of Bombay v. K.L. Verma, AIR 1989 SC 497 (500) : (1989) 1 SCC 250 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 111 : 1989 CrLJ 983 : 1989 CrLR (SC) 136 : JT (1988) 4 SC 632 : 1989 UJ (SC) 390 : (1989) 1 Crimes 111.

[13737] ● Partner responsible for carrying on business and during relevant time in charge of business.—The documents seized by PW-3, who investigated the case indicate even remotely that all the partners were doing the business of the firm. There is no other evidence on record on this aspect. With these tidbits, it is impossible to hold that when the offence was committed all the partners were conducting the business of the firm. However, Lajpat Rai, accused No. 3, cannot escape the liability. The material on record indicates that he was conducting the business of the firm and in fact, he has signed the statement Ex P-8 on behalf of the firm. His conviction cannot, therefore be disturbed. But the conviction of other partners is absolutely uncalled for. Sham Sunder v. State of Haryana, AIR 1989 SC 1982 (1985) : (1989) 4 SCC 630 : 1989 SCC (Cri) 783 : 1989 CrLJ 2201 : 1989 CrLR (SC) 725 : (1989) 3 SCR 886 : (1989) 3 Crimes 347.

[13738] ● Employee involved in certain case giving petition to his superiors narrating entire facts.—In the instant case, PW-8 sent a report by registered post to the Chief Minister with copies to the Home Minister, Director of Medical and Health Services and the Inspector General of Police only on 31-3-1967 which report is marked as Ex Ka-19 After carefully going through the document (Ex Ka-19) we are of the view that PW-8 could never be author of this document because it contains every detail of the occurrence from beginning to end even with reference to date and time, etc., the major portion of which was not within the knowledge of the author of this document. The illustrate it may be mentioned that while mentioning the number of the Jeep in Ex. Ka-9 it is stated thus : "In the jeep belonging to the Family Welfare Planning (Temporary No. 157-MRG-New number UPD 946 (1) drawn by Driver Mahfooz Ali". Similarly, even the minute details of the alleged offences which could not have been within the knowledge of PW-8 are made mention of in Ex Ka-19. Therefore, it is evident that this document was prepared by some one else and PW-8 was only a mere signatory to that petition. Further according to her on 31-3-1967 on which date the petition is said to have been sent by PW-8, Bhargava was almost in the deathbed. In fact, Bhargava died on that night itself. Can it be imagined that in such a tragic circumstance, PW-8 could have prepared this petition containing all the minute details which obviously would not have been within her knowledge and sent the same to the higher officials The answer would be in negative." State of U P

v. Pheru Singh, AIR 1989 SC 1205 (1213) : 1989 SCC (Cri) 420 : 1989 CrLJ 1135 : 1989 CrLR (SC) 405 : (1989) 2 Crimes 124.

[13739] ● Abetment of suicide by deceased due to instigation.—The degradation of society due to the pernicious system of dowry and the unconscionable demands made by greedy and unscrupulous husbands and their parents and relatives resulting in an alarming number of suicidal and dowry deaths by women has shocked the legislative conscience to such an extent that the Legislature has deemed it necessary to provide additional provisions of law, procedural as well as substantive, to combat the evil and has consequently introduced Ss. 113-A and 113-B in the Indian evidence Act and Ss. 498-A and 304-B in the IPC By reason of S. 113-A, the Courts can presume that the commission of suicide by a woman has been abetted by her husband or relation if two factors are present viz. (1) that the woman had committed suicide within a period of seven years from her marriage, and (2) that her husband or relation had subjected her to cruelty. These provisions are being referred to show that the Legislature has realised the need to proved for additional provisions in the Indian Penal Code and the Indian Evidence Act to check the growing menace of dowry deaths. In the present case, however, the abetment of the commission of suicide by Veena Rani is clearly due to instigation and would therefore, fall under the first clause of S. 306, I.P.C. Brij Lal v. Prem Chand, AIR 1989 SC 1661 : 1991 SCC (Cri) 394 (406) : 1989 CrLR (SC) 493 : JT 1989 (3) SC 1 : (1989) 2 SCR 612 : (1989) 2 Crimes 192.

[13740] ● Exaggerated devotion to rule of benefit doubt not nurture fanciful doubts.—Exaggerated devotion to the rule of benefit of doubt must not nurture fanciful doubts or lingering suspicions and thereby destroy social defence. Justice cannot be made sterile on the plea that it is better to let hundred guilty escape than punish an innocent. Letting guilty escape is not doing justice, according to the law. Gurbachan Singh v. Satpal Singh, AIR 1990 SC 209 : (1990) 1 SCC 445 : 1990 SCC (Cri) 151 (155-156) : 1990 CrLJ 562 : 1990 CrLR (SC) 100 : JT (1989) 4 SC 38 : (1989) 3 Crimes 526.

[13741] ● Mala fide when not to be inferred.—Undoubtedly when it was brought to the notice of the Investigating officer of the existence of certain documents that throw doubt on the complicity of the accused, it would be salutary that he would also investigate into those aspects vis-a-vis the evidence in his possession to find whether they would throw any doubt on the commission of the offence alleged or otherwise. The omission to investigate into those aspects by no stretch of imagination would be inferred to be a mala fide act. It may be a bona fide opinion. State of Bihar v. P.P. Sharma, AIR 1991 SC 1260 : 1992 1 SCC (Supp) 222 : 1992 SCC (Cri) 192 : 1991 CrLJ 1438 : (1991) 2 Crimes 113 : JT 1991 (2) SC 147.

[13742] ● Annexures and affidavits filed with petition—Quashing of proceedings by High Court by treating these documents as evidence not proper.—The annexures were neither part of the Police reports nor were relied upon by the Investigating Officer. These documents were produced by the respondents before the High Court along with the writ petitions. By treating "the annexures" and affidavits as evidence and by converting itself into a trial Court, the High Court pronounced the respondents to be innocent and quashed the proceedings. The least we can say that this was not a case where the High Court should have interfered in the exercise of inherent jurisdiction. State of Bihar v. P.P. Sharma, AIR 1991 SC 1260 (1268) : 1992 1 SCC (Supp) 222 : 1991 CrLJ 1438 : JT 1991 (2) SC 147.

[13743] ● Declaration under Section 9(1) COFEPOSA Act—Supply of documents.—"The declaration under Section 9(1), COFEPOSA Act, 1974 is challenged on the ground that the second respondent failed to forward the copies of the documents on which he placed reliance for arriving at the subjective satisfaction that the detenues was likely to smuggle good out of and through Bombay Airport. ... Now if we turn to paragraph 2 of the declaration it becomes evident that the second respondent merely relied on the grounds of detention and the material in support thereto which had already been served on the detenue and nothing more :

If the documents relied on for the purpose of framing a declaration under S. 9(1) of the COFEPOSA Act are the very same which were earlier supplied to the detenues alongwith the grounds of detention under S. 3(1) we fail to see what purpose would be served by insisting that those very documents should be supplied afresh. Such a view would only result in wasteful expenditure and avoidable duplication." Kamarunnissa v. Union of India, AIR 1991 SC 1640 : (1991) 1 SCC 128 : 1991 SCC (Cri) 88 (103) : 1991 CrLJ 2058 : JT 1990 (4) SC 7 : (1991) 1 Crimes 131.

[13744] ● Non-supply of copies of bail application or order refusing bail.—The non-supply of the copies of bail application or the order refusing bail to the detenue cannot affect the detenue's right of being afforded a reasonable opportunity guaranteed under Art. 22(5) when it is clear that the authority has not relied or referred to the same. Abdul Sathar Ibrahim Manik v. Union of India, AIR 1991 SC 2261 : (1992) 1 SCC 1 : 1992 SCC (Cri) 1 (17) : 1991 CrLJ 3291 : 1992 CrLR (SC) 21 : (1991) 4 SC 103.

[13745] ● Documents supply of—Failure to—Impaired detenu's right to make effective representation.—"It is not sufficient to say that the detenue were not supplied the copies of the documents in time on demand but it must further be shown that the non-supply has impaired the detenue's right to make an effective and purposeful representation. Demand of any or every document, however irrelevant it may be for the concerned detenue, merely on the ground that there is a reference thereto in the grounds of detention cannot vitiate an otherwise legal detention order. No hard and fast rule can be laid down in this behalf but what is essential is that the detenue must show that the failure to supply the documents before the meeting of the Advisory Board had impaired or prejudiced his right, however slight or insignificant it may be. In the present case, except stating that the documents were not supplied before the meeting of the Advisory Board, there is no pleading that it had resulted in the impairment of his right nor could Counsel for the petitioners point out any such prejudice." Kamarunnissa v. Union of India, AIR 1991 SC 1640 : (1991) 1 SCC 128 : 1991 SCC (Cri) 88 (102) : 1991 CrLJ 2058 : JT 1990 (4) SC 7 : (1991) 1 Crimes 131.

[13746] ● Non-supply of documents relating to another criminal case.—In the counter-affidavit field by the detaining authority himself in the High Court, it was clearly stated that the detenue was under misapprehension that he was an accused in criminal case No. 1026 of 1991 and as such he should be supplied also documents relating to the said case. As a matter of fact, he is not an accused in that case and as such non-supply of documents relating to that case has not caused any prejudice to him in making an effective representation as contemplated under Art. 22(5) of the Constitution. Besides, only a passing reference has been made to the other case and the detaining authority has not relied upon the same for arriving at his subjective satisfaction to retain the petitioner herein. State of Tamil Nadu v. C. Subramani, AIR 1992 SC 2161 : (1992) 4 SCC 495 : 1993 SCC (Cri) 28 (35) : 1992 CrLJ 3578 : (1992) 3 Crimes 286.

[13747] ● Dowry death—Suicide or homicide.—It is true that sometimes a case of suicide is presented as a case of homicide specially when the death is due to burn injuries. But it need not be pointed out that whenever the victim of torture commits suicide she leaves behind some evidence—may be circumstantial in nature to indicate that it is not a case of homicide but of suicide. It is the duty of the Court, in a case of death because of torture and demand for dowry, to examine the circumstances of each case and evidence adduced on behalf of the parties, for recording a finding on the question as to how the death has taken place.

While judging the evidence and the circumstances of the case, the Court has to be conscious of the fact that a death connected with dowry takes place inside the house, where outsiders who can be said to be independent witnesses in the traditional sense, are not expected to be present. The finding of guilt on the charge of murder has to be recorded on the basis of circumstances of each case and the evidence adduced before the Court. In the instant case, the occurrence took place in the open courtyard during the day-time which is not consistent with the theory of suicide. Apart from that as already stated above the dying declaration of the victim alongwith the evidence of PWs-6,7 and 8, which can not be discarded, fully establishes the charges levelled against the appellants. Om Parkash v. State of Punjab, AIR 1993 SC 138 : (1992) 4 SCC 212 : 1992 SCC (Cri) 848 (852, 853) : 1992 CrLJ 3935 : JT 1992 (4) SC 524 : (1992) 2 UJ (SC) 710 : (1992) 3 Crimes 581.

[13748] ● Documents required by Court not submitted in time.—"It betrays a misconception that any document can be produced at any time and stage of the proceedings and the Court can be expected to reassemble to give a fresh hearing or a second innings to fill the gaps left by the importers because of their default merely because they have the means to afford it. We cannot countenance such a demand and must deprecate strongly. We do so and reject both the applications. To allow them would encourage multiplicity of hearings and create a wrong precedent." Jain Exports Pvt. Ltd. v. Union of India, AIR 1993 SC 2383 (2389) : (1993) 4 SCC 51 : JT 1993 (4) SC 126 : (1993) 3 Scale 54 : (1993) 66 ELT 537.

[13749] ● Admission of additional documents by High Court in writ petition.—The admission of additional documents by the High Court in writ jurisdiction is an exercise of discretion with which this Court does not normally interfere. But the genuineness of documents is an aspect which goes to the root of the matter. If the records have been tempered and fictitious documents were produced before the High Court then it certainly vitiates the findings. In absence of any finding on it, may be because it was not raised in the High Court yet being a fundamental question which if found to be correct would render entire proceedings bad. It appears expedient to direct the Commissioner of survey and settlement to examine it after affording opportunity to both sides to lead evidence. The finding shall be recorded after examining the original records. Government of A.P. v. Karri Chenna Venkata Reddy, AIR 1994 SC 591 (591-592) : 1995 Supp (1) SCC 462.

[13750] ● Documents placed on file of Magistrate—Copies given to fugitive within two months from date of apprehension.—George was apprehended and produced before the Magistrate on 17.4.1989. Sufficient evidence in support of the extradition was to be produced within two months of apprehension. Ministry of External Affairs, Government of India presented the order of the Central Government dated 7.12.1988. All the documents which were sent along with the leller of request by the United States of America were also submitted before the learned Magistrate. The copies of all the documents, numbering 99 pages, were supplied to George by the Magistrate. The documents are duly authenticated and certified as required under Section 10 of the Extradition Act, 1962. These documents are eligible to be treated and received as evidence under Section 10 of the Extradition Act, 1962. Since these documents have been placed on the file of the Magistrate and copies thereof given to George within two months of the apprehension of George, it is futile to say that the terms of Art. 11 of 1931 treaty have been breached. Rosiline George v. Union of India, (1994) 2 SCC 80 : 1994 SCC (Cri) 304 (323, 324) : (1993) 3 Crimes 583 : (1994) 1 UJ 628.

[13751] ● Charge of continuous neglect of duty designed by.—The question whether the respondents omitted to do their mandatory duties for months together designedly or negligently can be inferred only on an overall view of all the material collected during investigation and not in isolation as has been done by the learned Courts below. That apart in a case instituted upon a Police report the Court is required, at the time of framing of the charges, to confine its attention to documents referred to under S. 173 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. In that context the Court was not justified in referring to, much less relying upon the law and the letters purportedly written by the accused when their authenticity and veracity are yet to be gone into. State of Jammu and Kashmir v. Sudershan Chakkar, AIR 1995 SC 1954 (1955) : (1995) 4 SCC 181 : 1995 SCC (Cri) 664 : 1995 CrLJ 3606.

[13752] ● Dying declaration disbelieved by High Court on ground that when deceased had 100% burn over her body how thumb-mark appearing on dying declaration.—The High Court disbelieved the dying declaration on the ground that even though according to the medical evidence Rita had 100% burns, the thumb-mark of Rita appearing on the dying declaration had clear ridges and curves. The High Court found the evidence of doctor (PW-1) unreliable as he failed to satisfactorily explain how such a thumb-mark could appear on the dying declaration when Rita had 100 per cent burns over her body. In view of such inconsistent evidence, the High Court was right in giving benefit of doubt to the respondents. State of Punjab v. Gian Kaur, AIR 1998 SC 2809 : 1998 SCC (Cri) 942 (943) : 1998 CrLR (SC) 299 : JT 1998 (2) SC 563 : (1998) 2 Crimes 25.

[13753] ● Power of Court to summon case diary.—The case diary of another case maintained under Section 172, CrPC is a document within the meaning of Section 91(1), CrPC and can be summoned by the Court under Section 91, CrPC dehors the provisions of Section 172, CrPC for the purpose of using the statements made in the said diary for contradicting a witness. State of Kerala v. Babu, AIR 1999 SC 2161 : (1999) 4 SCC 621 : 1999 SCC (Cri) 611 : 1999 CrLJ 3491 : 1979 AIR SCW 2172 : 1999 (3) Crimes 27 (36).

[13754] ● Production of document "necessary or desirable".—The powers conferred under Section 91 are enabling in nature, aimed at arming the Court or any officer-in-charge of a Police station concerned, to enforce and to ensure the production of any document or other things, "necessary or desirable", for the purposes of any investigation, inquiry, trial or other proceeding under the Code, by issuing a summons or a written order to those in possession of such material. The language of Section 91 would, no doubt indicate the width of the powers to be unlimited but the in-built limitation inherent therein takes its colour and shape from the stage or point of time of its exercise, commensurately with the nature of proceedings as also the compulsions of necessity and desirability, to fulfil the task or achieve the object. The question, before the trial Court, would be to address itself to find whether there is sufficient ground for proceeding tot he next stage against the accused. If the accused could produce any reliable material event at that stage which might totally affect even the very sustainability of the case, a refusal to even look into the materials so produced may result in injustice, apart from averting an exercise in futility at the expense of valuable judicial/ public time. Om Prakash Sharma v. C.B.I., AIR 2000 SC 2335 : (2000) 5 SCC 679 : 2000 SCC (Cri) 1014 : 2000 CrLJ 3478 (3480) : (2002) 2 Crimes 276.

13755] ● Bride burning—Cause of death suicidal not accidental.—An analysis of the evidence of PW-3 depicts the behavioural position received at the in-law place by Ekta. Further evidence, however, records that there has been no improvement of the behavioural pattern and she was subjected to dowry torture as also various abusive treatment by reason of not being able to bear a child. Incidentally, the two families, namely, the bride's and groom's, related to each other. The torture continued and reached its peak in July 1985 by reason of a booking of a Maruti Van by the complainant which was asked to be delivered to the accused/appellant, on refusal, however, to comply with the demand for delivery of the Van by the complainant, the relationship was further estranged and PW-3 was given a warning as regards the events to follow and it is only thereafter that this incident of burn injury took place. It has been further contended that the factum of hospitalisation of Ekta in any event negates any ill treatment or torture but to be treated as a positive evidence of goodwill and affection we are however unable to record our concurrence therewith having regard to the evidence and other material on record. The death of Ekta was caused by burn injuries only and having considered the nature of injuries and since one cannot but rule out an accidental death as discussed herein before, the death of Ekta cannot but be attributed to be suicidal on the basis of the circumstances as is available on record with the situation existing and having regard to statutory presumption this Courts cannot but lend concurrence to the opinion expressed by the High Court. Pawan Kumar v. State of Haryana, AIR 2001 SC 1324 : (2001) 3 SCC 628 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 594 : 2001 CrLJ 1679 : JT 2001 (3) SC 475 : 2001 Cr App R (SC) 323 : 2001 CrLR (SC) 309 : (2001) 2 Crimes 1.

13756] ● Non-supply of documents accompanying the report under S. 173, CrPC.—The accused is entitled to the entire set of documents which accompanied the report under Section 173, CrPC. As regards the case diary there is an embargo to the supply thereof subject to the rider that the Court can use them subject to the restrictions placed under Section 172(2) and (3), CrPC and the accused cannot claim to have copies of them. C.B.I., New Delhi v. Mohinder Singh, (2004) 13 SCC 578 : (2006) 1 SCC (Cri) 504 (505).

[13757] ● Documents to be supplied to detenu.—All the documents placed before the detaining authority need not be supplied to detenu. It is only the relevant documents that are to be supplied to him. Sunila Jain v. Union of India, (2006) 3 SCC 31 : 2006 (2) SCC (Cri) 90 : 2006 CrLJ 1636 : 2006 (1) Crimes 240.

[13758] ● Document required to be supplied to detenu.—All documents which are not material are not required to be supplied to detenu. The relevant documents must be supplied to detenu so as to enable him to make an effective representation. Adishwar Jain v. Union of India, (2006) 11 SCC 339 : JT 2006 (9) SC 432 : 2006 (8) Supreme 781.

[13759] ● Confessional statement of co-accused.—The grounds of detention merely refer to the confession by the co-accused. That does not form foundation for the detention. On the other hand, it appears that the detenu himself made a confession and that was the main factor, or which the order of detention was founded. It is not disputed that the confessional statement of the detenu was supplied to him. Above being the position, the High Court was justified in coming to the conclusion that though reference was made to co-accused's statement that was not relied upon for the purpose of detention. Senthamilselvi v. State of Tamil Nadu, (2006) 5 SCC 676 : 2006 (3) SCC (Cri) 50 : 2006 CrLJ 4605 (4605, 4606) : 2006 (3) Crimes 63 (SC).

[13760] ● Non-furnishing of copy of bail application to detenu.—On the petitioner's own showing, only that part of the application for grant of bail that the offence in question is a bailable, was relevant. No other submission had been raised at the bar. Whether a provision of law is bailable or not is a question of law. The same is presumed to be known to Courts and/or the detaining authority. It may not be necessary even to be stated in the application for bail. If a person had been released on bail on the ground that the offence is bailable, it would not be necessary to bring the said fact before the detaining authority. The detaining authority will have to satisfy himself on the basis of the materials placed on record, as to whether the order of preventive detention should be passed against the detenu or not.

It is also not in dispute that a copy of the order granting bail and order of remand has been furnished to the detenu. In this view of the matter we are of the opinion that non-furnishing of a copy of the application of bail cannot be said to be a ground which impaired the subjective satisfaction of the detaining authority or the same was a relevant fact which was required to be taken into consideration by him and the application for bail was required to be supplied to the detenu.

As in the fact of this case, we are satisfied that the application for bail was not a vital document copy whereof was required to be supplied to the detenu, in-our-opinion, the order of detention is not vitiated. Sunila Jain v. Union of India, 2006 (3) SCC 321 : 2006 (2) SCC (Cri) 90 : 2006 CrLJ 1636 : JT 2006 (2) SC 612 : 2006 (2) Scale 520 : 2006 (2) Supreme 277 : 2006 (1) Crimes 240 (SC).

[13761] ● Irrelevant documents need not be supplied to detenu.—"The document in question did not prove any smuggling prejudicial activity on the part of the detenu. It only shows that the Department of Foreign Trade had stopped all EXIM benefits to Sandip Exports Ltd., pending further action, as certain illegal activities of that company had come to its notice. The said document was, therefore, neither relevant nor necessary to decide whether the detenu had indulged in smuggling or other prejudicial activity. The detaining authority obtained satisfaction in regard to that aspect from the material that was placed by the sponsoring authority to show illegal activities which amounted to smuggling.

The said document was also not relevant to establish propensity or potentiality of the detenu to continue his illegal activities. The export-import violations, which amount to smuggling, involve considerable planning, organization and establishing a network. The propensity is deducible from the modus operandi adopted by the violator, the inclination of the violator to indulge in such activities and the further opportunity to commit such illegal activities. Persons indulging in such prejudicial activities routinely create 'front' companies and firms. The fact that a particular 'front' company is denied the EXIM benefits will not deter a violator from continuing such activities, as he can always operate through other 'front' companies/firms. The contention of the detenu that as the said order dated 15/20.4.2004, stopped the EXIM benefits to Sandip Exports Ltd., he could not have continued the alleged illegal activity, and therefore, the detention order was not warranted, is untenable. The EXIM benefits were stopped with reference to only one company namely. Sandip Exports Ltd., and that too till finalization of further action. The investigation and search by the Directorate of Revenue Intelligence, had disclosed that the detenu had other 'front' companies. In fact the detention order makes reference to a similar violation by the detenu by using M/s. Scandia Investments (P) Ltd., which was another 'front' company controlled by him and his family. When the benefits of illegal activity are stopped to a particular company, the brain behind the violation, would merely shift the operations to another 'front' company or start the activities through a new company. It should also to be noted that whenever any irregularities/violations in regard to export/import comes to the attention of the department, the benefits are stopped in the normal course, pending finalization of further action.

"Therefore, it cannot be said that the document whereby EXIM benefits to one of the companies controlled by the detenu was stopped, was a 'relevant' document, non-consideration of which would vitiate the detention order. The first contention is therefore rejected." Usha Agarwal v. Union of India, (2007) 1 SCC 295 : JT 2006 (9) 507 : 2006 (11) Scale 173.

[13762] ● Non-production irrelevant documents before detaining authority.—The High Court has examined the copies that were furnished to the detenu. In regard to the grievance relating to illegible copies occurring between pages 493 and 887 and the last page, the High Court found that these were copies of the documents which were supplied by the detenu himself, and the department could do no better than to furnish the copies thereof. If the documents furnished by the detenu to the department contained some portions or pages which were illegible, obviously the copies thereof furnished by the detaining authority to the detenu will also contain such illegible portions. The learned counsel for the appellant contented that if really any document furnished by the detenu was illegible, it could not have been used against the detenu. But this contention overlooks the fact that a document may contain several sheets and illegibility of some sheets or parts of some sheets will not come in the way of the authorities making use of the legible portions of the documents furnished by the detenu, supplemented by other documents secured during investigation. There is nothing strange in the department making use of partially legible documents furnished by detenu. Therefore, illegibility of portions of documents which are copies of documents furnished by the detenu, cannot be a ground for grievance by the detenu. Insofar as the allegation that some of the sheets between pages 124 to 371B were illegible, the High Court after having gone through the copies of documents furnished to the detenu, has found no substance in the contention. In fact, while acknowledging the copies of documents, the detenu has made an endorsement that they were legible.

The entire issue of furnishing of illegible copies is with reference to the question whether detenu's right to make an effective representation against his detention is hampered by non-supply of legible copies. The High Court after an examination of the copies of documents found that the detenu was not so hampered. Having gone through the representations made by the detenu against his detention, we also find that he was in no way hampered by the fact that a few of the sheets copies of documents were partly illegible. We therefore find no merit in the second condition, nor any reason to interfere with the finding of the High Court in this behalf. Usha Agarwal v. Union of India, (2007) 1 SCC 295 : 2006 CrLJ 89 (SC) : JT 2006 (9) SC 507 : 2006 (11) Scale 173.

[13763] ● Entry relevant material must be placed before detaining authority.—A detention under COFEPOSA Act is anticipatory and preventive. It is neither punitive nor curative. Preventive detention being one of the two exceptions to the constitutional protection under Article 22 against arrest and detention, certain procedural safeguards are provided in respect of exercise of the power to direct preventive detention. The procedural safeguards under the Constitution have been interpreted, to require every material which is relevant, having a bearing on the question as to whether a person should be detained under the Act, to be placed before the detaining authority, as the decision to detain a person is rendered by a detaining authority on his subjective satisfaction as to the existence of the grounds for such detention. The sponsoring authority should not undertake any exercise of examination and interpretation of the available material with a view to place the documents selectively before the detaining authority. It is not for the sponsoring authority to decide as to which of the relevant documents should be placed before the detaining authority, or which of the documents are likely to help or not help the prospective detenu. Consequently, the sponsoring authority cannot exclude any placed before the detaining authority. If the relevant facts or documents which may influence the subjective satisfaction of the detaining authority on the question whether or not to make the detention order, are not placed before the detaining authority, it may vitiate the detention order itself. It is no answer to say that the exclusion of a relevant document did not affect the decision to detain a person, in view of the other documents that were placed before the detaining authority or that the detaining authority would have come to the same conclusion even if he had considered the said document. Usha Agarwal v. Union of India, (2007) 1 SCC 295 : 2007 (1) SCC (Cri) 342 : 2007 CrLJ 39 (42, 43) : 2007 CrLJ 295 : 2007 (1) Crimes 79 (SC).

[13764] ● Failure to supply documents having direct bearing on detention order.—In the instant case, as some of the vital documents which had a direct bearing on the detention order had not been placed before the detaining authority, there was sufficient ground for the detenu to question such omission. Held, on accused of the non-supply of the documents, the detenu was prevented from making an effective representation against the detention. The order of High Court quashing the detention order was justified and warranted no interference. Union of India v. Ram Bhandari, (2008) 17 SCC 348 : 2008 CrLJ 4567 : 2008 (4) Crimes 130 (SC).

[13765] ● Non-supply of relied upon documents.—On proper construction of clause (5) of Article 22 read with Section 3(3) of COFEPOSA Act, it is imperative for valid continuance of detention that the detenu must be supplied all documents, statements and other materials relied upon in the grounds of detention. In the instant case, admittedly, the relied upon document, the detention order of Anil Kumar was not supplied to the detenu and the detenu was prevented from making effective representation which has violated his constitutional right under clause (5) of Article 22 of the Constitution.

Consequently, we accept appeals. The impugned detention order is quashed and the detenu is directed to be released forthwith, if not required in any other case. Thahira Haris v. Government of Karnataka, AIR 2009 SC 2184 : (2009) 11 SCC 438 : 2009 CrLJ 2451 (2456) : JT 2009 (5) SC 417.

DOGS TRACKING

[13766] ● Dogs tracking.—Evidence of tracker dog has been much discussed. In Canada and in Scotland it has 000been admitted. But in the United States there are conflicting decisions :

There have been considerable uncertainty in the minds of the Courts as to the reliability of dogs in identifying criminals and much conflict of opinion on the question of the admissibility of their actions in evidence. A survey of the cases, however, reveals that most Courts in which the question of the admissibility of evidence of trailing by blood-hounds has been presented take the position that upon a proper foundation being laid by proof that the dogs were qualified to trail human beings, and that the circumstances surrounding the trailer were such as to make it probable that the person trailed was the guilty party, such evidence is admissible and may be permitted to go to the jury for what it is worth as one of the circumstances which may tend to connect the defendant with the Crime. Para Am. Juris. 2nd edn. Vol. 29, p. 429. There are three objections which are usually advanced against the reception of such evidence. First, since it is manifest that the dog cannot go into the box and give his evidence on oath, and consequently submit himself to cross-examination the dog's human companion must go into the box and report the dog's evidence, and this is clearly hearsay. Secondly, there is a feeling that in criminal cases the life and liberty of a human being could not be dependent on canine inferences. And, thirdly, it is suggested that even if such evidence is strictly admissible under the rules of evidence it should be excluded because it is likely to have a dramatic impact on the jury out of proportion to its value. In R. v. Montgomery, 1866 NI 160 a police constable observed men stealing wire by the side of a railway line. They ran away when he approached them. Shortly afterwards the police got them on a nearby road. About an hour and half later the police tracker dog was taken to the base of the telegraph pole and when he had made a few preliminary sniffs he set off and tracked continuously until he stopped in evident perplexity at the spot where the accused had been put into the police car. At the trial it appeared that other evidence against the accused that they had been stealing the wire was inconclusive and that the evidence of the behaviour of the tracker dog was crucial to sustain the conviction. In these circumstances the Court of Criminal Appeal ruled that the evidence of the constable who handled the dog on its tracking and reported the dog's reactions was properly admitted. The Court did not regard its evidence as a species of hearsay but instead the dog was described as "a tracking instrument" and the handler was regarded as reporting the movements of the instrument, in the same way that a constable in traffic case might have reported on the behaviour of his speedometer. It was argued in that case that the tracker dog's evidence could be likened to the type of evidence accepted from scientific experts describing chemical reactions, blood tests and the actions of bacilli. The comparison does not, however, appear to be sound because the behaviour of chemicals, blood corpuscles and bacilli contains no element of conscious volition or deliberate choice. But Dogs are intelligent animals with many though processes similar to the thought processes of human beings and wherever you have thought processes there is always the risk of error, deception and even self-deception. For these reasons we are of the opinion that in the present state of scientific knowledge evidence of dog tracking even if admissible, is not ordinarily of much weight. Abdul Razak Mintoza Dafadar v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1970 SC 283 : (1969) 2 SCC 234 : 1970 CrLJ 373 (377) : (1970) 1 SCR 551.

[13767] ● Pointing out by dogs of dog squad and injuries on person of accused not conclusively leads guilt of accused.—The possibility that the entire case was built up after the dogs of the dog squad pointed towards the appellant cannot be ruled out. Since, the appellant had slept in the verandah near the cot where the dead body of his wife was found, had locked the collapsible door with the recovered lock before going to sleep and had himself been close to the dead body before the Police came, the picking up of smell by the dogs and pointing towards the accused could not be said to be a circumstance which could exclude the possibility of guilt of any person other than that of the appellant or be compatible only with hypothesis of guilt of the appellant. The pointing out by the dogs could as well lead to a misguided suspicion that the appellant had committed the crime. Surinder Pal Jain v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1993 SC 1723 (1732) : 1993 Supp (3) SCC 681 : 1993 SCC (Cri) 1096 : 1993 CrLJ 1871 : (1993) 1 Crimes 987.

[13768] ● Reception of evidence—Criticism advanced against.—A four-fold criticism is advanced against the reception of such evidence. First, it is not possible to test the correctness of the canine movements through the normal method available in criminal cases re in cross-examination. Second is that the life and liberty of human beings should not be made in depend on animal sensibilities. Third is that the possibility of a dog misjudging the smell or mistaking the track cannot be ruled out, for many a time such mistakes have happened. Fourth is that even today science has not finally pronounced about the accuracy of canine tracking. Gode Lakshmi Mangaraju v. State of U.P., AIR 2001 SC 2677 : (2001) 6 SCC 205 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 1082 (1087) : JT 2001 (5) SC 340.

[13769] ● Sniffer/Tracker dog's evidence.—There are basically three kinds of police dogs—the tracker dogs, the patrol dogs and sniffer dogs. Recent trends show that hounds belonging to certain special breeds sheltered in a specialised kennels and imported special training or capable of leading the investigating agency to very useful clue in crime detection and thereby help detectives to make a break through in investigation. English Courts have already started treating such evidence as admissible. In Canada and in Scotland, such evidence has become of late, admissible though in the United States the position is not uniform in different States. Gode Lakshmi Mangaraju v. State of U.P., AIR 2001 SC 2677 : (2001) 6 SCC 205 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 1082 : JT 2001 (5) SC 340.

[13770] ● Trained dogs can pick up scent from scene of object.—The uncanny smelling power of canine species has been profitably tapped by investigating agencies to track the culprits. Trained dogs can pick up scent from the scene of any object and trace out the routes through which the culprits would have gone to reach their hide-outs. Developing countries have utilised such sniffer dogs in a large measure. In India also the utilisation of such tracker dogs is on the increase. Though such dogs may be useful to the investigating officers, can their movements be of any help to the Court in evaluating the evidence in criminal cases? Gode Lakshmi Mangaraju v. State of U.P., AIR 2001 SC 2677 : (2001) SCC 1082 : 2001 SCC (Cri) 205 : JT 2001 (5) SC 340.

DOLI INCAPAX

[13771] ● Domicile of choice.—The domicile of choice is acquired by actually settling in another country with the intention of permanently residing there. The onus to prove that a person has changed his domicile of origin lies upon him and for this purpose, the course of his conduct both before and after the material time is relevant. Kedar Pandey v. Narain Bikram, AIR 1966 SC 160 : (1966) 1 SCR 102.

[13772] ● Doli incapax.—When a teenager, tensed by his elders or provoked by the stone-hit on the head of his father, avenges with dangerous sticks or swords, copying his brothers, we cannot altogether ignore his impaired understanding, his tender age and blinding environs and motivations causatory of his crime. It is common grounds that the appellant was 12 years old at the time of occurrence. At common law in England, as noticed by Archbold in Criminal Pleading, evidence and Practice, a child under 14 years is presumed not to have reached the age of discretion and to be doli incapax; but this presumption may be rebutted by strong and pregnant evidence of a mischievous discretion.... for the capacity to commit crime, do evil and contract guilt; is not so much measured by years and days as by the strength of the delinquent's understanding and judgment. In English law, when an adolescent is charged with an offence the prosecution has to prove more than the presence of a guilty mind but must go further to make out that "when the boy did the act, he knew that he was doing what was gravely wrong, not merely what was wrong but what was gravely wrong, seriously wrong". Adult intent, automatically attributed to infant means, is itself an adult error. It is every day experience that little boy as a class have less responsible appreciation of dangers to themselves or others by injurious acts and so it is that the new penology in many countries immunises crimes committed by children of and below ten years of age and those between the ages of 10 and 14 are 'in a twilight zone in which they are morally responsible not as a class, but as individuals when they know their act to be wrong'. The Indian penal Code, which needs updating in many portions, extends total immunity upto the age of seven (Section 82) and partial absolution upto the age of twelve (Section 83). No evidence as to whether he was under twelve, as conditioned by Section 83, I.P.C. is adduced; no attention to feeble understanding or youthful frolic is addressed. And we are past the judicial decks where factual questions like this can be investigated. The prima facie inference of intent to endanger the life of the deceased with a sharp weapon stands unrebutted. Indeed, robust realism easily imputes doli capax to twelver who cuts on the neck of another with a sword; for, if he does not know this to be wrong or likely to rip open a vital part he must be very abnormal and in greater need of judicial intervention for normalisation. The conviction under Section 326, I.P.C. therefore, must be reluctantly sustained. When such is the law, we cannot innovate to attenuate, submit to spasmodic sentiment, or ride an unregulated benevolence. Hiralal Mallick v. state of Bihar, AIR 1977 SC 2236 : 1977 SCC (Cri) 538 : 1977 CrLJ 1921 : 1977 CAR 320 : 1977 CrLR (SC) 395.

DOMICILE

[13773] ● Domicile.—The language of Section 4, Penal Code, and Section 188, Criminal Procedure Code, means that if at the time of the commission of an offence the accused is a citizen of India, the Penal Code applies to him and he is subject tot he jurisdiction of the Courts in India, even if the offence is committed outside India. On the other hand, if at the time of the commission of the offence the accused is not a citizen of India, and the offence is committed completely outside India, the Penal Code does not apply to him and Indian Courts have no jurisdiction over him

Illustration (a) to Section 4 delimits its scope and indicates its extent and ambit. It clearly shows that if at the time of the commission of an offence outside India the accused is not an Indian citizen, Section 4 could not apply to his case. The circumstance that after the commission of the offence the accused has become domiciled in India or has acquired Indian citizenship cannot confer any jurisdiction on Indian Courts retrospectively so as to authroise them to try the accused for an offence committed and completed outside India at a time when he was not an Indian citizen. In other words the test for the determination of the question of the applicability of Section 4 is citizenship at the time of the commission of the offence, and not citizenship thereafter. Central Bank of India Ltd. v. Ram Narain, AIR 1955 SC 36 : 1955 CrLJ 152 : 1955 SCJ 4 : 1954 SCA 1305 : 1955 SCR 697 : 1955 AWR (Sup) 12 : 1954 MWN 999 : 57 Pun LR 153.

[13774] ● Domicile—Different for different states.—Domicile has reference to the system of law by which a person is governed, and we speak of the domicile of a country, we assume that the same system of law, prevails all over the country. But it might well happen that laws relating to succession and marriage might not be the same all over the country, and that different in the State might have different laws in respect of these matters. In that case, each are having a distinct set of laws would itself be regarded as a country for the purpose of domicile. D.P. Joshi v. State of M.P., AIR 1955 SC 334 : 1955 SCR 1915 : 1955 SCA 511.

[13775] ● Domicile of origin.—Article 5(c), Constitution of India.—The domicile of origin communicated by operation of law to the appellant at birth at Sylhet could not on partition of India be called Indian. The domicile of choice is that every person of full age is free to acquire in substitution for that which he possesses at the time of choice.

Domicile means the place which a person has fixed as a habitation of himself and his family, not for a mere special and temporary purpose, but with a present intention of making it his permanent home. Every person must have a domicile. A person cannot have two simultaneous domiciles. Domicile denotes connection with the territorial system of law. The burden of proving a change in domicile is on those who allege that a change has occurred. In order to attract Article 5(c), one must have an Indian domicile. Mere residence is not domicile. Abdus Samad v. State of W.B., AIR 1973 SC 505 : 1973 CrLJ 1 : 1972 SCD 1134.

DOMINION OVER PROPERTY

[13776] ● Dominion over property.—Upon the plain reading of Section 405, IPC, it is obvious that before a person can be said to have committed criminal breach of trust, it must be established that he was either entrusted with or entrusted with dominion over property, which he is said to have converted to his own use or disposed of in violation of any direction of law, etc. Every partner has dominion over property, by reason of the fact that he is a partner. This is a kind of dominion, which every owner of property has over his property. But it is not dominion of this kind which satisfies the requirements of Section 405. In order to establish "entrustment of dominion" over the property to an accused person the mere existence of that person's dominion over the property is not enough. It must be further shown that his dominion was the result of entrustment. Therefore, as rightly pointed out by HARRIS, C.J., the prosecution must establish, that dominion over the assets or a particular asset of the partnership was by a special agreement between the parties, entrusted to the accused person. If in the absence of such a special agreement, a partner receives money belonging to the partnership, he cannot be said to have received it in a fiduciary capacity or in other words cannot be held to have been "entrusted" with dominion over partnership properties. It was then contended by the respondent that item No. 15 of the minutes of the meeting showed, that the appellant had to recover the monies from one Shri Kabalsingh and he had to deposit the same in the bank but he did not do so and hence at least in respect of that amount there was a special agreement. But item No. 16 of the said minutes authorised the partner to spend the amount recovered as dues towards expenses of partnership business. That is to say, if the money was required for the business of the partnership, it was not obligatory upon the appellant to deposit it in the bank. The appellant cannot be said to have been guilty of criminal breach of trust even with respect to the dues realised by him from Kabalsingh and in not depositing them in the bank as alleged by the prosecution. Velji Raghavji Patel v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1965 SC 1433 : 1965 (2) CrLJ 431 (433, 434) : (1965) 2 SCR 429.
